agreement by which Grant sold his stock to Brown, English, Murphy, and James. There is no allegation as to how the stock was transferred by them or either of them to the Dade Coal Company, but there is an allegation that Company No. 3 did not pay the state the rent for 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897, and that the executors of Joseph E. Brown were compelled to pay $4,035 on account of Company No. 3, no part of which has been refunded, except $539.61 returned by James. There was the same amendment as that set out in the petition against Company No. 2, with a further amendment that when the camps were abolished and by virtue of said order the convicts were taken away from the plaintiff and delivered to the stockholders of Company No. 3. There were separate demurrers on the grounds that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant; that there was no cause of action; that there was no jurisdiction of the court to review the action of the Governor in taking the convicts away from the plaintiff and delivering them to the other alleged stockholders; that there was no right of action in plaintiff to recover for the proceeds of the labor of the convicts; that the petition does not show who the contracts alleged to have been made were made with, nor the terms of such contracts; and, as to the allegations in suit against Company No. 3, that there was no sufficient allegation as to what No. 3 owed for hire, or that the executors have any such interest in No. 3 as to entitle them to recover from defendant, besides other special demurrers not necessary to be considered, in the light of the opinion. The court sustained the demurrers and dismissed both petitions. The Dade Coal Company sued out separate bills of exceptions, which were heard together in this court by agreement of parties.

Julius L. Brown and Anderson, Anderson & Thomas, for plaintiff in error. Ellis, Wimbish & Ellis, D. W. Meadow, and J. L. Hopkins & Sons, for defendants in error.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). The lease act of 1876 (Acts 1876, p. 40) is exceedingly indefinite as to the rights and status of those composing the Penitentiary Companies. It is manifest, however, that the General Assembly did not intend to create ordinary corporations with the right to transfer shares so as thereby to turn over the management of the convicts to any one who would buy stock. Only "bona fide citizens of Georgia" were authorized to become members. The names of such citizens applying for the lease were to be entered upon the minutes of the executive department. If their bid was accepted, the lease was then made to them, and thereupon ipso facto they became a corporation, with no right to sublet, and no indication of any right to sell shares, stock, or other evidence of membership. The charter named no capital stock, and consequently was silent as to the shares or the number or par value thereof. If, by virtue of its power to make rules and by-laws, any such provision could have been made by the action of the members, there is no allegation that any capital was ever named, that any was ever paid in, or that any scrip was ever issued. The company did no business of any sort, had no camps or prisons, and it is expressly alleged that, except the lease, it had no asset. While, therefore, it is charged that the Dade Coal Company owned $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the stock of Company No. 2, and $31\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. in No. 3, it is evident, from the petition as a whole, that this cannot refer to stock in the ordinary sense. It can only mean that, not on account of an amount contributed, but by an agreement among the members, the Dade Company was to receive a certain proportion of those assigned under the lease. The company had no assets. It did no business of any sort. It did not even receive the convicts from the state, or pay the hire to the state. But after the agreement as to the proportion that each member was to receive, they organized separate camps or prisons, to which the convicts were sent. The hire was paid, not by Company No. 1 or No. 2, but by the one in control of such camp, who was recognized by the state authorities as a lessee, and to whom all the laws applicable to the original companies were applied. The state enforced against such camps all the regulations for securing humane treatment, and other requirements of the act. And whatever may be the rights of the public, certainly the members of the company who made this arrangement, and who for years took advantage of the provisions thereunder, cannot, in litigation between themselves, be heard to dispute its validity.

Whatever may have been the right of the members under the original lease—whether that of stockholders, tenants in common, partners, or what not—the consent division was equivalent to a partition, under which thereafter the interest was held in severalty. If this division was the equivalent of the issuance of a stock certificate, then, when there was a forfeiture of that interest, it was equivalent to a forfeiture of the stock. There is no suggestion that this division was temporary, and had to be renewed from year to year. Under one division each member received not only those on hand that year, but by virtue thereof an equal proportion during the continuance of the lease. That this partition represented the present and future right thereunder is illustrated by the case in which such interest is said to have been sold by W. D. Grant, one of the original members of Company No. 3. It was not and cannot be claimed that, having sold his stock, he retained any interest in the labor of the convicts, or, having sold his interest in the convicts' labor, he had any interest in the stock. Interest in the lease and in shares of stock were convertible terms. Loss of stock was loss of lease. Forfeiture of lease was the same as forfeiture of the stock. When the state, under the provisions of the act of 1876, forfeited the several interest, the Dade Company lost its interest in the lease as completely as a co-tenant whose lot assigned on partition, if sold under a tax f. fa., would lose the land and the future increase of the land. When the interest was forfeited, it did not thereupon revert in Companies Nos. 2 and 3, so that what the Dade Company lost as a sublessee it regained, in whole or in part, as a corporator. But the result was to put the state in as complete control of this forfeited part as it would have had of the whole, had either of the original leases been forfeited as an entirety. After the forfeiture the state had the right to make a new lease or a new assignment to any one selected by the Governor. The petition shows that this was done, for it alleges that plaintiff was deprived of the use and control of said convicts, as hereinbefore set out, under and by virtue of the orders of the Governor of the state of Georgia, and by virtue of said orders said convicts were taken away from plaintiff and delivered to the stockholders of said Penitentiary Company. In the light of this allegation, it is evident that the Dade Company had no cause of action against Companies Nos. 2 and 3, or those called "stockholders" thereof. The act of which it complains was not that of the company, but of the state. The title of the stockholders was acquired, not through Companies Nos. 2 and 3, but from the state directly.

The mere fact that a corporation has no capital stock does not necessarily deprive the members of their proportionate rights in the corporate property. But when there is no capital stock—when the character of the corporate enterprise has in it elements of personal trust, making the personnel of the members important, with no right to sell or sublet, as here—the case is to be governed by rules altogether different from those applicable to an ordinary stockholder and his company. It is more nearly subject to the analogous principle governing that form of corporation in which the interest of a member before dissolution consists only in the right to use the corporate property or to engage in corporate purposes. If he fails to attend the meetings or to avail himself of the corporate privileges, he has no cause of action against the company, or those who participated more actively than he. If, during the continuance of the organization, his membership is severed by death, resignation, expulsion, or other form of forfeiture, he loses all of his corporate rights. Mason v. Atlanta Fire Co., 70 Ga. 604, 48 Am. Rep. 585; Cummings v. Hollis, 108 Ga. 402, 33 S. E. 910; Schwartz v. Duss, 187 U. S. 8, 23 Sup. Ct. 4, 47 L. Ed. 53. This disposes of the controlling question in both cases, and makes it unnecessary to consider whether the Dade Coal Company was a "bona fide citizen of Georgia," which, under the act of 1876, could be a corporator in Company No. 2, or whether it, by purchase, had the right to become a member of No. 3. The allegation that the executors of Joseph E. Brown had paid $4,085 on account of rent due by Company No. 3 set out no cause of action. It failed to show that the estate was requested to make such payment, or to indicate how or why the payment was made, so as to make Company No. 3 responsible therefor. There is no allegation that the estate owned stock in No. 3, or even in Dade Coal Company. It is inferable, however, that these payments may have been made on account of the agreement to hold W. D. Grant harmless on the obligation assumed by him in the bond. If so, there are no sufficient allegations to show that the latter had a cause of action against No. 3, or to subrogate the estate thereto, if there was any.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 946)

BROOKE v. AUGUSTA WAREHOUSE & BANKING CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 31, 1904.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—DISTRESS WARRANT—RETURN—ERROR—WAIVER—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

1. Where, after levy, the progress of a distress warrant is arrested by counter affidavit denying that the sum distrained for is due, the warrant becomes mesne process, and the proceeding is converted into a suit for the rent. Chisholm v. Lewis, 66 Ga. 729; Elam v. Hamilton, 69 Ga. 736. Such counter affidavit is a plea to the merits. See Hawkins v. Collier, 28 S. E. 632, 101 Ga. 145 (2), and cit. "After a plea to the merits a defendant can make no objection to the manner by which he has been brought into court." Pool v. Perdue, 44 Ga. 458; Civ. Code 1896, § 4981. It follows that where a distress warrant was, by mistake of the magistrate issuing it, made returnable to the January term, 1902, of a city court having cognizance of the matter, when it should have been made returnable to the January term, 1903, of such court, and the defendant, after levy, filed a counter affidavit, and the warrant and counter affidavit were returned to the proper term of such court, a motion of the defendant, then and there made, to dismiss the warrant upon the ground of such mistake as to the term to which it was returnable, was properly overruled.

2. A complaint that the court erred in admitting, over the objection of the movant, certain parol testimony when there was higher written evidence of the fact, is not meritorious when it does not appear from the motion itself that there was such better evidence.

3. While there was some evidence tending to show that the contract between plaintiff and defendant was one of bailment, there was ample evidence to authorize a finding that it was one of rental.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by the Augusta Warehouse & Banking Company against George W. Brooke. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Smith, Hammond & Smith, for plaintiff in error. C. Henry Cohen, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except LAMAR, J., disqualified.

(119 Ga. 876)

MCCARY v. PRITCHARD et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 30, 1904.)

ACTION ON NOTE—PLEA—DEMURRER—PAROL CONTRACT—FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATIONS—OPINION EVIDENCE—DAMAGES.

1. Where, in a suit by the payee of a promissory note against the makers thereof, the defendants pleaded that the note was given to the plaintiff for part of the purchase money of an insurance agency business sold by him to them, and that the consideration of the contract between the parties had failed to an extent equal to the amount represented by the note, because the plaintiff "represented to defendants that he had made certain profits out of said business for the three years previous to said purchase, and said purchase was based upon the amounts alleged to have been made, but said representations, as defendants have since discovered, were untrue," a demurrer to the plea upon the ground that it fails "to set forth how much profits plaintiff represented he had made, * * * or how much damage had resulted to defendants" by reason of the alleged misrepresentations of the plaintiff, should have been sustained.

2. Where there is nothing in the pleadings to show that the contract between the parties was in writing, the question whether a plea seeks to contradict or vary a written contract cannot be raised by demurrer.

3. The amended answer of the defendants did not show "on its face that no damage could have resulted to" the defendants on account of the alleged misrepresentations of the plaintiff, and was therefore not demurrable upon this ground.

4. Fraudulent misrepresentations as to a material fact, made by one party to a written contract for the purpose of inducing the other party to enter into it, may be proved by parol.

5. It was erroneous to allow a witness to state to the jury his opinion as to the amount of damages which the defendants had sustained in consequence of the misrepresentations of the plaintiff in reference to the property at the time he sold it to the defendants.

6. When testimony is objected to as a whole, and some portion of it is admissible, it is not erroneous to overrule the objection.

7. Where a purchaser of property is entitled to recover for damages sustained by him in consequence of his reliance upon false and fraudulent representations of the vendor in reference to matters affecting the value of the property, the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value at the time of the purchase and what the value would have been if the property had been as it was represented to be by the seller.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sandersville; P. P. Taliaferro, Judge.

Action by J. A. McCary against H. L. Pritchard and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Rawlings & Howard, for plaintiff in error. Marion Turner, Hardwick & Hyman, and James K. Hines, for defendants in error.

FISH, P. J. J. A. McCrary brought suit in the city court of Sandersville against H. L. L. J., and Mary J. Pritchard for the sum of $200.48 principal, and also interest and attorney's fees, upon a promissory note for $250, dated April 5, 1902, and due October 1, 1902, upon which there was a credit of $49.52, dated September 15, 1902. The defendants filed an answer, which was demurred to. Pending the demurrer they amended their answer, and the plaintiff then demurred to the answer as amended. Except as to one paragraph of the original answer and a similar paragraph of the amendment, the court overruled the demurrers, and the plaintiff filed exceptions pendente lite. Upon the trial there was a general verdict for the defendants. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted.

1. Error is assigned in the bill of exceptions upon the overruling of the demurrer to the original answer and the overruling of the demurrer to the answer as amended. In the original answer, the defendants admitted giving the note sued on, but alleged that it was given to the plaintiff solely for the purchase of a certain fire insurance business which he had been conducting in the city of Tennille for several years, the sale consisting in the transfer of the agency for certain fire insurance companies, all books, stationery, etc., belonging to such agency, and the good will of the plaintiff; that the business was purchased by the defendants for the purpose of continuing the same at the city of Tennille, which the plaintiff knew; and the plaintiff, "as part of the contract of sale and consideration for said note, represented to defendants that he had made certain profits out of said business for the three years previous to said purchase, and said purchase was based upon the amounts alleged to have been made, but said representations, as defendants have since discovered, were untrue." The answer further alleged that the defendants "purchased said insurance business for said purpose, trusting in the representations of the plaintiff"; that the price agreed upon was $450, "defendants paying plaintiff $200 cash and giving the note sued upon for the balance, upon which note they paid $49.52 before learning of the facts herein set out." There was also a paragraph in the answer in reference to an offer by the defendants to rescind the contract, and also an offer of compromise, both of which it was alleged the plaintiff refused; but these things are not material in the consideration of the questions involved here. The answer concluded as follows: "Wherefore defendants allege the consideration for said note has completely failed, and that they have paid plaintiff $49.52 more than said business was worth, and pray judgment against plaintiff for that amount, and of this defendants put themselves upon the country."

We think it is very clear that this answer was subject to the objection, raised by the demurrer, that it wholly failed "to set forth how much profits plaintiff represented he had made in the past three years, * * * or how much damage had resulted to defendants" by reason of the misrepresentation of the plaintiff as to the amount of such profits. The allegations that the plaintiff had represented to defendants that he had made certain profits out of the business for the three previous years, and that these representations were untrue, was too general, vague, and uncertain to withstand the demurrer. It will be observed that it was not alleged that the consideration for the contract of purchase had wholly failed, but the effect of the answer was that it had partially failed to an amount equal to the sum for which the note was given. The plea afforded no basis whatever for a comparison between the profits actually made by the plaintiff from the business and the profits which he represented to the defendants he had made; and such a comparison was necessary in order to ascertain whether there was, in the contract of purchase, a failure of consideration, and, if so, to what extent the consideration had failed. The allegation that the plaintiff had represented that he had made "certain profits," and this representation was untrue, was about as uncertain as any allegation could be. Suppose the plaintiff had admitted this allegation of the plea to be true, what sort of a verdict in favor of the defendant could there have been rendered upon this admission? In a suit for a rescission of a contract alleged to have been procured by fraud such an admission might authorize a verdict in favor of the party seeking the rescission, but under a plea of partial failure of consideration the jury would be unable to determine from such an admission to what extent the consideration for the contract had failed. The defendants did not ask for a rescission of the contract, but relied upon their plea of partial failure of consideration to defeat a recovery upon the note given for only a part of the purchase money. Certainly the plaintiff was entitled to know what representations the defendants expected to prove he had made to them as to the profits of the business for the three previous years, and what they expected to prove the profits of the business for this period actually were. The court erred in not sustaining the demurrer to the original answer, as the amendment failed to cure this defect therein.

2. The amendment alleged that the plaintiff, at the time the contract was entered into, represented to the defendants "that he did not allow any rebates to any of his patrons, or divide commissions with any of them"; that this was untrue, as the defendants had since discovered that the plaintiff "did have such contracts for divisions of commissions with several of the patrons of said business, which contracts [would] entail on * * * defendants a loss of thirty dollars per annum," and materially and seriously impair the value "of the article sold to these defendants, for the following reason: If defendants continue to comply with the agreements and contracts of plaintiff on this subject, the value of the business sold them by plaintiff will be entirely destroyed, because of the fact that all of the insurance companies represented by McCrary and the agencies of which were transferred to these defendants * * * have rules and regulations prohibiting such division of commissions, and will discharge and remove these defendants as their agents if they divide commissions; on the other hand, if these defendants decline to divide commissions with their patrons, in accordance with the precedent established by plaintiff, then the patrons of these defendants will place their business with other agents and other insurance companies, thereby injuring and damaging the business of these defendants to an amount at least as great as the amount sued for by the plaintiff in this suit." While we think that this amendment to the original answer was plainly open to demurrer, we do not think it was subject to the demurrer which was offered by the plaintiff. It certainly was not demurrable upon the ground that it sought to contradict and vary a written contract which the defendants admitted was entered into by the parties. This was not matter for demurrer, for there was nothing in the original or amended answer which admitted that the parties had entered into a written contract concerning the matters in controversy, other than the contract evidenced by the promissory note sued on, and the note contained nothing which the facts alleged in the amended answer, if proved, could be said to contradict or vary. The note did not even express a consideration other than "value received." A contract was referred to in the plea, but whether it was written or oral did not appear. That there was a written contract did appear from the evidence introduced upon the trial, but not from any admission in the pleadings of the defendants. Hence the point sought to be made by the demurrer was not one which could be raised on the face of the pleadings. See Tift v. Wight, 113 Ga. 681, 39 S. E. 508.

8. Nor was the amended answer subject to demurrer upon the ground that it showed "on its face that no damage could have resulted to" the defendants on account of the alleged misrepresentations of the plaintiff, because it alleged that it was "contrary to the rules of insurance companies to allow rebates to patrons," and therefore, as the answer did not allege "that plaintiff had made contracts with any of the patrons which bound these defendants to" continue to allow rebates, "defendants were not bound to allow said rebates, and no loss or damage could result." The fact that there was nothing in the answer which showed that the defendants were bound to continue to conduct the business in the same way in which they alleged the plaintiff had conducted it, did not show that no damage could have resulted to them if the plaintiff had made the misrepresentations alleged. They might not have been bound to continue to conduct the business as they alleged the plaintiff had conducted it, and yet we can well see how they could have been damaged whether they did continue to do so or refused to follow his alleged practice in this respect. In either event, the value of the thing bought might be less than it would have been if it had been as the plaintiff represented it to be. Whatever else may be said of the amended answer, it did not show "on its face that no damage could have resulted" to the defendants from the alleged misrepresentations of the plaintiff. We simply decide that the amendment to the answer was not subject to demurrer upon the grounds taken.

4. In the motion for a new trial it was alleged that the court erred in admitting, over the objection of the plaintiff, the testimony of one of the defendants as to the alleged fraudulent misrepresentations of the plaintiff at the time the contract was entered into. The objection made to the admission of this testimony was that its effect would be to alter and vary the written contract. Fraudulent misrepresentations as to a material fact, made by one party to a written contract for the purpose of inducing the other party to enter into it, may be proved by parol. Janes v. Mercer University, 17 Ga. 515; Ham v. Parkerson, 68 Ga. 831; Barrie v. Miller, 104 Ga. 312, 30 S. E. 840, 69 Am. St. Rep. 171.

5. Under repeated rulings of this court it was erroneous to allow one of the defendants, while testifying as a witness, to give to the jury his opinion as to the amount of damages which he and his codefendants had sustained in consequence of the alleged fraudulent representations of the plaintiff. Woodward v. Gates, 38 Ga. 206; Brunswick R. Co. v. McLaren, 47 Ga. 547; Central Railroad Co. v. Kelly, 58 Ga. 107; Smith v. Eubanks, 72 Ga. 280; Central Railroad Co. v. Senn, 73 Ga. 705; Foote & Davies Co. v. Malony, 115 Ga. 985, 42 S. E. 413.

6. Error was also assigned in the motion for a new trial upon the admission of a quoted portion of the testimony of one of the defendants, which was objected to as being hearsay, irrelevant, and relating to matters which could not affect the parties to the contract involved in the case. This testimony was not hearsay, and as some of it, under the amended answer of the defendants and in connection with other testimony introduced by them, was not irrelevant, and it was objected to as a whole, we find no error in overruling the objection offered to its admission.

In the motion for a new trial complaint was made of certain instructions which the court gave to the jury for their guidance—in the event they found that the plaintiff had made the alleged false and fraudulent representations to the defendants—in estimating the damages which the defendants had sustained. Without taking up the grounds of the motion complaining of these instructions and passing upon them, as the case is to be tried again, we will simply lay down what we think is the true measure of damages in such a case. If the defendants were induced, by false and fraudulent representations on the part of the plaintiff, to purchase the insurance agency business, and the value of the business was materially less than it would have been if the representations of the plaintiff had been true, then the measure of the damages sustained by the defendants would be the difference between what would have been the value of the business if it had been as the plaintiff represented it to be and its value as it actually was. This rule is in accordance with the principle recognized by this court in Millirons v. Dillon, 100 Ga. 656, 28 S. E. 385, in which it was held that, where one has been induced to purchase property by means of a false and fraudulent representation by the seller that the thing sold had certain qualities, the measure of damages in an action for the fraud and deceit thus practiced by the seller would be the difference between the value of the thing sold at the time of delivery and what would have been its value if the representation made by the seller had been true. While it may not have been necessary to lay down the rule as to the measure of damages in such a case in order to decide the precise questions then before the court, the fact that it was laid down shows what this court, as then constituted, considered to be the correct rule in cases of this character. An analogous ruling was made in Berry v. Shannon, 98 Ga. 459, 25 S. E. 514, 58 Am. St. Rep. 813, in which it was held that: "Where an animal which could be of no use or value except for a particular purpose was bought upon a warranty by the seller that it was serviceable for that purpose, and at the time of the sale it was in fact either partially or totally worthless in that regard, the buyer, in an action against him for the price, was entitled to an abatement of the purchase money equal to the difference between the agreed price and the actual value, as reduced by the defective quality of the animal;" and that "this is true whether, in disposing of the animal to a third person, the buyer lost anything or not." The courts of this country are in conflict as to the rule for measuring the damages in a case between a defrauded purchaser and a defrauding vendor, the majority holding the rule to be as we have above announced, while the minority, including the Supreme Court of the United States, hold that the difference between the real value and the amount which the purchaser was induced to pay measures the damages. In a standard work on damages it is said the party guilty of the fraud "is to make good his representations as though he had given a warranty to that effect. He is to make compensation for the difference between the real state of the case and what it was represented to be. Thus, in case of sales where there is a fraudulently false representation of quantity, quality, or title, the measure of damages is the difference in value between that which is actual and that which was represented to exist." 4 Suth. Dam. (8d Ed.) § 1171. In the same work the following comment is made upon the general rule upon the subject which prevails in the federal and some of the state courts: "The general rule above stated is based on the assumption that the amount paid is the measure of the value as fixed by the parties; but a purchaser does not buy to sell again at the same price, and to compel him arbitrarily to accept compensation by that standard is to deprive him of such benefit of his purchase as the state of the market would have enabled him to realize if there had been no fraud. As said by Mr. Justice Gray [in Morse v. Hutchins, 102 Mass. 440]: 'To allow the plaintiff only the difference between the real value of the property and the price which he was induced to pay for it would be to make any advantage lawfully secured to the innocent purchaser in the original bargain inure to the wrongdoer; and, in proportion as the original price was low, would afford a protection to the party who had broken, at the expense of the party who was ready to abide by, the terms of the contract.' The amount paid is evidence of the value, but on principle and according to the general course of decision it is not conclusive of the value as it was represented to be." Id. § 1172, p. 3410.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 855.)

FRANKLIN v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 30, 1904.)

INTERPLEADER—WHEN GRANTED—GARNISHMENT—EXEMPTION—WAGES OF BRAKEMAN.

1. Before one occupying the situation of a stakeholder can call upon adverse claimants of a fund in his hands to interplead, he must satisfactorily show to the court that their claims have such a "foundation in law as will create a reasonable doubt" as to his safety in undertaking to determine for himself to whom the fund belongs; for the "old rule that the stakeholder is entitled to be removed beyond the shadow of a risk, and that in order to entitle him to the protection of the court it is only necessary to establish that suits have been brought or that claimants have threatened to bring them, no longer prevails." While, under the modern practice, it is not incumbent upon a stakeholder "to decide, at his peril, either close questions of fact or nice questions of law," yet, where he is in possession of all the facts, and no question of law is involved which is, in view of repeated adjudications by the courts upon which he may with safety rely, longer debatable, a petition for interpleader interposed by him cannot be regarded with favor, and should be denied. See MacLennan on Interpleader, pp. 181, 182, 184; Civ. Code 1895, § 4896.

¶ 1. See Interpleader, vol. 29, Cent. Dig. §§ 8, 9.

2. The daily, weekly, and monthly wages of a "brakeman," employed by a railway company to discharge the duties usually incident to the kind of service performed by persons following his calling, are, under the provisions of section 4732 of the Civil Code of 1895, exempt from the process of garnishment, beyond any reasonable doubt, in view of the construction placed upon the language of that section in numerous cases heretofore decided by this court, wherein the question arose whether or not the wages of employes who perform like services are exempt from garnishment.

3. It follows that the court below erred in ordering the defendants to this proceeding to interplead, for the plaintiff railway company based its prayer for the relief sought solely on the ground that it ought not to be subjected to the hardship of determining, at its peril, whether or not the wages of its brakeman could be reached by the summonses of garnishment served upon it at the instance of certain parties who professed to be his creditors; and though the summonses issued from different courts, and were sued out by different parties, the plaintiff had no just cause to apprehend that it could not, by exercising its legal right to set up the defense that the wages of its employé were exempt, successfully defeat the attempt on the part of his creditors to subject the fund in its hands to the satisfaction of their demands.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by the Southern Railway Company against Fred Franklin and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and Franklin brings error. Reversed.

Lowndes Calhoun, for plaintiff in error.
J. D. Bradwell, for defendant in error.

TURNER, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 865)

HART et al v. MANSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 30, 1904.)

PLEADING—EVIDENCE—JUDGMENT—NULLITY—RES JUDICATA—AUDITOR'S REPORT—EXCEPTIONS.

1. The petition as amended was good as against any of the grounds of the demurrer filed to it, and the court did not err in overruling the exceptions to the report of the auditor so holding.

2. There was no error in admitting the evidence which was the subject-matter of the second exception of law to the auditor's report. In the light of all the evidence, the relation of the attorney whose conduct was in question to the entire transaction was such as to render admissible in evidence all that he said and did in regard thereto.

3. A judgment which is void for any cause is a mere nullity, and may be so held in any court when it becomes material to the interests of the parties to consider it. Civ. Code 1895, § 5369.

4. While the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive between parties and privies as to the issue which it decides, it is not so as to third persons. There was ample evidence to warrant the auditor in finding in favor of the charge of fraud and collusion between the parties to the judgment attacked.

5. The exceptions to the auditor's report, both of law and fact, were submitted to the judge, to be passed on in vacation without the aid of a jury. While some of these exceptions are called by counsel "exceptions of fact," and others "exceptions of law," in reality all of them, except those which have been passed on in the preceding notes, involve findings of fact. The trial judge has patiently gone through a great mass of evidence, which has been, in the main, reduced to narrative form, but to brief which apparently no effort has been made; and he has reached conclusions in which we, after like laborious efforts, find no error of which the plaintiffs in error can justly complain.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Clayton County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by Z. T. Manson, ordinary, for use, and others, against J. M. Hart and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

J. W. & J. D. Humphries, W. M. Wright, and C. T. Roan, for plaintiffs in error. W. L. Watterson and J. F. Golightly, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(119 Ga. 941)

ROONEY v. SOUTHERN BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 31, 1904.)

ACTION—ABATEMENT—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER—CONTINUANCE—BUILDING ASSOCIATION—USURY—INCORPORATION—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE—FOREIGN STATUTES—PRESUMPTIONS.

1. Except on dissolution, the fact that a receiver has been appointed for a corporation does not abate a suit then pending in its name.

2. Whatever might be the rights of the defendant under a plea in abatement or on motion to make parties, he cannot obtain a continuance on the ground that a receiver has been appointed for the plaintiff.

3. A company not such in fact cannot, by calling itself a building and loan association, acquire the privilege of charging more than the rate of interest lawful in ordinary contracts between borrower and lender.

4. Where one takes stock and makes a contract with a company whose name prima facie imports that it is a building and loan association, the burden is on him to show that under the charter and laws of the state where created it is not such in reality.

5. The mere fact that there are different classes of stock, with different rights and liabilities of the stockholders, does not necessarily destroy the company's character as a building and loan association.

6. The defendant's plea was properly stricken, because it not only failed to aver that the different classes of stock were in existence at the time he made the contract and became a member, but it also failed to show that such differences and inequalities were of a nature to destroy the building and loan feature of the company.

7. Where a contract on its face is with a building and loan association, and to be governed by the laws of Alabama, but there is no proof of the statute of that state as to usury or building and loan associations, there will be no presumption that the contract was usurious or otherwise illegal under the laws of that state.

8. The plaintiff made out its case for more than the amount of the verdict by the introduction of the defendant's written promise to pay. The evidence alleged to be secondary, even if such, was helpful to the defendant, and reduced the amount of plaintiff's verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by the Southern Building & Loan Association against James Rooney. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

The Southern Building & Loan Association of Huntsville, Ala., sued James Rooney, of Richmond county, Ga., on a sealed note dated at Huntsville, Ala., July 24, 1895, whereby he promised to pay the company "at its office in Huntsville" $2,500, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum, payable monthly, and a premium of 5 per cent. per annum, payable monthly, for a loan under an application dated July 10, 1895, on 50 membership shares. He transferred the shares as collateral for the payment of the loan. This indebtedness was likewise secured by a deed to real estate in the city of Augusta. Attached to the petition was a copy of the by-laws of the company, reciting, among other things, that the object of the association is to afford the shareholders safe and profitable investment; that all contracts and securities shall be construed by the laws of Alabama; a statement of the terms and conditions of membership, the method of borrowing on the shares, and the amount of monthly payments, fines, etc. The defendant by plea admitted the making of the contract, payments thereon for some years, and the default, but set up that the debt was infected with usury. There was a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, which was set aside by the judgment of the Supreme Court reported in 115 Ga. 400, 41 S. E. 648, because of error in admitting interrogatories which had been improperly executed. On the second trial the defendant amended his pleas, all of which were allowed, except the third, wherein he set up "that plaintiff is not a building and loan association as known to the laws of Georgia," because (a) all payments made by the stockholders, borrowers or nonborrowers, do not go into a common fund, but are divided under a system whereby holders of shares of the same face value receive a larger amount of the common profits than do other stockholders; (b) there is not an equality of burden and rights, some stockholders having a less burden and a greater right than others; (c) there are two kinds of stock—"prepaid" and "installment"—on which different sums are paid, with a difference in the amount that may be borrowed, and difference in the distribution of the profits, these differences being set out in detail. "Wherefore defendant says that plaintiff could make no genuine building and loan contract as known to the laws of Georgia."

Salem Dutcher, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Barrett, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. On the call of the case the defendant moved to continue, on the ground that the plaintiff had been put into the hands of a receiver, who was authorized to intervene in the present suit, supporting the same by certified copies of the order of the Circuit Courts of the United States in Alabama and Georgia. The defendant, by a plea in abatement, or motion to make parties, might have raised the question as to whether the case could be prosecuted in the name of the plaintiff, or in its name for the use of the receiver, or by the receiver alone. But this could not be done by a motion to continue. The appointment of the receiver did not abate the suit. Branch v. Augusta Glass Works, 95 Ga. 579, 23 S. E. 128. There need be no danger of paying to the wrong party. According to Griffin v. Mutual Life Insurance Co. (Ga.) 46 S. E. 870, the defendant by appropriate proceeding may obtain a proper receipt from the one entitled to the money. But here the evidence as to the appointment of a receiver was not offered on the trial, and there is therefore nothing properly in the record to indicate that the company is not in a position to receive and control its own funds, or to prosecute suits in its own name.

The former record in this case (115 Ga. 400, 41 S. E. 648) raised the question as to the validity of the "fully paid," "prepaid," and "installment" stock. The verdict then was for the plaintiff, and, except in the admission of interrogatories improperly executed, this court held that "the principles of law involved in this case have been ruled in favor of the company, and no error appears to have been committed by the trial judge." The same issue as to the "prepaid" and "installment" stock was again presented by an amended plea, more elaborate in detail, but involving the same legal principle. It is almost a case for the application of the doctrine of the "law of the case" or "res adjudicata." But, as the two pleas are not identical, we will deal with the errors assigned. The note sued on is dated at Huntsville, Ala., is made there payable, and according to its terms it is to be construed as an Alabama contract. The plea nowhere alleges that the contract was usurious according to the laws of that state. The record contains no copy of its statute concerning interest and usury, though it may be proper to say that a contract identical in form with that sued on has been held to be valid in Sou. B. & L. Ass'n v. Rector, 98 Fed. 171, 38 C. C. A. 686. Compare Smith v. Sou. B. & L. Ass'n, 111 Ga. 811, 35 S. E. 707. On general principles there would be no presumption that the parties had made an illegal contract, but rather that the transaction was valid according to the foreign law by which it was to be governed. Craven v. Bates, 96 Ga. 80, 23 S. E. 202; Pomeroy v. Ainsworth, 22 Barb. 120. Nor would the result be different on the presumption that the common law prevails in Alabama, for by it the rate of interest on money was not limited. Smith v. Muncie Bank, 29 Ind. 158; White v. Friedlander, 35 Ark. 55; Union Bk. v. Dottenheim, 107 Ga. 609, 34 S. E. 217. There might be an extreme case in which a contract made and to be performed in a foreign state was on its face clearly usurious according to the law of the forum, and where the court, in aid of the state's public policy, might hold that, in the absence of proof of what was the foreign statute, it would presume that the laws of the foreign state were similar to those of the forum on the subject of usury. Such a ruling is suggested in Hubble v. Morristown Co., 95 Tenn. 585, 32 S. W. 965 (3); Leake v. Bergen, 27 N. J. Eq. 360; City Bank v. Bidwell, 29 Barb. 332. But there is no room for the application of any such principle here, because the contract on its face was with a building and loan association, and presumptively valid under the laws of Alabama as well as of Georgia. The defendant, however, seeks to attack this apparent validity by pleading that the plaintiff was not a building and loan association, inasmuch as it issued different classes of stock under which there was inequality of liabilities and profits. The plea was properly stricken. In the first place, it failed to aver that this inequality existed at the time of the making of the contract; for, if the company was doing a building and loan business when the contract was made, a new scheme, and the issuance of various classes of stock thereafter, might give the defendant, as a stockholder, the right, on an accounting, to the profits to which he was entitled according to the original plan. But subsequent action by the corporation would not have the effect of converting a nonusurious into a usurious contract.

Mutual participation in profits and losses is undoubtedly the basic principle on which contracts between this class of associations and its members have been saved from the consequences attaching to other usurious loans. While there has been some doubt expressed as to the right to issue paid-up or preferential stock, still the authorities in the main tend to sustain the legality thereof, provided the scheme is not shown to be oppressive to one class and unduly advantageous to another. Thompson on Building Associations, §§ 124-133. They recognize that the demand for money by the members may be so great as to make it necessary, by borrowing, or selling paid-up stock, to put the company in funds to lend to those who prefer to pay in monthly installments, and that such inequality in the amount contributed may entitle the paid-up stockholder to a preference on dissolution, and to fixed dividends while the company is a going concern. Besides, the defendant's plea does not aver that the issuance of different classes of stock was in violation of the charter, or of the statutes of Alabama; nor does it show the money value of the difference, nor whether the amount of the profits accruing to the "paid-up" stock was relatively greater than that on installment stock. Certainly there was nothing to indicate such a want of equality as to destroy the company's character as a building and loan association, and convert its transactions into a class like those between ordinary debtor and creditor. The rights of members do not have to be identical unless the conditions are identical. Bosworth v. Sumter Real Estate Co., 100 Ga. 60, 28 S. E. 154. If the issuance of this paid-up stock was without authority, that would not prevent the corporation from still existing as a building and loan association, nor would it affect its contract obligations, unless the members showed that the scheme was such as to destroy the corporation's character as a building and loan association. Smith v. Sou. B. & L. Ass'n, 111 Ga. 811, 35 S. E. 707 (3). See, also, Burns v. Equitable B. & L. Ass'n, 106 Ga. 183, 33 S. E. 856 (2), where there was common stock and coupon stock.

A mere name cannot be used as a cloak under which the law against usury can be evaded. If the plaintiff is not a building and loan association in fact, it cannot, by calling itself such, acquire the privilege of charging more than the lawful rate of interest. But its name prima facie imports that it is such. Smith v. Southern B. & L. A., 111 Ga. 811, 35 S. E. 707. The burden was on the defendant to meet this presumption. The plea does not negative the idea that it was chartered as such, nor does it aver that the defendant did not receive the benefits to which he was entitled as a member of such during the years he was not in default. He and all the other members contracted to pay a high rate of interest, but they also contracted to receive their share of these very payments. If, through misfortune or mismanagement, the association went into the hands of a receiver, that did not relate back so as to invalidate what was a legal contract when made. There was no motion for a new trial, but a direct bill of exceptions, in which the evidence, objections to evidence, colloquies between counsel, arguments to the court, and his rulings thereon, are set out. In addition to the points hereinbefore discussed, the exceptions relate mainly to the admission of testimony by the officers of the company, over the defendant's objection, that this evidence was as to cash items of payments, and facts knowledge of which must necessarily have been derived from the books, and that the witnesses could not testify from the ledger, but only from the books of original entry. On the face of the bond the plaintiff promised to pay $2,500 with 5 per cent. interest and 5 per cent. premium from July 24, 1895. The other primary evidence, in the shape of the deed, the note, the stock scrip, and the by-laws, entitled the plaintiff to principal, interest, premiums, and, on default, to fines and attorney's fees. The defendant's original answer admitted the date of his default. On this primary evidence, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict, and the burden was on the defendant to make his own proof as to the credits to which he was entitled. It is true that the plaintiff attempted unnecessarily to make this proof for the defendant by the cashier and other officers. If it was secondary, it was harmless, because it caused a reduction in the amount which the plaintiff would otherwise have been entitled to recover. If we concede that the testimony would have been incompetent to debit the defendant, here it was helpful, and not harmful, in that it went to establish a credit.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 918)

VIZARD v. MOODY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 31, 1904.)

EVIDENCE — OBJECTIONS — WAIVER — HUSBAND AND WIFE — PARTNERSHIP — FIRM DEBTS — ASSUMPTION OF LIEN — MORTGAGE — SALE — NOTICE.

1. Where the defendant in an action of ejectment admits in his plea the execution by him of an instrument which forms a part of the plaintiff's abstract of title, it is not a good objection to the admission of the instrument in evidence that its execution has not been proved. The same principle governs as to proof of the execution of a deed when the maker of the deed appears in court, and testifies that he signed the instrument and that the deed is his.

2. In this state a married woman may engage in business as the partner of her husband, and may pledge her separate property for the payment of the partnership debts.

3. A married woman who buys property which is incumbered may assume the payment of the incumbrance in order to secure a clear title to the property, and she will be bound by such an assumption of the lien on the property.

4. A deed to lands located in Georgia was executed in Mississippi in January, 1900, but was attested by only one witness. In February, 1901, the maker acknowledged the deed in Mississippi before two witnesses, one of whom was a notary public, who attached his seal to his attestation. Held, that the instrument was entitled to record in Georgia, and was admissible in evidence in a trial involving title to the land conveyed.

5. Where the maker of a deed of trust to secure a debt expressly contracts that, in the event of default in the payment of the debt, the trustee may sell the land at public outcry before the door of the courthouse of a named county in another state, the sale of the land in such state in compliance with the terms of the trust deed is not void; and this is true, though the instrument be in the nature of a mortgage, and a sale thereunder quasi judicial in character.

6. Where the execution of a deed or mortgage has been admitted or proved, it is not a ground to exclude it from evidence that it is not under seal.

7. Where a deed of trust to secure a debt directed that, in the event of default in the payment of the debt, the trustee should sell the property, "after advertising said sale for ten days by publication in some newspaper published in" a named county, advertisement in a weekly paper in the county named for three successive issues next preceding the date of the sale was a compliance with the direction; it appearing that the first advertisement was more than 10 days prior to the date of the sale.

8. The letters excluded from evidence were admissible as throwing light on the real nature of the transaction between the parties which gave rise to the action of ejectment; and there was before the court sufficient evidence that the writings were executed by the defendant to enable the jury, by a comparison of signatures, to pass upon the issue raised by the contention as to the execution.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County: T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by A. Vizard against S. A. Moody. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Atkinson & Dunwoody, for plaintiff in error. Kay, Bennet & Conyers and Gale & Butts, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. This was a suit in ejectment and for mesne profits. Different branches of the same litigation have been before this court twice (115 Ga. 491, 41 S. E. 997; 117 Ga. 67, 43 S. E. 426), but the questions now presented are entirely different from those made on the former trials. The plaintiff, a nonresident, claimed title under two instruments—one a deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage, signed by the defendant and her husband, D. H. Moody, purporting to convey the property in dispute and other property, some of which was located in Alabama and some in Mississippi, to Mason as trustee for the plaintiff, to secure an indebtedness therein set out; and the other a deed from Woods, substituted trustee appointed in accordance with the terms of the instrument first mentioned to succeed Mason, resigned, conveying the property to the plaintiff. Both these instruments were, on objections which will hereafter be set out, ruled out by the court, as was also certain other evidence offered by the plaintiff. The court awarded a nonsuit, and to the ruling, as well as to the rejection of the evidence referred to, the plaintiff excepted.

1-3. The objections offered to the introduction of the conveyance from the defendant to Mason, trustee, were: (1) That the execution of the instrument was not proved; (2) that it shows on its face that it is a deed or mortgage upon the estate of a married woman, and given as security for the debt of another; and (3) that it recites the assumption of the debt of one Walters and his wife, but does not show upon what consideration such debt was assumed. We are satisfied that none of these objections is meritorious. It is a complete answer to the first that in her plea the defendant admitted the execution of the instrument for the purposes therein set out; and this averment in her plea was invoked on the trial by the plaintiff. See Civ. Code 1895, § 5188; Wood v. Isom, 68 Ga. 417. Nor is there any merit in the second objection set out above. It appears that Walters and wife were operating a turpentine farm in Mississippi, and were indebted to the plaintiff, Vizard, who was their factor, to the amount of more than $3,000. The defendant and her husband, desiring to purchase this farm, agreed to assume the debt of the Walterses to Vizard, and accordingly the turpentine farm and its appurtenances were turned over by the Walterses to a partnership composed of the defendant, her husband, D. H. Moody, and her son, J. D. Moody, doing business under the firm name of S. A. Moody & Co. It was also agreed that Vizard should advance to the Moodys $2,000 additional at stated intervals; and as evidence of the assumption by the Moodys of the debt of the Walterses, and of the contemplated advance of the additional sums by Vizard, notes were given by the Moodys to Vizard for $5,000; and as security for this sum, and for such further advances as might be made, the deed of trust under consideration was executed. This instrument authorized the trustee, upon default in payment of the debt to secure which it was given, to sell the property therein described, after first advertising the sale for 10 days by publication in some newspaper published in Jackson county, Miss., the sale to be made at public outcry before the courthouse of that county in the town of Scranton. There was evidence from which the jury could have found that the debt of the Walterses which was assumed by the defendant and her husband was a lien on the property sold to her firm. This court has repeatedly held that a married woman may be a partner in business with her husband, and that in such event her individual property is liable for the partnership debts. Burney v. Savannah Grocery Co., 98 Ga. 711, 25 S. E. 915, 58 Am. St. Rep. 842; Scofield v. Jones, 85 Ga. 816, 11 S. E. 1032; Ellis v. Mills, 99 Ga. 490, 27 S. E. 740. There is no reason why a married woman who buys property with a lien on it may not assume such lien; and this court has held that payment of a debt so assumed can be enforced against her without contravening the law embraced in Civ. Code 1895, § 2488. While a wife may not ordinarily assume the debts of her husband, it is well settled that, when she purchases property from him which is incumbered, she must, in order to secure an unincumbered title, pay off any debts created by him which are a lien upon the property purchased. Daniel v. Royce, 96 Ga. 566, 23 S. E. 496; Taylor v. American Freehold Co., 106 Ga. 238, 32 S. E. 158; Lowenstein v. Meyer, 114 Ga. 711, 40 S. E. 728. We therefore conclude that none of the objections offered to the deed of trust were sufficient to warrant its exclusion from evidence.

¶ 2. See Husband and Wife, vol. 26, Cent. Dig. § 226.

4. Default was made in the payment of the debt due by the Moodys to Vizard, and, in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust, Woods, the substituted trustee, advertised the property for sale in the Scranton Chronicle, a weekly newspaper published in Jackson county, Miss., and in due time exposed it for sale, when it was bid in by Vizard. The deed from Woods to Vizard was also excluded from evidence, the objections to it being that its execution had not been proved; that it was not executed in the presence of two witnesses, one of them an officer; and that it was not shown that Woods had authority to make the deed. Again we think that the objections made did not afford a sufficient ground for excluding the evidence offered. Woods himself was present at the trial, and testified to the execution of the deed. Certainly, as between him and Vizard, this was sufficient proof of execution. Civ. Code 1895, § 5244, par. 5. It appeared, however, that the deed, which was dated January 1, 1900, was at first attested by only one witness, and that the date of the attestation was one day after that of the signature. Subsequently, on February 19, 1901, Woods acknowledged his signature to the deed before two witnesses, one of whom was a notary public, who attached his seal of office to his attestation, and, thus attested, the deed was admitted to record in Glynn county, Ga., where the land in dispute is located. The acknowledgment before the two witnesses, one of whom was a notary public attaching a seal, cured whatever defect there was in the first attestation of the deed, and there was certainly no objection to its admission on the score of the sufficiency of the proof of its execution. Acts 1900, p. 52 (Van Epps' Code Supp. § 6184). The point as to the authority of Woods to make the deed is fully settled by the deed of trust, which was excluded from evidence. If that instrument was properly rejected, the point may be well taken; but as we hold that it should have been admitted, and as it contained the fullest proof of Woods' authority to act, there is nothing in the argument advanced.

5. In the brief of counsel for the defendant in error it is insisted, however, that for various reasons, which do not appear to have been urged on the trial in the court below, the deed of trust from the defendant to Mason, trustee, and the deed from Woods, substituted trustee, to the plaintiff, were inadmissible, and were therefore properly rejected by the court. The broad ground was taken that, regardless of technical questions as to the admissibility of the evidence, the instruments conveyed no title to the plaintiff, and, even had they been admitted, the same result, to wit, a judgment of nonsuit, would have been inevitable. In this view we do not concur. It is urged with considerable plausibility that, as the deed of trust executed by the defendant was in reality a mortgage, a sale under it was in the nature of a judicial sale, and could not legally be held elsewhere than in the county where the land was located. In the absence of an express agreement as to the place of sale contained in the deed of trust itself, this argument would be not without force; but we fail to see how the defendant can get around the fact that she expressly contracted that, in the event of default in the payment of the debt, the property should be sold in Jackson county, Miss. Her power to make this contract is not questioned, and we are constrained to hold that she is now bound by its terms.

6. It was also argued that the two instruments which were excluded from evidence were inadmissible because they were not under seal. This point we do not think is well taken. The attachment or recital of a seal in the execution of a writing conveys the idea of a greater degree of solemnity than is observed in the execution of an instrument not under seal, and by statute a greater period of limitation is allowed within which to bring suit on contracts executed in this manner; but the omission of a seal cannot affect the intention of the parties to the instrument, and a deed is none the less a deed because it is not under seal. See Civ. Code 1895, § 3602. Especially is this true when the grantor, as in the present case, is present in court, and by a solemn oath acknowledges the writing as his deed or by sworn pleadings admits the execution of the instrument for the purposes which it recites.

7. The deed of trust executed by the Moodys provided that, in the event of default in the payment of the debt to secure which it was given, the trustee should sell the property "after advertising said sale for ten days by publication in some newspaper published in said Jackson county, Miss." Advertisement of the sale was published in a weekly newspaper in the town of Scranton three times—on the 16th, 23d, and 30th days of December, 1899—and the sale was had on January 1, 1900. It is now argued by counsel for the defendant in error that there was no compliance with the provisions of the trust deed as to advertisement, and that notice of the sale should have been published every day for 10 days before the sale. It does not appear from the testimony whether there was a daily newspaper published in Jackson county, Miss., at the time this sale was had, or not, but the inference to be drawn from the evidence is that there was not. At all events, the trustee was not limited to any particular newspaper in the publication of the notice of the sale; and if he selected a weekly newspaper, as he had full power to do, it was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the trust deed if he advertised the sale in every issue of that paper appearing during the 10 days next preceding the day of the sale. Washington v. Bassett (R. I.) 10 Atl. 625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 929; Armstrong v. Scott, 3 G. Greene, 433.

8. The plaintiff also offered in evidence certain letters alleged to have been received by him from the defendant, the object of the evidence being to show that Mrs. Moody was a member of the firm of S. A. Moody & Co., and initiated the proceedings leading up to the execution of the trust deed to Mason, trustee. This evidence was also ruled out by the court, on the ground that it was irrelevant, and that the signature to the letters had not been proven to be that of the defendant. Here, again, we think the court erred. The letters were clearly admissible as tending to throw light on the real nature of the transaction between the parties, and were vitally relevant to the contentions of the plaintiff. A foundation was laid for their introduction by the introduction of other writings admitted to have been executed by the defendant, and her signature to the affidavit attached to her plea was before the court; and, if the genuineness of the signature to the letters offered was disputed, it was for the jury to say, from a comparison of the signatures, what was the truth of the issue. Civ. Code 1895, § 5247.

We conclude from the foregoing that the court below erred in each of the rulings on the admission of evidence of which complaint is made. Had this evidence been admitted, as it should have been, the plaintiff would have had a prima facie case, and a nonsuit could not legally have resulted.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except COBB, J., disqualified.

(119 Ga. 758)

JOSSEY v. BROWN et al

COLLIER v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 29, 1904.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—VESTED ESTATE—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—PERPETUITIES—DESCRIPTION OF BENEFICIARY—DOWER—WAIVER—ADOPTION—RIGHTS OF ADOPTED CHILDREN—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

By a will probated in 1850 the testator devised, in trust for his unmarried daughter, L., certain slaves and land for life, with remainder to her children, if any, "and if she should die and leave children, and they should not be raised and they should die, then in that case the man that she should marry to have one third, and the other two thirds to be equally divided between all my grandchildren." The daughter married. Her husband died. She did not remarry, and died without ever having had a child. Held:

1. Words which in a deed would create a condition may in a will be construed as a limitation.

2. Generally, where a prior estate is made to depend upon any prescribed event, and the second estate is to arise upon the determination of that event, the vesting of the prior estate is not to be taken as a condition precedent, but upon its failure the second estate takes effect.

3. Such construction generally accords with the intention of the settlor, for when he declares that the property is to go from one beneficiary to another, and thence to still others, he has indicated that each of those named are preferred over his heirs or the other objects of his bounty.

4. Where there has been the creation of a line of successive estates, the elimination of any intermediate interest accelerates the time for the vesting in possession of those subsequent thereto.

5. Here the birth of children was not a condition precedent to the right of the husband to take under the will.

6. The gift over to the husband was not conditional on the birth of children, but was subject to a limitation by which it might never be enjoyed if the wife had a child who reached maturity.

7. The gift over to the husband, having to take effect within 21 years after the death of the wife, was not void as an attempt to create a perpetuity.

8. Where there is a devise to an unmarried woman, and, on failure of children to attain 21 years, then over to the husband, the first person answering the description of husband is entitled to take.

9. There was no such uncertainty of the person who was to take as husband as to prevent his interest from being devisable or descendible.

10. Whether the estate devised to him was a contingent remainder and descendible to his heirs as they existed at the time of his death, under Civ. Code 1895, § 8101, or an executory devise descendible to those answering the description of heirs at the time of the death of the life tenant, is immaterial here.

11. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the wife waived her dower in the husband's general estate or elected to take a child's part.

12. In the absence of such proof there is no presumption that she ever had any vested estate in this or other realty of the husband.

13. On the face of the record the husband's interest in the property in controversy descended to his adopted children, who, by statute, were entitled to inherit from him.

14. Orders of adoption are for the benefit of the child, affect his status, are in the nature of judgments in rem, and cannot be collaterally attacked.

15. All presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the proceeding, and of the jurisdiction of the superior court passing the order of adoption.

16. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the order of adoption was by a proper court, and that "the judge satisfied himself of the truth of the facts stated in the petition, and that the father and mother of the adopted child had notice of the application," even though the record fails to show the residence of the child, of the petitioner, or of the parents of the child adopted.

17. Where a decree was signed February 2, 1903, and the bill of exceptions, dated April 2, 1903, recites that it was presented before the adjournment of the February term and within 60 days from the judgment complained of, the same will not be dismissed upon the ground that it was not certified in time. Civ. Code 1895, § 5539.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Monroe County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Bill by John S. Jossey against J. M. Brown and others and by Minnie Collier against the same defendants. From the decrees rendered, John S. Jossey and Martha Collier bring error. Reversed.

On January 6, 1856, Reuben Brown made his will, giving therein a large number of slaves and valuable real estate to his unmarried daughter, Lucinda. She soon after married John H. Jossey, who died about 1875, leaving no children except those adopted. His wife, Lucinda, did not remarry, and died February 18, 1901, without ever having had born to her any child. The case involves the determination of the question as to what disposition shall be made of real estate passing under the following provision in the will of Reuben Brown: Said property described in the will including the land aforesaid, "I give to my daughter Lucinda M. Brown, for her own separate support and the support and her family; and the property nor its increase is to be made subject to the debts of no person she may marry, it nor its proceeds, but to go wholly to her support her and her children and family. The above property I give to my daughter Lucinda M. Brown, for her own benefit and separate support, it and its increase for her and her children and family, at her death it and its increase to go to her children and be equally divided between them; and the above property, it nor its increase nor proceeds, is not to be made subject to the debts of no persons that she may marry; and if she should die and leave children, and they should not be raised and they should die, then in that case it is my will that all the property that I have given to my said daughter Lucinda M. Brown be put together and the man that she should marry have one third of it and its increase, and the other two thirds to be equally divided between all my grandchildren. And all the property and money that my daughter shall receive of my estate is to go in the way that I have left the above; and having the utmost confidence in my three worthy friends, Z. E. Harmen and John H. Thomas, and Nathan Phillips, I do constitute them as my lawful trustees to the property that I have bequeathed to my daughter Lucinda M. Brown and to her children." In 1859 a bill was filed by John H. Jossey and his wife, Lucinda, to construe the will of Reuben Brown. From the original record of that case, reported in 28 Ga. 285, it appears that Judge Cabaniss, of the superior court, held that the rule in Wild's Case did not apply; that there was no provision in contemplation of an indefinite failure of issue; that under the act of 1821 (Cobb, 169) Lucinda did not take an estate tail, but an estate for life for the benefit of herself and the support of her children; that after the death of Lucinda the property was to go to the children absolutely, if they should arrive at maturity; that, if there were no children born, or if those born did not reach maturity, the limitation over in favor of the husband was not void as being an effort to create a perpetuity; that there was a good devise to the wife for life, with a contingent remainder to the children in fee, and the gift over to the husband was good as an executory devise, and, if the contingency of a child never happened, the devise to the husband was to take effect upon the death of the wife—citing, in support of this last proposition, Lee, C. J., in Gulliver v. Wickett, 1 Wils. 105. There was a general affirmation, but this court said, "The heirs at law of Reuben Brown not being parties to the bill, we decline expressing any opinion as between them and the husband and grandchildren." Jossey v. White, 28 Ga. 272. By undated orders, signed by Judge Cole, of the Macon circuit, it appeared that on the petition of John H. Jossey an order was passed declaring that John Hamilton's name should be changed to John S. Jossey, and he declared the adopted son of John H. Jossey, and made capable of inheriting from said John H. Jossey. By another proceeding, brought in Bibb superior court by John H. Jossey, the name of Martha Davis was changed to Mary Eliza Jossey, and she was declared the adopted child of said John H., and made capable of inheriting from said John H. Jossey. After the death of Lucinda Jossey the property is alleged to have been taken possession of by her administrator, and certain grandchildren of Reuben Brown, remaindermen, named in the extract of the will above quoted, instituted proceedings for the recovery of the land. Other descendants of Reuben Brown intervened, as did also Martha Collier and John S. Jossey, the adopted children of John H. Jossey. The chancellor construed the will, and in effect decreed that John S. Jossey and Martha Collier, adopted children of John H. Jossey, were not entitled to any interest in the property. They each filed exceptions to the ruling made, and the only question presented by both records is whether, as adopted children of John H. Jossey, they took the one-third devised to the husband of Lucinda under the will of Reuben Brown.

Cabaniss & Willingham, E. G. Cabaniss, Jr., R. L. Berner, and J. B. Williamson, for plaintiffs in error. J. E. Hall, T. E. Patterson, and O. H. B. Bloodworth, for defendants in error.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). Stripped of all unnecessary verbiage, the devise here was in trust for Lucinda for life, with remainder to her children, if any; and, if none, or those born died before reaching maturity, then over to any man with whom Lucinda might intermarry. The heirs general of Reuben Brown insist that the birth of children was a condition precedent to John H. Jossey's right to take under the will. We find some cases where, on the special words of the instrument, and giving effect to the testator's evident intention, it was held that the devise over was dependent on a contingency, which, never having happened, the remainder could not take effect. Moorhouse v. Wainhouse, 1 Bl. Rep. 638; Fearne, 365, 236; Andrews v. Fulham, 1 Wils. 107; Grascot v. Warren, 12 Mod. 128;

Davis v. Norton, 2 P. Wms. 390; Sheffield v. Lord Orrery, 3 Atk. 22; Oetjen v. Diemmer, 115 Ga. 1005, 42 S. E. 388. But the decided weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that the remainder over takes effect, the estate in favor of the children being considered as a limitation, rather than a condition precedent. In other words, the birth of children and their death before maturity was not a condition to Jossey's right to take, but his interest was rather subject to a limitation by which it could not vest in possession if a child was born who attained maturity. In many cases words of condition and contingency are to be construed as words of limitation. Stathan v. Bell, 1 Cowper, 40. And words which in a deed would create a condition may in a will be construed as a limitation. Note to Simpson v. Vickers, 14 Vesey, Jr. 347. "Wherever the prior estate is made to depend upon any prescribed event, and the second estate is to arise upon the determination of that event, the first is not to be taken as a condition precedent, but upon its failure the second estate must take place." Doe v. Brabant, 3 Br. 393. These rules of construction are not merely technical, but generally accord with the intention of the settlor; for when he declares that the property is to go from one beneficiary to another, and on certain terms thence to still others, he has indicated that each of those named is preferred over his heirs or the other objects of his bounty. It is not like a chain, where everything depending thereon falls with the destruction of any prior link, but rather the creation of a line of successive estates, in which the later are accelerated in time of enjoyment by the elimination of any intermediate interest. Compare 1 Jarm. Wills, *764; Mathis v. Hammond, 6 Rich. Eq. 121. There are a number of adjudicated cases of high authority sustaining this view. In Horton v. Whittaker, 1 Durnf. & East, 346, the testator recited that his sister M. was well provided for during the life of her husband, W., and therefore would not, unless she happened to survive W., want any assistance to enable her to live. He thereupon devised lands to trustees in trust that during the life of M. they should pay the rents to his other sisters, E. and B., and after the death of the husband, W., in case the testator's sister M. should then be living, then to the use of E., B., and M., severally, during their respective lives, with remainders to their sons, successively, in tail, with cross-remainders between the sisters on default of issue of their body, respectively. Held, that the condition of the married sister, M., surviving her husband, W., did not extend to any of the limitations subsequent to her estate for life. Fearne, 235. Where there was a devise to a wife for life, and after her death to the child with which she was then supposed to be eniente, and, if such child should die before 21, then the property to be divided between the wife and certain other persons named, the question was versed. As some of the assignments of error Lord Harcourt held that it was, even though no child was born, and the death of the child under 21 never happened. And in another case in which the same will was under consideration, Lee, C. J., held that the limitation over was good; that the devise to the infant, being ineffectual, was out of the case; that the law was the same whether the devise preceding the limitation over was originally void, or became so by nonexistence of the infant; that, since the law allows such limitation over, it allows the waiting for it; that it was one of those executory limitations which depend on some contingency. Fearne, 511; Andrews v. Fulham, 1 Vesey, Sr. 421. While under this same will a distinction was made between an estate for years and an estate in fee (Id. t. p. 511), it was again construed in Gulliver v. Wickett, 1 Wils. 105, where Lee, C. J., said that there was a good devise to the wife for life, with a contingent remainder to the child in fee; and, if the contingency of a child never happened, then the last remainder was to take effect on the death of the wife. Bearing in mind the principles announced by these cases, having regard to the fact that the testament was prepared by an unskilled draftsman, and construing it as a whole, it is clear that Reuben Brown did not contemplate a partial intestacy, but intended to make a complete disposition of his property; that, in the order of nature, he expected his daughter to have children, but he realized that, even if she did, they might not attain majority. His scheme, therefore, was to give to the daughter for life (Jossey v. White, 28 Ga. 265), and after her death to her children, if any, but, if they died before reaching maturity, then one-third to her husband, who was thus preferred over testator's heirs. The estate thus created in favor of her husband was subject to a limitation by which it would be defeated by the birth of children and their attaining maturity. Any interest conveyed to John S. Jossey necessarily had to vest in possession within 21 years after the death of Lucinda. The devise over was therefore not void as an attempt to create a perpetuity. Civ. Code 1895, § 3102. There were no children born to Lucinda, and therefore no vesting of the intermediate estate between that to her for life and that over to the husband. It is claimed, therefore, that he took a contingent remainder, and that his wife and children, who were his heirs at the time of his death, inherited this contingent remainder by virtue of Civ. Code 1895, § 3101. On the other hand, it is contended that this will, having been probated in 1850, is to be governed by the law as it existed prior to the adoption of the Code; that according to the language of the will the estate limited to Jossey was to take effect after the base or determinable fee in the children; that a fee could not be limited on a fee in a deed; that the limitation over could only be good by way of executory devise; and that executory devises and possibilities of reverter descend to those answering to the description of heirs when the estate falls in at the death of the life tenant—being here the adopted children. Payne v. Rosser, 53 Ga. 662; Civ. Code, 1895, §§ 3082, 3099; Matthews v. Hudson, 81 Ga. 120, 7 S. E. 286, 12 Am. St. Rep. 305; Phinizy v. Few, 19 Ga. 66; Groce v. Rittenberry, 14 Ga. 233; Demill v. Reid, 71 Md. 175, 17 Atl. 1014. We find it unnecessary, in the present state of the record, to determine whether the interest of John H. Jossey descended to his wife and adopted children who were his heirs at the time of his death, or only to the adopted children who were his heirs at the time of the death of Lucinda. There is nothing to show whether, after his death, the wife made an election between dower and a child's part. In the absence of such proof there is no presumption that she ever had any vested estate in this or other realty of her husband. Snipes v. Parker, 98 Ga. 522, 25 S. E. 580 (2); Farmers' Banking Co. v. Key, 112 Ga. 301, 37 S. E. 447, and cit.

The defendants in error further contend that, even if the birth of children was not a condition precedent, still there was an uncertainty as to who the husband would be, and therefore the case is within the rule in Civ. Code 1895, § 3101, which provides that, "If the contingency be as to the person, and that person be not in esse at the time when the contingency happens, his heirs are not entitled." The heirs of Brown contend that the testator's purpose was to provide first for the children, and, in the event of their death before maturity, for the husband who was their father—not for a husband who was not so related to them; and that there was an evident uncertainty as to the person, since Lucinda might have married a second time, and had children by the second husband. Possibly so, but when the will was drawn it was equally possible that there might have been children by the first marriage and none by the second, or there might have been children by both marriages; and this double uncertainty as to which husband was to take, and what interest they should take in case there were children by both marriages or none by either, emphasizes the wisdom of the rule, which, in aid of the early vesting of estates, declares that in the case of gifts to unmarried women for life, with remainder to the husband, the first who answers to the description is to be considered to have been intended by the testator as the recipient of his bounty. See Radford v. Willis, 7 Ch. App. 10; Civ. Code, 1895, § 3104.

The petition for the adoption of John Hammond by John H. Jossey was presented to the superior court of Bibb county. It recites the name of his mother, but does not show whether she was alive or dead. The petition to adopt Martha Davis was also presented to the superior court of Bibb county, and shows that the mother and father of the child were dead. The orders declaring these two children the adopted children of John H. Jossey and making each capable of inheriting from him, are both undated. The agreed statement of facts recites that it is admitted that these orders were allowed between 1851 and 1870—presumably to cover the period between the death of the testator and the death of John H. Jossey. Inasmuch as the statute authorizing courts to pass such orders was not approved until March 6, 1856, this uncertainty in the date might have been fatal to the rights of the plaintiff in error, but for the fact that this court takes judicial cognizance that Judge Cole, by whom they were signed, was judge of the Macon circuit only during the period between 1865 and 1878. Civ. Code 1895, § 5148; Ponder v. Shumans, 80 Ga. 506, 5 S. E. 502. In the case of Martha Davis, both parents being dead, no notice was necessary, and in the case of John Hamilton the presumption in favor of the regularity of the proceedings and the jurisdiction of the court must prevail in the absence of any evidence whatever to show that the court had no jurisdiction, and that no notice was given, or that there was any person entitled to notice in life at the time. Such orders fix the status of the child, are in his interest, and cannot be collaterally attacked. Certainly, after the lapse of so long a time, every presumption must be made in favor of the validity of these orders. It must be borne in mind that the statute does not provide for process, nor for the form of service, but only that the judge must be satisfied of the truth of the facts of the petition, and of the further fact that such father or mother had notice of the application. Civ. Code 1895, § 2497.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(85 W. Va. 576)

ROGERS v. MILLER et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
April 1, 1904.)

CO-TENANCY—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Syllabus in case of Cochran v. Cochran, 54 W. Va. —, 46 S. E. 924, approved and applied. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Gilmer County; John M. Hamilton, Special Judge.

Bill by Elza A. Rogers against Amelia B. Miller and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants George M. Rogers and W. W. Brannon appeal. Affirmed.

R. F. Kidd, W. B. McGeary, and W. W. Brannon, for appellants. Linn & Brannon and L. H. Barnett, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. On the 30th day of August, 1881, Ourrence B. Conrad, by deed of that date, in pursuance of a contract entered into with Elial G. Rogers on the 8th day of October, 1874, which contract was assigned and transferred to the parties of the second part mentioned in said deed, John D. Estor Rogers, Francis Luther Rogers, and George M. Rogers, son of Elial G. Rogers, and Mary Ann Rogers, wife of Elial G. Rogers, and her minor children, of the second part, in consideration of \$332.10, with its interest, conveyed to the said parties of the second part a tract of land on the right-hand fork of Mike's Run, a branch of Sand Fork of Little Kanawha river, in Gilmer county, containing 162 acres, described by metes and bounds; 90 acres of the said tract (also described by metes and bounds separately from the whole tract, and upon which 90 acres the said Elial G. Rogers and his family then resided) to John D. Estor Rogers, Francis Luther Rogers, and George Melvin Rogers, "and the residue of the above-described tract of land, containing about 72 acres, is hereby granted and conveyed to the said Mary Ann Rogers and her infant or minor children." Immediately after the execution of the deed from Conrad, the said John D. Estor, Francis Luther, and George Melvin Rogers entered into possession of the 90 acres so conveyed to them; and said Elial G. Rogers, with his wife and the younger children, removed from the 90 acres and took possession of the 72 acres so conveyed to Mary Ann and her minor children. While the deed from Conrad for the 162 acres was dated August 30, 1881, it was not acknowledged and delivered until the 15th of March, 1882. Immediately after the last-mentioned date the parties all entered into possession of their respective tracts as stated. At the date of the deed of August 30, 1881, Francis Luther Rogers and George Melvin Rogers were under the age of 21 years, but the former had passed his twenty-first birthday on the 19th day of February, 1882, about a month before the deed was executed and recorded. Various deeds were made for interests in the 72 acres by those entitled to and in possession of them until finally Elza A. Rogers had the title of all claiming interest in said 72 acres excepting the interest of Amelia Miller, who had sold her interest on the 23d day of June, 1900, to the said Elza Rogers, and had been paid her price for it; but her husband had failed to join in the conveyance, and her deed was therefore void. On the 30th day of October, 1901, the said Amelia and her husband, Miles Miller, by deed conveyed to W. W. Brannon, with general warranty, one undivided sixth interest in said residue of 72 acres, described in her deed as the "one undivided sixth interest in a certain tract of sixty-three and $\frac{61}{100}$ acres, being the interest of the said Amelia B. Miller in the residue of a tract of 160 acres conveyed by C. B. Conrad to Francis Luther Rogers and others," and referring to the deed of record. On the 3d day of May, 1902, George M. Rogers and his wife, Mattie Rogers, granted and conveyed to said W. W. Brannon "the one undivided half of their interest, whatever it may be, in all the oil and gas in, on, or under said" tract of land described as about 70 acres, "being the remainder of a tract conveyed by C. B. Conrad to Francis Luther Rogers and others." At the May rules, 1902, Eliza A. Rogers filed his bill in the clerk's office of the circuit court of Gilmer county against Amelia B. Miller and Miles Miller, her husband, and W. W. Brannon, and after the filing of demurrers and answers to the bill, at the September rules, 1902, the plaintiff filed his amended bill, making new parties and new allegations, alleging the making of the deed by George M. Rogers and his wife to said Brannon for an interest in the oil and gas in the said residue of the 160 acres described in said deed as about 70 acres; alleging that said Brannon at and before the conveyance by said George M. Rogers to him had full notice of the rights of the plaintiff under said conveyance, and that the said Brannon took his conveyance chargeable with said notice, and subject to all of plaintiff's rights at law and in equity; alleging that said 72 acres was susceptible of being partitioned in kind, and that he had a right to have the same partitioned; and praying that the court pass upon the validity of said Brannon's deed from Amelia B. Miller, and, if held invalid, to cancel the same, and, if not, to direct partition of the said land in kind, giving this plaintiff seven-eighths thereof and to the said Brannon one-eighth, canceling the deed from George M. Rogers and his wife to said Brannon as a cloud upon plaintiff's title, and decreeing to plaintiff against the said Miles Miller a recovery of \$55, with its proper interest thereon, being the amount paid Miles Miller and Amelia, his wife, by plaintiff, for her interest in said land; and for further relief.

The defendants Amelia Miller and W. W. Brannon and George M. Rogers filed their demurrers and answers, denying the material allegations of the bill and amended bill. Depositions were taken on behalf of the plaintiff and of the defendants Brannon and George M. Rogers, and filed in the cause, which came on to be heard on the 5th day of June, 1903, upon the bill and amended bill, answers and the replications to the answers, and the depositions, when it was adjudged that the plaintiff had established title to seven-eighths of the undivided one-half of the 72 acres of land, and was entitled to partition thereof between himself and the defendants Amelia B. Miller and W. W. Brannon, the owners of the undivided one-eighth of the said land, and that the said deed from George M. Rogers and his wife to W. W. Brannon bearing date the 2d day of May, 1902, purporting to convey one undivided one-half interest claimed by George M. Rogers in said land, constituted a cloud upon plaintiff's title, which the plaintiff was entitled to have removed, and canceled said deed, and appointed commissioners to make partition of the land if they should find it susceptible of partition without prejudice to the rights of the parties, and assign to plaintiff seven-eighths thereof according to quantity, quality, and value, and assigning to the defendants Brannon and Amelia B. Miller, jointly, the remaining one-eighth—the said Brannon in his answer claiming only one-half interest of said Amelia B. Miller; and if they should find it impracticable to partition the same between the parties according to their respective rights with the reservation of the gas and oil in and under said land, and find partition cannot be made as indicated, and cannot be made with owelty, that they so report, that a sale be made under decree, etc. From which decree defendants George M. Rogers and W. W. Brannon appealed.

The claim of appellants, George Melvin Rogers and W. W. Brannon, is based upon the fact that at the time of the deed of August, 1881, by Conrad, the defendant George M. Rogers was a minor under the age of 21 years, and, the conveyance of the 72 acres in said deed being to said Mary Ann Rogers and her infant or minor children, he, being an infant at the time, insists that he was one of the grantees. This is technically true, but at the time he was quite a young man, and it was evidently intended, as appears from the face of the deed itself and the overwhelming preponderance of the oral testimony, that the purpose was to convey the 90 acres to George M. Rogers and his two brothers as and for their full portion of said 162 acres of land, and that the residue, 72 acres, was intended to be conveyed to Mary Ann Rogers, the mother, and the younger children. While George would hold an interest in the 72 acres under the deed but for the facts and circumstances of the case as they appear in the record, yet it is made clear from the testimony that the intention of the father in having the deed made as it was was to give to his three sons the 90 acres, and the mother and her younger children the residue. Immediately on the execution of the deed from Conrad the parents and the younger children left the 90 acres upon which they had been living and making their home, and took possession and made their home upon the 72 acres; the sons holding exclusive possession of the 90 acres, and their other and younger children that of the 72 acres. Elial G. Rogers, the father, testified that he purchased and paid for the whole tract, and had a contract in writing with Conrad for the same dated October 8, 1874; that he had searched for the same, and was unable to find it among his papers; that he asked Conrad to write the deed so as to convey to his three sons named the 90 acres, and to his wife, Mary Ann Rogers, and her other children the residue of the 162 acres after deducting the 90 acres, and that Conrad agreed to do so; that he had assigned said contract to his wife and children; that he went to Conrad, who was then clerk of the circuit court of Gilmer county, who told him he had written the deed as he had requested, and as he understood it, and thought it would carry out witness' intentions; he acknowledged the deed, and witness had it recorded; that his son Francis Luther was 21 years of age on the 19th of February, 1882, and was dead when witness' deposition was taken; that the deed was acknowledged and recorded on the 15th day of March, 1882; that the three sons took possession of the 90 acres immediately after the deed was delivered, and they and those claiming under them had had possession of said 90 acres ever since; that "on behalf of Mary Ann Rogers, my wife, and our children other than John D. Estor Rogers, Francis Luther Rogers, and George Melvin Rogers, namely, Rebecca, who afterwards married James Moore, Elza A. Rogers (the plaintiff), Amelia B., who afterward married Miles Miller, Theodosia, who afterwards married Clarence Kidd, Josephine, who afterward married McClenen Henline, and is now deceased, Elizabeth, who afterward married Andrew Posey, Permetras N., I took possession of said residue, and my wife and myself and the said children and those claiming under them have had actual possession ever since"; that "it was held adversely, continuously, openly, and notoriously against Francis Luther Rogers, George M. Rogers, and all others—those of our children I have named as claiming it, and my wife, Mary Ann Rogers"; that he did not intend Conrad to convey any interest in the residue of the 162 acres after deducting the 90 acres to either of the three sons named, and never understood that the deed conveyed them any interest in said residue, but that his wife and the other children were to have the residue free from any claim of John D. Estor, Francis Luther, and George Melvin Rogers, and that he so understood the deed, and that it was so understood by all the children; that he never heard of George Melvin setting up any claim to it "until some time last winter or fall," and that Francis Luther and George Melvin knew from the first that witness' wife and his other children, who had possession of the residue, claimed the same as their own against the world; that witness was present when plaintiff Elza A. Rogers and George Melvin Rogers were in the house of the latter and talking to each other about the proposed purchase by the said Elza of the said residue from those witness had named as the claimants thereof under the possession he had spoken of, and George Melvin made no objection to Elza's proposed purchase, and made no claim to any interest in the residue; that "George Melvin Rogers told me he never would have claimed an interest in the residue if Elza had not made him mad."

Mary Ann Rogers testified that before her husband came back from Glenville and told her the deed was made they lived on the 90 acres, and right away after that they moved off the 90 acres and onto the residue of 72 acres, and continued in possession of it without any disturbance or any claim to it on the part of either of the three boys named until her son Elza purchased the same, and that the three sons took possession of and held the 90 acres.

John D. Estor Rogers testified that when his father went to Glenville to get the deed from Conrad, on his return he told witness and his brothers George Melvin and Francis Luther that the deed had been made and put on record; that by it they three were to have the 90 acres, and that their mother and the other children were to have what was left of the 162 acres after taking out the 90 acres; that they took possession of the 90 acres immediately, and they and those claiming under them had been in possession thereof ever since, while, on the other hand, their father and mother, for their mother and the other children named in said deed, took possession of the said residue, claiming it and holding it as their own under said deed against all others, and held the same in open, notorious, and exclusive possession from that time on until his brother Elza purchased the same, and after that their father and mother continued in possession under Elza "until last spring"; that he never heard either George Melvin or Francis Luther make any claim to any part of said residue until after Elza had obtained deed therefor; that when his father returned from Glenville "he told me and my brother Francis Luther Rogers and George Melvin Rogers that the 90 acres was to be our full portion of the said 162 acres, and we all accepted it as such."

Mary A. Rogers, widow of Francis Luther Rogers, deceased, says her husband told her both before and after they were married that the parcel of 90 acres had been set apart for him and his brothers John D. and George Melvin as their portion of the 162 acres, and he never claimed, in any conversation when talking about the land, either before or after marriage, any interest in any part of the land except the 90 acres.

Rebecca Moore, daughter of Elial G. and Mary Ann Rogers, testified as follows: "I am thirty-seven years of age. I was present and remember the time when my father returned from Glenville and told my brothers John D. Rogers, George Melvin Rogers, and Francis Luther Rogers that he had had the 162 acres of land in this cause mentioned divided between the children and our mother; that he had given John D., Francis Luther, and George Melvin Rogers ninety acres, the portion of the 162 acres, and the residue he had given to my mother and the rest of us children as named in this cause. Immediately after he told us that, my three brothers John D., Francis Luther, and George Melvin took possession of the ninety acres, and my father and mother and the rest of us children moved upon and took possession of the remaining seventy-two acres. My father and mother lived and resided upon the seventy-two acres of land, claiming it for my mother and us children, until the same was purchased by my brother Elza, and in fact resided there under Elza until last spring. My brothers John D., Francis Luther, and George Melvin, from the time they were informed by my father about the manner in which he had divided his land, were perfectly satisfied with their portion, and never made any claim of right to an interest in the seventy-two acres until after the same was purchased by my brother Elza, and during all that time they and each of them knew that the seventy-two acres was in the possession of and claimed by my mother and the rest of us children as above named by me; and in fact I never knew or heard of any of them making any claim to the same until last winter, when George Melvin made claim to an interest in the same."

Lillie I. Rogers, wife of plaintiff, testified that after her husband had obtained the deed from the other heirs for the 72 acres, George Melvin Rogers "was at our house on the 72 acres," and spoke about receiving a letter which she had written him for her husband, inclosing $35, with the request that he pay it to Amelia Rogers when she would sign a writing which was sent with her letter, by which she would agree to sell her right, title, and interest; and when talking about the land he made no claim to any interest in the 72 acres; that the last time she heard him talk about the 72 acres was at her house on the land on the 23d of February, 1902, or on the first Sunday after the 16th of that month, and he did not then claim any interest in the land.

McClenen Henline testified that several years ago he was in the house of the late Francis Luther Rogers, who told him that his father had divided the home farm, and gave to him and his brothers John D. and George M. Rogers 90 acres as their portion of the land, and had given the residue of the land to his mother and other children named in this suit other than the first named three, George Melvin, John D., and himself.

P. N. Rogers, one of the defendants, testified that at one time he talked of buying the heirs' interest in the 72 acres, and George Melvin Rogers told him that if any of them would buy out the heirs except Francis Luther, John D., and himself, and go there and take care of the old people, they would get the 72 acres, and that George never claimed an interest in the 72 acres "until last winter" (deposition taken September 17, 1902); that it was always understood by all that John D., Francis Luther, and George Melvin had received their full portion of the 162 acres in the 90 acres which they took possession of immediately after the execution of the Conrad deed, and that his father and mother and brothers and sisters and those claiming under them, named in the Conrad deed, other than John D., Francis Luther, and George Melvin, had had quiet, peaceable, unbroken, and notorious possession of the 72 acres even since he could remember, and the 90 acres had been in like possession of the said three brothers and those claiming under them, and he never knew John D. or Francis Luther to claim any right in the 72 acres, and never knew George Melvin to claim any such right until the recent development of oil in that particular neighborhood; and that "he told me he had tried to buy Elza out, and that Elza would not sell to him; and he further told me that he didn't like to stand by and see the oil flowing there in large quantities and him get none of it, and, if there had not been oil discovered there, he would never have made any claim to a right in the 72 acres."

George Rogers testifies to the three taking possession of the 90 acres, and the mother and her children occupying and holding as their own the 72 acres, which they held and claimed adversely to the said J. D. Rogers, Francis Luther Rogers, and George Melvin Rogers, with knowledge on the part of the latter three of such possession and claim; and that he was told by the said J. D., Francis Luther, and George Melvin, both before and after the Conrad deed, that the said 90 acres was to be their portion of the land, and that the residue was to be the portion of the others witness had designated. Other witnesses testified to like facts.

George Melvin claims in his testimony that he and John D. Estor and Francis Luther had paid for the land; that they paid all the purchase money but a little that had been paid before; and makes a lame attempt to bolster up a claim to an interest in the 72 acres; but he relies chiefly on the fact that he was not yet 21 years of age when the Conrad deed was made, and therefore takes under the deed as one of the minor children. He says he never made any claim of the interest before because he did not want to bother his parents while they were both living; and he speaks of other witnesses whom he had served with subpoenas, but were unable to attend the taking of the depositions because of bad weather, bad roads, and sickness. There is some little evidence tending to prove that George claimed an interest in the land at times before Elza purchased from the other heirs, but the overwhelming preponderance of testimony is that he claimed no interest in it, and, further, that he never had an interest in it, and that he always understood that he and his two brothers had the 90 acres for their share of the 162 acres, and had no claim whatever upon the 72 acres. And the possession adverse to George Melvin Rogers of the mother and the other minor children from 1882 to the date of the deed from the heirs to plaintiff, November 1, 1900, is well established.

This case is almost identical with the case of D. J. Cochran v. George B. Cochran (decided at the present term) 46 S. E. 925. That was a case in which the father died in 1865 seised of a tract of 215 acres, and the mother died in 1882 seised of a tract of 72 acres. The defendant, George B. Cochran, had lived on the 72 acres with his mother and cared for her, and she had verbally given him the 72 acres. George had remained in possession of it, claiming it as his own, taking all the rents and profits, paying the taxes, keeping up the improvements, with knowledge to the other heirs that he was claiming it adversely. D. J. Cochran, his brother, brought suit for partition of the 215 acres among the heirs of his father and of the 72 acres among the heirs of his mother, all being the same parties. George filed his answer and cross-bill setting up his claim to the 72 acres, and proved his adverse possession. The circuit court decreed the partition of the 72 acres as well as the 215. George B. brought the cause here upon appeal, and the following is the syllabus in that case: "When one tenant in common occupies the common property openly, notoriously, and exclusively as the sole owner, keeping up the improvements, paying the taxes thereon, and receiving to himself the rents and profits, and exercising over the property such acts of ownership as evidence an intention to ignore the rights of his co-tenants, such acts amount to a disseisin, and his possession will be regarded as adverse to his co-tenants from the time they are shown to have knowledge of such acts and claims." The discussion of, and the authorities cited in, the said case of Cochran v. Cochran are equally applicable in the case at bar, and it is deemed unnecessary to do more here than to refer to that case as controlling this.

The decree of the circuit court must be affirmed.

BRANNON, J., absent.

(55 W. Va. 484)

MALSBY v. LANARK FUEL CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 29, 1904.)

PLEADING—MISJOINDER OF COUNTS—DEMURRER.

1. A count upon an individual demand cannot be joined with a count upon a partnership demand in a declaration, neither partner being dead. It is a misjoinder of counts, and is fatal to the declaration on demurrer.

2. Misjoinder of counts in a declaration is fatal to the declaration upon demurrer.

Dent, J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Raleigh County; J. M. Sanders, Judge.

Action by L. W. Malsby against the Lanark Fuel Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. H. Hatcher and Laing & Fife, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Dunn and Farley & Honaker, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, J. This is an action of assumpsit in the circuit court of Raleigh county by L. W. Malsby against the Lanark Fuel Company, in which the plaintiff recovered by verdict and judgment $222.30, and the defendant brings the case to this court. The defendant demurred to the declaration and each count, but the demurrer was overruled. The first count is the common count in indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold, "for work furnished by the plaintiff for the defendant," for money laid out for defendant, and upon account stated. The second states a written contract between L. W. Malsby & Co., by which Malsby & Co. agreed to grade sidings, inclines, and pit for a drumhouse, and build a drumhouse, trestle, and chute, and some other work. It avers that L. W. Malsby & Co. was composed of L. W. Malsby and L. T. Marshal when the contract was made, but that before the work began Marshal withdrew from the firm, leaving L. W. Malsby as successor to L. W. Malsby & Co., and that all the work done was by L. W. Malsby as such successor. The third count avers an oral contract between Malsby and defendant for the doing of the work.

There is a misjoinder of counts. The first and third counts aver a contract by Malsby as an individual with the defendant, the second a contract between a firm and defendant. The contract, having been made by the firm, remained the contract of the firm after dissolution, because dissolution does not affect uncompleted contracts. The liability to do the work still rested on the firm, and when one partner did the work he did it for the firm in execution of a contract of the firm, and the legal right to pay for it vested in the firm. Right of action on it was vested in the firm as late partners. The cause of action accrued under a firm contract. The firm continued as to this contract. Bates on Partners, §§ 707, 711; 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 217; Story on Partners, § 325; Houser v. Irvine (Pa.) 38 Am. Dec. 708. Both partners living, the right of action was joint in them. A partnership demand cannot be joined with an individual demand unless one partner is dead, leaving the demand to survive to him alone, as then he has the sole legal title. 15 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 914, 919. "The consequences of a misjoinder of counts or causes of action are more material than in a case of the single count being defective; for in the case of misjoinder, however perfect the counts may be in themselves, the declaration will be bad on general demurrer (1 Chit. Pl. [16th Am. Ed.] 228 et seq.) but not under our statute of Jeofails (V. C. 1878, c. 177, § 3; Id. c. 169, § 2) on motion in arrest of judgment, or on writ of error, unless a demurrer had been put in and overruled." 1 Minor, 448; 2 Tucker, 204. "When there is a misjoinder of counts, a demurrer for this cause will be a general demurrer to the whole declaration; not to a particular count, or a particular breach, or to any other part of a count. This principle is in no wise inconsistent with that which requires a demurrer to a particular count, or a particular part of a count, in order to make available an objection applicable merely to a count or part of a count; for in the case of a misjoinder the objection is no more applicable to any one count or part of a count than to any other. The objection is that the plaintiff has joined causes of action which the law does not allow to be joined; and the objection, if sustained, necessarily shows that the whole declaration is bad." 1 Robinson's (Old) Prac. 284. See 4 Minor, 1161. "After demurrer for misjoinder the plaintiff cannot cure it by nolle prosequi." 2 Tidd's Prac. 735. The title—the legal title—to this demand being in the partners, both must join. How could a demand from the execution of a partnership contract be joined with an individual demand? It cannot be thought that, because the second count says that Marshal withdrew from the firm, "leaving said L. W. Malsby the successor to L. W. Malsby & Co.," and the work was done by the plaintiff as such successor, it is, in effect, an assignment. After dissolution there is no successor. It has no legal meaning here. One is no more successor than the other. And there is no allegation of a contract of assignment between the partners. The pleader only means that, by reason of the plaintiff doing the work, he, in law, was entitled to the demand, which is not the case, for it belonged to both, subject to settlement and firm debts. The law requires legal certainty in pleading, and the word used to aver withdrawal of one member and that the other was successor—the whole averment—is indefinite, uncertain, capable of other interpretation than that of assignment. No form can be found in common-law pleading averring assignment which would warrant this. State v. Aler, 39 W. Va. 549, 20 S. E. 585; Hogg, Plead. & Forms, 59.

We therefore reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and render judgment for the defendant on the demurrer to the declaration, because of misjoinder of counts. There being no declaration, it is improper to pass on other questions.

DENT, J. (dissenting). I cannot concur in the conclusion in this case, because it is unreasonable, and productive of gross injustice. The sole ground for dismissing the action is a misjoinder of causes of action in different counts. The second count is said to be a partnership demand, for which one partner cannot sue separately. If this were true, of course the misjoinder would be improper. The count, however, shows on its face that the plaintiff claims the whole beneficial interest in the demand sued upon, and when the writing is produced by order of the court it shows the plaintiff alone may sue upon it, as it is a contract in his own name. Hence the count, if badly defective, is amendable, and, if this action is dismissed, all the plaintiff can do is to bring another suit in his own name, in the same cause of action, with proper allegations showing that he is the sole beneficiary thereof. To promote substantial justice the trial court may permit amendments at any time before final judgment. Section 8, c. 131, Code 1899. A defendant may not crave oyer to a writing not under seal, but he may have an order from the court permitting an inspection of the writing, which is equivalent to the same thing as oyer; and if, when the writing is produced, it shows that it has been misdescribed in the count, this should be accordingly amended. Steph. Pleadings, 160. When so amended, there is no misjoinder, for a partner has the right to sue for a partnership demand: First. When the beneficial interest is in him, and the other members of the firm are nominal, and this is a question of evidence. 1 Chitty, Plead. 11, 12. Second. Where the contract is made with him in his own name. Dicey on Parties to Actions, p. 174 (side page 153). In the present case both these principles are combined. The count shows the plaintiff claims, though it may be improperly, the whole beneficial interest, and the contract shows it was made in his own name for his own benefit. Hence the count, if bad, is amendable. Not to permit its amendment is gross injustice, and forces him to bring his suit over again without reason, not in the partnership names or in the names of the partners, but in his own name, for a claim in which he alone is interested. As shown by the allegations and contract, Marshal was a mere nominal partner, with no substantial interest in the partnership, and no legal interest in the claim in suit. Dicey on Parties to Actions, 172, 173. This has nothing to do with the merits of the case, but by the dismissal, instead of determining the case on the merits, the parties are simply sent back to begin over again. The decision therefore is unjust to both parties, when it might have ended the litigation.

(55 W. Va. 160)

HANNA et al. v. GOLFORD et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 1, 1904.)

BILL BY EXECUTORS—REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The executors of the last will of G. filed their bill, alleging that their testator had bequeathed specific legacies to his wife and children, to be paid out of his personal property, and a residuary legacy to his granddaughter, to wit, the residue of his personal, and the whole of his real, estate; that testator, H., and others were the sureties of A. on his official bond as sheriff; that a judgment for a large sum of money was recovered against A. as principal, and H. and others as surviving obligors of themselves, and of G. and others, on said bond; that H. was compelled to pay said judgment; that H. claimed contribution from their testator's estate for one-half of the said judgment paid by him as aforesaid; that the legatees were clamoring for their legacies, and threatening plaintiffs with suits therefor; that testator's estate was not liable for any part of said claim of H.; that plaintiffs were in doubt as to their duties in the premises; and praying that the validity or invalidity of said claim of H. be fixed and determined by the court, and that their executorial accounts be settled. Held, that the bill is insufficient to warrant the interposition of a court of equity.

2. The executor or administrator may apply, by a proper proceeding, to a court of equity for its aid and relief, when he finds the affairs of his testator or intestate so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of the court. In such case it is competent for him to institute a suit against the creditors of the estate, generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted, and a final decree settling the order and payment of the assets. The court will also lend its aid and relief, in a proper case, under such special circumstances as show that injustice will be done to the personal representative, or injury result to the estate, if such aid and relief be refused.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pocahontas County; J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Bill by Samuel B. Hanna, executor, and others, against Nancy Galford and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. S. McWhorter, Andrew Price, and Molohan, McClintic & Mathews, for appellants. L. M. McClintic, for appellees.

MILLER, J. At the December rules, 1900, Samuel B. Hanna and O. A. Lightner, as executors of Allen Galford, deceased, filed their bill, in the circuit court of Pocahontas county, against Nancy Galford, Hannah McLaughlin, Alice McClure, Caroline Tacy, Brown N. Galford, James H. Galford, Bertie L. Galford, Sarah A. Galford, Nancy J. McLoud's administrator, Uriah Hevener, C. O. Burner, John Driscoll, W. H. Collins, J. C. Arbogast, late sheriff of Pocahontas county, and, as such, administrator of Samuel L. Gibson, J. C. Arbogast, and the West Virginia Spruce Lumber Company.

The bill alleges, in substance, that Allen Galford departed this life, testate, on the — day of —, 1898, and by his last will and testament named plaintiffs therein as his executors; that the will was probated, and that plaintiffs qualified as executors thereunder; that in and by his will the testator directed, first, that his funeral expenses and all of his just debts should be paid; and, next, made certain specific legacies to his widow, the defendant Nancy Galford, and other legacies to his children, Nancy J. McLoud (who died before the institution of the suit), Hannah McLaughlin, Caroline Tacy, Alice McClure, B. N. Galford, and James H. Galford; and a residuary legacy to his granddaughter, Bertie L. Galford, who, as it appears, is an infant; thus disposing of all of his personal estate. Plaintiffs say that under the provisions of the will they are directed to rent the land devised to said Bertie L. Galford, and to hold in trust all the estate devised and bequeathed to her, until she becomes 21 years of age, or until she marries; that said Allen Galford, Uriah Hevener, W.

H. Collins, S. L. Gibson, C. O. Burner, John Driscoll, and Thomas Galford became and were the sureties of J. C. Arbogast, as sheriff of Pocahontas county, on his official bond, in the penalty of $30,000, bearing date on the 10th day of December, 1884; that the term of office for which bond was given as aforesaid commenced on the 1st day of January, 1895, and continued for four years next thereafter; that the state of West Virginia, at the relation, and for the benefit, of Amos Barlow, instituted its action at law in the circuit court of said county, on said bond, against said J. C. Arbogast, John Driscoll, W. H. Collins, C. O. Burner, and Uriah Hevener, who were the surviving obligors of themselves and of Thomas Galford, S. L. Gibson, and said Allen Galford; that in said action judgment was recovered by the plaintiffs on the 4th day of October, 1898, against said J. C. Arbogast, John Driscoll, W. H. Collins, C. O. Burner, and Uriah Hevener, for $3,125.55, with interest thereon from that date until paid, and costs; that the said Uriah Hevener was compelled to pay, and did pay, said judgment in full, on the 28th day of August, 1899; that said Arbogast and the other sureties are insolvent; and that, if said Uriah Hevener be entitled to contribution from his co-sureties on said bond, such contribution will fall on their testator's estate, and will be a large debt against the same. Plaintiffs further allege that Uriah Hevener claims contribution from their testator's estate for one-half of the said judgment, with interest and costs paid by him as aforesaid; that the legatees under the will of Allen Galford are clamoring for their legacies, and threatening plaintiffs with suits for the same, and at the same time said legatees contend that the estate of their testator is not liable for any part of said judgment. Plaintiffs also say that they are advised, and therefore charge, that the estate of Allen Galford is not liable for any part of said judgment; that the said debt, and every part thereof, is barred by the statute of limitations as against their testator's estate; that they plead and rely upon the statute of limitations as a defense against said debt; and they further say that they are in doubt as to their duty, as executors of Allen Galford, in the premises, and are unwilling to further execute their trust without the aid and support of a court of equity to direct and ratify their proceedings; that said Allen Galford was, at the time of his death, seised and possessed of several tracts of land, deeds for which are filed; and that these lands, under the will, are held in trust for the defendant Bertie L. Galford. Plaintiffs then pray that their trust, as executors of Allen Galford, be executed under the direction of the court; that the validity or invalidity of the claim of Uriah Hevener, as one of the sureties of J. C. Arbogast, late sheriff of Pocahontas county, against their testator's estate, be fixed and determined; that their accounts as executors be settled; and for general relief. N. C. McNiel was by the court appointed guardian ad litem for the infant defendant Bertie L. Galford, who, by her said guardian ad litem, filed her answer to the bill. Defendants Caroline Tacy and Alice McClure also filed their joint and several demurrer and answer to the bill, whereupon the cause was referred to a commissioner to ascertain and report, among other things, an account showing all the valid and subsisting debts, with their amounts and priorities thereto, against the estate of Allen Galford, deceased. Under this order of reference, the commissioner did not report the said claim of Uriah Hevener as a liability against the estate of said Galford, deceased, but referred the same, with certain observations thereon, to the court. Afterwards, defendant Uriah Hevener filed his answer to the bill, but did not demur thereto, in which answer he gives a history of the transactions leading up to and culminating in the said judgment against Arbogast, himself, and others, which he had been compelled to pay, and claiming, from the estate of Allen Galford, deceased, payment of one-half thereof. At the same term, defendants Bertie L. Galford, by N. C. McNiel, her guardian ad litem, Hannah McLaughlin, and Sarah A. Galford filed their joint and several demurrer and answer to plaintiffs' bill, which is also treated as an answer to the said answer of Uriah Hevener, which last-mentioned answer seems to have been treated in some respects as a cross-bill.

It appears from the report of the commissioner that said Uriah Hevener was indebted to the estate of Allen Galford on the 1st day of March, 1893, in the sum of $1,782.95, being the amount due on the bond of Hevener to Galford for $1,500, bearing date October 16, 1894, upon which certain credits are indorsed.

On the 21st day of June, 1902, the cause was heard upon the bill and exhibits, the said several answers and demurrers, which demurrers were then by the court overruled and disallowed; and, it then appearing to the court that Uriah Hevener was indebted to the estate of Allen Galford, on the bond mentioned in the commissioner's report, in the sum of $1,718.40, as of that date, said Hevener having made certain payments thereon after the report of the commissioner and before the then hearing thereon, and the court being of opinion that Uriah Hevener was entitled to recover from the estate of Allen Galford contribution for one-half of the sum of $2,869.37 paid by said Hevener on the said judgment against Arbogast, Hevener, and others, and also one-half of $165 which said Hevener had paid on another judgment against said Arbogast and sureties, the court then ascertained and fixed the sum of $1,772.24 as the amount then due from said estate to Hevener. And, proceeding to adjust all the matters in difference between said Hevener and the estate of Allen Galford, the court found the sum of $538.80 in favor of Hevener against the executors of Galford, and thereupon entered a decree against them in favor of Hevener accordingly. From this decree said Bertie L. Galford, by N. C. McNiel, her guardian ad litem, and Sarah A. Galford appeal, and, among other assignments of error, say that the circuit court erred in overruling their said demurrers to plaintiffs' bill.

It is suggested by counsel for appellee Uriah Hevener that appellants are not entitled to their appeal, because, as urged, the controversy is between said Hevener and the executors of the estate of Allen Galford. This position is untenable. The infant appellant is the residuary legatee of both the real and personal estate. The will, in part, says: "After paying all the expenses attending the execution of the provisions of this will, and the erection of a tombstone over my grave, and my wife's grave, I devise and bequeath all the remainder of my estate, both real and personal to my grand daughter, Bertie L. Galford." If the decree be erroneous and allowed to stand, it will deprive the estate of $1,772.24, in which said Bertie L. Galford is directly interested. That she is interested, and prejudiced by the decree, if erroneous, is plainly apparent. Should the court have sustained her demurrer to the bill? The answer to this query depends upon the sufficiency of the allegations of the bill to bring the cause within some recognized equity principle which confers jurisdiction upon the courts. In 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 544, it is said: "The application for aid and relief in the administration of estates is sometimes made by the executor or administrator himself, when he finds the affairs of his testator or intestate so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of equity. In such a case it is competent for him to institute a suit against the creditors generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted and a final decree settling the order and payment of the assets. These are sometimes called bills of conformity (probably because the executor or administrator in such case undertakes to conform to the decree, or the creditors are compelled by the decree to conform thereto), and they are not encouraged, because they have a tendency to take away the preference which one creditor may gain over another by his legal diligence. Besides, it has been said that these bills may be made use of by executors and administrators to keep creditors out of their money longer than they otherwise would be. However correct these reasons may be for a refusal to interfere in ordinary cases involving no difficulty, they are not sufficient to show that the court ought not to interfere in behalf of an executor or administrator under special circumstances, where injustice to himself or injury to the estate may otherwise arise."

Plaintiffs allege that Uriah Hevener claims contribution from their testator's estate for one-half of the said judgment, with interest and costs, paid by him as aforesaid. It nowhere appears that Hevener has instituted suit against the executors of the estate for the recovery of the claim, or that he intends to do so. It is the duty of persons who have claims or demands against an estate to establish the same in some appropriate legal manner. Until this be done, the personal representatives should not pay them. If action or suit be brought by the claimant, it is the legal duty of the personal representative to make proper defense thereto, under penalty of being charged with any loss occasioned by his negligence or failure to do so. It is not incumbent on the personal representatives to bring suit, and involve estates in litigation and costs, merely because some person claims something against the estate which they represent. If this practice were permitted, the courts would be filled with useless controversies, and estates wasted by unnecessary and unauthorized costs.

Plaintiffs pray that the validity or invalidity of the claim of Hevener be fixed and determined by the court. It will be proper for the court to adjudicate that matter when Hevener sees fit to bring it into court in some appropriate proceeding.

Plaintiffs further allege, by way of excuse for the institution of their suit, that the legatees under the will of Allen Galford are clamoring for their legacies, and are threatening plaintiffs with suits for the same, and at the same time said legatees contend that the estate of their testator is not liable for any part of said judgment; and plaintiffs also say that they are advised, and therefore charge, that the estate of Allen Galford is not liable for any part of said judgment, because said debt and every part thereof was and is barred by the statute of limitations. This allegation is wholly insufficient to sustain the bill. If the executors had really desired to pay the legacies to the legatees, they could have taken proper and sufficient refunding bonds for their indemnity. Moreover, there is no apparent reason why the executors could not have maintained an action at law against Hevener for the recovery of the amount due from him on his said $1,500 bond given to Allen Galford. There is not shown any such complication of accounts between Hevener and the Galford estate as authorizes the interposition of a court of equity.

Plaintiffs state, as a further reason for their suit, that they are in doubt as to their duty as executors of Allen Galford in the premises, and are unwilling to further execute their trusts without the aid and support of a court of equity to direct and ratify their proceedings. They do not ask for a construction of the will, or of any of the provisions thereof. Neither do they pray the authority of the court for the investment or disposition of any funds belonging to the infant defendant arising from the estate under the will. The suit was not necessary for the settlement of the executorial accounts of the plaintiffs. Such settlement could have been made by a commissioner of accounts. There are no facts averred from which it can be determined that the executors found the affairs of their testator so much involved that they could not safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of equity, and no special circumstances are shown why injustice to themselves, or injury to the estate, would be suffered unless the interference and aid of the court should be allowed in their behalf. In no view, nor for any purpose stated therein, can the bill be sustained. It was therefore error to overrule appellants' demurrer thereto.

For the reasons stated, the decree of the circuit court complained of is reversed and held for naught, appellants' demurrer to the bill sustained, and said bill dismissed for want of equity jurisdiction.

(54 W. Va. 441)

HOLT v. KING et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1903.)

TAX SALE—ASSIGNMENT OF CERTIFICATE—REDEMPTION—FRAUD.

1. A person holding a vendor's lien on a certain tract of land, which has been sold for the nonpayment of the taxes, proposes to the purchaser, within the year of redemption, to redeem the same; and such purchaser informs him that a subsequent lienor has demanded the right to and is going to redeem, and he afterwards informs the subsequent lienor that the prior lienor wanted to redeem, but that he preferred to allow him to make the redemption. He is then induced by such subsequent lienor, who was fully aware that the prior lienor expected him to make the redemption, to execute an assignment to him of the sheriff's certificate on payment of the redemption money, which assignment is kept secret, and no notice thereof, either by the purchaser or the subsequent lienor, is given to the prior lienor until the redemption period has elapsed—a court of equity, on application of the prior lienor, will hold such assignment to be a mere redemption of the property, and will enjoin the subsequent lienor from obtaining a deed therefor from the clerk of the county court.

2. If a purchaser of delinquent lands represents to a prior lienor, desiring to redeem the same, that a subsequent lienor demands the right to and is going to make such redemption, and afterwards such purchaser secretly assigns the sheriff's receipt to such subsequent lienor, and fails to advise the prior lienor of such assignment until too late for him to make redemption, such conduct on the part of the purchaser is fraudulent; and, if the subsequent lienor knowingly accepts and retains the benefits of such fraud, he will be held equally guilty with the purchaser, especially if he is the moving cause of such purchaser's conduct, though he may be entirely free from intentional wrong or mala fides.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lewis County;
W. G. Byrne, Judge.

Bill by M. S. Holt, against John King and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Linn, Byrne & Cato, for appellant. W. W. Brannon, for appellee.

DENT, J. M. S. Holt filed his bill in the circuit court of Lewis county against John King, W. W. Brannon, and E. A. Bennett, clerk of the county court of Lewis county, for the purpose of setting aside a tax sale of 100 acres of land to said King, and the assignment thereof made by him to said Brannon, and to prevent the clerk of the county court from making a deed therefor. Plaintiff bases his right to maintain this suit on the fact that he has a purchase-money lien against the land, and therefore had the right to redeem the same, but he does not seek to enforce such purchase-money lien. It appears, however, that there are suits pending already in which this may be done. The prayer of the bill is that plaintiff "may be awarded an injunction against the said E. A. Bennett, clerk of the county court of Lewis county, restraining him from making such deed to said W. W. Brannon, and that said W. W. Brannon may be enjoined and restrained from taking such deed or further proceeding to obtain the same, and that he may have a decree declaring the said land redeemed, and the said assignment canceled and annulled, and that he have his costs, and such other, further, and general relief as the court may see fit to grant." Defendant Brannon appeared, entered a demurrer, and filed an answer to the bill, claiming that he purchased the land, and did not redeem it, and denying the right of plaintiff to the relief prayed. Depositions were taken by both parties, and on a final hearing the court dismissed the bill.

Plaintiff admits, in his bill that he knew of the delinquency and sale of the land, and that he intended redemption of the same, but, being informed that the defendant Brannon intended to redeem, he acquiesced therein. He then alleges various irregularities in the delinquency and sale of the land, sufficient to vitiate the same. As to these he should not be heard to speak, as he was in no wise misled by them, and had ample opportunity to redeem notwithstanding such irregularities. He knew the land had been returned delinquent, that the taxes were unpaid, that it was sold, and who the purchaser thereof was, in time to have asserted his rights. Against his own neglect a court of equity will afford him no relief.

The controversy therefore narrows itself down as to whether defendant Brannon redeemed or purchased the land, and, if the former, whether plaintiff has the right to maintain this suit to have such redemption declared, or to be permitted to redeem such land. A lien creditor, under section 15, c. 31, Code 1899, has the privilege of redemption; but he is under no obligation to do so, and may waive such privilege and become a purchaser. But he cannot do both at the same time. That is, he cannot take advantage of the right to redeem in so far as the purchaser at the delinquent sale is concerned, and yet claim to be a purchaser in so far as the landowner or other lienors are concerned. A redemption, by whoever made, inures to the benefit of the landowner, and hence to all lien creditors, as it relieves the land from tax delinquency, as though it had never occurred. While a purchase deprives the landowner and all other lienholders of all claim or title to the land, unless redeemed within the limit fixed by law. It would therefore be unjust to allow a lienholder, or even one claiming to be a lienholder, to compel the tax purchaser, by virtue of the statutory privilege, to submit to a redemption of the land, and yet convert it into a purchase, as to the owner and other lienors, by taking a secret assignment of the tax purchaser's rights. An open assignment is proper to secure to the lienor the right to hold the amount of taxes as a lien upon the land, or even to take the title in trust for this purpose, but not to give the lienor taking advantage of his statutory privilege of redemption the right to hold absolute title to the property. The defendant Brannon, in his evidence, states the manner in which he obtained from the tax purchaser an assignment of his rights as follows, to wit: "I talked with Mr. King about redeeming of him, and he was inclined to refuse the offer, and I said, 'Now, Mr. King, I have concluded to redeem the tract,' or words to that effect, and 'I will make you a tender of the amount of money necessary if you require it, or will give you my check,' or words to that effect; and he said my check was all right, and he would make no question about that, but that he would refuse the offer. I then told him that his refusal was all right, and I had no complaint to make against him, and that I would simply go to Mr. E. A. Bennett, clerk, and pay the necessary amount, and thereby effect the redemption. He left me, and after some time returned and said that he had seen Mr. Bennett, the clerk, who had informed him that I could redeem in the manner just indicated, and he had suggested to Mr. King that he would as well allow me to redeem, and Mr. King said, 'I am willing to let you redeem it.' I then said to Mr. King, in the presence of Mr. R. L. Zinn, who was performing some clerical work for me along about that time, that I would prefer that he would assign his purchase to me, so that, if anybody wanted to redeem it, they would have to pay me the money, with interest, or I would hold the land. I told him that I had already borne considerable burdens to relieve the Butcher lands from forfeiture, and that all creditors had been chiefly benefited thereby, and I did not like to increase the amount of expenditure, and layout of the money; and he said, in the presence of Mr. Zinn, that he would just as leave assign the claim to me as not, remarking that I was offering to make him whole." This plainly shows that defendant Brannon was not making a bona fide purchase of the tax purchaser, but forcing him to permit a redemption of the property, and, after convincing the tax purchaser of his legal right to make a redemption, persuaded him to make an assignment of his rights simply because he was being made whole, and could not avoid the alleged rights of defendant to redeem. Hence it should be treated as a mere statutory redemption, and not a purchase. Defendant Brannon, having paid the money necessary to redeem, might take the title in his own name to secure repayment thereof, but he should hold as trustee for the benefit of the landowner and other lienors who might otherwise be defrauded of their rights, and he obtain, by reason of his statutory privilege of redemption, an unconscionable advantage over them. Nor does it make any difference whether defendant Brannon had the right to redeem or not. If he did not have the right, he would be guilty of fraud in representing that he had, and thus securing a redemption under a false pretense. In either event he should hold as trustee for the benefit of those interested. In taking advantage of the statutory privilege to redeem, he puts himself in the same position as a person whose duty it is to redeem, and the attempt to convert a redemption by either into an absolute purchase is inequitable, and will be avoided at the instance and for the benefit of an interested party who has been prevented from making such redemption. State v. Eddy, 41 W. Va. 95, 23 S. E. 529. When the statute conferred upon a lienor the right to redeem, it imposed upon him the duty not to assert such right in such manner as to mislead and injure co-redemptioners. Black on Tax Titles, § 280; Fair v. Brown, 40 Iowa, 209.

It is insisted, however, that Brannon owed no duty to Holt in connection with the matter, and that he had the right to redeem or buy without consulting Holt. This is undoubtedly true, if the transaction was open and free from any charge of fraudulent concealment or deception to deprive Holt of his right of redemption. The indisputable facts in the case are as follows: Holt held a lien on the land in controversy for $1,700—far more than its value. Brannon held an individual lien subsequent to Holt's, and which could not be reached if Holt's lien remained. King purchased the land at tax sale. Brannon insisted he had the right to, and would, redeem the land either from King or Holt. Holt informed King he wanted to purchase from him if it would be legal, and, if not, he wanted to redeem the land. King informed Holt that Brannon was going to redeem the land. On the same day King went to Brannon to let him redeem the land, when Brannon persuaded King, in the presence of Zinn, his clerk and typewriter, to make him an assignment of his purchase for the amount necessary to redeem the land—in the assignment recited "for valuable consideration." Zinn, Brannon's clerk, under Brannon's direction, prepared the assignment, and, being a notary public, took the acknowledgment of King and his wife thereto. This all occurred on the 26th of December, 1901, and the time for redemption expired on the 1st day of January, 1902. No one knew of this assignment but the parties thereto and Zinn, Brannon's clerk. It was not put on record. Whether there was any agreement to secrecy or not does not appear, but it does appear that the matter was kept secret from Holt by all those who were present at the making of the assignment, and it was not known to him until some time afterwards, on inquiry of the clerk. It further appears that it was to Brannon's interest to have it kept secret. His clerk testifies that Mr. Brannon said at the time of the assignment, and as inducement thereto, "that he had held up these people quite awhile, and it had been quite a burden to him, and, if they redeemed the land that they were talking about, he would be out all his money, but that, if he purchased it, they would either have to pay him back the money, or he would hold the land." This shows it was Brannon's intention to prevent a redemption of the land, if possible. The parties so understood, and knew it was necessary, to accomplish this purpose, that the assignment should be kept a matter of secrecy from Holt until the expiration of the time of redemption. It was so kept secret. The effect of all this was that Holt was deprived of his lien. King got nothing that he would not otherwise have gotten, and Brannon got all that Holt lost. Brannon tries to justify himself in his answer by claiming that Holt was trying to do the same thing. Holt stood on a different ground, as Brannon himself admits when he says that Holt's lien was more than the value of the property. This being true, Holt's purchase thereof, either openly or secretly, would have injured no one, while Brannon's redemption of the land would inure to the benefit of no one but Holt—the very person whom he shows by his answer and deposition he did not want to benefit. Hence there can be no other conclusion than that it was the intention of Brannon to purchase this land and defeat Holt's lien thereon. He may have intended to do so legally, but in doing so he had no right to take advantage of any false position in which Holt had been placed by his words or conduct, whether knowingly or willfully done or not. After Brannon found out by this suit that his language and conduct communicated to Holt by King had misled Holt and prevented him from redeeming the land, instead of obeying the Golden Rule, which, according to Jewish interpretation, "That which is hateful unto thyself do thou not to another," is the delight of equity, he retains Holt's property, and claims himself innocent of wrong. Equity looks at the results of conduct, and not to protestations of honest purpose. If the rule were otherwise, no fraudulent conveyance would ever be interfered with, for all men who engage in unjustly depriving their neighbors of their property first convince themselves of the legality of their conduct and the purity of their motives. This is why our books are so full of cases convicting persons of fraud, against their most solemn protestations to the contrary. Frazier v. Brewer, 52 W. Va. 306, 43 S. E. 110; Moore v. Mustoe, 47 W. Va. 549, 35 S. E. 871, 81 Am. St. Rep. 812; Atkinson v. Plumb, 45 W. Va. 626, 32 S. E. 229; Bank v. Atkinson, 32 W. Va. 208, 9 S. E. 175. The number of such cases is beyond computation. It has been said that language was invented to conceal motives and intentions, and, while this cannot be accepted as stating an axiom, yet it may be admitted that language has proven an ever-ready help in time of trouble. The law never accepts language as proof against contradicting facts and circumstances, and, when these lead to a certain conclusion, no words, however sincere, can overthrow it.

The undisputed facts in this case show that Holt has been deprived of his property by the concealment of the truth from him after he had been misled by the conduct and representations of those who have deprived him of the same, and one of whom enjoys the full benefit of his loss, and retains the same after full knowledge of the wrong suffered. "Fraud has been defined to be any kind of an artifice by which another is deceived." Pothier, cited 1 Mad. 205. All surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and other unfair way by which another is cheated is fraud. Collusion, in a court of equity, is fraud. 3 Atk. 757. In short, "fraud is infinite." 2 Tuck. Com. 411. The suppression of the truth is equivalent to the utterance of a falsehood, and both are frauds. 2 Tuck. Com. 415. There is no question but that King is guilty of fraud, in a legal sense, by concealing from Holt the assignment made by him to Brannon. If a person make a representation that is true, and afterwards he renders such representation false by his own act, and another is about to be deceived thereby to his injury, he is guilty of fraud, unless he corrects the delusion produced by his former representation. 14 Am. & Eng. En. Law (2d Ed.) 74. In Dickinson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 580, 25 L. Ed. 618, Mr. Justice Swayne says: "The vital principle is that he who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted. Such a change of position is sternly forbidden. It involves fraud and falsehood, and the law abhors both."

King is guilty of legal fraud, yet he derives no benefit therefrom. Why he concealed from Holt the fact of the assignment is a matter of legal inference from the effect thereof, as there is no positive testimony showing the reason therefor. If Holt had been given the opportunity, which was denied him, of cross-examining Brannon's witnesses, this matter might have been made plain. Brannon claims to be wholly innocent, yet he receives, and after full knowledge retains, the benefit of King's fraud. In section 211, Ferry on Trusts, it is written: "So property obtained by one through the fraudulent practices of a third person will be held under a constructive trust for the person defrauded, though the person receiving the benefit is innocent of collusion. If such person accepts the property, he adopts the means by which it was procured, or, as Lord Chief Justice Wilmut said, 'Let the hand receiving the gift be ever so chaste, yet, if it comes through a polluted channel, the obligation of restitution will follow it.'" Dewing v. Hutton, 48 W. Va. 576, 37 S. E. 670. When Brannon found out the manner in which Holt had been deceived, if he wished to relieve himself from the many imputations of collusion apparently justified by the facts and circumstances of this case, and place his conduct above suspicion, he should have promptly afforded the opportunity to Holt to have redeemed the land, and not have waited for the interference of a court of equity. Whether he loved his enemy or not, he should have meted out to him even-handed justice. It was the duty of King to have relieved Holt from the delusion under which he was laboring by reason of the former's representations, and it was the duty of Brannon, who profited by such delusion, when he became cognizant of the manner in which Holt had been deceived, to offer him proper restitution. Holt having in this manner been deprived of his right of redemption, equity will hold that the assignment was nothing more than a redemption, and will enjoin the clerk from making a deed to the purchaser's assignee. Nor will it be necessary for the plaintiff to make a tender and keep it good, for he was prevented from so doing during the redemption period by the conduct of the purchaser and his assignee. This is not such a proceeding under the statute to set aside for irregularities or other causes a deed obtained by a bona fide purchaser, wherein a tender is required. McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 40 S. E. 509. It is a suit instituted to estop a redemptioner from converting a redemption into a purchase in deprivation of the plaintiff's rights, and from obtaining a deed for the property which would forever conclude plaintiff as to his vendor's lien.

While the allegations of the bill are not as specific as they might be, yet they are sufficient to justify the relief sought. They set out sufficient facts to show the fraudulent conduct of King, inuring to Brannon's benefit, and that Brannon intended to retain the same to the injury of the plaintiff.

Nor has plaintiff been guilty of such laches as would bar his equity. The evidence shows that Brannon only redeemed the land, and that he induced the purchaser to make an assignment, which, if enforced, operated to deprive plaintiff of his vendor's lien, which was kept concealed from Holt until the time of redemption had passed.

In some states notice is required in all cases before a redemption can be precluded. Black on Tax Titles, § 329. Equity requires notice where the proposed redemptioner is about to be misled to his injury by the representations of the purchaser in collusion with other redemptioners. If Brannon had notified Holt, or directed King to have notified him, in time for redemption, he would have received his outlay back, with interest, or, if he had offered to have permitted Holt to redeem, even after this suit was brought, he would have been entitled to be remunerated for his outlay; but, as he stands on his legal rights, he is entitled to no more.

On the solicitation of Mr. Brannon, through his counsel, this opinion has been revised the third time. He disclaims all disposition to wrongfully deprive Mr. Holt of his property, and that if he has been guilty of any wrong in the matter, which he in no wise admits, it is a mistake as to his legal rights. He is entitled to the full benefit of such disclaimer.

The decree is reversed, the assignment held a redemption of the land, and the injunction perpetuated.

BRANNON, J., absent.

(119 Ga. 833)

WRIGHTSVILLE & T. R. CO. v. KELLEY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 30, 1904.)

VENUE—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. On the trial of an action for damages alleged to have been sustained in Wrightsville, Johnson county, evidence of a witness to the effect that he remembered an occurrence when a man claimed to have been injured at Dublin, in Laurens county, but that he did not know who the man was, and could not say that it was the plaintiff, furnished no basis for a charge submitting to the jury the question whether the plaintiff's injuries were sustained in the county in which the suit was brought, or in Laurens county. Especially is this true when the plea filed by the defendant set up no such contention.

2. Where the court correctly submitted to the jury a contention of counsel, it is not error, in the absence of a written request for such an instruction, to fail to charge "the effect of said contention if found by the jury to be true from the evidence."

3. Where the judge, at the conclusion of his charge, gave, by request of counsel, additional instructions as to a contention which had not been previously specifically dealt with, it was not error for him to preface such instructions with the remark, "I did not cover that, gentlemen, in so many words;" nor can it be said that the tendency of the remark was to lead the jury to believe that the judge considered this contention of no importance.

4. Whatever inaccuracies there may have been in the charge as to the amount, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover in the event the defendant was found liable, it is evident, from the amount of the verdict, that no harm was thereby done the defendant. The charge, as a whole, fully and fairly covered all the points at issue, and was not open to any of the objections made to it in the motion for a new trial. While the evidence was conflicting, that for the plaintiff was sufficient to authorize the verdict returned in his favor, and the judgment overruling the motion is affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by J. W. Kelley against the Wrightsville & Tennille Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Daley & Bussey, for plaintiff in error. Faircloth & Blount and James K. Hines, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(119 Ga. 781)

ATLANTA, K. & N. RY. CO. v. WILSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 29, 1904.)

LIMITATIONS—RENEWAL SUIT—ACTION—DISMISSAL—JURISDICTION—REVERSAL—REMITTITUR.

1. If the point be raised by special demurrer, the plaintiff, who relies on the privilege of renewal under Civ. Code 1895, § 3783, to escape the bar of the statute, may be required to attach a copy of the petition in the first suit, so that the court may determine, as matter of law, whether it was for the same cause of action as the second, between the same parties, brought before the original bar had attached, and in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

2. Civ. Code 1895, § 3783, is remedial, and to be liberally construed, so as to preserve the right to renew the cause of action set out in a previous suit wherever the same has been disposed of on any ground other than one affecting the merits.

3. A suit brought in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter is not void, and when the petition therein is seasonably served operates to toll the statute.

4. A suit in such a court is notice of the plaintiff's intent to enforce by judicial proceedings the cause of action therein indicated, and is effective to warn the defendant to preserve its evidence for use therein or in a renewal suit.

5. Where the plaintiff begins an action in a court of this state having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and, after the bar of the statute has attached, the same is dismissed because of a ruling indicating that the court has no jurisdiction of the person, such action may be renewed within six months in another court of this state having jurisdiction of the person and the subject-matter.

6. Where there is a plea to the jurisdiction, which is overruled, and a verdict for the plaintiff, which is reversed by the Supreme Court on the ground of error in reference to the question of jurisdiction, the receipt of the remittitur by the clerk of the lower court after its adjournment or during recess vacates the verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff and re-establishes the control of the trial court over the case.

7. Thereafter, and before the remittitur is entered on the minutes, the plaintiff, in term time or vacation, may dismiss the suit.

8. The petition set out a cause of action in the administratrix under the Tennessee statute, but the children were improperly named as beneficiaries, and direction is given that their names be stricken as such.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by L. M. Wilson, administratrix, against the Atlanta, Knoxville & Northern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

See 41 S. E. 699; 42 S. E. 356.

Mrs. Wilson, as administratrix, brought suit under the Tennessee statute for the homicide of her husband, which she alleged occurred on December 21, 1898. Suit was filed in Cobb superior court September 28, 1899, the petition averring that the company's principal office was there located. The railway company filed a plea to the jurisdiction, alleging that by charter its residence was in Fulton county, and that the courts of Cobb county had no jurisdiction, the homicide not having occurred there, but in Tennessee. Thereupon the administratrix immediately instituted another suit for the same cause of action in the city court of Atlanta on December 17, 1899. To this suit the railway company pleaded in abatement the suit pending in Cobb county. This plea was sustained on June 21, 1901. The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court April 3, 1902, 41 S. E. 699. It does not appear when the remittitur was filed in the city court of Atlanta, but the judgment of the Supreme Court was made the judgment of the lower court on May 7, 1902. In the meantime the plea to the jurisdiction of Cobb superior court had been overruled, the case there tried on its merits, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff, and a motion for a new trial made, which, on August 8, 1902, was granted by the Supreme Court (116 Ga. 189, 42 S. E. 356) on the ground that the lower court had committed error in holding, under the evidence offered, that the superior court of Cobb county had jurisdiction to try the case. When the remittitur granting the new trial in Cobb county was received does not appear, but it was there received during the recess of the court; and after it was there filed, but before it was made the judgment of the court, the plaintiff, on September 3, 1902, dismissed the suit in Cobb, and bought the present action in the city court of Atlanta on November 5, 1902. The defendant demurred to the petition on the grounds (1) that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations; (2) because there is no law for pleading two former suits which have been nonsuited, dismissed, or discontinued, as the basis of a renewal suit; (3) because the former suit in the city court of Atlanta was not nonsuited, dismissed, or discontinued within the meaning of the statute, but was finally adjudicated on a plea constituting a good defense thereto; (4) because this suit was disposed of more than six months prior to the filing of the present suit; (5) that, it having been adjudicated that the superior court of Cobb county was without jurisdiction, the suit there filed was not such a former suit as would prevent the statute from running. There were also special demurrers because the heirs at law of the plaintiff were set out, and because no cause of action was set out in the plaintiff as administratrix, such right having been alone in the widow. The court overruled the demurrer, and the plaintiff excepted.

Cited for plaintiff in error: Williamson v. Wardlaw, 46 Ga. 126; Kimbro & Morgan v. Virginia & T. Air-Line Ry. Co., 56 Ga. 185; Gray v. Hodge, 50 Ga. 262; Moss v. Keesler, 60 Ga. 44; Rountree v. Key, 71 Ga. 214; Cox v. R. R., 68 Ga. 448; McIver v. R. Co., 110 Ga. 223, 36 S. E. 775; Phipps v. Alford, 95 Ga. 215, 22 S. E. 152; Hamilton v. Phenix Ins. Co., 111 Ga. 875, 36 S. E. 960; Carpenter v. Ry. Co., 112 Ga. 152, 37 S. E. 186; Southern Ry. Co. v. Goodrum, 115 Ga. 689, 42 S. E. 49; Hill v. State, 115 Ga. 833, 42 S. E. 286; McClendon v. Hernando Co., 100 Ga. 219, 28 S. E. 152; White v. Moss, 92 Ga. 244, 18 S. E. 18; Colley v. Gate City Coffin Co., 92 Ga. 669, 18 S. E. 817; Rumph v. Truelove, 60 Ga. 482; Gilmore v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 93 Ga. 483, 21 S. E. 50; Knox v. State, 113 Ga. 930, 39 S. E. 330; Brunswick Grocery Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co., 106 Ga. 270, 32 S. E. 92, 71 Am. St. Rep. 249; Meador v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 56 Ga. 605; 3 Coke, 275; Richards v. Maryland Ins. Co., 8 Cranch, 84, 3 L. Ed. 496; 1 Lord Raymond, 482; Bagley v. Stephens, 80 Ga. 736, 6 S. E. 695; Harrison v. Walker, 1 Ga. 32; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. Ed. 666; Webb v. Ry. Co., 88 Tenn. 128, 12 S. W. 428; Loague v. R. R., 91 Tenn. 458, 19 S. W. 430; Railroad v. Bean, 94 Tenn. 388, 29 S. W. 370; Adams v. Holden (Iowa) 82 N. W. 468; Foote v. Pfeiffer, 70 Mich. 581, 38 N. W. 586; Humphrey v. Carpenter, 39 Minn. 115, 39 N. W. 67.

Cited by defendant in error: Wilson v. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co., 115 Ga. 171, 41 S. E. 699; Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, 116 Ga. 189, 42 S. E. 356; Civ. Code 1895, § 8786; Rountree v. Key, 71 Ga. 214; Cox v. Berry, 13 Ga. 806; Jordan v. Faircloth, 27 Ga. 372; Hendrix v. Kellogg, 32 Ga. 435; Smith v. Bryan, 60 Ga. 628-631; Grimes v. Jones, 48 Ga. 362; Mercer & Co. v. Davidson, 80 Ga. 495, 6 S. E. 175; Cohen v. Southern Exp. Co., 53 Ga. 128; Knox v. State, 113 Ga. 929, 39 S. E. 330, 9 Lea, 841; Webb v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (Tenn.) 12 S. W. 428.

Smith, Hammond & Smith, for plaintiff in error. Hoke Smith, H. C. Peeples, and Clay & Blair, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). Where, to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff relies on the privilege of renewal within six months, conferred by Civ. Code 1895, § 3786, a copy of the record in the first suit should be attached, so that the court may determine as a matter of law whether the two suits were for the same cause of action and between the same parties. The court should have before it the petition, rather than the conclusions of the pleader thereon, for the further reason that it should be in position to determine whether the first suit was itself brought within the statute, and in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter. But here there was no special demurrer for failure to attach such exhibit. Enough appears to permit the determination of the question as to whether the present suit was saved by the renewal statute. Compare Gibbs v. Crane, 180 Ill. 191, 54 N. E. 200. The plaintiff, being in doubt as to which court had jurisdiction, instituted separate suits for the same cause of action in Cobb and Fulton counties. If either or both were effective to prevent the running of the statute and to permit the renewal under Civ. Code 1895, § 3786, there is nothing in our law calling upon her to elect on which she would rely as the foundation for the right. The railroad company insists that it was ruled in Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 116 Ga. 189, 42 S. E. 356, that the superior court of Cobb county had no jurisdiction. It contends, therefore, that the suit was void, did not arrest the running of the statute of limitations, and cannot be used as a basis for a renewal within six months under Civ. Code 1895, § 3786. It relies upon Williamson v. Wardlaw, 46 Ga. 126, Ferguson v. New M. Co., 51 Ga. 609, and McClendon v. Hernando Co., 100 Ga. 219, 28 S. E. 152, that suits void for want of service; Hamilton v. Phenix Co., 111 Ga. 875, 36 S. E. 960, Hill v. State, 115 Ga. 833, 42 S. E. 286, that a void application for a certiorari; Edwards v. Ross, 58 Ga. 149, that a void attachment; Moss v. Keesler, 60 Ga. 44, that a suit in another state or in the United States court—cannot be relied on to prevent the running of the statute, nor to preserve the privilege of renewal. It relies particularly upon Gray v. Hodge, 50 Ga. 262, and Moss v. Keesler, 60 Ga. 44, where it was held that “a suit in a court having no jurisdiction is no suit at all, but a mere nullity,” and cannot be the foundation for the right of renewal. On the other hand, the defendant in error seeks to differentiate these cases, drawing the distinction between “void” and “voidable” suits; insisting that what was said in Moss v. Keesler as to jurisdiction was obiter, and that the case was rightly decided on the ground that a suit brought in the United States court is not within the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 3786. She also insists that Gray v. Hodge was rightly decided on grounds other than that relating to jurisdiction, as the renewal statute could not be used to save a case barred by the limitations act of 1869; that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter under the Constitution of 1868, the consideration of the debt being a slave; that the judgment of dismissal of the first suit on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction was conclusive that the same court, for the same debt, had no jurisdiction in the second, and that what was written as to a void suit was obiter. She also relies on Rountree v. Key, 71 Ga. 214, where the petition alleged that the courts of Telfair county had jurisdiction, and the defendant filed a plea that he resided in Macon county. Acquiescing in the correctness of this plea, the plaintiff failed to prosecute his action, and the suit was dismissed after the bar had attached; but within six months it was renewed in Macon county, where the defendant then resided, and this court held that, though the dismissal had not been by the plaintiff, it might be renewed in Macon county, saying “that this court has gone to great lengths in permitting the renewal of suits within six months, so as not to be barred, if the original suit was not barred, so as to extend the provisions to almost any case where the suit was dismissed not on its merits.” It is not necessary to re-examine these cases, nor to determine whether there is any real conflict, and, if so, which line of authorities is to be followed; for here it is evident that the suit in Cobb county cannot be treated as void. It was sufficiently valid to be used as a means of abating the later suit brought in the city court of Atlanta. And if enough of a former suit to sustain a plea in abatement, it was enough of a suit to prevent the running of the statute, and to form a stock upon which the renewal suit might be grafted. When this court decided that the plea in abatement, because of the pendency of the former suit in Cobb county, was well founded in point of law and fact, it was necessarily adjudicated, in view of Civ. Code 1895, § 5094, that “the first action was not so defective that a recovery thereunder could not possibly be had.” It was not absolutely void; the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. In fact, in passing on the plea in abatement, it was distinctly recognized that the suit in Cobb county was far from being a nullity; for it was expressly said that “the defendant has surely been called upon to do something in the way of defending against the original action. If it had ignored that action, it would not, after a judgment therein, have been heard to say that the same was ‘ineffectual.’” Wilson v. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co., 115 Ga. 183, 41 S. E. 705. In selecting Cobb county as the venue in which her action was to be tried the plaintiff made a mistake, but was not guilty of such laches as to warrant the defendant in insisting that nothing had been done to interrupt the running of the statute. Section 3786 of the Civil Code of 1895 was intended to afford relief from such mistakes, accidents, and errors. If the plaintiff had brought her suit properly, there would have been no occasion to discontinue. When the reason for discontinuance appeared, or was determined by the court, the statute allows a renewal for the very purpose of avoiding the result of the error. The mistake cannot, then, be relied on to prevent the right to renew. Unless the case is an absolute nullity, the defective or improper suit may be used to nurse the cause of action into full life in the proper form and forum. The acts of 1847 and 1856 (Civ. Code, § 3786) are remedial. The decisions of this court to that effect in Gordon v. McCauley, 73 Ga. 669, Cox v. Berry, 13 Ga. 306, and Rountree v. Key, 71 Ga. 214, are in accord with the decisions of courts in other states under similar statutes. In Coffin v. Cottle, 16 Pick. 385, Chief Justice Shaw said: "This is a remedial statute, * * * and should have such construction as will best carry into effect the intent of the Legislature. This statute is founded on the presumption that, if a creditor had permitted his debt to remain a certain length of time without any attempt to enforce it, or to revive and perpetuate the evidence of it, it is paid or otherwise discharged. * * * But this presumption does not arise if the creditor resorts to legal diligence to recover his debt within the time limited; and the proviso follows this obvious consideration, and declares that, where the plaintiff has been defeated by some matter not affecting the merits, some defect or informality which he can remedy or avoid by new process, the statute shall not prevent him from doing so, provided he follows it promptly, by a suit within a year." In Smith v. McNeal, 109 U. S. 430, 3 Sup. Ct. 321, 27 L. Ed. 986, in discussing what would be such laches, the court said: "Cases might be supposed, perhaps, where the want of jurisdiction in the court was so clear that the bringing of a suit therein would show such gross negligence and indifference as to cut the party off from the benefit of the saving statute; as, if an action in ejectment should be brought in a court of admiralty, or a bill in equity should be filed before a justice of the peace." In Little Rock v. Manees, 49 Ark. 248, 4 S. W. 778, 4 Am. St. Rep. 45, it appeared that a suit was brought in a justice's court for injury to personal property, the damages being laid at $125. On appeal the judgment was reversed on the ground that in that particular class of cases a justice's court had no jurisdiction where the amount in controversy was more than $100, but the court said that the renewal act "was intended to secure that class of suitors from loss, who, from causes incident to the administration of the law, are compelled to abandon their present action, whether by their own act or the act of the court, when either would leave them a cause of action yet undetermined by giving them a reasonable time within which to renew. * * * The remedy was evidently intended to be coextensive with the evil." The plaintiff was therefore allowed to maintain its renewed suit. In Weatherly v. Weatherly, 81 Miss. 662, a judgment was reversed in the Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction in the trial court, but the plaintiff was allowed to maintain the renewed suit. To the same effect is Woods v. Houghton, 1 Gray, 580. In Cox v. E. T., V. & G. R. Co., 68 Ga. 446, and Constitution Pub. Co. v. De Laughter, 95 Ga. 18, 21 S. E. 1000, it was held that a suit begun in the United States court in Georgia could not be used as a basis of a renewal in a state court. In other jurisdictions, on cogent reasoning, the opposite view is taken. Yet their rulings are of value in so far as they discuss the effect of a want of jurisdiction in the United States court, when the suit therein is relied on to support the new action. In Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Bemis, 64 Ohio St. 26, 59 N. E. 745, it appeared that Bemis brought suit against the Pittsburgh Railroad Company and the Wagner Palace Car Company, in the United States Circuit Court, for false imprisonment. The Wagner Company demurred, and was dismissed. Later, and after the bar, the plaintiff's case against the remaining defendant was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. He renewed in the superior court of Cincinnati, and the court held that the first proceeding was the commencement of an action; that he failed otherwise than upon the merits, and was entitled to commence a new action within one year, saying that "in no text-book and in no reported case cited save Sweet v. Electric Light Co., 97 Tenn. 252, 30 S. W. 1090, is there any statement or intimation that the question of the jurisdiction of the court has any potency whatever in determining what is and what is not an action. * * * It must be conceded that the weight of authority supports the proposition, as a general rule, that a dismissal of a former suit for want of jurisdiction in the court in which it was brought is such a failure as will not constitute a bar to another action. * * * Questions of jurisdiction are often of the very nicest which lawyers have to determine for their clients and courts to decide for litigants. * * * It is clearly unreasonable to compare the mistake in the present case as akin to the bringing of such a case before a justice of the peace or a mayor. It is quite apparent that the intention was to secure that class of suitors from loss who, without laches or fault, but from causes incident to the administration of the law, are compelled to abandon a present action without a determination of its merits, and give to such without distinction an opportunity in reasonable time within the statute to renew such action." Justice Gray, in McCormick v. Elliot (C. C.) 43 Fed. 472, said that "a plaintiff may bring a new action * * * even if the first action is dismissed for want of jurisdiction of the court in which it was brought. And it has been so held by Mr. Justice Clifford and Judge Lowell in Caldwell v. Harding, 1 Lowell, 326 [Fed. Cas. No. 2,302]." He therefore ruled that, where a suit was brought in the superior court of Massachusetts, and, after the bar of the statute, was reversed, it might be renewed in the United States Circuit Court within a year. The decision in Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, 116 Ga. 189, 42 S. E. 356, set aside the verdict because of the erroneous charge of the court on the subject of the legal residence of the company. As the question of jurisdiction depended upon questions of fact, the effect of the ruling was not to dismiss the case, but to leave it still pending in Cobb county. But upon the return of the mandate the verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff ceased to be longer of force. Good practice requires that the remittitur should be entered upon the minutes of the trial court, but such entry is not necessary to restore its jurisdiction and control over the case. As soon as the remittitur is received by the clerk, the case should again be docketed. The reversal vacates the judgment below, and after the remittitur has been so received the plaintiff in term time or vacation may dismiss her suit. Compare Knox v. State, 113 Ga. 929, 39 S. E. 330; Wiggins v. Tyson, 112 Ga. 745, 38 S. E. 86; Lyon v. Lyon, 103 Ga. 747, 30 S. E. 575; Folmar v. Folmar, 71 Ala. 136 (2); Dryden v. Wyllis, 53 Iowa, 391, 5 N. W. 518; Cox v. Pruitt, 25 Ind. 90. The petition set out a cause of action. The suit under the Tennessee statute was maintainable by the administratrix, and the general demurrer was properly overruled. In Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 119 Ga. 607, 46 S. E. 553, it was held that, there being a widow, it was improper to set out the names of the children as beneficiaries, and direction is given that this ground of the special demurrer be sustained, and that the names of the children be stricken as beneficiaries.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 746)

BLACK v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 29, 1904.)

RAPE—IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS—LEWDNESS—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

1. A woman sworn as a witness to prove a rape alleged to have been committed upon her may be impeached by proof of bad repute as to lewdness, but not by evidence of specific acts of unchastity.

2. Nor was the withdrawal by the court of the woman's denials of specific acts of lewdness hurtful to the plaintiff in error.

3. While the oft-repeated observation of Lord Hale as to rape cases is entirely proper by way of argument to the jury, it is not a fitting charge by the court.

4. While the court erred in charging as an abstract proposition: "If, however, a female yields because she is forced by fear of death or by duress, the intercourse, under such circumstances, would be against her will, and the offense would be rape"—there being no evidence to justify such charge—the case was sufficiently made out by evidence of actual force, and this error was not repeated in subsequent charges as to the use of force.

5. The court correctly charged the jury as to the effect which evidence of lewdness on the part of the woman might have, both as to her credibility and as to the probability of her yielding.

6. The court committed no harmful error in charging or in refusing to charge, and the jury having found the defendant guilty, upon sufficient evidence, and the trial judge having approved their finding, this court will not interfere.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; W. T. Gary, Judge.

Newman Black was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. L. Franklin, Austin Branch, and Geo. T. Jackson, for plaintiff in error. J. S. Reynolds, Sol. Gen., and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

TURNER, J. The plaintiff in error was tried in the superior court of Richmond county upon an indictment charging him with the crime of rape. The jury found him guilty, with a recommendation of mercy, and he was by the trial judge sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of three years. He made a motion for a new trial on various grounds, which being overruled, he sued out a bill of exceptions to this court.

The offense was alleged to have been committed upon one Lucy Wood. According to her story, she was a country girl, about 18 years old, and went to the city of Augusta in search of employment at the factories. On the night of the 3d of August, 1903, she went, accompanied by the woman with whom she boarded, to a ball which was had at a place in that city called the "Platz," and there got acquainted with the prisoner. At a late hour of the night, her female friend having left her at that place, she accepted the company of the prisoner, who undertook to guide her to the house at which she stayed. They started off in a direction different from that from which she had come to the ball, but the prisoner assured her that he knew a nearer route. He took her along a path which led to a lonely place, beyond police protection, where there was a street railroad track, and there made to her improper proposals. She repelled his overtures, but he pulled her down in spite of all the resistance she could make. She made outcry, and a colored man approached and made known his presence, but was warned by the prisoner to leave, which he did. The prisoner then took her a short distance further, when he renewed his effort to have intercourse with her, dragging her down the side of the railroad into a ditch, despite her protests and resistance. She called for help, and attracted the attention of three colored persons who lived in the vicinity, and also of Stephen McCoy, a white man, and Sol Jones, a colored man, who were watching a cornfield some four or five hundred yards away. In response to her cries, they came near to the place where the assault upon her was made; but, before they could interfere, the prisoner had accomplished his purpose, notwithstanding she continued to resist him as best she could. Under the protection of McCoy and Jones, to whom she related what had occurred, she returned to the city, and repeated to a policeman her account of the crime, and caused the prisoner to be arrested. Both McCoy and Jones, who were called as witnesses in behalf of the state, confirmed the testimony of Lucy Wood as to what took place after they appeared on the scene, and as to the subsequent arrest of the prisoner; and they testified with some detail as to the woman's pleadings and outcries while the prisoner was violating her person; that her clothes seemed to be torn, and that she was apparently offering all the resistance she could.

¶ 1. See Rape, vol. 42, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56.

1. On the trial the defendant offered J. T. Amerson as a witness to prove that he had had connection with this young woman on a certain occasion. The court excluded this evidence, holding that her lewdness could be shown only by proof of general bad character, and not by specific acts. The court did not err in this ruling. In the case of Camp v. State, 3 Ga. 417, which was a case of assault with intent to rape, this court held that "evidence that the person charged to have been injured is in fact a common prostitute, or evidence of reputation that she is a woman of ill fame, may be submitted to the jury to impeach her credibility and disprove her statement that the attempt was forcible and against her consent." But the court added (page 422): "It seems that testimony of specific acts of lewdness is not admissible"—citing Rex v. Clarke, 2 Stark. N. P. 334; Rex v. Barker, 3 Car. & P. 467; Rex v. Hodgson, Russ. & R. C. C. 211; People v. Abbot, 19 Wend. 192; 6 Car. & P. 562; Com. v. Murphy, 14 Mass. 387; contra, Com. v. Moore, 3 Pick. 194. There are many other American and English cases which seem to hold the same view, though there are some very respectable courts which have held the other way. See 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 871, and authorities cited in notes 3 and 4; also Hughes, Cr. L. & Proced. § 337, and cases cited. We adopt the view indicated in the Georgia case above referred to, because it seems to be supported by the great weight of authority, and appears to be founded on good reason. If proof of specific acts of lewdness were admitted, it would "not only involve a multitude of collateral issues, but an inquiry into matters as to which the prosecutrix might be wholly unprepared, and so work great injustice." Shirley's Leading Cr. Cas. *57, citing Reg. v. Riley, 18 Q. B. Div. 481. Many of the text-books on criminal law are to the same effect. These authorities relate to acts of lewdness committed with persons other than the prisoner.

There are many cases holding that the injured woman may be examined as to previous acts of this character with the defendant, on the hypothesis that acts of lewdness committed with him prior to the alleged assault tend strongly to show that she was not in fact forcibly violated on the particular occasion under investigation. The rule relating to the admission of evidence of this nature is thus stated in 3 Gr. Ev. (16th Ed.) § 214: "The character of the prosecutrix for chastity may also be impeached; but this must be done by general evidence of her reputation in that respect, and not by evidence of particular instances of unchastity. Nor can she be interrogated as to a criminal connection with any other person, except as to her previous intercourse with the prisoner himself; nor is such evidence of other instances admissible."

2. When, in the present case, the woman alleged to have been wronged was upon the stand, she was interrogated as to specific acts of lewdness committed with Amerson and other men, but denied that she had ever had criminal intercourse with any of them. Counsel for the defendant insisted that the proffered testimony of Amerson was admissible for the purpose of discrediting or impeaching her as a witness, if not admissible for any other purpose. Thereupon the court withdrew from the jury her testimony as to this matter, stating that he would exclude from the consideration of the jury all testimony relative to specific acts of lewdness. This action on the part of the court is assigned as error in one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial. We do not think a witness can be impeached by proof of inadmissible matters, merely because the witness has denied these matters; and we accordingly hold that the withdrawal of the testimony of Lucy Wood, in which she denied having had improper relations with other men than the prisoner, was not error as to the prisoner, and that the trial judge rightly excluded the testimony offered of specific acts of lewdness.

3. The defendant also, by his counsel, asked the court to charge the well-known saying of Lord Hale that the crime of rape is one which is "easily charged, hard to prove, and harder still to be defended by the accused, be he ever so innocent." And to this saying the defendant added some words, equally strong and potent, to a similar effect. This admonition is proper for the court below always to bear in mind on the trial of a rape case, and also for this court to consider, and it was a proper matter of argument before the jury, but it should not have been given in charge by the court. In the case of Crump v. Com., in the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, 23 S. E. 700, that court held that such an instruction to a jury in a rape case was irrelevant and without application, saying, in this connection: "The oft-repeated observation of Lord Hale, which

It was here attempted to put in the form of an instruction, was entirely proper by way of argument to the jury, but not as an independent instruction." We concur in this view, and hold that the refusal to charge as requested in the present case was not ground for a new trial.

4. In the motion for a new trial the plaintiff in error complained that the court erred in charging as follows: "If, however, a female yields because she is forced by fear of death or by duress, the intercourse under such circumstances would be against her will, and the offense would be rape." The assignment of error made upon this charge is (1) that it does not state a correct principle of law, and (2) that there was no evidence before the court upon which to base such a charge. An examination of the brief of evidence in this case convinces us that this charge should not have been given, there being no testimony to the effect that she yielded on account of any fear of death. But we have concluded that, as the crime was sufficiently shown to have been committed by force, this erroneous charge does not require the granting of a new trial. See McGruder v. State, 83 Ga. 616, 10 S. E. 281 (7). It is also to be observed that in a subsequent paragraph of the charge the court instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that that intercourse was had against her will, and that it was accomplished by force, you would be authorized to find the defendant guilty of rape." This latter charge did not contain the erroneous matter. The court further instructed the jury: "It must appear that the carnal knowledge was had against the will of the woman, and was accomplished by force. It must appear that the female offered resistance to the sexual act. The defendant must do more than simply importune; he must exercise sufficient force to overcome the will of the female." This charge also omitted the objectionable matter.

5. Another complaint made in the motion for a new trial is that the court committed error in charging the jury as follows: "It is no excuse that the woman be lewd or unchaste. The crime of rape may be committed on the most abandoned and depraved strumpet. Yet, in determining whether or not the intercourse was by consent or against the will of the female, the jury should take into consideration all evidence relating to the character of the female for chastity or want of chastity." The complaint is that this charge restricted the jury as to the purposes for which they could consider the evidence tending to show that the woman alleged to have been raped was lewd, and that the judge should have instructed the jury that such evidence could be considered as affecting her general credibility as a witness. It is to be noted that the foregoing charge is not assailed for what it says, but for what it does not say. It is a sufficient reply to this complaint to observe that the court elsewhere in its charge, while instructing the jury as to the law on the subject of impeachment of witnesses, expressly informed them that one "mode of impeachment is by proof of general bad character, or by proof of lewdness"; and also, in another paragraph of the charge, instructed the jury that, among other pertinent matters to be determined by them, was the question "whether or not the female was a woman of good character as to chastity."

6. In the motion for a new trial there is also a general assignment that the verdict is contrary to the evidence and without evidence to support it. In considering this ground of the motion, it is to be stated that there was evidence in the case tending to show that the woman alleged to have been injured was of doubtful purity. While this element of the case was calculated to greatly weaken her testimony, the jury had a right to give to it whatever weight they saw fit, just as they had the right to attach whatever credit they saw fit to the statement of the defendant in denial of the charge brought against him. Moreover, it is to be borne in mind that the testimony of this woman was not unsupported. She was strongly corroborated by the witnesses Stephen McCoy and Sol. Jones, who had been attracted by her cries, while they were at a cornfield a considerable distance from the scene of the crime, and arrived there before the prisoner had made his departure, though too late to render her assistance in repelling his assault upon her. Even where, in cases of this character, the evidence has not been altogether satisfactory to this court, it has upheld convictions. In the case of Paschal v. State, 89 Ga. 303, 15 S. E. 322, wherein the accused was indicted for an assault with intent to rape, this court held: "The evidence, though not altogether satisfactory, warranted the verdict; and, as the presiding judge approved the finding by denying the motion for a new trial, the judgment is affirmed." In Jackson v. State, 91 Ga. 323, 18 S. E. 132 (4), 44 Am. St. Rep. 25, which was also a case of assault with intent to rape, this court said: "The evidence was barely sufficient to uphold the verdict. It made a case on which the jury might well have doubted whether the accused intended to ravish, but the verdict negatives the existence of any reasonable doubt, and the trial judge was satisfied with the finding." And in the case of Tolbert v. State, 93 Ga. 153, 20 S. E. 40, this court declined to set aside a conviction of the accused for the offense of assault with intent to rape, saying: "In view of the evidence, there is ground for grave apprehension that the little girl who was assaulted may have been mistaken in identifying the accused as the guilty person; but this was a question for the jury, and, the trial judge having approved the finding, this court is constrained by law to recognize the doubt as having been rightly solved against the prisoner." We also recognize the decisive authority of the jury in this case, and that of the trial judge, who was primarily invested with the power to review the finding of the jury.

We find no harmful error in the refusals of the court to charge as requested, nor in any of the charges complained of, or omissions to charge. The general charge given by the court sufficiently covered the issues in the case.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(68 S. C. 332)

NICHOLS et al. v. MONTGOMERY et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 29, 1901.)

PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

1. In determining whether a complaint states a cause of action, the exhibits cannot be considered.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marion County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by Nichols & McGhee against W. J. Montgomery, W. H. Cross, and E. C. Edmunds, trading under name of E. C. Edmunds. From order overruling demurrers, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jos. W. Johnson and Walter F. Stackhouse, for appellants. J. M. Johnson and Junius H. Evans, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. This is an appeal from an order overruling demurrers to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In order to understand clearly the questions presented by the exceptions, it will be necessary to set forth a copy of the complaint and of Exhibit A, which are as follows:

Complaint: "(1) That at the times hereinafter mentioned the plaintiffs, A. B. Nichols and W. H. McGhee, were co-partners in trade, conducting a tobacco warehouse at Nichols, S. C., under the firm name of Nichols & McGhee. (2) That the plaintiffs are informed and believe that at the time hereinafter mentioned, to wit, during the tobacco season of the year A. D. 1899, the defendants, W. J. Montgomery, W. H. Cross, and E. C. Edmunds, were copartners in the purchase and sale of tobacco, under the name and style of E. C. Edmunds, as will appear by reference to the contract, a copy of which is hereto annexed, marked 'Exhibit A.' (3) That from July 27 to October 30, A. D. 1899, to wit, during the tobacco season of that year, the plaintiffs above named sold and delivered to the defendants, to wit, to the defendant E. C. Edmunds, for the use and benefit of himself and his codefendants, W. J. Montgomery and W. H. Cross, under the terms of their said contract, the following described goods and chattels, and paid the exchange, and rendered the services, and furnished the items of cash at the time and for the prices hereinafter specified—that is to say, as are stated, specified, and itemized in the account thereof hereto annexed and marked 'Exhibit B,' as a part of this complaint, to which all necessary reference is craved, on which account all proper credits are also stated, specified, and itemized; that the total debts on said account amount to $10,908.44, and the total credits thereon amount to $10,132.93, leaving a balance unpaid, past due and owing to the plaintiffs thereon, of the sum of $775.51 by the defendants. (4) That the plaintiffs, before the commencement of this action, made frequent demands upon the defendants for the payment of said balance of $775.51, and the same was refused." Exhibit A: "The State of South Carolina, Marion County. An agreement entered into this 1st day of October, 1899, between E. C. Edmunds, as the party of the first part, and W. H. Cross and W. J. Montgomery, as parties of the second part, witnesseth: Whereas, said party of the first part is engaged in the business of buying tobacco in orders on the Marion, Nichols and Lumberton markets, and the money to purchase same is being furnished by the Merchants' and Farmers' Bank of Marion, S. C.: Now, in consideration that said parties of the second part shall hold harmless said bank from any loss by reason of said purchases by said party of the first part, he agrees that they shall receive one-fourth of the profits arising from said business, expenses of conducting said business, including interest charges, to be deducted before there is any division of profits. The business is to be conducted and the account kept in the name of said party of the first part, a balance sheet to be rendered monthly. This agreement is to cover the business of the present season and continue of force until dissolved by the mutual consent of the parties hereto. In witness whereof, the parties hereto have affixed their seals the day and year above written. [Signed] E. C. Edmunds. [Seal.] [Signed] W. H. Cross. [Seal.] [Signed] W. J. Montgomery. [Seal.] Witness: [Signed] W. F. Stackhouse."

It will not be necessary to set out a copy of the other exhibit, as it simply contains a statement of account. W. J. Montgomery and W. H. Cross demurred jointly and E. C. Edmunds demurred separately, but their grounds are the same, and are as follows: "(1) Because it appears upon the face of the complaint that defendants were not partners, and therefore could not be sued as such. (2) Because it appears from the exhibit, which forms a part of the complaint, that, if a partnership did exist, all of the partnership debts have been paid, and therefore the action will not lie. (3) It appears upon the face of the complaint that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant."

If the complaint is alone considered in determining whether the circuit court erred in overruling the demurrers, it is apparent that there was no error. The appellants, however, have not based their grounds of demurrer upon the complaint alone, but also upon the exhibit attached to it. The case of Cave v. Gill, 59 S. C. 258, 87 S. E. 817, decides that the exhibits cannot be considered in determining whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

It is the judgment of this court, that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(68 S. C. 284)

BOND v. CORBIN et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 24, 1904.)

DISMISSAL OF ACTION—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE—NOTICE—REVIEW.

1. Where the first case on the trial docket is set on the first day of jury cases, and, when it is called, plaintiff is absent, and in the afternoon is also absent, and again when called the next morning, a dismissal for failure to prosecute is proper.

2. Motion to dismiss for want of prosecution is properly granted, though no notice thereof was given.

3. The Supreme Court will not review the facts stated in affidavits filed on a motion to rescind an order dismissing a case for want of prosecution.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Oconee County; Watts, Judge.

Action by J. A. Bond against W. B. F. Corbin and J. T. McKinney. From an order dismissing case for failure of plaintiff to attend and prosecute, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Earle and Stribling & Herndon, for appellant. Jaynes & Shelor, for respondents.

POPE, C. J. This action in the court of common pleas for Oconee county, in this state, was begun May 14, 1900. A trial was had at the May, 1902, term of court, and resulted in a mistrial. Again the cause was called for trial at the November term, 1902, when the following circumstances were brought to the attention of his honor Richard C. Watts, as presiding judge: That this cause was at the head of the docket, being cause No. 1 on docket No. 1. That, by agreement of counsel on both sides, it was fixed for trial on Thursday morning. At the hour of trial, that plaintiff failed to appear. That Mr. J. R. Earle had written plaintiff, his client, when the cause would be called for trial, and that no answer had been received, although the plaintiff lived at Pelzer, in Anderson county, which is an adjoining county to Oconee county. The presiding judge postponed the cause until 3 o'clock on Thursday afternoon. Again the plaintiff failed to be in attendance upon the court. That the defendants, with their witnesses, were present in court, and demanded a trial. The presiding judge again continued the further hearing until Friday morning; stating that, if the plaintiff failed to appear, he would dismiss the cause for want of prosecution if the defendants still demanded a trial. That on Friday morning, when the court assembled, the plaintiff still failed to appear, but had sent this telegram to his attorney: "To J. R. Earle, Walhalla, S. C.: Will come tomorrow. Will try to be there by noon. J. A. Bond." The defendants demanded their right of trial. That thereupon the presiding judge granted the following order: "Upon the call of the above-named action for trial, and the defendants announcing themselves ready for trial, and the plaintiff not being present, now, on motion of Jaynes & Shelor, defendants' attorneys, it is ordered that plaintiff be, and is hereby, nonsuited." In the afternoon of that day (the 7th day of November, 1902) the plaintiff appeared in person, and thereafter during the term of court a motion was made to vacate the foregoing order, and affidavits pro and con were filed. The circuit judge refused the motion. An appeal was then taken from the order of nonsuit, as well as from the order refusing to vacate the same, on these grounds: "(1) For it was error on the part of the presiding judge to order complaint dismissed and a nonsuit entered before the end of the term, and before jurors were dismissed, but his honor should have ordered that the case be passed over, and that it lose its place on the docket, but the case remain on the docket at least until the jurors were dismissed; there being no motion to continue the case beyond the term. (2) For that it was error on the part of the presiding judge to dismiss the complaint and order a nonsuit for want of prosecution, no notice of such motion having been given to plaintiff. (3) For that it was error on the part of the presiding judge to hold that the affidavits furnished do not present such a showing as would entitle plaintiff to have the order rescinded, and to order and adjudge that the motion to rescind be refused, but his honor should have held that, under the affidavits furnished, and the facts stated therein, the order dismissing the complaint and ordering a nonsuit should be rescinded."

In passing upon these grounds of appeal, we feel that it is our duty to emphasize what the court said in the case of State v. Box, 68 S. C., at page 404, 44 S. E. 970: "One of the strongest criticisms of the administration of the law relates to the many delays of the trial of the cases. Parties in the criminal and the civil courts should be ready to try their cases promptly." Every man is held to know the law. This November term of court was a regular term. The position of this case was the first on the docket. Counsel on both sides had fixed Thursday morning as the time for the trial of this cause. Yet, when the case was called, the plaintiff is not there. Delay is had till the afternoon session of the court. Still he is absent. On ¶ 2. See Dismissal and Nonsuit, vol. 17, Cent. Dig. § 164.

Friday morning it is called for trial, and still the plaintiff is absent. The circuit judge grants a nonsuit, refusing to continue any longer. Was this error? From the earliest adjudications to the present time, this matter is wisely left to the discretion of the circuit judge. Hort v. Jones, 2 Bay, 440; Sheppard v. Lark, 2 Bailey, 576; Hunter v. Glenn, 1 Bailey, 544; Cook v. Cottrell, 4 Strob. 62; Chalk v. McAlilly, 11 Rich. Law, 153; State v. Atkinson, 33 S. C. 106, 11 S. E. 693; and many other cases, concluding with Heyward v. Middleton, 65 S. C. 496, 43 S. E. 956. We can see nothing in the conduct of the circuit judge in this matter which was erroneous. The first exception is overruled.

As to the second exception, we will state that there was no necessity for giving a notice for the motion to dismiss the case for want of prosecution. The case was regularly reached on the docket. The plaintiff was not ready to go on. Therefore he ought to have been dismissed. This exception is overruled.

Lastly as to the third exception: We cannot pass upon the sufficiency of the facts developed by the affidavits. This is a law case. This court cannot, under the law, canvass the facts. They were for the circuit court. This exception is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(68 S. C. 335)

WADDELL v. WADDELL et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 29, 1904.)

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—LEGACIES—CHARGE ON LAND.

1. Testator's will, after devising certain lands, provided that it shall be "distinctly understood that I will to each of my grandchildren twenty dollars to be paid to them by their parents when they become old enough to know the worth of money. This is a matter of trust and love for my grandchildren of course the money to come out of my landed estate." Held to carry a legacy to each grandchild living at testator's death, and to be a charge on the land devised to each parent, but not to restrict the power of sale conferred, subject only to restraint in equity in the event of an attempted breach of trust.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by David Hoke Waddell against Randell T. Waddell and others. From the decree, defendant James G. McCarter appeals. Affirmed.

Cothran, Dean & Cothran, for appellant. Haynsworth, Parker & Patterson, for respondent.

JONES, J. This action was instituted to compel James G. McCarter to comply with his agreement to purchase a certain tract of land, and involves a construction of the will of T. E. Waddell. The said testator, after devising a life estate in 65 acres of land, devised the remainder to his children, David Hoke, Randell, and Mattie. The plaintiff, David Hoke Waddell, has acquired all the interests of the other devisees, and contracted to sell the land to the defendant James G. McCarter; but he, being advised that there was some doubt about the title, declined to comply, and as a result this friendly suit was brought in order to have construed the following provision in said will: "I wish it to be distinctly understood that I will to each of my grandchildren twenty dollars to be paid to them by their parents when they become old enough to know the worth of money. This is a matter of trust and love for my grandchildren of course the money to come out of my landed estate. Hoke Randell and Mattie care for their own children. Right here I wish to be distinctly understood that each of my grandchildren to have twenty dollars."

The cause came on to be heard before Judge R. O. Purdy, who rendered the following decree: "The question presented in this case is whether, under the will of T. E. Waddell, his children, David Hoke Waddell, Randell T. Waddell, and Mattie T. Cook, have the power to dispose of the real estate given to them by the testator's will. These devisees were directed by the will to pay to each of their respective children $20. This was declared to be a matter of trust and love, the money to come out of his landed estate. It appears that the devisees fully intend to carry out the directions of the will, and they admit that they became bound by the terms of this direction. But the question presented to me is whether a sale made by them of the lands given them will be valid. Some question might be raised as to whether the lands were charged with the payment of this money to the grandchildren. But even if this constitutes a charge, my opinion is that the devisees have the power of sale, and that such sale will release the land from the charge. There is no ground for suspecting that the devisees intend any breach of trust, but, on the contrary, they declare their purpose to carry out the directions of the testator, and he, on his part, declared that this was a matter of trust and confidence. My opinion, therefore, is, and it is so adjudged, that a sale made by David Hoke Waddell of the land described in the complaint will carry a good fee-simple title, free from all charges imposed by the will. It is therefore ordered that Jas. G. McCarter do comply with his contract as set forth in the complaint."

The appellant, McCarter, alleges error in holding that a sale made by David Hoke Waddell will carry a good fee-simple title free from all charges imposed by the will, and in ordering specific performance, because (a) the legacies of $20 to each of the grandchildren are made by the will charges upon the testator's land; (b) that grandchild dren born after the death of the testator will be entitled to said legacy of $20 each.

We think that only those grandchildren who were in esse at the death of the testator are entitled to claim the legacy "when they become old enough to know the worth of money." The language of the will indicates this. The testator, as a matter of trust and love for his grandchildren, was anxious that each of them should receive $20; showing that he had in mind grandchildren who had inspired his trust and love. Furthermore, the period of payment is indefinite. The general rule upon this subject is, where there is a fixed period when the distribution is to take place, as when the legatees shall arrive at the age of 21, then all the children born before that time will come in, and such as are subsequently born will be excluded; but, where there is an indefinite period for distribution, the legacy vests at the death of the testator, and none can take except those in esse at that time. Myers v. Myers, 2 McCord, Eq. 256, 16 Am. Dec. 648. This rule might be different if, as matter of fact, there were no grandchildren in esse when the will speaks, but the admitted facts in this case show that a number of grandchildren were living at the death of the testator. It is alleged in the complaint and admitted that all the grandchildren of the said testator who were in existence at the time of his death have been joined as parties defendants to this action. We think, further, that the testator meant to charge the land devised to each parent named with the payment of the legacy of $20 to each of the children of such devisee. The legacy was made payable by the parents, and each parent devisee was in this matter to take care of his or her own children. But an absolute estate had been devised to each devisee, and the gift to the grandchildren in no wise affected the absolute power of the sale which each devisee had. Indeed, the gift being of money, and the land being referred to only as a source of payment, it is perfectly consistent with the trust imposed upon the devisees to pay these legacies that they have unrestricted power of sale, subject only to restraint by a court of equity in event of an attempted or proposed breach of trust, all of which features are eliminated from the case by the unassailed conclusions of the circuit court. We agree, therefore, with the circuit court, that plaintiff can convey a good fee-simple title, free from all charges imposed by the will, and that defendant McCarter should specifically comply with his contract of purchase.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

WOODS, J. (concurring). I concur in the view that the legacies were limited to grandchildren in esse at the death of the testator. On the authority of Bank v. Gregg, 46 S. C. 169, 24 S. E. 64, I think the legacies were charges on the land, and that the devisees could not make a title free from this charge. The grandchildren, however, were parties to the cause, and, not having appealed, are bound by the circuit decree. For this reason, I concur in the result.

(68 S. C. 269)

KETCHIN v. RION et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 24, 1904.)

POWERS—EXECUTION—VALIDITY—WILLS.

1. An execution of a power under a will, which is contrary to the limitation contained therein, is void.

2. Where a power of distribution created by will is void because executed contrary to the limitation contained in the will creating it, the property passes under the first will.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Fairfield County; Klugh, Judge.

Action by Thomas H. Ketchin, as executor of the will of Mary C. Rion, against Preston Rion and others. From decree Margaret H. Rion, Floride C. Barron, Holbrook Rion, Lucy Rion-Boozar, Hannah Rion-Williams, Willie C. Rion, Margaret H. Rion, Jr., Lucile Rion, Charles H. Barron, Floride C. Barron, Jr., Jacob T. Barron, Jr., Elizabeth K. Barron, and Jane Fisher Barron appeal. Modified.

Buchanan & Hannahan, for certain appellants. A. S. Douglass, for appellant Mrs. Barron and children.

POPE, O. J. Col. James H. Rion, of Fairfield county, in this state, departed this life on the 12th day of December, 1886. He left a last will and testament, dated the 1st day of April, 1882. In this last will and testament he had provided for his daughter Mrs. Kitty Rion-McMaster. By a codicil to his will, dated 24th October, 1883, she having died during his lifetime, he declared that all provisions in his will for said daughter are revoked. The testator nominated his wife, Mrs. Mary C. Rion, as the sole executrix of his will and codicil, who after his death procured said will and codicil to be admitted to probate, and qualified as executrix. Before Mrs. Rion, as executrix, had settled the estate of her deceased husband, she died, leaving her last will and testament, in which she appointed the plaintiff the executor of the said will. She attempted in her will to execute the power she had under her husband's will. Thus matters were in confusion, as will be made to appear by reference to the will and codicil of Col. Rion as well as the will of Mrs. Rion. We have thought it best to reproduce those three papers herein, by copies thereof, as follows:

"In the name of God. Amen. The following is my last will and testament:

"Item 1. I give and devise unto Sally, the wife of Preston Rion, and her children all my Ford place. Also all my personal property upon my said Ford place and Preston 'Ford' place. Also all the bonds, mortgages and debts owing me at the time of my death by my son, Preston.

"All the foregoing for her children during her life without power of sale or of encumbering the same by mortgage or other lien, and after her death to her children, who may survive her, or if she die without surviving children, then all the aforesaid property is to be disposed of as my son Preston may appoint by a written declaration of trust. All the foregoing devise and bequest I value at five thousand dollars.

"Item 2. I devise and bequeath to my son Holbrook all my Peay places, being all my Rochelle Hill place, all my Dutchman Creek place, and all my Belton place, in all about eighteen hundred and twenty-three acres and one thousand dollars. All of the above I value at five thousand dollars.

"Item 3. I devise to Floride Barron and her children during her life, with power of sale by her but not of encumbering by mortgage or other lien, my Arthur lot in Columbia and improvements thereon, and after her death the same to belong to her surviving issue or failing issue to her husband, Jacob T. Barron, as he may appoint by declaration of trust in writing. In case of sale, the proceeds must be invested in real estate subject to the foregoing restrictions and limitations. This property I value at three thousand five hundred dollars.

"Item 4. I devise to Maggie Rion my law office in Columbia and my large diamond shirt button. The foregoing land and stud I value at fifteen hundred dollars.

"Item 5. I give to Kitty Rion McMaster my smaller diamond shirt button valued at three hundred dollars.

"Item 6. I value my law library and office fixtures at five thousand dollars.

"Item 7. I devise and bequeath to my wife Mary C. Rion all the real and personal estate and choses-in-action not hereinbefore disposed of which may belong to me at my death for and during her natural life with power to sell any part or give off to our children whenever she may choose, or she may dispose of the same by will, but in giving off or disposing by will she must not, with what I have herein given, give any daughter less than five thousand dollars nor any son over five thousand dollars in value, unless when each shall have received five thousand dollars there be a balance in which case she may equalize or dispose of such balance as she chooses.

"Item 8. My tombstone must be a single upright slab of marble not costing over fifty dollars.

"Item 9. In all contingencies arising under Item 7 (seven) Sally and her children are to stand in lieu of Preston with remainders and limitations as provided in Item 1 (one), and whatever Floride receives is to be subject to the remainders and limitations provided in Item 3 (three).

"Item 10. I give to my grand-son, James H. Rion, Jr., all my jewelry (except my diamond snuff box) not hereinbefore disposed of, my sword and military trappings, my South Carolina College book, my presentation copy of Calhoun's works, my Calhoun's Memorial book, Mr. Calhoun's watch seal and portfolio, Dr. Leibert's inkstand and five hundred dollars.

"Item 11. At the death of my wife in case she make no will my children are to be equalized. Item 9 (nine) also applying in such case.

"Item 12. I constitute my wife the executrix hereof. Executed as my last will and testament this the first day of April, 1882.

"James H. Rion."

"Codicil.—State of South Carolina, County of Fairfield.

"In the name of God. Amen.

"My daughter Kitty Rion McMaster having died, the following is a codicil to my last will and testament, executed on 1st April, 1882:

"1. All provisions made in my will for my daughter Kitty are hereby revoked.

"2. I give to my daughter Hanna my smaller diamond shirt button valued three hundred dollars.

"3. I desire my wife (or executor) to make a provision for my grand-son Kitt Rion McMaster equal to one-half of what she would have made for my daughter Kitty had she lived. She is to use for his benefit the income of his share if she deem expedient until he arrives at the age of twenty-one years and should he attain that age, then turn over to him his share. Should he die before attaining maturity then the provision for him is to return to my estate and be distributed under the provisions of my will.

"Executed this the twenty-fourth day of October, 1883.

"James H. Rion."

Will of Mary C. Rion.

"State of South Carolina, County of Fairfield.

"In the name of God. Amen.

"I, Mary C. Rion, do hereby declare this to be my last will and testament and all others null and void and do hereby revoke any heretofore made by me.

"Item 1. The estate of my husband, James H. Rion, deceased, is in debt to me as executrix for the maintenance and administration of the same. I desire my executor to collect as soon as possible this money and first pay any personal debts I may owe, the remainder of said money being my own personal property I bequeath and give for love and affection to my three daughters, viz.: Margaret H., Lucy Rion and Hannah Rion, in equal division share and share alike.

"Item 2. It is my desire to execute the wishes of my deceased husband, James H. Rion. To this end I dispose of the property therein devised and bequeathed by his will to me as follows:

"To my daughter Margaret H. Rion I give and bequeath thirty-five hundred dollars.

"Item 3. Floride Calhoun Barron having received the value of thirty-five hundred dollars in a house and lot during her father's life, which she has now occupied near twenty years and has held possession of, I consider that with the interest accruing the investment, she, Floride, has hereby gotten more from her father's estate than any of the other sisters will get at my death—it would be unjust to make her a legatee under my will. Therefore I declare that said Floride, her husband nor any of her children have any part or parcel in any real estate, monies, bonds or chattels I may leave or anything accurate to the estate in the future.

"Item 4. My husband making no provision in his will for our son Willie Calhoun Rion but 'leaving him to me on his death-bed to do what I could for him,' I give and bequeath twenty-five hundred dollars to his son Willie and his daughter Margaret, share and share alike, and hereby appoint and constitute my daughter Margaret their trustee.

"Item 5. I give and bequeath to my daughter, Lucy Rion Edwards, five thousand dollars and my silver, pictures, clothes and household linen.

"Item 6. I give and bequeath to my daughter, Hannah Rion Williams, four thousand dollars, also my rosewood bedroom set. And to her daughter Theresa any script belonging to me personally.

"Item 7. I give and bequeath to Kitt Rion McMaster twenty-five hundred dollars.

"Item 8. I have desired to execute my husband's will as far as possible. The estate after paying all legitimate debts had no available funds, and therefore I offered at different times some valuable real estate for sale, but my son, Preston Rion, by circulating erroneous and damaging reports of my ability to give clear titles to any property I sold, made sales impossible and prevented me settling Item 10 of my husband's will. Therefore I consider it due to the heirs at law to exonerate my executor from paying same after my death. No date for payment of Item 10 was fixed and therefore no interest could be claimed if I had been able to settle it and it could not have been paid until all other debts had been paid.

"Item 9. The sideboard claimed and held by Preston's wife Sally was never given to her by me and belongs to my dining room set and shall be claimed and restored as my property at my death.

"Item 10. I desire a careful appraisement shall be made by disinterested parties as J. E. McDonald and T. K. Elliott of my real estate, stocks and household effects of which the estate may be possessed at my death and at its appraised value any piece of property may be taken by agreement of any daughter as a part of her legacy without the necessity of a public sale.

"Item 11. To Helen Rion, Jr., I give and bequeath my piano music, music stool and music rack and tuning keys.

"Item 12. If, after a careful appraisement of real estate, bonds and script, the amount shall aggregate less than the amount to be divided under my will in proportion to the amount bequeathed to each one, I direct and leave the aggregate remainder to be prorated among Margaret H., Lucy, Hannah, Kitt McMaster and Willie's two children.

"Item 13. I nominate and appoint and constitute Thomas H. Ketchin as the executor of this will and hereby give unto him full power and authority to sell and convey any real estate and other properties. And also desire him to make as speedy settlement as possible with the heirs. I desire that my executor be not required to give bond for the faithful execution of this trust and in witness thereof I hereby subscribe my name this 26th day of February, A. D. 1900.

"Mary C. Rion."

This action was brought by the executor of Mrs. Mary C. Rion's will, to which the children of Col. Rion and certain of his grandchildren who are affected by the terms thereof are parties defendant. All parties defendant duly answered. A reference was made to J. J. Nell of all the issues of law and fact. His report was made and came on to be heard by Judge Klugh, who pronounced the following decree:

"Col. James H. Rion died on December 12, 1886, leaving his widow and seven children, to wit, Preston, Margaret H., Floride C., Willie C., Holbrook, Lucy, and Hannah. He left a will, of which his widow, Mrs. Mary C. Rion, was appointed executrix. In his will he gave to the wife and children of his son Preston property which he valued at $5,000; to his daughter Margaret property which he valued at $1,500; to his daughter Floride C. Barron and her children property which he valued at $3,500; to his son Holbrook property which he valued at $5,000; and to his daughter Hannah (in a codicil to his will) property which he valued at $300. It will be observed that he made no specified provision for his son Willie C., nor his daughter Lucy. The seventh paragraph of his will is as follows: '7. I devise and bequeath to my wife, Mary C. Rion, all the real and personal estate and choses in action not hereinbefore disposed of which may belong to me at my death for and during her natural life, with power to sell any part or give off to our children whenever she may choose, or she may dispose of the same by will, but in giving off or disposing by will, she must not, with what I have herein given, give any daughter less than five thousand dollars, nor any son over five thousand dollars in value—unless when each shall have received five thousand dollars, there be a balance, in which case she may equalize or dispose of such balance as she chooses.' In the tenth paragraph of his will he gives to his grandson James H. Rion certain articles of personal property and five hundred dollars. In the codicil to his will he directs his wife to make provision for his grandson Kitt Rion-McMaster, son of his predeceased daughter, equal to one-half of what she would have made for his daughter Kitty had she lived.

"Mrs. Mary C. Rion qualified as executrix and took possession of her husband's estate and entered upon the enjoyment of the same as life tenant. In her returns as executrix she charged the estate with many items for taxes, repairs, insurance, and other expenses with which she as life tenant is chargeable, and her return also shows various payments to her children on account of their interest in the estate. It also appears that in the year 1896 she conveyed to Holbrook Rion a tract of 118 acres of land for the expressed consideration of $32.50 and one bale of cotton of five hundred pounds per year during her life. No mention of this transaction is made in her returns. It appears that Col. Rion paid $380 for the same land in 1883. These matters will be adverted to hereafter. Mrs. Rion died in 1901, leaving a will of which the plaintiff herein is the executor. She attempts in her will to execute the power conferred upon her by the seventh clause of her husband's will by disposing of his estate to certain ones of their children. She gives to her daughter Margaret H. Rion $3,500; declares that Floride C. Barron, having received $3,500 in her father's lifetime, is entitled to nothing further from the estate; gives to the two children of Willie C. Rion, who died after his father, $2,500, to be divided equally between them; gives to her daughter Lucy $5,000; to her daughter Hannah $4,000; to her grandson Kitt Rion-McMaster $2,500; and declares her inability to pay a legacy of $500 bequeathed by her husband to his grandson James H. Rion, on the ground that she has been unable to do so, and exonerates her executor from doing so; and confers upon her executor 'full powers and authority to sell and convey any real estate or other properties.' It will be observed the whole scheme of Mrs. Rion's will proceeds upon the conversion of the property of Col. Rion into money, although she made no sale thereof herself, and the disposal of the money to certain of her children whom she seems to prefer over the others.

"The obvious conflict of the provisions of her will with those of her husband's was well calculated to create doubts in the mind of her executor as to his powers and duties. He therefore brings this action against the heirs at law and the devisees and legatees under the wills of Col. Rion and Mrs. Rion for the purpose of having said wills construed by the court, his own duties defined, and the rights of the several parties under said wills ascertained and adjudicated. The defendants all answer, setting up their respective contentions. The cause was referred to J. J. Neil, Esq., as referee, and he has taken testimony, stated the account of Mrs. Rion as executrix, and also made a statement showing the amounts advanced by her as executrix to the several defendants, and has filed his report. The cause comes before me upon said report without formal exceptions.

"The main question in the case is the proper construction of the seventh clause of Col. Rion's will, and whether Mrs. Rion has executed the powers therein conferred upon her. In this clause the testator, after giving to his wife a life estate in all the residue of his estate left after certain devises and bequests therein specified, confers upon her power to do three things: (1) To sell any part of the estate; (2) to 'give off to our children whenever she may choose'; (3) to dispose of the estate by will. Upon the exercise of the second and third of these powers the testator placed this restriction: that 'in giving off or disposing by will she must not, with what I have herein given, give any daughter less than five thousand dollars, nor any son more than five thousand dollars in value.' If there should be a balance after each one has received five thousand dollars, as to such balance the restriction is removed, and 'she may equalize or dispose of such balance as she chooses.' The executrix failed to execute the power to sell and also the power to give off, except a very limited extent under each, which will be hereafter noticed. So the question is narrowed to this: Has Mrs. Rion executed the power to dispose of the estate of her husband by will? This power is subject to the above restriction. In exercising it, she must give to each daughter that which, added to what she has already received, will amount to full five thousand dollars in value; and that before she gives to any son any part of the estate. In her attempt to exercise this power, Mrs. Rion proceeds upon the assumption that the whole estate is converted into money, which, as we have seen, she in the last clause of her will authorized her executor to do. To her daughter Margaret, who had received $1,500 worth of property under her father's will, she gives $3,500, making the full amount $5,000 for her; to her daughter Lucy, who had received nothing under her father's will, she gives $5,000, besides certain of her own personal effects; to her daughter Hannah, who had received under her father's will property valued at $800 and also certain advances from her mother, she gives $4,000, making more than the full amount of $5,000 for her; to her daughter Floride, who had received under her father's will property valued at $3,500, she gives nothing, declaring that said Floride and her husband and children shall have no part in the estate, nor anything accruing thereto in the future.

to the children of her son Willie she gives $2,500; and to Kitt Rion-McMaster, son of her predeceased daughter, Kitty, she gives, in accordance with the express desire of her husband, $2,500. It is manifest that Mrs. Rion in the above disposition transgressed the power conferred by her husband in at least two particulars: First, in excluding Mrs. Barron from any further participation in the estate; and, secondly, in appointing a portion to the children of her deceased son, William, before making Mrs. Barron's share, with what her father had given her, the full amount of $5,000. Without entering upon a discussion of the authorities, my opinion is that Mrs. Rion's execution of the power, being contrary to the limitations contained in it, is void. Fronty v. Fronty, Bail. Eq. 529, 530; Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. 640; 2 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 748; 22 Encyc. (2d Ed.) 1148-1151; 2 Sug. Pow. *219. The residuary estate of Col. Rion passes, therefore, to his heirs at law, subject to the provisions of the eleventh clause of his will, which is as follows: '(11) At the death of my wife, in case she makes no will, my children are to be equalized. Item 9 (nine) also applying in such case.'

"It becomes necessary to ascertain what portions of the estate have been received by the several heirs either under the will or from the executrix. The heirs are the seven children above named, the wife and children of Preston being substituted for him by the testator, and the wife and children of William, who has died since his father, representing him, and Kitt Rion-McMaster, the son of a predeceased daughter of the testator. The portions given to certain of the children by the testator in his will have already been stated. It appears that Margaret H. Rion has received from the executrix $20.05; Lucy Rion (Edwards) Boozer, $159.57; and Hannah Rion-Williams, $1,074. I do not think the expenses of her education can be charged against Hannah (Cooner v. May, 3 Strob. Eq. 185), and it is clear that the four shares of bank stock for the proceeds of which she recelpted to her mother as her guardian were purchased with her interest in certain life insurance money, which, so far as appears, was no part of the estate of her father. These payments to these three daughters was the extent to which Mrs. Rion appears to have exercised the power to 'give off to our children.' The conveyance to Holbrook Rion of a certain tract of land of her testator, as above set forth, was a legitimate exercise of the power to sell a part of the estate which the will conferred upon Mrs. Rion, and the consideration, while it may or may not have been adequate, was more than nominal, and sufficient to support the transaction. The evidence does not warrant the conclusion that there was bad faith in the conveyance. The deed must stand.

"The legacy to James H. Rion, Jr., must be paid, with interest from the 1st day of January, 1888. 18 Ency. (2d Ed.) 793; Barksdale v. Hall, 13 Rich. Eq. 180. This is a charge upon the estate, which must be satisfied before any distribution. It is subject to a credit of $54.23 for payments made on account of it by the executrix. The executor of Mrs. Rion has no authority to sell any part of the estate of Col. Rion; nor, indeed, under the statute, to take any other step in the administration of said estate. Code 1902, § 2502. It is his duty to preserve said estate so far as it has come into his hands, and to deliver it to such person or persons as may show proper authority to demand and receive it from him. The referee finds that the estate of Mrs. Mary C. Rion is indebted to that of James H. Rion in the sum of $2,263.42, which finding and all his other findings, except as herein modified, are hereby confirmed.

"It will be necessary to have an administrator cum testamento annexo of the estate of Col. Rion before the court before any final order for the winding up of the estate can be made. It is impracticable, upon the record as it is now presented to the court, even to make an order for the sale of the property belonging to his estate, which it seems will be necessary before a distribution of the same in accordance with the terms of his will can be effected. It is ordered, adjudged and decreed:

"1. That the plaintiff, Thomas H. Ketchin, as executor of the will of Mary C. Rion, deceased, do collect and preserve the assets of the estate of James H. Rion, deceased, so far as they have come or may hereafter come into his hands, until the further order of the court, or until some party duly authorized to receive the same shall demand them of him; that the plaintiff, as executor as aforesaid, pay to the estate of James H. Rion, deceased, out of any assets in his hands, or to come into his hands, of the estate of Mary C. Rion, deceased, the sum of $2,263.42, with interest from July 1, 1902, or so much thereof as such assets will pay.

"(2) That James H. Rion do recover from the estate of James H. Rion, deceased, the legacy bequeathed to him in the will of said deceased, to wit, the sum of $500, with interest thereon from January 1, 1888, less a credit of $54.23, and also the specific articles bequeathed to him by the testator in said will, and that he may have leave to proceed as he may be advised to enforce payment of said amount, and also the delivery of said specific personal property.

"(3) That the will of Mrs. Mary C. Rion, in so far as it purports to dispose of the residuary estate of James H. Rion, deceased, is null and void, and that said residuary estate be distributed, after payment of any indebtedness that remains unpaid against such estate, including any unpaid taxes now due or hereafter to become due, and the aforesaid legacy of James H. Rion, Jr., amongst the heirs at law of the said James H. Rion, deceased, in the following proportions, to wit: To the wife and children of Preston Rion, by substitution for the said Preston Rion, one-eighth part; to Margaret Rion, one-eighth part; to Floride C. Barron, one-eighth part; to Holbrook Rion, one-eighth part; to Lucy Edwards Boozer, one-eighth part; to Hannah Rion-Williams, one-eighth part; to Kitt Rion-McMaster, one-eighth part; to Lucile A. Rion, Willie C. Rion, and Margaret H. Rion, Jr., each one twenty-fourth part. That the share going to the wife and children of Preston Rion is subject to all restrictions, limitations, and remainders set forth and prescribed in item 1 of the will of James H. Rion, deceased, and the share going to Floride C. Barron is subject to the remainder and limitations provided in item 3 of said will. That the following parties, before taking any share of said estate, shall account for the amounts already received by them, respectively, from the estate of the said James H. Rion, deceased, as follows: The wife and children of Preston Rion, $5,000; Margaret H. Rion, $1,520.05; Floride C. Barron, $3,500; Holbrook Rion, $5,000; Lucy Edwards Boozer, $159.57; Hannah Rion-Williams, $1,374. And that the shares of the parties be equalized as provided in the eleventh clause of the will of James H. Rion, deceased.

"(4) That any of the parties to this action have leave to apply at the foot of this decree or in the further progress of the cause for any order or orders that may be necessary to carry out the views herein expressed, or to effect and expedite the settlement and distribution of the estate of the said James H. Rion, deceased.

"(5) That the plaintiff, as executor of the will of Mary C. Rion, deceased, out of the assets of her estate pay the costs of this action."

The parties plaintiff and defendants acquiesced in all of the findings of law and fact by the circuit judge except on two points, which are set out in the two exceptions as follows:

"(1) Because his honor, after holding 'that Mrs. Rion's execution of the power, being contrary to the limitations contained in it, is void,' erred in finding and holding 'that the residuary estate of Col. Rion passed, therefore, to his heirs at law, subject to the provisions of the eleventh clause of his will'; whereas he ought to have held and found that the said residuary estate, after the expiration of the life estate of Mrs. Mary C. Rion, passed under the will of James H. Rion, deceased, and the codicil thereto, to the children of the testator living at the time of his death in equal shares, and to Kitt Rion-McMaster, the son of a predeceased daughter, in the proportion of one-half of a child's share, subject to the provisions of the eleventh clause of the said will, and also of the ninth clause thereof, under which latter clause Sallie and her children are to stand in lieu of Preston, with remainders and limitations as provided in item 1, and whatever Floride receives is to be subjected to the remainders and limitations provided in item 3.

"(2) Because his honor erred in ordering and adjudging that the residuary estate of James H. Rion, deceased, be distributed, after the payment of any indebtedness that may remain against such estate, and any taxes due or hereafter to become due, and the legacy of James H. Rion, Jr., among the heirs at law of James H. Rion, deceased, in the proportion of one-eighth part to the defendant Floride C. Barron, and one-eighth part to each of his other children living at the time of the testator's death, or their representatives, and also one-eighth part to the defendant Kitt Rion-McMaster; whereas his honor ought to have adjudged that the said estate be divided among the children living at testator's death, or their representatives, and the said Kitt Rion-McMaster, under and according to the provisions of the testator's will and codicil thereto, in the proportion of two-fifteenths part thereof to each of the defendants Floride C. Barron, Margaret H. Rion, Lucy Rion-Boozer, Hannah Rion-Williams, and Holbrook Rion, and two-fifteenths thereof among them to the representatives of Willie C. Rion, deceased, who was living at the time of testator's death, and one-fifteenth thereof to the said Kitt Rion-McMaster, and two-fifteenths thereof to Sallie H. Rion and her children, subject to accounting for amounts already received by the parties, respectively, as stated in the decree."

We will now pass upon these two exceptions.

1. We find no great difficulty in reaching a conclusion on the first exception in favor of the appellants. The circuit judge, having found that the attempted exercise of the power carved out of Col. Rion's will by Mrs. Rion was null and void, felt that it was necessary for the fee in the property of Col. Rion to be vested somewhere, and placed it in his heirs at law, thus admitting the grandson Kitt Rion-McMaster, as the representative of his deceased mother, among the heirs at law. As well remarked in Mr. Hannah's argument from Welborn v. Townsend, 31 S. C. 408, 10 S. E. 96, "Where there is a will, the policy of the law is not in favor of declaring a partial intestacy unless the reasons for such result are clear and indisputable." It is patent from an inspection of the will and codicil that Col. Rion did not intend any intestacy. He so arranged the provisions of the will and codicil that there could be no intestacy of his estate. We think that a careful study of Col. Rion's will will show that he intended his wife to receive a life estate, but that the residuary estate vested at his death in his seven children, one share to each, and one-half of one share in his grandson Kitt Rion-McMaster. This half share of his grandson Kitt is devised under the codicil. In Williams v. Holmes, 4 Rich. Eq. 475, the court holds that: "Where an estate is devised to one for life, with remainder to such persons as the tenant for life or any other appointor shall direct and appoint, and, in default of such appointment, to a person or class of persons in esse, the remainder is vested notwithstanding the interposition of the power. The estate is vested in the remaindermen, subject to be divested by the execution of the power." These views are sustained by the cases of Bilderback v. Boyce, 14 S. C. 528; Atkinson v. Dowling, 33 S. C. 424, 12 S. E. 93; Bently v. Long, 1 Strob. Eq. 43, 47 Am. Dec. 523. As we have just held that there was no intestacy as to any property left by Col. Rion at his death, and thus the statute of distributions plays no part in the distribution of his estate, it follows of necessity that the provisions of the will itself must regulate the settlement of the shares therein. Each child must receive a full share and the grandson can only take one-half of one share. Of course, we mean when we say each child must receive a full share that such share of each child must be under the limitations and restrictions of the will. Thus Preston's share goes to his wife and children, and that of Mrs. Barron under the restrictions and limitations of the will, and Kitt Rion-McMaster must have one-half of one full share. The decree is erroneous when it orders a full share paid to the grandson Kitt Rion-McMaster, and must be corrected as herein provided.

It is the judgment of this court that the decree of the circuit court herein shall be modified as herein required, and after it shall have been so modified that it stand affirmed.

(68 S. C. 297)

LENHARDT et al. v. FRENCH.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 24, 1904.)

PLEADINGS—ANSWER—MOTION TO STRIKE.

1. Cir. Ct. Rule 20, which provides that a motion to strike out of any pleading matter alleged to be irrelevant, and a motion to correct pleadings as indefinite, must be noticed before demurring to or answering the pleadings, and within 20 days from service thereof, has no application to an answer; and a motion to strike out part of an answer is not too late, when made after six terms and two mistrials, on submitting an argument on a similar motion to a judge, who did not formally pass thereon, but refused to permit defendant to offer any testimony on the second defense in the answer, which second defense was thereafter, on motion, stricken from the answer.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by Richard Lenhardt and W. B. Perry against Jesse L. French. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following are the exceptions:

"The circuit judge erred in striking out the second paragraph of defendant's second defense to plaintiffs' alleged cause of action, for the following reasons:

"(1) The motion to strike out being made upon the ground that the allegations in said paragraph were irrelevant, the said motion should have been made within twenty days after the service of the said answer, under rule 20 of the circuit court.

"(2) His honor erred in holding that 'I do not construe the rule of court as requiring a motion of this kind to be made within twenty days after the service of the answer. Such requirement applies to demurring to or answering a complaint.' It being respectfully submitted that, under said rule 20 of the circuit court, motions to strike out of any pleading matter alleged to be irrelevant must be noticed within twenty days from the service thereof.

"(3) Because his honor erred in not holding that plaintiffs, by failing to give notice of the motion to strike out within twenty days from the service of the answer, had waived the right to make such motion.

"(4) Because his honor should have held that the motion having been made at a previous trial of the cause before Judge Watts, and he having heard the motion and allowed the case to go to trial without any formal order in the matter, such action amounted to a refusal of the motion, and was binding upon all succeeding circuit judges.

"(5) Because, the case having been upon the docket for six terms prior to this term, and having been tried three times before the notice of motion was given, the circuit judge should have held that the plaintiffs had waived their right to make such motion at such stage of the proceedings, and that the court had no power, under rule 20 of the circuit court, to grant the motion.

"(6) The circuit judge erred in holding that, 'inasmuch as there have been several mistrials, the result of the same has been just as though there had been no trial,' whereas he should have held that, several trials of the case having been had, the motion to strike out came too late, and that plaintiffs had waived their right to strike out any part of the said answer after having thrice gone to trial under its allegations.

"(7) Because, even if the circuit judge was correct in holding that the matters stated in said paragraph were irrelevant, yet, as plaintiffs had failed to move to strike out said paragraph at the proper time and in the proper way, defendant had the right to introduce testimony responsive to its allegations. The circuit judge erred, therefore, in striking out said paragraph, and refusing to allow defendant to introduce testimony responsive to the allegations of said paragraph."

Blythe & Blythe and B. M. Shuman, for appellant. Jos. A. McCullough, for respondents.

POPE, C. J. On the 20th day of February, 1890, the defendant Jesse L. French made his promissory note, whereby he promised, on the 1st day of October thereafter, to pay to A. J.

French the sum of $600, for value received, with interest at 8 per cent. On this note was endorsed on the back the payment of $100 on the 19th November, 1895. The complaint set up these facts, and demanded judgment for $600, less $100 paid on the 19th November, 1895, and interest at 8 per cent. per annum, and costs. The answer admitted the death of Mrs. A. J. French, that plaintiffs were legally appointed the administrators of her estate, and that he made the note as described in the complaint. However, he denied the payment of $100 on 19th November, 1895, or that he ever at any time made a payment of any sum whatsoever. As a second defense, he pleaded the statute of limitations, and in the second paragraph of said second defense he set out: "(2) That this defendant pleaded the statute of limitations all the more willingly because [Mrs. A. J. French] plaintiff's intestate had received from the estate of her husband, Jesse French, Senior, the grandfather of this defendant, at his death, which occurred in July, 1878, the sum of about $1,800, which had been bequeathed to this defendant by the said grandfather, and left with her to be turned over to the defendant at his majority (he being then a minor), and which she failed and refused to do, and that, in a former action on the note which is the subject of this action, the said sum of $1,800 was set up as a counterclaim by this defendant, and these plaintiffs pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations thereto, which said plea was sustained by the court, and said counterclaim disallowed and dismissed." This answer is dated 8th day of March, 1901. The case was placed on the docket at the March term, 1901, of the court, and continued on defendant's motion. At the July term, 1901, a trial was had, and, the jury failing to agree, a mistrial was ordered. At the November term, 1901, and the March term, 1902, the case was continued. At the July term, 1902, a mistrial was ordered, but at this trial, which was before Judge Watts, the plaintiffs made a motion to strike from the answer of the defendant subdivision 2 of the second defense. While Judge Watts did not formally pass upon this motion, he refused to permit the defendant to offer any testimony on this second subdivision of the second defense. The plaintiffs gave notice of a motion to strike from the answer this second subdivision of a second defense, which was heard by Judge Purdy, who granted the motion in an order reduced to writing, and the trial again was had, when the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs. The defendant made a motion before Judge Purdy for a new trial on the ground that the circuit judge erred in striking from the answer the second subdivision of the defense, for the reason that, the motion not having been made for a long time after the service of the answer, and after several trials had been had, the plaintiffs had waived their right to make the motion, and that the circuit judge had no power to grant the motion, under rule 20 of the circuit court. This motion was refused by Judge Purdy. After entry of judgment on the verdict, an appeal was taken on the ground of error in striking out the second paragraph of the second defense set out in defendant's answer. The plaintiffs gave notice that, if this court should find itself unable to sustain the rulings of Judge Purdy, Judge Purdy's ruling can be sustained, because rule 21 of the circuit court and the provisions of the Code as to redundant and irrelevant matter in the pleadings refer only to redundant and irrelevant facts; that inasmuch as the matter stricken out by Judge Purdy did not contain a statement of fact, but purports to give a reason of the defendant's pleading the statute of limitations, said rule of court had no application thereto; that, in that event, the court was right in excluding testimony offered in support thereof, and the error, if any, was harmless. We will now pass upon the questions raised by the appellant.

Rule 20 of the circuit court does not, as it strikes us, govern in this matter. The language of that rule is as follows: "Motions to strike out of any pleadings matter alleged to be irrelevant or redundant, and motions to correct a pleading on the ground of its being 'so indefinite or uncertain that the precise nature of the charge or defense is not apparent,' must be noticed before demurring or answering the pleadings and within twenty days from the service thereof." Here this language shows that the object of the rule is to require any objection to the pleadings to be made before the pleading in reply to the same, so that the subsequent pleading may conform to the true condition of the pleading before answering or demurring—just as was held by this court in the case of Whaley v. Lawton, 53 S. C. 582, 31 S. E. 660. In the case just cited, an answer was delayed by agreement, but the notice was not given in the 20 days following the service of the complaint. In our judgment, the two cases of Cohrs v. Fraser, 5 S. C. 351, and Nichols v. Briggs, 18 S. C. 479, control this case, for in the case just cited (Cohrs v. Fraser, supra) the motion was not made for about seven months after the pleading against which the motion to strike out was made. Indeed, the court in that case held that this rule of court did not apply. So, also, in the second case (Nichols v. Briggs, supra) this court held that the motion could be made at the trial. Although several attempts at a trial were had, resulting in mistrials in the case at bar, what in law was the trial of the cause was that at which a verdict was rendered, and here the motion to strike out the irrelevant matter from the answer was made upon motion before the trial was begun. An inspection of alleged irrelevant matter set out in the second subdivision of the second defense of the answer was only an excuse or an apology for this matter in the answer. It could not affect the merits of the plea of the statute of limitations, which, upon the pleadings, depended upon the payment of $100 alleged to have been made in November, 1895.

We agree with the circuit judge when he passed his order striking out of the answer this subdivision 2 of the second defense, and also in refusing to grant a new trial on that account. This is the only ground of objection. No request for a continuance on the ground of surprise was made by the defendant in the court below.

The seven reasons of the appellant why the circuit judge was in error will appear in the report of the case, but, in the abundance of caution, we will examine each one:

(1) We have just held that rule 20 did not govern this case. So the reason fails.

(2) We have already held that the circuit judge committed no error in holding that rule 20 did not govern this appeal.

(3) So, also, if rule 20 did not govern this motion, the 20 days in such rule prescribed could not obtain.

(4) We do not construe Judge Watts' action on this motion, when submitted to him at a previous term of court, as a refusal of this motion. Neither side of the controversy called his attention to the fact that he had not ruled on the motion. But it is a very significant fact that Judge Watts refused to allow any testimony to be offered as to second subdivision of the second defense. This fact is admitted in the record.

(5) The fact of the action being kept on the docket of the circuit court for six terms, while this motion was not made, shows culpable delay on the part of the plaintiffs as to the notice of their motion, but did not destroy their right to make this motion before actual trial.

(6) We have just held that the circuit judge was not in error in holding that the right to this motion was not waived in not having presented it earlier.

(7) We do not conceive that the defendant appellant had any right to introduce testimony in support of this irrelevant matter which had been stricken from the answer.

Lastly, holding as we do, there is no necessity for us to resort to any other matters to support the judgment.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

(68 S. C. 304)

STATE v. McDANIEL.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 25, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—IMPEACHMENT—RES GESTÆ—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where, on trial for murder, the defense is accidental killing, the reputation of deceased when drinking is incompetent on issue of his violence when drunk.

2. On trial for the murder of a town marshal, it is competent to show, on cross-examination, differences between the town council and defendant about electing a marshal, in order to show the relation existing between the parties.

3. After evidence of contradictory statements by a witness, by way of impeachment, it is incompetent to show that he had made statements in accordance with his testimony at the trial.

4. Where, on trial for murder, there was evidence that deceased had hold of the pistol when he was shot, evidence in return that there were no powder burns on his hands is admissible.

5. The court will not reverse a ruling of the trial judge in excluding evidence of statements of accused made two or three minutes after the homicide and a short distance from the place of the crime, as not a part of the res gestæ.

6. On a trial for murder, an instruction that "if defendant intentionally, wrongfully, killed the deceased, without any justification or without excuse, then he killed him with malice, and that would constitute murder," is not a charge on the facts.

7. An instruction that if defendant wrongfully killed deceased, without justification, then it would constitute murder, properly defined the crime.

8. Where, on a trial for murder, defendant pleads accidental killing, the state must overcome such plea beyond all reasonable doubt.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Lexington County; Klugh, Judge.

R. W. McDaniel was convicted of murder, and appeals. Reversed.

Efird & Dreher, G. T. Graham, and Leroy F. Youmans, for appellant. J. Wm. Thurmond and W. H. Sharpe, for the State.

JONES, J. This case was first heard at the April term, 1903, of this court, but, an order for rehearing having been made, it was heard again at the present term. The defendant was tried at Lexington, February term, 1903, under an indictment for the murder of John L. Neece at Swansea, Lexington county, on the 24th day of December, 1902. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty, with recommendation to mercy, and sentence of life imprisonment was imposed, from which he now appeals upon exceptions to the court's rulings as to the admissibility of testimony and charge to the jury.

The first exception alleges error in not allowing the witness Hildebrand to testify as to the reputation of deceased for drinking, in that one issue raised by the defendant was that deceased was a violent and treacherous man when drinking, and that he was intoxicated at the time of the difficulty. The court did not restrict defendant in showing the reputation of the deceased for violence when drinking, and that deceased was drinking at the time of the difficulty. The reputation of the deceased for drunkenness was not relevant. In a prosecution for murder, evidence of the general bad character of the deceased is irrelevant, but evidence of his character or reputation for violence, treachery, etc., is admissible under a plea of self-defense. State v. Turner, 29 S. C. 34, 6 S. E. 891, 13 Am. St. Rep. 706. There was no plea of self-defense in this case. On the contrary, counsel for defendant expressly declared on trial that defendant did not plead self-defense, but pleaded homicide by accident.

A second exception assigns error in not allowing defendant to testify that he had received a message from the deceased concerning the discharge of blank cartridges within the corporate limits of the town on the day of the difficulty. The deceased was marshal of the town of Swansea, and it seems there was an ordinance of the town against the firing of guns within the corporate limits. The defendant kept a store in Swansea, and was celebrating Christmas Eve by firing several blank cartridges from a shotgun while standing in his store door. The homicide, whether intentional, as contended by the prosecution, or accidental, as contended by the defense, was the result of a struggle between the defendant and the deceased, growing out of the deceased's attempt to arrest defendant for the alleged unlawful shooting of the gun. The court ruled that defendant could not testify as to any message delivered by a third person, as coming from the deceased marshal, about shooting blank cartridges; but later, all objection being withdrawn, the defendant was permitted to testify fully as to the said message as received by him; and the bearer of the message, Joe Adams, testified as to the same, which was to the effect that the marshal permitted or did not object to the shooting of blank cartridges. The exception is therefore without foundation.

The third exception complains that there was error in allowing and compelling defendant to testify as to his action and that of the town council of Swansea in the election of a town marshal, in that said testimony showed a difference between the defendant and the town council—an entirely collateral issue, not competent in this case and prejudicial to the defendant. The solicitor, as it appears, was endeavoring, on the cross-examination of the defendant, to show that defendant had some ill will or unfriendliness to the deceased, by bringing out that defendant had tried to secure the election of another marshal at the time deceased was elected. The question propounded and admitted over defendant's objection was, "You tried to get in another marshal, did you?" The question was competent for the purpose of showing whether the relations of defendant and deceased were friendly.

The fourth exception charges error in refusing to allow defendant's witness Redmond to be asked on redirect examination whether his testimony at the coroner's inquest was to the same state of facts as his testimony on the trial. The solicitor had cross-examined the witness as to his statements in an affidavit used in an application for bail, with a view to show contradictory statements, and appellant contends that the testimony proposed was competent on redirect examination. It would doubtless be competent, after a witness has been cross-examined respecting a former statement made by him, for the party who called him to re-examine him as to the same statement, as in State v. Tur- ner, 36 S. C. 538, 15 E. E. 602; but, where evidence of contradictory statements by a witness is offered by way of impeaching the witness, it is not competent in reply to offer evidence that the witness has on other occasions made statements similar to what he has testified in the cause. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 469; 10 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 330; Davis v. Kirksey, 2 Rich. Law, 176; State v. Thomas, 3 Strob. 269. There is an exception to this general rule, making such testimony competent when it is charged that there is a design to misrepresent in consequence of the relation of the witness to the party or to the cause, by showing similar statements made before the relation existed. 10 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 330; State v. Thomas, 3 Strob. 269. This exception to the general rule is illustrated in Lyles v. Lyles, 1 Hill, Eq. 76, for in that case it was charged that the witness alleged to have made contradictory statements had been induced to testify as he did on the trial by hope or promise of money, and so it was competent to show in reply that the witness had been heard to make statements similar to his testimony at a time previous to the alleged improper relation to the cause. It does not appear that the present instance falls within the exception. There is no ground for a distinction in questions of this kind between testimony on re-examination after cross-examination of same witness and independent testimony. In the case of State v. Gilliam (S. C.) 45 S. E. 6, it was held it was not competent to corroborate the testimony of defendant's witness at the trial by showing that the witness made similar statements at the coroner's inquest.

The fifth exception imputes error in allowing W. R. Barra to testify that there were no powder burns on deceased's hands, because not in reply to any testimony offered by defendant. The defendant and one of his witnesses (Joe Adams) had testified that, when the pistol fired, both defendant and deceased had hold of it—the defendant by the stock, and the deceased by the barrel. The testimony that there were no powder burns on deceased's hands had some tendency to show that deceased did not have hold of the barrel of the pistol at the time it was fired, and thus was in reply to defendant's testimony.

The sixth exception alleges error in not allowing the witness Hildebrand to testify to the declaration of the defendant immediately after the shooting, and in holding that the same was not part of the res gestæ. The case shows the following in reference to this matter: "Q. Did he say anything about shooting being accidental? A. On the way to his house he did. Q. The Solicitor: Only just what occurred then? A. He asked me to go home. I said for him to go home, as I thought there would be some of Neece's friends— Q. Mr. Efrid: How far were you from the store when he told you this? A. We had just stepped out. Q. How long was it after shooting before you and he stepped out—how long between the shooting and the time you went out? A. It was not two minutes, I hardly think. He said: 'I will take your advice if you go with me. I will go if you go with me to my house.' And this was before we got to the house. Q. How far from the store to McDaniel's house is it? A. About one square—two or three hundred feet. The Court: I don't think that is part of the res gestæ." Hildebrand had previously testified that after the shooting he advised defendant that he had better go away to avoid further trouble—to go and tell his wife. The witness Johnson had testified that after the shooting he told defendant he had killed Neece, and that he had got his foot in it, and that defendant said, "No man put your hands on me;" that defendant inquired of Johnson and Hildebrand for the gun; and that Adams got the gun and gave it to defendant, who then went to his house. As stated in the case of State v. Belcher, 13 S. C. 468: "When the inquiry is as to a certain transaction, not only what was done but what was said by those present during the transaction is admissible for the purpose of explaining its character. * * * To make declarations a part of the res gestæ, they must be contemporaneous with the main fact—not, however, precisely concurrent in point of time. If they spring out of the transaction, elucidate it, and are made at a time so near to it as reasonably to preclude the idea of deliberate design, they are then regarded as contemporaneous." If the declarations are a mere narration of a past occurrence, they are not admissible as res gestæ. State v. Taylor, 56 S. C. 369, 34 S. E. 939. When the declarations are not precisely concurrent with the transaction, a delicate and complex question is presented to the trial judge, in determining their admissibility, and each case must be decided upon its own circumstances. In the nature of the case, there can be no hard and fast rule as to the precise time near an occurrence within which declarations explanatory thereof must be made, in order to be admissible. The general rule is that the declarations must be substantially contemporaneous with the litigated transaction, and be the instructive, spontaneous utterances of the mind while under the active, immediate influences of the transaction; the circumstances precluding the idea that the utterances are the result of reflection or design to make false or self-serving declarations. Accordingly, in State v. Arnold, 47 S. C. 13, 24 S. E. 928, 58 Am. St. Rep. 867, the court held admissible as res gestæ a statement, "Charlie shot me to death," made by a man shot in a doorway of a house from which he staggered some 30 yards and fell; the utterances being made a few minutes after the shooting, to the first persons who reached him in response to his cry for help. The declarations here in question were made probably within two or three minutes after the shooting, and within two or three hundred feet of the place of the shooting. These circumstances of time and place do not alone necessarily prevent a declaration from being part of the res gestæ, but they are factors, with other circumstances, in determining whether the declarations were the spontaneous utterances of the mind under the immediate influence of the transaction. It is to be remembered that it was in testimony that defendant did not declare that the shooting was accidental, when he saw that Neece had been shot and when Johnson told him that he had killed Neece, and that, on the contrary, the testimony tended to show that he forbade any one to put hands on him; that he had a conversation with Hildebrand as to the advisability of going home to avoid further trouble, and inquired and secured possession of his gun before leaving the store where the shooting took place. No doubt, the circuit court considered that these circumstances tended to indicate a mind which was not then being actively influenced by the transaction to make explanation thereof, but rather a mind adverting to means of future safety. Questions of this kind must be very largely left to the sound judicial discretion of the trial judge, who is compelled to view all the circumstances in reaching his conclusion, and this court will not reverse his ruling unless it clearly appears from undisputed circumstances in evidence that the testimony ought to have been admitted or rejected, as the case may be. Moreover, no harm arose to the defendant from the ruling, for the testimony quoted above shows that the witness was allowed to state that defendant, on the way to his house, did say something about the shooting being accidental.

The remaining exceptions relate to the charge, the seventh exception being as follows: "(7) His honor erred in charging the jury: 'In this case, if defendant intentionally, wrongfully, killed the deceased, without any justification or excuse, then he killed him with malice, and that would constitute murder.' Whereas (1) the killing of one person by another may have been intentional and wrongful, and yet the circumstances show that the killing was not more than manslaughter; (2) this was charging on the facts." It is very clear that this charge was not in respect to matters of fact, in violation of the Constitution, as it is based upon a hypothetical statement of facts. There is no significance in the use of the words "in this case," which was commented upon in argument. Every charge necessarily relates to the case in hand, whether the court uses such words or not. The first specification of this exception is based upon the view that the court, in the charge quoted, should have used words excluding the circumstances which extenuate an intentional homicide to manslaughter; that is, the charge should have been thus: "If the defendant intentionally, wrongfully, killed the deceased, without any justification or excuse or extenuation (as sudden heat and passion upon sufficient legal provocation), then he killed him with malice, and that would constitute murder." It must be noted here that the court was not attempting, in this part of the charge, to cover the law as to an intentional homicide upon sudden heat and passion, upon sufficient legal provocation. In another portion of the charge the law as to voluntary manslaughter was fully and correctly stated to the jury, and no exception has been taken thereto. The court here was instructing the jury with reference to murder, and malice as an essential ingredient. In the sentence just preceding the one excepted to, the court said: "In its general signification, 'malice' means the doing of a wrongful act intentionally, without justification or excuse." This is substantially the famous definition of "malice" by Bayley, J., in Bromage v. Proser, 10 E. C. L. 321: "'Malice', in common acceptation, means ill will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse." In State v. Doig, 2 Rich. Law, 182, our court said: "In law, 'malice' is a term of art, importing wickedness, and excluding a just cause or excuse." There can be no doubt, under the decisions in this state, that malice is presumed from an intentional killing, in the absence of facts and circumstances in evidence tending to show want of malice. State v. Hopkins, 15 S. C. 153; State v. Ariel, 38 S. C. 221, 16 S. E. 779; State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296; State v. Alexander, 30 S. C. 74, 8 S. E. 440, 14 Am. St. Rep. 879. But the court in this case left it to the jury to decide whether the killing was intentional, and whether malice was any justification or excuse, and in that event malice existed, and the killing would be murder. An intentional homicide, without any excuse, is certainly murder. The language "without any justification or excuse" not only excludes justifiable and excusable homicide, but homicide extenuated to manslaughter because done in sudden heat and passion upon sufficient legal provocation. It must not be supposed that the word "excuse" is only applicable to excusable homicide, as homicide in self-defense. In the early stages of the common law there was ground for distinction between justifiable and excusable homicide, when the accused was not entitled to an acquittal in case of excusable homicide, but upon special verdict was entitled to pardon; but now the distinction is of no practical importance, as in both cases the accused is entitled to an acquittal, and there is no penalty whatever attaching. It would therefore be wrong to hold that the word "excuse" was intended by the court or understood by the jury to be used in the absence of something which renders one wholly excusable or justifiable, but, on the contrary, it should be held to include also any legal extenuation of the offense charged. The dictionaries give as one definition of "excuse" "a plea offered in extenuation of a fault or neglect." Bouvier's Law Dictionary says: "This word presents two ideas, differing essentially from each other. In one case an excuse may be made in order to show that the party accused is not guilty; in another, by showing that, though guilty, he is less so than he appears to be." In the case of State v. Mason, 54 S. C. 240, 32 S. E. 357, the court sustained a charge to the effect that malice is implicated from an intentional killing, without justification or excuse.

The eighth exception complains of error in charging the jury in these words: "So, if you could suppose a case where it was evident that one person had intentionally killed another, and any other fact about it was evident or known, the law would imply malice from the intentional killing"—because no such presumption of malice arises where all the facts are brought out. In the opinion upon the former hearing of this case, we assumed from the context that the word "any," in the charge as above quoted in the exception, was a misprint for "no," and held, in accordance with State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 235, 7 S. E. 296, that, while the law presumes malice from the mere fact of an intentional killing, yet, when the facts attending the homicide are brought out, there is no room for the presumption, and the state must prove the malice from the facts and circumstances, without aid from the artificial presumption. In the application for rehearing, it was urged that the charge was printed in accordance with the "case" as agreed upon, and with the copy of the stenographic notes as furnished appellant. This court was so impressed with the impropriety of assuming of its own motion to correct the "case" as agreed upon, and the danger of injustice to litigants by establishing such a precedent, that it was induced by this circumstance, along with other circumstances, to grant a rehearing. By subsequent proceedings allowed at the instance of the solicitor, the "case" has been corrected by order of Judge Klugh, and it now appears regularly that the circuit judge used the word "no," instead of the word "any," in the charge to which exception was taken. So corrected, the charge is free from error, under the cases cited above on this subject.

The ninth exception is as follows: "(9) His honor erred in charging the jury: 'Now, in this case, if the facts and circumstances surrounding the homicide have been brought out before you, then you look to the facts and circumstances, and say whether they establish beyond a reasonable doubt the fact of malice on the part of the defendant in taking the life of the deceased; and, if so, then your verdict will be guilty of murder.' The error consists (1) in his honor assuming and in pressing on the minds of the jury that defendant had actually killed deceased, when, under the facts in the case, defendant contended that he had not fired the pistol which killed the deceased; (2) this was charging upon the facts." It is too clear for argument that this was not a charge upon the facts, and the following extract from the charge preceding the portion complained of shows that the exception, in its first specification, is also without foundation: "Now, in order for the state to convict a person of murder, where the plea is not guilty, as it is in this case, in the first instance, it is necessary for the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the material facts of the indictment. The state must therefore prove, first of all, that John Lee Neece is dead, that he came to his death at the hands of some person other than himself, and then must prove that this defendant killed him, and must prove that the killing was done with malice aforethought, whether the malice be express or implied malice. It is a matter for you to determine from the evidence in the case whether these facts are established beyond a reasonable doubt or not. If the state has proved the killing of the deceased by the defendant, then it becomes necessary for you to determine whether the killing was a malicious killing or not. Of course, if the state has not established the fact of the killing of the deceased by the defendant, the case falls to the ground there, and must result in a verdict of not guilty; but, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant killed the deceased, then the next inquiry is, was it done with malice aforethought?"

We next notice the eleventh exception, which assigns error "in refusing to charge defendant's second request, in that one issue raised by defendant, and which there was testimony tending to support, was that deceased attempted unlawfully to arrest defendant, and it was error not to instruct the jury as to full rights of defendant in resisting an illegal arrest." This exception fails to specify wherein the court failed to charge the law as to arrests. The jury were instructed at length on that subject, and no exception is taken to what the court said. The court refused to charge the defendant's second request on the ground that it was incoherent, in the form in which it was presented. The charge to the jury fully covered the right of the defendant to resist an illegal arrest, and we see no reversible error in refusing the request in the particular form presented.

The question which is deemed most serious is presented in the tenth exception, which imputes error in charging the jury that the plea of homicide by accident is an affirmative defense, which defendant must prove by the preponderance of the evidence. In this connection the court charged: "The defendant, in addition to the plea of not guilty, sets up the plea of accidental killing. Now, where a person comes into court, whether in a civil or criminal case, and sets up an affirmative defense—where he comes in and says that the charge against him would be true, but for certain facts which he relies upon—he must establish those facts by the preponderance of the evidence. The rule is the same in a criminal case as in a civil case, and, so far as a defendant is concerned, in a criminal case, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt its side of the case. The defendant is only required to prove by the preponderance of the evidence—which means the greater weight of evidence—the facts that he relies upon by way of excuse or justification. In this case, therefore, the defendant must establish the facts upon which the plea of accidental killing rests by the preponderance of the evidence, and, if he has established his plea of accidental killing to that extent, then he is entitled to a verdict of not guilty.

* * * He further charged: "So, if he has established his plea of accidental killing by the preponderance of the evidence, you must find a verdict of not guilty. If you have a reasonable doubt whether he has established the plea by the preponderance of the evidence, you must give him the benefit of the doubt, and find he has established it, and still find a verdict of not guilty. If he has failed to establish the plea of accidental homicide, then you disregard that plea, and determine, from his other plea of not guilty to the indictment, whether the state has established its case beyond a reasonable doubt or not; and, if it has not, you must give him the benefit of the reasonable doubt, and find a verdict of not guilty." Then finally the court charged: "So if you should conclude, in this case, that the defendant was resisting an unlawful arrest, or if you should conclude he was defending himself against unnecessary violence, and thus engaged in a lawful act, and that while so engaged he unintentionally, accidentally, took the life of the deceased, that would be an accidental homicide, or a homicide by misfortune, which the law will excuse. But if the defendant has failed to show that to your satisfaction by the preponderance of the evidence, then you, as a matter of course, will disregard that plea of accidental killing, and determine whether he is guilty of murder, manslaughter, or not guilty, upon the indictment and upon the plea of not guilty. Give the defendant the benefit of every reasonable doubt." We have been particular to reproduce all that the circuit court charged in this connection. This charge was given by the court upon being advised by defendant's counsel that defendant pleaded homicide by misadventure or accident. We are not content with the conclusion which we reached in this opinion on the first hearing of this case, in overruling this exception. The rule has been established in this state that, where self-defense is pleaded to an indictment, the defendant must establish it by the preponderance of the evidence, but at the same time the guilt of the accused must be made to appear beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Welsh, 29 S. C. 4, 6 S. E. 894; State v. Bodie, 83 S. C. 132, 11 S. E. 624. Whether such a rule, as applied to self-defense, is sound or practically useful, we need not now inquire. If there is no distinction between self-defense and homicide by accident, when set up by plea and evidence, then, unquestionably, the circuit court charged the jury correctly, as he charged in accordance with the law as laid down in repeated decisions concerning self-defense as an affirmative defense. But we do not think that a defense that the homicide was accidental is in any sense an affirmative defense. It is distinguishable from self-defense as a plea, which admits an intentional killing, and sets up as justification a necessity to kill in order to save the accused from death or serious bodily harm, whereas a defense of homicide by accident denies that the killing was intentional. In Commonwealth v. McKie, 1 Gray, 61, 61 Am. Dec. 410, the logical rule is thus stated: "Where the defendant sets up no separate independent fact in answer to a criminal charge, but confines his defense to the original transaction charged as criminal, with its accompanying circumstances, the burden of proof does not change, but remains on the government to satisfy the jury that the act was unjustifiable and unlawful." In the case of State v. Cross (W. Va.) 24 S. E. 906, the court held that the defense of accidental killing is a denial of the criminal intent, and throws upon the state the burden of proving such intent beyond a reasonable doubt, and the accused is not required to sustain such defense by a preponderance of testimony. It was error, therefore, to instruct the jury to disregard the plea of accidental homicide if the defendant failed to establish it by the preponderance of the evidence. It is true, the charge did finally impose upon the state the duty of establishing the charge beyond a reasonable doubt, but it will be observed that this last instruction was conditioned on defendant's failure to establish an accidental killing by the preponderance of the evidence. The error consisted in charging that the burden of proof had shifted to the defendant at all on the question whether the killing was accidental. For this material error, in an otherwise exceedingly clear and able charge, the judgment must be reversed.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(68 S. C. 276)

STATE v. LINDSEY et al.

(supreme Court of South Carolina. March 24, 1904.)

CRIMINAL. LAW — EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where declarations are not precisely concurrent with a transaction, their admissibility is in the sound discretion of the trial court.

2. On trial for assault and battery, where the charge assumes that the defendants were claiming to act in self-defense, or under the apprehension that they were acting in self-defense, whereas defendants were contending in evidence that they did not strike any blow at all, the instruction was erroneous, as on the weight of evidence.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Spartanburg County; Aldrich, Judge.

Thomas Lindsey and Asberry Lindsey were convicted of assault and battery, and appeal. Reversed.

Mr. McCravy and Hunt Bros., for appellants. T. S. Sease, for the State.

JONES, J. The defendants were tried before Judge Aldrich and a jury at January, 1903, court of general sessions for Spartanburg county, on the charge of assault and battery, with intent to kill, upon W. D. Howard, and were convicted of assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature, and sentenced. They appeal upon exceptions to the rulings of the court as to admissibility of testimony and to the instructions to the jury.

The first, second, and third exceptions raise the question whether the excluded testimony came within the res gestæ. The witness C. B. Amans was asked by the defendants' counsel whether he heard Mrs. Howard say anything when they started to carry W. D. Howard into the house. It appears that W. D. Howard was unconscious, having been stricken on the head by a rock alleged to have been thrown by one of the defendants, and was being carried into the house, near by, a short time after the injury. The solicitor objected to the testimony on the ground that no foundation had been laid by asking Mrs. Howard, when on the stand, whether she had said so and so, and the objection was sustained. It was not suggested to the court by any one that the testimony was admissible as part of the res gestæ. If the purpose of the testimony was to contradict Mrs. Howard, the ruling was certainly correct. But it is now contended that the evidence was admissible as res gestæ. If we must assume that the circuit court considered this question, then there is nothing in the "case" to show any abuse of discretion. In ruling upon the question whether any particular testimony is admissible as res gestæ, the circuit court must necessarily view all the circumstances, and decide in the first instance whether the circumstances were such as to bring the testimony within the rule. This subject has been very recently considered in the case of State v. McDaniel, 47 S. E. 884, where the court said: "Where the declarations are not precisely concurrent with the transaction, a delicate and complex question is presented to the trial judge in determining their admissibility, and each case must be decided upon its own circumstances. In the nature of the case, there can be no hard and fast rule as to the precise time, near an occurrence, within which declarations explanatory thereof must be made, in order to be admissible. The general rule is that the declaration must be substantially contemporaneous with the litigated transaction, and be the instinctive, spontaneous utterances of the mind while under the active influences of the transaction; the circumstances precluding the idea that the utterances are the result of reflection or design to make false or self-serving declarations." The court further said that "questions of this kind must be largely left to the sound judicial discretion of the trial judge, who is compelled to view all the circumstances in reaching his conclusion, and this court will not review his ruling unless it clearly appears from the undisputed circumstances in evidence that the testimony ought to have been admitted or rejected, as the case may be." For the reasons stated above, we must overrule these exceptions.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth exceptions complain of the charge to the jury, but the points made are fully presented in the sixth exception, which is as follows: "(6) Because his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If the state has failed to prove either of these charges against the defendants, and they acting in self-defense, if it is proven that they acted in self-defense, then your verdict will be not guilty,' in that this part of the charge, in connection with the following: 'The defendants here have pleaded "Not guilty." Now as to self-defense. Self-defense comes to a man or men when they are, at the time of the encounter or difficulty, without fault in bringing about the trouble, and they are assaulted, or there is danger to their lives or persons, which is then and there pending. Then, if the defendant or defendants, being impressed with this apprehension of danger to their lives or persons, honestly believing it was necessary, in order to protect their lives or persons, to resort to force to repel the attack, and, so believing, do inflict punishment or injury upon the party assaulting them, that would be the first element of self-defense. The second is believing that a man of ordinary sense, discretion, would, under the circumstances shown by the testimony in this case, feel justifiable or excusable in forming the opinion which the testimony shows the defendants formed, or the understanding on which they acted, and acting as they did in self-defense. If so, then if an ordinary man would have done as these defendants did under the apprehensions that they were acting in self-defense, then they have made out their case. If the average man would not have believed it was necessary for him to resort to force, then they have failed to make out a plea of self-defense'—was charged on the facts, and, by so doing, directed the jury that, unless the defendants made out their plea of self-defense, they would have to find them guilty, when, as a matter of fact, their only plea was an alibi." In addition to their plea of not guilty, defendants set up an alibi, and there was some testimony tending to show that they, while near, did not strike the blow. The defendants offered no testimony whatever tending to show self-defense, but there were some circumstances which came out in the testimony for the state (that W. D. Howard and Thomas Lindsey had quarreled a short while before, and that, at the time of receiving the blow on the head by a rock, Howard was advancing towards Thomas Lindsey with a knife in his hand) which made it not improper for the court to instruct the jury as to the law of self-defense. But in charging the language quoted, we think he charged in respect to the facts. The charge assumes that the defendants were claiming to act in self-defense, and did something under the apprehension that they were acting in self-defense, whereas defendants were contending in evidence that they did not strike any blow at all; that they were standing some distance away, talking to Mrs. Smith, when Howard was struck by some one else. Of course, the evidence for the state combated this view, but the jury were the sole judges of the force of the testimony.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(63 S. C. 279)

KINARD v. PROCTOR et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 24, 1904.)

INFANTS—SALE OF PROPERTY BY MOTHER—RATIFICATION—EXCEPTIONS.

1. Where a mother executes for a minor a deed, several months before his majority, to lands which she had conveyed to him and in which she has a life interest, and he receives the purchase money as her agent, and she gives him a part, which he retains, in an action brought 14 years after obtaining his majority he will be held to have ratified the action of his mother.

2. An exception alleging errors in overruling findings and conclusion of master is too general to be considered.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenwood County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Julia V. Kinard against Susan Proctor and J. A. Proctor. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. S. F. Giles, for appellants. Sheppards & Grier, for respondent.

POPE, O. J. This action was commenced on the 4th day of August, 1902, for the purpose of restraining and enjoining the defendant J. A. Proctor from cutting down and destroying the growing wood and timber and committing waste on a tract of land containing 135 acres, being situate in the now county of Greenwood (in the year 1889 being in Edgefield county), in the state aforesaid. In the complaint the plaintiff asserts that the defendant Susan Proctor owned in fee all of said land, but that in October, 1889, the said Susan Proctor, of her own motion, divided out amongst her children said lands, giving to each one of said children her deed of conveyance to said lands, but in each deed reserved to herself a life estate in all of said lands. That the plaintiff has purchased all of said lands (135 acres), but subject to the life estate of the said Susan Proctor. That upon the death of the said Susan Proctor the plaintiff will be entitled to the possession of said lands. That the defendant J. A. Proctor, claiming to act under the authority of the said life tenant (Susan Proctor) is now engaged in cutting down and destroying the growing timber on said lands, for the purpose of marketing the same for his own pecuniary advantage, to the great damage of said lands and of this plaintiff. That he has already cut down a considerable quantity of the growing timber, and is threatening to remove and sell the same for his own use, and threatens to continue to do so. That the defendants are entirely unable to respond to a judgment for damages if recovered against them, and could not be made to account for the damage done and threatened, and, unless the court restrains and enjoins them in the acts herein complained of, plaintiff will suffer great and irreparable injury. That plaintiff has requested said defendants to discontinue the cutting down of said timber, but they refused to do so, and she has forbidden the removal of the timber cut down, but they threaten to disregard her in the premises, etc. The defendants, by their joint answer, deny some of the allegations of the complaint, and in a general defense they admit that Susan Proctor, on the 8th of October, 1889, did divide the 135 acres among her eight children, giving a deed to the portion assigned to each child, reserving a life estate in the whole tract of 135 acres, and they admit that the plaintiff has received deeds for all the parcels of land allotted, except the defendants, J. A. Proctor and G. E. Proctor, and some others. In articles 5 and 6 of the answer it is stated as follows:

"(5) That some time thereafter the husband of the plaintiff, C. L. Kinard, now deceased, applied to the defendant Susan Proctor to buy for his wife, the plaintiff herein, the tract of land owned by the said G. E. Proctor, and was told by the defendant Susan Proctor that the same was owned by the said G. E. Proctor, and that he was under age; that the said C. L. Kinard insisted on taking a conveyance from the said Susan Proctor, and told her that it would be all right for her to convey the same to him, provided she surrendered the deed already executed to the said G. E. Proctor, which had not been recorded, and she consented to do so, and did execute to the wife of the said C. L. Kinard a deed prepared by him, or some one for him, purporting to convey a fee-simple title to the plaintiff herein, reserving to herself a life estate in said land, which she had already conveyed to her said son, G. E. Proctor.

"(6) That the said conveyance by the defendant Susan Proctor to the plaintiff was null and void, and conveyed to her no interest in the said tract of land."

It was also claimed in said answer that the timber cut by the defendant J. A. Proctor was cut from the tract of 20 or 24 acres which Mrs. Susan Proctor had conveyed to her son, G. E. Proctor, on 8th October, 1889, by the consent of said G. E. Proctor. His honor Judge Watts granted an order restraining the defendant J. A. Proctor from cutting down and selling timber until the further order of court. By consent of all parties, all the issues of law and fact were referred to W. J. Moore, Esq., as master for Greenwood county. He took all the testimony and made his report to the court, having decided all the issues of law and fact in favor of the defendants. Exceptions were duly presented to said report, and the exceptions came on to be heard before his honor C. G. Dantzler, together with the pleadings and the testimony. After a full argument, he reversed the report of the master in the following decree:

"This is an action instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants above named, to enjoin the said defendants from committing waste on the lands described in the complaint. It appears that Mrs. Susan Proctor, one of the defendants, received, as her distributive share in the estate of her husband, a certain tract of land containing one hundred and thirty-five (135) acres, more or less, situate in what is now Greenwood county, then the county of Edgefield, in the state of South Carolina. That Mrs. Proctor, who was the mother of several children, divided this tract of land between her said children, and gave to each a deed to the portion of the lands which she had set apart to each in fee, reserving for herself, in each instance, a life estate. It appears further that, after this, the children executed deeds conveying their interest in fee in remainder to the plaintiff, Mrs. Julia V. Kinard, full consideration being paid. J. A. Proctor, one of the defendants, it seems, was in possession of the lands under the authority of the life tenant, Susan Proctor. It is alleged in the complaint, and the testimony shows, that J. A. Proctor has been engaged in cutting down growing timber on the lands, for the purpose of selling the same and for his own pecuniary advantage, to the great damage of the lands; that he has cut down already the greater portion of the timber, and has removed a considerable part of it, and sold some of it, and claims the right to cut timber from any portion of the lands. It appears that he has built a house for himself on a tract of land which he owns, and which joins the lands in question, largely from the timber cut from the lands described in the complaint, of which the plaintiff is the owner in fee, subject to the life estate of Mrs. Susan Proctor. It further appears that the principal value of the lands is the timber thereon, and the cutting down of the same greatly depreciates the value and the interest of plaintiff therein. It also appears that the defendant J. A. Proctor threatens to continue his conduct in the particulars herein stated, and refuses to stop, although requested by Mrs. Kinard on several occasions before suit was instituted to desist. The matter came on to be heard before me in open court at Greenwood, S. C., on the 14th day of August, 1903, on the report of the master, the testimony taken, and the pleadings and the exceptions to the master's report on behalf of the plaintiff. No exceptions on behalf of defendants.

"The question was fully argued by counsel representing both plaintiff and defendants. The contention of the defendants, as I gather from the answer filed, and from the argument of counsel representing defendants, is that G. E. Proctor, also called Eli Proctor, was under age at the date he received the deed from his mother to his portion of the lands, the date of which deed is October 8, 1889, and conveyed to him a tract of land of about 20 acres, reserving a life estate in Mrs. Susan Proctor; and it is contended in argument, and alleged in the answer, that all of the wood and timber cut by the said J. A. Proctor was from his 20-acre tract, known as the G. E. Proctor or Eli Proctor tract, and that no timber or wood has been cut from any other portion of those lands by either of the defendants; that Mrs. Kinard, the plaintiff, is not the owner of this particular 20-acre tract; and it is alleged in paragraph 5 of the answer that the husband of the plaintiff, now dead, applied to Susan Proctor to buy for his wife, the plaintiff, this tract of land, and was told by the said Susan Proctor that the land was owned by her son, G. E. Proctor, who was under age; that thereupon Kinard insisted in taking a conveyance from Mrs. Proctor, and told her that it would be all right for her to convey the land to him, provided she surrendered the deed which she had already executed to her son, G. E. Proctor, which was not recorded, and that she consented to do so, and did execute such deed to Mrs. Kinard, reserving to herself a life estate; and in paragraph 6 of said answer it is alleged that this deed was null and void, and conveyed no interest in the said tract of land.

"In this connection it is sufficient to say here that there is no testimony to support the allegations of paragraph 5 of the said answer. G. E. Proctor himself, in his testimony, gives quite a different version of this transaction. The testimony of Mr. B. B. Kinard, which comes up without exception on part of defendants, shows that plaintiff's husband, some 14 years ago, during his lifetime, bought this identical tract of land from Eli Proctor, and says he saw him pay Eli Proctor, also called G. E. Proctor, the purchase money for this 20-acre tract, but don't remember the exact amount, and says that before this transaction his brother had previously bought the land from Eli's mother; that his mother said that Eli had to have some money to go on, and the only way to get it was from this land; and that Eli was present when this conversation took place. The plaintiff, Mrs. Kinard, says, without objection, that she is the owner of this land, and that she has a plat to it, and a deed executed by G. E. Proctor, which was executed a few years before her husband's death, which deed she says she could not find after search for it, and that the purchase price was paid to G. E. Proctor. These seem to be reputable witnesses of character and standing in their community. In this connection, Mr. G. E. Proctor says that he never made a deed to the 20-acre tract of land to Mrs. Kinard, and that he gave his brother permission some two years ago to cut timber on this tract of land. He admits signing the receipt introduced in evidence, which he signed 'G. E. Proctor, agent for Susan Proctor,' and which recites that $125 has been paid in full for the purchase price of this 20 acres of land. On his cross-examination, Mr. Proctor says that this money was paid for the 20-acre tract; that it was paid to him for his mother, and that he doesn't know whether his mother was present or not when he received the money from Mrs. Kinard; and that his mother at that time made Mrs. Kinard a deed to the 20 acres of land, and that he knew at that time what the money was being paid for.

"Take the view of the case as presented by the testimony of G. E. Proctor, and it seems to me, upon that alone, without reference to the other testimony in the case, that defendants' contention must fall. At the date of this transaction G. E. Proctor was almost 21 years old. He knew that his mother was conveying his interest in the land to Mrs. Kinard; he knew that Mrs. Kinard believed that she was buying his interest in this land, and that she was paying for this interest the sum of $125. It was for his benefit that the sale was being made; this he does not deny. He admits that he knew he had an interest in the land in fee, and admits that he knew that this was the interest which his mother by her deed undertook to convey to Mrs. Kinard. His mother was not present when the money was paid, but Mr. Proctor receives this money in his own hands, and himself signs a receipt therefor, styling himself 'Agent' for his mother in this receipt. He further says that he gave the money voluntarily to his mother, and received a part of it—how much does not appear—for himself. He has never returned or offered to return any part of this money. It does not appear what disposition was made of it—whether he invested it in other property or what. Very soon after this he reaches his majority, and for almost 14 years he has never made any complaint or brought into question in any way the transaction. It is only after suit is brought that he, for the first time in all these years, brings the matter into question. If these facts be true—and Mr. Proctor himself says that this is the case—it seems clear that he should not now be heard to complain. If G. E. Proctor did not mean, in accepting a part of the purchase money of this tract of land from his mother, and at the hands of Mrs. Kinard, to confirm the acts of his mother, he intended and meant to commit a fraud on Mrs. Kinard, which this court will not sanction or permit. Mr. Proctor, by his acquiescence in this transaction for nearly 14 years after coming of age, and his accepting a part of the purchase money and retaining the same, ratifies and confirms the sale. G. E. Proctor, on reaching his majority, had the right to avoid this transaction. It was not void, but only voidable. In the very nature of things, an act which is only voidable, strictly speaking, needs no confirmation, but it stands good until it is avoided, and, where there is an effort made to avoid an act, it is important to see whether there has been confirmation. If there had been confirmation, then the matter has passed beyond the power of the party to avoid it. Ihley v. Padgett, 27 S. C. 302, 3 S. E. 468.

"In the case of Norris v. Vance, 3 Rich. Law, 164, cited with approval in the case of Ihley v. Padgett, supra, it is held that there may be confirmation of an infant's act in either of three ways: 'There must be, after he has attained his majority, with full knowledge of his rights, (1) acquiescence from which assent may be fairly inferred, (2) an adequate benefit enjoyed, which has grown directly or indirectly out of the contract, or (3) some direct or expressed assent.' The case at bar falls under the first two classifications. There has been an adequate benefit enjoyed, growing directly out of the contract of sale, and, in addition thereto, acquiescence for nearly 14 years. In the case of Belton v. Briggs, 4 Desaus. 471, the court held that Briggs, although a minor, was bound by a sale made of his interest in a tract of land by his mother and two brothers, which was made with his knowledge and approbation. In the case at bar, if we take the testimony of G. E. Proctor only, it appears that he also knew what was being done, and, like Briggs, it was done with his approbation and approval. Here, if his testimony only is taken, his mother undertook to act for him, and, as did the mother of Briggs, he received a part of the purchase money from his mother, and all of it at the hand of Mrs. Kinard, his mother not being present. With full knowledge of the whole transaction, he remains silent thereafter, and after his majority for 14 years, when he undertakes for the first time in this suit to question the transaction. To permit him to do so would be unconscionable, and assist him in perpetrating a fraud on the plaintiff.

While infants should be protected from the consequences of their inexperience and immaturity of judgment, a court should not forget that their protection does not require the overriding of the legal rights of persons who have dealt with them in good faith. If, on reaching his majority, G. E. Proctor had refused to be bound by this transaction, had shown a disposition to avoid the same on account of his alleged minority, a different question would have been presented. This was his right, and, with full knowledge of his rights, he chose to affirm and certify what was done. It is therefore as binding on him after ratification and confirmation as on any one else, and, by reason of his so ratifying and confirming what was done, it is now beyond his power, and at this late date, to bring it into question.

"I hold that Mrs. Kinard, from all the testimony submitted, is the owner of this 20-acre tract in fee, subject to the life estate of Mrs. Proctor.

"I further hold that the testimony shows clearly that J. A. Proctor has been cutting wood and timber promiscuously from all parts of the land described in the complaint, asserting a right to do so, and threatening to continue. Mrs. Kinard, as the owner in fee in remainder, is entitled to the protection of the court to prevent the denuding this land of the growing timber.

"It is therefore the judgment of the court that the exceptions to the report of the master be, and are hereby, sustained, and the master's report reversed, overruled, and set aside.

"It is further ordered and adjudged that plaintiff is entitled to the relief set out in her prayer herein, and that the said defendants, and each of them, be, and hereby are, perpetually enjoined and restrained from committing any acts of waste on the premises described in the said complaint, and from cutting down and removing the timber from said premises."

Thereupon, the defendant appealed from said decree upon the following exceptions: "(1) It was error in the circuit judge to overrule the findings of fact of the master, and to find independently as to fact, viz.: 'It is alleged in the complaint, and the testimony shows, that J. A. Proctor had been engaged in cutting down growing timber on the lands, for the purpose of selling the same, and for his own pecuniary advantage, to the great damage of the lands; that he has cut down already the greater portion of the timber, and has removed a considerable portion of it, and sold some of it, and claims the right to cut timber from any portion of the lands.' (2) It was error to find as an independent fact, overruling the master: 'It further appears that the principal value of the land is the timber thereon, and the cutting down of the same greatly depreciates the value and interest of the plaintiff therein.'

It is respectfully submitted that the evidence shows that there was very little timber on the land, and that the land was worth more cleared than with the timber on it. (3) It was error to hold as a fact that G. E. Proctor, or Eli Proctor, acquiesced and consented to the conveyance by his mother to Mrs. Kinard on the 31st of October, 1889, and received a part of the consideration, when on the 8th day of November, 1889, he receipted for the purchase money paid to his mother, through him as her agent; and it was error to hold that 'very soon after this he reached his majority, and for almost fourteen years he has never made any complaint or brought into question in any way the transaction. It is only after suit is brought that he, for the first time in all these years, brings the matter into question.' It is respectfully submitted that G. E. Proctor, or Eli Proctor, has not now brought the matter into question; he is not a party to this suit, and the question of title only arises collaterally, the defendant, J. A. Proctor, claiming to act under the authority of G. E. or Eli Proctor in cutting wood on the land. (4) It was error to hold that G. E. or Eli Proctor made a complete ratification and confirmation of the deed of Susan Proctor, his mother, to Mrs. Kinard, by receiving from Mrs. Kinard the purchase money, $125, for his mother, as her agent, and receipting for the same by himself as agent for his mother, and then receiving a part of the money as a gift from his mother. (5) It was error to hold that G. E. or Eli Proctor acquiesced for 14 years in this transaction, when the record shows that Mrs. Proctor, the life tenant, has always been in possession of the said tract of land, and that Mrs. Kinard is not now in possession, has never been in possession, and has never set up any claim to this land until this suit was brought. (6) It was error to hold that there was no testimony to support the allegations of paragraph 5 of the answer, thereby overruling the findings of fact of the master. (7) It was error to hold that Mrs. Kinard is the owner of the 20-acre tract of land in fee, subject to the life estate of Mrs. Proctor, but he should have sustained the findings and conclusions of the master in regard to the same, and held that G. E. Proctor or Eli Proctor was the owner in fee of the said tract of land, subject to the life estate of his mother. (8) It was error in the circuit judge to overrule the findings of fact and conclusions of the master, but he should have confirmed the same in all particulars."

We will now pass upon the exceptions in their order.

1. An examination of the testimony fails to support this exception. Certainly his (J. A. Proctor) own testimony, to a large extent, supports this finding of fact, for he admits that, under the permission of his brother, G. E. Proctor, he did cut timber, and also that he sold some himself and through others. Much timber has already been cut, and, until the arm of the law reached out to stop him, he claimed the right to cut this timber on any part of the land. This exception is overruled.

2. It accords with common sense that the original forest, and even the second growth, adds much to the value of lands in such a county as Greenwood. Whatever value attaches to this timber belongs to the owner in fee. This exception is overruled.

3. So far as this third exception is concerned, it may be remarked that, although G. E. Proctor is not a formal party to this action, his brother, J. A. Proctor, who is a party, bases his right to cut timber on the lands—20 acres—which Susan Proctor conveyed to him, G. E. Proctor, on the 31st October, 1889, upon the express authority of said G. E. Proctor, and that both parties (J. A. and G. E.) so testify. It becomes necessary to answer this testimony by showing that, although Mrs. Susan Proctor did execute a deed to G. E. Proctor on the 8th day of October, 1889, while G. E. Proctor was a minor, in his twenty-first year, yet that the deed was never recorded in the office of the register of mesne conveyances, and that on the 31st day of October, 1889, owing to the necessities of said G. E. Proctor, in his presence, with his full knowledge of his rights, for a full and valuable consideration (which consideration was paid, every dollar, into his hands and receipted for by him), Mrs. Susan Proctor conveyed said land to the plaintiff, which deed was placed on record in March, 1890, in the office of the register of mesne conveyances for Edgefield county, S. C., which at that date was the proper county in which such deed should have been recorded. All this was done a little more than four months before G. E. Proctor reached his majority. To show how completely G. E. Proctor so testified, we will reproduce this testimony, because, to our mind, as was the case with the circuit judge, it has a crushing effect upon the rights of said G. E. Proctor in this land, and destroys any right on his part to authorize J. A. Proctor or anybody else to destroy timber growing on this land. "G. E. Proctor, sworn, says: I am the G. E. Proctor spoken of in the testimony. Receipt shown me, that is my name signed to it. That money was received for my mother. Never got any money from Mrs. Kinard on account of that tract of land for myself, but I got a part of the money from my mother; my mother gave me some of it. I never made a deed to any one for this tract of land. I sold Mrs. Kinard another tract of land—123 acres. I knew the boundaries of the 20-acre tract. J. A. Proctor cut wood from that tract. I don't know that any wood was cut from any other tract. I live 15 miles from there. There was some stock timber on 20-acre tract. I gave my brother permission to cut this. My mother is 74 years old, and she lives with me. She is too feeble to come here to-day. Cross-examined: I signed this receipt for my mother. That money was paid for the 20-acre tract. It was paid to me for her; that is, the 20-acre tract, known as the 'Eli Proctor tract.' Don't know how much of the money she gave me. I don't know whether my mother was present or not when I received the money from Mrs. Kinard. My mother made Mrs. Kinard at that time a deed to the 20 acres. I knew what the money was being paid for. Redirect: I was born February 17, 1869. G. E. Proctor." While it is admitted that G. Eli Proctor lacked nearly four months of reaching his majority when this deed was executed to the plaintiff by Mrs. Susan Proctor, yet for more than 13 years he has remained silent, never in all that time returning, or offering to return, the purchase money, or seeking to upset the said deed. The authorities cited in the decree of the circuit judge are ample to bind the said G. Eli Proctor to the deed of conveyance made by his mother to the plaintiff. When a man can speak, and should speak, before another takes a step by which a claim to property is asserted in violation or disregard of his rights in said property, he shall ever afterwards hold his peace. It is true he was a minor, lacking a few months of his majority, yet he helped to consummate the sale of his lands, just as was done by a minor in the case of Ihley v. Padgett, 27 S. C. 300, 3 S. E. 468. This last-cited case is authority for the position that the life estate of his mother, Mrs. Susan Proctor, in these lands would not protect G. Eli Proctor from his failure to take steps, at some time within the 13 years after he had attained his majority, to vacate this deed. For the court inere said, at page 304, 27 S. C., page 470, 3 S. E.: "But it was urged that there was such obstacle [the mother's life estate]; that the plaintiff, being only a remainderman, had no right to claim actual possession of any portion of the Rice Hope Plantation until after the death of Mrs. Ihley, the life tenant, and, as a consequence, he could not make application to have his deed annulled until that time [1885], and, that being the case, it could not properly be said that he 'acquiesced' in that which it was out of his power to avoid. It may be that the death of the mother was the time at which the land was to be divided amongst the children. But we do not understand that the plaintiff was thereby precluded from making application to set aside his deed, signed, as alleged, when he 'was under age,' at any time after he attained his majority. The two matters in point of time are not necessarily identical. He had a salable interest in Rice Hope during the life of his mother, and, having conveyed that interest to Allen, we know of no reason why he could not have assailed the deed, executed when he was under age, at any time after he came of age, and that whether his mother was living or dead. In the view, that it was his intention to make that question, it was due to fair dealing to the purchaser and all concerned that it should have been made promptly after he attained his majority." This exception is overruled.

4. From the testimony it is clear that G. Eli Proctor made a complete ratification and confirmation of the deed in question to the plaintiff. This and the next (the fifth) are disposed of in our discussion of the third exception. Accordingly they are overruled.

6. We have carefully examined the testimony, and we fail to find any error in the finding of the circuit judge that there was no testimony in support of the fifth article of the answer. We have quoted it in full. Mrs. Susan Proctor was not examined as a witness, and she was the person with whom it was alleged that the agreement was made. G. Eli Proctor does not state any such agreement in his testimony. This exception is overruled.

7. From what we have already held, it is clear that the deed of Mrs. Susan Proctor to the plaintiff for the 20 acres belonging, in October, 1889, to G. Eli Proctor, ratified and confirmed by G. Eli Proctor, operates to carry the fee in the 20 acres of land to the plaintiff. This exception is overruled.

8. This exception is too general to require notice. It is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(68 S. C. 318)

STATE v. EDWARDS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 26, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INDICTMENT—DEMURRED—MOTION TO QUASH—MOTION IN ARREST—INSTRUCTIONS—HOMICIDE.

1. An objection to the act of a solicitor in noli prosequing a count in an indictment for murder, charging defendant with carrying concealed weapons, cannot be first raised on motion in arrest, but must be taken advantage of by demurrer or motion to quash, under Cr. Code, § 57.

2. Defendant does not waive his right to raise the question on motion in arrest, that the indictment was found by a grand jury illegally drawn, by pleading to the indictment and going to trial.

3. On trial for murder, where no issue was raised as to the right of a person to interfere when he sees a felony about to be committed, a charge on such right, if erroneous, is harmless as to defendant.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Greenville County; Dantzer, Judge.

James D. Edwards was convicted of murder, and appeals. Reversed.

Cothran, Dean & Cothran, for appellant. Julius B. Boggs, for the State.

JONES, J. The defendant, under an indictment for the murder of Frank Neeley, was found guilty, with recommendation to mercy, and was sentenced to life imprisonment in the penitentiary, from which he now appeals.

The first, second, and third exceptions allege error in overruling motion in arrest of judgment. This motion was based upon the grounds (1) that the jury law under which the grand jury, which found a true bill, was organized, is unconstitutional, null, and void, and that the defendant has therefore been convicted under a void indictment; (2) that the indictment, when it was handed to the jury, did not contain a count for carrying concealed weapons, as required by the Criminal Code. Judge Dantzer, who tried the case, refused the motion upon the ground that the same had not been made before the jury were charged with the trial of the case. It appears that the appellant was represented on said trial by counsel, but no objection was made to the indictment before trial or return of verdict.

We will first briefly notice the second objection above, which is the foundation of the third exception. An examination of the indictment, a copy of which is set out in the "case," shows that it did contain a special count for carrying concealed weapons, in conformity with section 131, Cr. Code, which provides: "In every indictment for murder * * * and in every case where a crime is charged to have been committed with a deadly weapon of the character specified in section 130, there shall be a special count in said indictment for carrying concealed weapons, and the jury shall be required to find a verdict on such special count." After the finding of a true bill on said indictment, the solicitor withdrew or nol. pross'd the charge of carrying concealed weapons. Whether the solicitor has the right to withdraw such special count, when he finds that it cannot be sustained, is not involved in this appeal. If the striking out of such special count rendered the indictment defective, as not in accordance with section 131, it was a defect apparent on the face of the indictment, and cannot be raised for the first time on motion in arrest of judgment. Section 57, Cr. Code, provides that "every objection to any indictment for any defect apparent on the face thereof shall be taken by demurrer or on motion to quash such indictment before the jury shall be sworn in and not afterwards."

The other objection is more serious. The "case" shows that during the month of January, 1901, the names of persons to serve as grand and petit jurors for that year were selected and put in the jury box, under act approved February 19, 1900, entitled "An act to amend sections 2236, 2237 of the General Statutes, relating to the drawing and term of service of jurors in the circuit courts of this state, and to validate the jury lists already prepared," and that, in accordance with the provisions thereof, the names of the required number of persons were thereafter drawn to serve as grand jurors for the county of Greenville during said year of 1901, and they were drawn, summoned, and impaneled in accordance with said act; that thereafter, at the May term, 1901, of the court of general sessions for Greenville county, the grand jury so drawn, summoned, and impaneled returned a true bill upon the indictment in this case. This act under which the grand jury was created was held unconstitutional in the case of State v. Queen, 62 S. C. 250, 40 S. E. 553. Const. art. 1, § 17, provides that "no person shall be held to answer for any crime, where the punishment exceeds a fine of $100 or imprisonment for thirty days with or without hard labor, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury of the county where the crime shall have been committed." It must follow that a conviction and sentence based upon an indictment by a void grand jury cannot stand, unless the defendant has waived his right by not interposing his objection in proper time. The case of State v. Falle, 43 S. C. 52, 20 S. E. 798, shows that the accused may waive his rights to insist upon a constitutional provision like the one quoted above by expressly waiving objection to amendment to an indictment without re-submission to a grand jury. We suppose there is no doubt that one may waive a statutory or unconstitutional provision for his benefit and protection, unless public policy requires its enforcement, but the intention to waive should clearly appear. Was the failure to interpose the objection as to the invalidity of the grand jury before plea to the merits or verdict a waiver of such objection? In answering this question properly, we must keep in mind that there is a broad distinction between want of power and a defective exercise of power; between objections which assail the validity of a grand jury as a body, and objections which merely go to a particular member of a grand jury; between what is absolutely void and what is merely irregular. There are a number of cases which hold that objections to the qualification of a particular grand juror come too late after plea of not guilty. State v. Blackledge, 7 Rich. Law, 327; State v. Rafe, 56 S. C. 379, 34 S. E. 680; State v. Boyd, 56 S. C. 384, 34 S. E. 661; State v. Berkeley, 64 S. C. 194, 41 S. E. 961. These irregularities in the venire, or in the drawing, summoning, or impaneling of grand jurors, are certainly waived if objection be not made before verdict. Civ. Code, § 2947; State v. Stephens, 11 S. C. 319; State v. Jeffcoat, 26 S. C. 114, 1 S. E. 440. But the objection here goes deeper. It does not assert a disqualification which affects only a member of a body otherwise lawful, nor a mere irregularity in doing which the law requires, which assumes power to act; but it goes to existence of the grand jury as a body, that it is void as such, and that its indictment is therefore a nullity. A writ of venire to grand or petit jurors is a part of the record of conviction, and, when it is void, the judgment will be arrested. State v. Dosier, 2 Speers, 211; State v. Williams, 1 Rich. Law, 188. Judgments were arrested in the cases of State v. Jennings, 15 Rich. Law, 42, and State v. Pratt, 15 Rich. Law, 47, because the petit jurors were so illegally drawn as not to constitute lawful bodies. So, also, in the case of State v. Harden, 2 Rich. Law, 533. In the case of State v. Turner, 63 S. C. 548, 41 S. E. 778, an appeal was sustained which assigned error in overruling a motion in arrest of judgment made upon the ground that the jury lists were illegally prepared, not having been drawn publicly, as required by the statute. In the case of State v. Garrett, 64 S. C. 250, 42 S. E. 108, this court set aside a conviction because the act authorizing the grand jury which found "True bill" was unconstitutional, and would be entirely conclusive of this question, but for the fact that a motion to quash the indictment on the same ground had been made. The correct rule is thus stated in Ex parte Wilson, 140 U. S. 575, 11 Sup. Ct. 870, 35 L. Ed. 513, declaring the effect of the decision in U. S. v. Gale, 109 U. S. 65, 3 Sup. Ct. 1, 27 L. Ed. 857: "A defect in the construction or organization of a grand jury which does not prevent the presence of twelve competent jurors, by whose votes the indictment is found, and which could have been cured if the attention of the court had been called to it at the time, or promptly remedied by the impaneling of a competent grand jury, is waived, if the defendant treats the indictment as sufficient, pleads 'Not guilty,' and goes to trial on the merits of the charge." In this case the grand jury was not a lawful body. Its indictment was a nullity and incurable. Therefore a plea of not guilty is not a waiver of such a fatal defect. The motion in arrest of judgment should have been sustained.

With respect to the exceptions which allege error in the charge in declaring the right of a person to interfere when he sees a felony is about to be committed, and in declaring the rights of a host to interfere for the protection of his guest, we have only to say the case as presented does not show any harmful error in these particulars. The defendant testified that he had shot Neeley to save his (defendant's) life, as Neeley was advancing on him with a knife, and his defense was on that line. We do not see how he could be prejudiced by a charge made with reference to the right to prevent the commission of a felony upon another, or the right of a host to protect his guest. It is true, the circuit court, at request of defendant's counsel, charged on the subject, and charged generally in accordance with defendant's request, but with some modifications. Whether the charge was in every respect accurate is not material to any issue raised by the evidence.

For error in not sustaining motion for new trial, and error of judgment as alleged in the first and second exceptions, the judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(135 N. C. 178)

MARTIN v. CLARK.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 26, 1904.)

COUNTY TREASURER—PAYMENT OF WARRANT ON SPECIAL FUND—MONEY DEMAND—MANDAMUS—SUMMONS—AMENDMENT.

1. Mandamus to compel a county treasurer to pay a warrant out of a specific fund is not an action to enforce a money demand, and the summons may be returnable before the judge at chambers, and not to the regular term.

2. Where the county commissioners have allowed a claim, and have issued a warrant for its payment by the county treasurer out of a specific fund, it is his duty to pay, if he has such funds applicable to the claim.

3. Where a summons was improperly made returnable before the judge at chambers, instead of to the regular term, the judge should not dismiss the action, but transfer it to the civil issue docket, making the necessary amendments therefor.

4. The issuance of an alternative mandamus to compel a county treasurer to pay a warrant, with an order to the treasurer to show cause why a peremptory writ should not issue, is not prejudicial to the treasurer, for, on his showing that he has no money applicable to the warrant, or that the warrant is in contravention of the Constitution, or any other lawful reason for not paying it, the peremptory writ will not be granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Montgomery County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by M. S. Martin against W. D. Clark. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. T. Poole, for appellant. W. A. Cochran, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. The commissioners of Montgomery county issued a warrant upon the treasurer for the sum of $600, payable to the plaintiff "on building bridge at Martin's mill to be paid out of the special tax funds." The order was presented to the treasurer, who refused to pay it. Thereupon the plaintiff began this action by issuing a summons returnable before the judge at chambers. In his complaint and in his reply to the defendant's answer the plaintiff alleges that the defendant treasurer has in his hands, subject to said warrant, an amount more than sufficient to pay the same. He asks that a mandamus issue, directing and commanding the defendant to pay said warrant. The defendant demurred to the complaint for that the plaintiff's alleged cause of action was a "money demand," and that the summons should have been returnable to the regular term. The court overruled the demurrer, and the defendant excepted. He thereupon filed an answer. The defendant moved in this court to dismiss the action for the same cause as that set out in his demurrer.

While the authorities are not entirely clear, we think the action was properly brought. The warrant or order directs the payment of a specific amount out of specific funds—"the special tax funds." The treasurer is a ministerial officer charged with the duty of holding the public funds, and paying them out on the warrant of the commissioners. This court, in answer to the same objection made in Bearden v. Fullam, 129 N. C. 477, 40 S. E. 204, said: "This is a proceeding, not to litigate a matter to obtain a judgment for money, not to ascertain the defendant's liability on an issue of whether he is indebted to the plaintiffs or not, but to compel a public officer to deposit public funds in his hands in a public depository. It is not a money demand in the sense in which that word is used in the statute." The commissioners having audited and allowed the claim, and having issued a warrant for its payment by the treasurer out of a specific fund, it is his duty to do so, provided he has such funds in his hands applicable to such claim. The law commits to the board of commissioners the power and duty of auditing and passing upon the validity of claims. If they refuse to audit or act upon a claim, mandamus will lie to compel them to do so. Bennett v. Commissioners, 125 N. C. 468, 34 S. E. 632. If, after the hearing, they refuse to allow or issue a warrant for its payment, an action will lie against the commissioners to establish the debt, and for such other relief as the party may be entitled to. Hughes v. Commissioners, 107 N. C. 598, 12 S. E. 465. If, however, the summons was improperly made returnable before the judge at chambers, he should not dismiss the action, but transfer it to the civil issue docket for trial; making such amendments to process and pleading as might be necessary. Ewhank v. Turner, 134 N. C. —, 46 S. E. 508. His honor properly ordered the alternative mandamus to issue, with the order to the defendant to show cause at the next term of the superior court why a peremptory writ should not issue. The judgment is but an order to show cause, and can do no possible harm to the defendant. If he shall show that he has no money in hand applicable to the order, or that the special tax is by law applicable to some other purposes, or any other good and lawful reason for not paying the warrant, the court will refuse the peremptory mandamus, and the plaintiff will proceed as he may be advised. It cannot be within the power or duty of the treasurer of the county to refuse to pay a county order issued by the board of commissioners because he does not think it a just or lawful claim, or for any other reason, which has been passed upon by the board, and within its power to act. It is different with the State Treasurer. He may refuse to pay a warrant of the auditor if it appear that the law under which it is issued is unconstitutional, or the claim not within the terms of the statute. Const. art. 14, § 3. If the county treasurer deem the warrant drawn in contravention of a constitutional provision or limitation, he should refuse to pay it. If the court should so adjudge upon the return to an alternative mandamus, no peremptory writ would issue.

The judgment is affirmed.

(135 N. C. 198)

FISHER v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 28, 1904.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD—ACCOUNTING BY GUARDIAN—WRONGFUL USE OF FUNDS—COMMISSIONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Where a guardian's answer in a suit for an accounting contained an admission that he had used the funds of his ward in his own business and for his own benefit, the introduction of evidence of an admission to the same effect, made by the guardian in a proceeding instituted for his removal, was harmless error.

2. Where, during a portion of the time covered by a guardianship, Code, § 3835, permitting 8 per cent. to be charged by a special contract, was in force, it was not error for the court to charge the guardian, who had wrongfully used the funds in his own business, interest at that rate, until the same was changed by statute, and at the highest legal rate thereafter.

3. Where, though a guardian wrongfully used his ward's money in his own business, he made regular returns of his acts under the guardianship throughout the whole period thereof, charging himself with 6 per cent. interest thereon, he was entitled to commissions on the interest or income from the funds in his hands during his guardianship.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cabarrus County; Neal, Judge.

Action by the state, on relation of J. V. Fisher, guardian of the estate of Lilly Ury, a minor, against R. A. Brown and others. From an order overruling exceptions to a referee's report, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

W. G. Means and Pou & Fuller, for appellants. Montgomery & Crowell and Self & Whitener, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. The defendant R. A. Brown had been removed from the guardianship of Lilly Ury, and this action was then brought by the plaintiff, as the newly appointed guardian, against the defendant R. A. Brown and the other defendants, sureties on his guardian bond, for an account and settlement of the guardianship. The case was referred to the clerk of the superior court to state the account. The report of the referee was filed and confirmed by the court.

The first exception of the defendant which we will consider is the one of the receiving by the referee, as evidence, of an admission made by the defendant R. A. Brown, in the proceeding instituted for his removal as guardian, to the effect that he qualified as guardian of Lilly Ury for the purpose of using the funds belonging to her in his own business, and that he applied the same to his own purposes. We do not deem it necessary to discuss that exception, any further than to say that it was error on the part of the referee to have received that admission in evidence. In any aspect of the case, it is harmless error. The defendants in their answer in the present case admitted that the defendant R. A. Brown used the guardian funds in his own business and for his own benefit.

¶ 2. See Guardian and Ward, vol. 25, Cent. Dig. § 252; Interest, vol. 29, Cent. Dig. § 61.

The next exception was to a conclusion of law of the referee, affirmed by the court, that the defendant R. A. Brown, because of his having used the funds belonging to the estate of his ward in his own business, should be charged with 8 per cent. per annum on the fund up to February 21, 1895 (the date of the change of law of interest), and after that time with 6 per cent. per annum. The exception cannot be sustained. The point is expressly decided in Carr v. Askew, 94 N. C. 194. There the defendant guardian had neglected to invest the fund, and had applied it to his own purposes; and the court decided that he should be charged with interest at the highest rate. At that time 6 per cent. per annum was the general rate, but under section 3835 of the Code as much as 8 per cent. interest was allowed to be charged and collected, if there was a special contract in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith or by his agent to that effect. The referee in that case had made a finding that in Wake county, where the guardian resided, he could have loaned the fund out on proper security at 8 per cent. per annum, but that, taking into consideration the interval occurring between the taking in and reloading of moneys, a continuous rate of 7 per cent. per annum would have been the maximum that could have been realized. In that case, on the subject of the rate of interest with which the guardian should have been charged, the court said: "These exceptions, we think, cannot be sustained, * * * and for the further reason that the evidence taken by the referee upon that matter varies from 6 to 8 per cent., and we think it was reasonable and just under the proofs that the intermediate sum of 7 per cent. should be adopted as the average and maximum of interest with which the defendant should be charged, compounded until the death of his ward in 1883, and with simple interest after that time. As a general rule, when a trustee has not only neglected to invest the fund, but has applied it to his own purposes, as by using it in his trade, he may be charged with interest at the highest rate. Adams, Eq. 664. But in this case the defendant had annually made a fair return for 13 years, and for a good portion of that time charged himself with 8 per cent. interest. That is a circumstance which might very properly have been taken into consideration by the referee in exonerating him from being charged with the highest rate of interest." That language is conclusive that the court was of opinion that the guardian there would have been chargeable with 8 per cent., the special rate allowed by the proviso in section 3835 of the Code, but for the findings of the referee, and that the guardian had charged himself with 8 per cent. for a considerable part of the time. The rate of interest allowed in special contracts under section 3835 is what the court meant by the "highest rate of interest."

The only other one of the exceptions of the defendant necessary to be considered was a conclusion of law, arrived at by the referee and affirmed by the court, that the defendant R. A. Brown, having used his ward's money in his own business and having never otherwise invested it, should not be allowed commissions on the interest or income from the fund in his hands belonging to the estate of his ward. That exception must be sustained on the authority of Carr v. Askew, supra. On a similar exception to the one raised in the case before us, the court there said: "We think this exception should be sustained. It was held by this court in Burke v. Turner, 85 N. C. 504, 'that a guardian is not entitled to commission on money collected and used by him in his own business'; but that was a case where the guardian not only used the money in his own business, but was guilty of gross negligence in not making his returns. * * * In this case, although the guardian used the money of his ward for his own purpose, he made his annual returns with strict punctuality and fairness for 13 years, so that it might be seen at all times for what sum he was liable to his ward, and he and his sureties were perfectly responsible. Although he violated the law, and abused the trust reposed in him, by the use of his ward's money, we do not think it was such gross malfeasance as should exclude him from the right to be allowed commissions." In the case before us the defendant R. A. Brown, guardian, made regular returns throughout the whole period of his guardianship and charged himself with 6 per cent. interest. The cases are similar on the point of commissions to be allowed, and the exception is sustained.

We have examined the other exceptions of the defendant, and find that they are without merit, and ought not to be sustained. The parties to this action can, when the certificate of this opinion is received in the court below, by consent, have the judgment of the superior court modified to the extent of having commissions allowed to the defendant Brown as above set out, to save the trouble and expense of having the matter recommitting to the referee to make the allowance of commissions.

Modified and affirmed.

CLARK, O. J. (concurring). The rule laid down in Carr v. Askew, 94 N. C. 194, and reaffirmed in this case, that when a fiduciary has used the trust funds in his own business he is to be charged with the highest rate of interest, unless he is shown to have made more, when he is chargeable with the actual profits made, is based upon the sound reasons given in the opinion of the court. It is also sustained by the precedents. In the absence of all evidence as to profits, the fiduciary in such cases is chargeable with the highest permissible rate at which he could have loaned the money, and the burden is on him to show that he made less (3 Williams, Ex'rs [7th Am. Ed.] 404, and cases cited), though in all cases, when he himself uses the money, he is chargeable not less than the ordinary rate of interest, even though he should not have made so much. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 20 Beavan, 100; Treves v. Townshend, 1 Bro. C. C. 384; Heathcote v. Hulme, 1 J. & W. Ch. 135, which last directed "an inquiry whether the account of interest or profits will be most advantageous to the infants." In the English cases, 3 per cent. is taken as the usual, and 5 per cent. as the highest, allowable rate (corresponding to the 6 and 8 per cent. under our former statute); and in all cases the fiduciary using trust funds is charged with 5 per cent. unless his profits therefrom were greater, in which case he is chargeable with them, or unless he shows the profits were less, in which case he is charged therewith, but never less than 3 per cent., at which it was his duty to have loaned the money. Lord Cramworth, in Robinson v. Robinson, 1 De G., M. & G. 257. Where the fiduciary does not use the money, but merely fails to loan it or to invest it, he is chargeable only with the ordinary and usual rate of interest, the amount which he should have made for the trust fund, if he had not been negligent. Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 61. The whole doctrine is summed up and restated as above by James, L. J., in Vyse v. Foster, L. R. [1872-73] 8 Ch. App., at page 329, and in 3 Williams, Ex'rs, ut supra.

CONNOR, J. (concurring). The referee does not find as a fact, nor is there any suggestion, that the guardian could have loaned the money of his ward at 8 per cent. interest. I am of the opinion that, in the absence of this finding, he should not be charged with more than the legal rate of 6 per cent. In Carr v. Askew, 94 N. C. 194, the referee found as a fact that the guardian could, during the period of his guardianship, have loaned the money in Wake county upon safe personal security or real estate mortgage at 8 per cent. This finding clearly distinguishes the two cases. In that case the referee also found that, taking into consideration the intervals occurring between the taking in and relending of loans, a continuous rate of 7 per cent. would have been the maximum that could have been realized. The court, adopting this conclusion, charged the guardian with only 7 per cent., notwithstanding the fact that he used the money in his own business. In that case the entire sum of $10,000 came into the hand of the guardian from an insurance policy, whereas in this case the guardian entered upon the duties of his office with less than $2,000, and, receiving rents, income, etc., in small amounts, has so managed his trust that, after educating his ward, he has in hand for her $6,000. If he is to be punished for the use of the money in his own business, which was clearly improper, it would seem that, accounting for every cent which came into his hands, with interest for every day, would be a sufficient reminder of the duties which he assumed as guardian. For these reasons we cannot concur in the opinion of the court by which he is charged with 8 per cent. interest.

WALKER, J., concurs in opinion of CONNOR, J.

(134 N. C. 236)

CHEEK v. OAK GROVE LUMBER CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 27, 1904.)

For former opinion, see 46 S. E. 488.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). Fires set by locomotives are so disastrous that all reasonable means should be used to prevent them. The cut of a locomotive used in Williams v. Railroad, 130 N. C., at page 125, 40 S. E. 979, has been very useful to the profession and the court in the trial of actions for damages for fires alleged to have been caused by sparks thrown out by locomotive engines. It may be useful, and therefore not inappropriate in a concurring opinion in this case, in which the spark arrester was taken off because with it the engine did not steam well, to add to the cut used in 130 N. C., 40 S. E., ut supra, the following description and cut of a successful device used on several European railroads to prevent fires being caused from locomotive sparks, taken from an official government publication (U. S. Consular Reports 1904, p. 702): "The device consists of a series of three grates set one above another in a square iron or steel frame of such size and form as to fit into the smoke chamber of the locomotive. The arrangement of the three tiers of grate bars is shown by the illustration below. Each bar is about two inches wide by one-tenth of an inch thick, and is ingeniously set into the frame so as to be held in place against any shock or pressure, and at the same time to be free to expand or contract with changing temperatures. As shown by the diagram, the middle tier or grate contains twice as many bars as the top and bottom tiers, and the arrangement of bars and spaces is such that, while a free passage is secured for the gases of combustion, no spark or ember more than 0.16 inch in thickness can escape; and these are so small that they are self-extinguished within a few feet after escaping into the open air, and cause no danger. This ingenious arrangement of the bars, together with the readiness with which they expand and contract under varying temperatures, acts to dislodge the adhering particles, and prevents the arrester from becoming clogged, at the same time permitting a draft so open and free that the steaming capacity of the engine is said to be visibly greater than with any other type of spark catcher heretofore used."

It is there said that this design has solved the problem, which "has been to devise a metallic network fine enough in mesh to effectively sift the glowing sparks from the blast of a locomotive without so obstructing the draft as to compromise its steaming capacity. Hitherto the bars or filaments of network spark arresters have been mainly round, and fixed in place—conditions which always entail more or less danger of choking and clogging whenever the space between bars or meshes is small enough to really prevent the escape of sparks and glowing embers of dangerous size." This device occupies the space, E, E, E, in the cut in 130 N. C., at page 125, 40 S. E. 979; but, instead of being a flat mesh, as there used, it consists of three tiers or sets of bars, each 2 inches deep by one-tenth of an inch thick, making a total thickness of six inches, through which the sparks must pass, with such distance between the bars as prevent, but without clogging, the passage of any cinders more than one-sixth of an inch in thickness.

(136 N. C. 159)

BROOKS & TAYLOR v. TRIPP et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 26, 1904.)

GAME—SHELLFISH—PROTECTION—POWERS OF STATE—POLICE REGULATIONS—STATUTES—TAXATION—UNIFORMITY—EXPORT TAX.

1. An act to protect and promote the shellfish industry of a certain county is within the police powers of the state.

2. Laws 1903, p. 723, c. 414, is entitled "An act to protect and promote the shellfish industry of B." It provides for the enforcement of the laws protecting shellfish during the "close season"; the Governor being authorized to appoint a shellfish commissioner at a prescribed salary, to be paid by a tax levied on oysters and clams "shipped out of the county," and, if any surplus remains, the county treasurer is required to pay the same into the state treasury. Held, that the tax so imposed was not for the purpose of raising revenue for the state treasury, but was merely to pay for the enforcement of the statute, which was not, therefore, unconstitutional on the ground that the tax was not uniformly laid.

3. Since the ownership of game and fish is in the state, and a license to hunt or fish is not an immunity or privilege of the citizens of the state, the state Legislature has power to forbid residents or nonresidents to take shellfish from the waters of a particular county in the state.

4. The tax imposed by Laws 1903, p. 723, c. 414, on shellfish taken and "shipped out of the county," is not an export tax, and is, therefore, not unconstitutional for that reason.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Brunswick County; Ferguson, Judge.

Suit by Brooks & Taylor against L. C. Tripp and others. From a decree in favor of defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Russell & Gore, for appellants. Cranmer & Davis, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action to restrain the execution of chapter 414, p. 723, Laws 1903; its unconstitutionality being averred on the ground that it lays a tax of three cents per bushel on clams, two cents per bushel on oysters in the shell, and two cents per gallon on shucked oysters "shipped out of said county," and not also upon the shellfish situate, dug, or consumed within said county, and that the said tax amounts to an impost or export tax, and is not levied for the purpose of inspection.

The act in question is entitled "An act to protect and promote the shellfish industry of Brunswick." If such is its true purport and object, it is within the police power of the state, and a tax levied for such object would be legal, although laid only upon shellfish in that county. If levied upon shellfish in that county only for the purpose of raising revenue for the state treasury, it would be forbidden by the Constitution, because not laid by "uniform rule." State v. Moore, 113 N. C. 697, 18 S. E. 342, 22 L. R. A. 472. But the presumption is that a statute is constitutional unless the contrary clearly appears. Sutton v. Phillips, 116 N. C. 502, 21 S. E. 963. An examination of the statute shows that for the purpose of enforcing the laws and regulations to protect shellfish, and especially the prohibition of disturbing their beds during the prescribed "close season," the Governor is authorized to appoint a shellfish commissioner at a salary of $400 per annum, and such commissioner is empowered to appoint "two or more" sub-shellfish commissioners to aid him in his work, who shall receive $25 each per month while so employed, and that the fund raised by the above tax is to be paid to the county treasurer, and the surplus (if any) shall be paid by him into the state treasury, after "first deducting" the salaries of the aforesaid officers. It is further provided that such officers shall receive no compensation whatever, except out of said funds. From the title and general purport of the act, and especially the provision for the appointment of an unlimited number of deputies, it is clear that there was no expectation or intention to raise any money for the state treasury (and none has been paid into the state treasury from this source), but that the object was solely to provide salaries for those engaged in enforcing the regulations for the protection of shellfish in Brunswick county. It must clearly appear that the object was not that recited, but was in fact to raise revenue for the state, before the act can be declared unconstitutional. The statute may be unguarded in not restricting the number of sub-shellfish commissioners; but the Legislature may have thought this was sufficiently done by providing that the officers should receive no compensation, except from this fund. If there is a defect in this regard, making the act liable to abuse, this is a matter for legislative correction; but it does not render the statute unconstitutional.

The tax required for the enforcement of a police regulation is not a tax, within the meaning of our Constitution, requiring uniformity and equality of taxation, but "is a proper mode of providing for the compensation" of an officer designated to enforce such regulation in the prescribed territory, "and the payment of any expenses incidental to this" duty. State v. Tyson, 111 N. C. 687, 16 S. E. 238. Local legislation in the nature of police regulation has always been sustained. See, as to the sale of liquor, sale of seed cotton, fence laws, cattle running at large, working public roads, and such legislation for many other purposes, the authorities collected in State v. Sharp, 125 N. C. 632, 34 S. E. 264, 74 Am. St. Rep. 663. In fact, this statute applies uniformly to all citizens of Brunswick, and all others, whether residents or nonresidents of this state, who go to that county to take shellfish for shipment.

But, even if the act had forbidden nonresidents of this state to take shellfish in that county, it would have been competent for the Legislature to so enact; for the ownership of game and fish is in the state, and license to hunt or fish is not an immunity or privilege of the citizens of this state. State v. Gallop, 126 N. C. 983, 984, 35 S. E. 180, and cases cited; McCreedy v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 248. In Chambers v. Church, 14 R. I. 398, 51 Am. Rep. 410, it is held that a state "may forbid nonresidents from catching fish in its waters for manure and oil, and manufacturing manure and oil from fish caught in its waters." In Haney v. Compton, 86 N. J. Law, 507, in the matter of prohibiting nonresidents from gathering oysters within the waters of New Jersey, the court says: "Such enactment for the protection of property must be considered as a matter of internal police, and not a regulation of commerce with foreign nations or among the states. Neither does it controvert the provisions of the United States Constitution that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges of citizens of the several states." But this statute in fact makes no discrimination in favor of the citizens of North Carolina.

It is further and chiefly contended that the act is unconstitutional in that it levies the tax solely upon shellfish shipped out of the county, and not also upon the other shellfish situate, dug, or consumed in said county. The tax could not be levied upon all the shellfish "situated" in Brunswick county, because there is no possible means to ascertain this. It would also be difficult to ascertain the number dug and consumed. The ascertainment of the number shipped out of the county is more practical, and the levy of a tax thereon is a reasonable method of deriving funds for the enforcement of the regulations for the protection of shellfish, and is not for revenue. It is not unreasonable that no tax is laid upon shellfish consumed for the sustenance and support of the people residing in the county. The tax laid is not an export tax, but is simply the method chosen by the Legislature, as the least onerous and most practicable system of raising the necessary funds to defray the expenses of protecting the shellfish industry in the county of Brunswick. The regulation of fishing and hunting is, as above said, a matter entirely within the discretion of the state. Lawton v. Steele, 151 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 885; State v. Gallop, 126 N. C. 984, 35 S. E. 180.

In refusing to hold the statute unconstitutional there was no error.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). The opinion of the court rightly says: "If [the tax were] levied upon shellfish in that county for the purpose of raising revenue for the state treasury, it would be forbidden by the Constitution, because not laid by uniform rule." The opinion further says, and I think correctly so, that "from the title and general purport of the act, and especially from the provision for the appointment of an unlimited number of deputies, it is clear that there was no expectation or intention to raise any money for the state treasury (and none has been paid into the state treasury from this source), but that the object was solely to provide salaries for those engaged in enforcing the regulations for the protection of shellfish in Brunswick county." The act provides that "the tax so collected is to be paid to the county treasurer of Brunswick county, and by him paid to the state treasurer, after first paying the shellfish commissioner a salary of $400 per annum, and the sub-shellfish commissioners," etc. The act further provides that "the shellfish commissioner shall be one of the qualified voters of Brunswick county," and that he in turn "shall have the power to appoint two or more sub-shellfish commissioners out of the qualified voters of Brunswick county." No other qualifications appear to be required, and, while their general duties "shall be to protect and promote the shellfish interests of Brunswick county," their special duties seem to be to collect sufficient tax to pay their salaries. It seems to be conceded that, if the tax were a source of revenue to the state, the act would be unconstitutional. I gravely doubt whether the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature should ever be made to depend upon the absorptive powers of any set of officers. However, it is due to them to say that so far they seem to have effectually maintained its constitutionality under the test indicated in the opinion of the court. I cannot bring my mind to assent to the validity of such legislation, which in my opinion substitutes the will of the draftsman for that of the General Assembly. It is due to the Legislature to say that the act was passed in the closing days of its session.

(135 N. C. 118)

In re BRIGGS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 19, 1904.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — COMPELLING WITNESS TO GIVE EVIDENCE AGAINST HIMSELF—PARDON BY LEGISLATURE—CONTEMPT—REVIEW.

1. Const. U. S. Amend. 5, providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, is a restriction solely on the federal government or courts.

2. Const. art. 1, § 11, declaring that no person shall be compelled to give evidence against himself, is not violated by Code, § 1215, providing that no person shall be excused on any prosecution from testifying touching any unlawful gaming done by himself or others, but no discovery made by the witness on such examination shall be used against him in any penal or criminal prosecution, and he shall be altogether pardoned of the offense so done or participated in by him.

3. The pardon granted by Code, § 1215, to a witness who testifies on a prosecution of another for a gambling offense in which he participated, is within the power of the Legislature.

4. Whether the ruling adjudging a witness guilty of contempt, under Code, § 648 (6), in not answering a question, should be presented for review by habeas corpus or by appeal, as was done, not being raised by any exception, should not be discussed by the court ex mero motu.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wilson County; Moore, Judge.

R. G. Briggs was adjudged guilty of contempt, and appeals. Affirmed.

This is an appeal from a judgment for contempt from Moore, J., at February term, 1904, Wilson superior court. In the case of State v. Geo. Morgan, who was indicted for keeping a gaming house, with a second count for playing cards for money, in violation of chapter 29, p. 55, Laws 1891, R. G. Briggs was sworn as a witness for the state. The solicitor asked the witness: "(1) Have you been in the defendant's room on the west side of Goldsboro street, in Wilson, N. C., within the last two years?" The witness stated that he declined to answer the question on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate him. Before the witness finally declined to answer this question, the solicitor asked him the following additional questions: "(2) Describe the room. (3) Have you within the last two years seen a game of cards played in the defendant's room for money or other thing of value, in which you did not participate? (4) Have you within the last two years seen a game of cards played in the defendant's room for money or other thing of value, in which you did participate?" The witness declined to answer each and every of these questions for the reason first given. The court, being of opinion that, under section 1215 of the Code, the witness is not privileged from answering the questions, and all pertinent questions relating to the charge against the defendant, but should be compelled to answer, informed the witness that he must answer the questions. The witness again declined to answer, whereupon the court adjudged the witness guilty of a contempt of court, and imposed a fine upon him, and ordered him in custody of the sheriff until the fine was paid. The witness excepted and appealed.

John E. Woodard, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

CLARK, C. J. Section 648 of the Code provides that "any person guilty of any of the following acts may be punished for contempt: * * * (6) The contumacious and unlawful refusal of any person to be sworn as a witness, or, when so sworn, the like refusal to answer any legal and proper interrogatory." The fourth question was, "Have you within the last two years seen a game of cards played in the defendant's room for money or other thing of value, in which you did participate?" As already stated, the witness declined to answer on the ground that his reply would tend to criminate him. The court, being of opinion that under Code, § 1215, the witness was not privileged from answering this, or any other pertinent questions relative to the charge against the defendant, directed the witness to answer, and, upon his refusal, adjudged him in contempt, and imposed a fine, and ordered him into custody until it was paid, from which judgment and order the respondent appealed.

Code, § 1215, is as follows: "No person shall be excused on any prosecution from testifying touching any unlawful gaming done by himself or others; but no discovery made by the witness upon such examination shall be used against him in any penal or criminal prosecution, and he shall be altogether pardoned of the offense so done or participated in by him." The respondent contends that this statute is unconstitutional, in that:

(1) It violates the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "no person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." We have already, at this term, in State v. Patterson, 47 S. E. 808, called attention to the well-known historical fact that the first 10 amendments were passed as restrictions solely upon the federal government and courts, and that the United States Supreme Court has uniformly held that they do not apply to the state governments or courts. In Barron v. Baltimore, 32

U. S. 243, 8 L. Ed. 672, Marshall, O. J., referring to the first 11 amendments, said: "These amendments contain no expression indicating an intention to apply them to the state governments. This court cannot so apply them." This repeatedly and uniformly has been so held by that court ever since, and among the cases are Peryear v. Com., 72 U. S. 480, 18 L. Ed. 608; Twitchell v. Com., 74 U. S. 325, 19 L. Ed. 223; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 552, 23 L. Ed. 588; Presser v. Ill., 116 U. S. 265, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615; Spies v. Ill., 123 U. S. 166, 8 Sup. Ct. 21, 22, 31 L. Ed. 80, in which it is said that it is well settled that the first 10 amendments to the federal Constitution were not intended to limit the powers of the states; Hallinger v. Davis, 146 U. S. 319, 13 Sup. Ct. 105, 36 L. Ed. 986, and numerous other federal and state decisions collected in 3 Rose's Notes to U. S. Reports, 368-372, and 6 Rose's Notes to U. S. Reports, 986, 987.

(2) That the statute (section 1215) violates article 1, § 11, of the Constitution of North Carolina, which declares that no person shall "be compelled to give evidence against himself." The same point of alleged unconstitutionality has been repeatedly presented in state and federal courts as to similar statutes, and the ruling has generally been that, even where the statute merely provides that the evidence elicited from the witness cannot be used against him, he can be required to testify. State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307; Wilkins v. Malone, 14 Ind. 153; Ex parte Buskett, 106 Mo. 602, 17 S. W. 753, 14 L. R. A. 407, 27 Am. St. Rep. 378, and cases therein cited; Kneeland v. State, 62 Ga. 395; People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74. There are cases which hold that he cannot be required to testify unless total immunity is guaranteed him, because clues may be discovered by the evidence, which may be followed up to the prisoner's subsequent conviction, without putting in evidence his declarations made when a witness. Smith v. Smith, 116 N. C. 387, 21 S. E. 196; Emery's Case, 107 Mass. 172, 9 Am. Rep. 22. But when, as in our state, the statute provides that the witness in such case shall have absolute immunity from punishment in regard to his participation in the offense as to which he has been required to testify, the rule is universal that he may be compelled to testify. Among the cases clearly stating this are Hirsch v. State, 67 Tenn. 89; Warner v. State, 81 Tenn. 52; State v. Nowell, 58 N. H. 314; People v. Foundry (1903) 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349. In our own state the point here presented was decided, and the witness was required to answer, in La Fontaine v. Underwriters, 83 N. C. 132, and State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 745, 45 S. E. 1033, in which last it is said that the witness "was properly made to answer the questions. Code, § 1215." This was said as to another witness in this same case. Though the fifth amendment to the United States Constitution does not apply to the state courts, that amendment is so nearly in the words of the similar provision in the state Constitution that the above distinction cannot be more clearly indicated than by reference to two well-known decisions of the United States Supreme Court. In Counselmen v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 457, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110, the protective statute (Rev. St. U. S. § 800 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661]) was merely that "no evidence given by the witness shall be in any manner used against him, in any court of the United States, in any criminal proceeding"; and it was held that the witness was not compelled to answer, for the statute fell short of the constitutional provision, in that the disclosure of the circumstances, sources, and means of the offense might be used effectually in a subsequent prosecution against the witness for his participation in that very offense, without using his answers on the witness stand as evidence against him on his trial. That case cites (page 579, 142 U. S., page 204, 12 Sup. Ct., 35 L. Ed. 1110) the decision in La Fontaine v. Underwriters, 83 N. C. 132, as based upon a statute (Code, § 1215) giving such full and complete protection that the witness could properly be required to testify. In Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819, Congress had, under the intimation in Counselmen v. Hitchcock, supra, amended the law by chapter 83, Act Feb. 11, 1893, 27 Stat. 443 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3173], which provided that the witness required to testify in the cases designated should not "be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matters or things, concerning which he may testify." This was held to give absolute immunity against prosecution for the offense to which the questions related, and deprived the witness of his constitutional right to refuse to answer. The court said (page 595, 161 U. S., page 648, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed. 819) that, if this were not so, "the practical result would be that no one could be compelled to testify to a material fact in a criminal case unless he chose to do so, or unless it was entirely clear that the privilege was not set up in good faith." The court cites authorities (pages 598, 599, 161 U. S., page 647, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed. 819) that, if prosecution would be barred as to the witness by the statute of limitation or a pardon, he would not be privileged to refuse to answer, and says this statute gives him the same protection, and deprives him of the privilege which he no longer requires for his protection. Our statute (Code, § 1215) is more explicit than the federal statute passed upon in Brown v. Walker, supra. It provides that the evidence adduced shall not be used against the witness "in any penal or criminal prosecution, and he shall be altogether pardoned of the offense so done or participated in by him." In State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. 242, this court sustained an act of the Legislature granting "amnesty and pardon," and speaks of special pardons and general pardons by legislative act. In State v. Keith, 63 N. C., at page 143, the court recognizes again the validity of a pardon by legislative enactment, citing 4 Blk. 401, and Marshall, C. J., in U. S. v. Wilson, 32 U. S. 163, 8 L. Ed. 640, who state that the courts must take judicial notice of "a pardon by act of Parliament, because it is considered a public law, having the same effect as if the general law punishing the offense had been repealed or amended." It was evidently held in State v. Blalock and State v. Keith, supra, that article 3, § 6, of the Constitution, conferring on the Governor "the power to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons, after conviction, for all offenses [except in cases of impeachment] was not the grant of an exclusive power, and did not deprive the General Assembly of the power to pass special or general acts of pardon, like the English Parliament, even before conviction." The same view is expressed in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., at page 601, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819, which holds that a similar act of Congress "securing to witnesses immunity from prosecution is virtually an act of general amnesty, and within the power of Congress, although the Constitution vests in the President 'power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment.'" The court further says (citing Knott v. U. S., 95 U. S. 152, 24 L. Ed. 442) that the distinction between amnesty and pardon is of no practical importance, and that the decisions in this country and in England as to the legislative power to grant pardons, with one or two exceptions in this country, are unanimous in favor of their constitutionality.

The witness was properly required to answer.

Whether the ruling below, on the facts of this case, should be presented for review by habeas corpus or by appeal, is a question not raised by any exception, and we do not think we should discuss the point ex mero motu.

The judgment below is affirmed.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring). We are met in limine with the vital question as to the defendant's right of appeal. If he has no right of appeal, it makes no difference what questions might be decided if the appeal were entertained. Under the facts of this case, and the principles of law applicable thereto, I think the defendant has a right of appeal. In fact, under all the circumstances, I think this the proper and most convenient proceeding in the case at bar. It is true, the defendant—properly so called, as this is a criminal prosecution—might sue out a writ of habeas corpus, but this course might be liable to grave inconveniences. One judge of the superior court might feel great hesitation in annulling the judgment of another judge, especially in a matter so nearly affecting the integrity of the court. If the writ were issued by a member of this court, returnable before himself, the same hesitation might exist, though perhaps to a less degree, while to make the writ returnable before a full bench would be too cumbersome to insure prompt and adequate relief, as is hereinafter shown. A writ of certiorari might be equally inadequate. Much stress is laid upon the delay resulting from an appeal. A writ of certiorari would, and a writ of habeas corpus might, cause the same delay. It should be borne in mind that the defendant appeals at his peril. If this court affirms the judgment of the court below, his sentence will remain in full force and effect. In any event we think he is entitled to prosecute his appeal, and the fact that it will avail him nothing is no legal reason for its denial. The Constitution (article 4, § 8) says that "the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction to review, upon appeal, any decision of the courts below, upon any matter of law or legal inference * * * and the court shall have the power to issue any remedial writs necessary to give it a general supervision and control over the proceedings of the inferior courts." Section 945 of the Code is in the exact words of the said section of the Constitution. As far as I can see, no distinction is made either in the Constitution or the statute as to cases of contempt. "Any matter of law or legal inference" are terms of most direct and comprehensive meaning, and, if they mean anything, mean what they say. It must follow that in all cases of contempt, where any question of law is involved, the defendant—for such he becomes when attached for contempt—is entitled to an appeal to this court. The only possible ground upon which he can be denied an appeal is that of absolute necessity, and it is clear that such a principle can never extend beyond the necessity that alone brought it into existence. "Necessitas non habet legem," or, as it is perhaps more properly stated, "Necessitas vincit legem," is a maxim which, however beneficial in some cases, is in its ultimate tendency destructive of all law, and therefore should be rarely invoked. We are not partial to maxims which tend to abridge the liberty of the citizen, or to deprive him of the equal protection of the law.

I am aware of the distinction attempted to be made in some jurisdictions between civil and criminal contempts, but I must confess that this classification is by no means clear, and has not always been rendered clearer by the learning of the books. Learning is not always wisdom. I am also aware of the distinction created in this state between "contempt" and "as for contempt," and the decisions of this court that in the latter class of cases an appeal will lie, while it will not in the former. This ruling, which has no foundation in the statute, arises purely ex necessitate, and is based upon the inherent right of self-defense attaching to the court as well as to the individual. Therefore the power of summary punishment can never exceed the limits of the necessity, and, in dealing with the liberty of the citizen, this necessity must be actual, and not constructive. The individual has inherent rights as well as the court, and it was primarily for the protection of those rights that courts themselves were instituted. The old idea that the individual is a mere atom of the state, having no rights except those that have been granted to him by the sovereign, has no application in this country. Here the state is the creature of the citizen, who holds his personal rights inherently and inalienably.

I will freely admit that if the conduct constituting the contempt is such as to actually obstruct the business of the court, as in Mott's Case, no appeal would lie, as the consequent delay would prevent the prompt action rendered absolutely necessary for the protection of the court. But where a man creates no disturbance whatever, and is guilty of no act which can be construed into contempt, beyond a respectful insistence upon a constitutional right, he is, in my opinion, entitled to an appeal, by every just principle of law. What other protection can he have? It has been suggested that he might obtain a writ of "habeas corpus," issued probably by one member of this court before the full bench." I am not aware of any such provision of law, but, suppose it were so, would it give him an adequate remedy? He would be compelled to go to jail until he could reach a member of this court, and remain in jail until the next term of this court, if it were not then in session. Was it ever contemplated that the great prerogative writ of habeas corpus should be disposed of in any such manner? What good would it do the defendant, if his petition were not heard until after the expiration of his term of imprisonment?

So far, I have relied upon the reason of the thing. "Reason," says Coke, "is the soul of the law. The reason of law being changed, the law is also changed." I think, however, than an examination of the statutes and the decisions of this court will show that in this case reason and authority point to the same conclusion.

The contention of the state seems to be based entirely upon section 648 of the Code, apparently ignoring section 654, which provides that courts "shall have power to punish as for contempt . . . (4) all persons summoned as witnesses in refusing or neglecting to obey such summons to attend, be sworn or answer as such witness." Such refusal comes under section 648 only when it is "the contumacious and unlawful refusal to answer any legal and proper interrogatory." To make a person guilty of contempt under that section, the question must be both legal and proper, and the answer both unlawful and contumacious. Admitting that the questions were all proper, and the defendant's refusal to answer consequently unlawful, there is no evidence whatever that such refusal was contumacious. The court below evidently did not consider it so, because it fined the defendant $1. It is true that the provision of section 650 that "the court shall cause the particulars of the offense to be specified on the record" does not of itself give to the defendant the right of appeal, but it does give to this court the means of ascertaining whether or not the appeal was properly taken. It is evident that any refusal of a witness to answer must necessarily be in the immediate presence of the court, and yet, when not contumacious, it is punishable only as for contempt, under section 654. The refusal of the witness to answer did not in any way tend to disturb the proceedings of the court, or even necessarily cause a continuance of the case, as the state might have proceeded without his testimony. At most, it could only have caused such delay as results from any other appeal. He could cause the same delay by going to jail and applying for a writ of habeas corpus, as suggested in the contentions of the state, or he could cut the Gordian knot by failing to attend. In the latter event he could be punished only as for contempt, with the admitted right of appeal. I am assuming that the witness unlawfully refused to answer. If his refusal had been lawful and proper, then no power on earth should compel him to answer. In Re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 259, 14 Sup. Ct. 323, 326, 38 L. Ed. 149, the Supreme Court of the United States has well said that "the law of our country takes care, or should take care, that not the weight of a judge's finger shall fall upon any one, except as specifically authorized."

A brief review of the cases relied upon by the state, I think, will sustain the view I entertain in this case. In State v. Woodfin, 27 N. C. 199, 42 Am. Dec. 161, State v. Mott, 49 N. C. 449, and Ex parte Summers, 27 N. C. 149, the offenses were committed in facie curiæ; the two former being fights, and the last a positive refusal, in contemptuous language, to return process, after the direct order of the court. Scott v. Fishplate, 117 N. C. 265, 23 S. E. 436, 30 L. R. A. 696, was a civil action for damages, and did not involve the right of appeal. In the cases of In re Daves, 81 N. C. 72, In re Deaton, 105 N. C. 61, 11 S. E. 244, State v. Aiken, 113 N. C. 651, 18 S. E. 690, and In re Robinson, 117 N. C. 533, 23 S. E. 453, 53 Am. St. Rep. 596, the appeal was entertained, and the judgment of the court below was reversed and set aside. In re Gorham, 129 N. C. 481, 40 S. E. 311, the judgment was specifically affirmed. In re Daves, 81 N. C. 72, this court says on page 75: "The plaintiff insists that an appeal does not lie from a judgment imposing a penalty for contempt. This is true as to that class of contempts which are committed in the presence of the court, or so near as to interfere with its business, and the reasons for which are justly set out by Nash, C. J., in the opinion in State v. Mott, 49 N. C. 449. But in cases like the present, where the right to punish depends upon a 'willful disobedience' of 'any process or order lawfully issued,' the lawfulness of the power exercised is a proper subject of review in this court." Why does not this decision apply to the case at bar, where the right to punish for contempt, under section 648, depends upon the "contumacious and unlawful" refusal of the witness to answer any "legal and proper interrogatory"? The state in the case at bar, as the court has done in some other cases, lays great stress upon the reasons given by Nash, C. J., in State v. Mott. What are those reasons? This court has well said in Walton v. Gatlin, 60 N. C. 810: "When the stream becomes too muddy to see the bottom, the surest way to find truth is to go up to the fountain head; that is, 'to the reason and sense of the thing.'" In Mott's Case, Nash, C. J., speaking for the court, says (49 N. C. 450): "For good reasons, the law does not authorize an appeal in such cases. To constitute a contempt, the act done must be in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice. From the nature of the offense, it is difficult to see how another judge can estimate the nature of the act. The evil requires prompt action to its removal. Let us suppose a case: A man comes into court, and by his noisy behavior obstructs the business. The judge orders him to be fined and imprisoned for the contempt. The delinquent appeals to the court above. The appeal, of course, annuls the judgment; but the individual remains in the courthouse, and still continues his disorderly conduct. The court again interferes by a judgment of fine and imprisonment, and again the right of appeal is interposed, and so on, as long as the obstinacy and folly of the tree passer continues, to the entire suspension of the public business and in utter contempt of the judicial authority." Do any of these reasons apply to the case at bar? If not, then why should we follow the decision in that case as an authority?

We come now to a consideration of the case upon its merits, and I find no difficulty in arriving at a conclusion. I do not see how the first question could tend to criminate the witness, and we might place our affirmance of the judgment upon his failure to answer it alone; but, as he was asked all the questions at the same time, and the action of the court below is founded upon his refusal to answer all the questions, I deem it proper to consider them. Indeed, it would seem that the propriety of the last question is the real matter sought to be determined in this appeal. It certainly presents its most important phase.

I think that all the questions should have been answered by the witness, including the one involving his own participation, although it does not appear that the court informed him of the protection afforded by the statute as clearly he should have done.

The Constitution of this state, in section 11 of article 11, provides that "in all criminal prosecutions every man has the right to be informed of the accusation against him; * * * and not be compelled to give evidence against himself." The scope of this protection is explained by this court in Smith v. Smith, 116 N. C. 386, 21 S. E. 196, as follows: "We think the provisions of our Constitution ought to be liberally construed, to preserve personal rights and to protect the citizen against self-incriminating evidence. It is conceded and settled that a single unlawful act of sexual intercourse is not a criminal offense, but the question presented is, would the admission by the witness of a single act tend to criminate him? Our opinion is that it does, and that the witness ought not to be compelled to answer the question, for the reason that the admission may be the connecting link of a chain of evidence disclosing other facts and other circumstances leading to clear proof of a crime which would not have been known without the admission. The usual reply is that his admission cannot be used against him in any future prosecution, and that he is therefore protected. This fails to reach the mark, for, although it cannot be used against the witness, it may be the means, the link, by which other sufficient evidence has been discovered, which could not have been done without the admission. No one knows what facts and secrets are locked up in the bosom of a witness, and we think the true intent of the Constitution is that the witness shall not be compelled to disclose anything that may lead to criminal conduct, without absolute protection against future prosecution."

Section 1354 of the Code provides that: "Nothing in this chapter, except as provided in the preceding section, * * * shall render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself." Section 1353 has no bearing upon the question before us. Hence it follows that, were it not for section 1215 of the Code, the fourth question, and perhaps the second and third, would be incompetent under the laws as well as the Constitution of this state. Section 1215 is as follows: "No person shall be excused, on any prosecution, from testifying touching any unlawful gaming done by himself or others; but no discovery, made by the witness upon such examination, shall be used against him, in any penal or criminal prosecution, and he shall be altogether pardoned of the offense so done, or participated in by him." The constitutionality of this section depends upon whether it gives to the witness the full measure of his constitutional protection. Its wording is not the best that might be selected to express its legal effect; but I think that it is sufficiently clear to justify our conclusion that it protects the witness from any prosecution or molestation of any kind on account of any offense concerning which he may be required to testify. Anything less than this would fail to give him adequate protection, and hence would fail to meet the constitutional requirement.

Whether the Legislature could grant pardons in analogy to the English Parliament is not before us, but there can be no doubt of its authority to pass acts of amnesty relating to certain classes of offenses. This power rests equally in reason and authority, its exercise being occasionally demanded by dominating necessities of public policy. This is clearly recognized in the cases of State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. 242, and State v. Keith, 63 N. C. 140. The latter case, holding that an act of amnesty was not only valid, but created a vested right of immunity, which could not be repealed even by a constitutional convention, was decided in 1869 by a court all of whose members had been elected at the same election at which the Constitution itself was adopted, and one of whose justices was a distinguished member of the convention which framed the Constitution. If the oft-cited principle of contemporaneous construction has any force, it is peculiarly applicable to that case, in which occurs the celebrated sentence: "These great principles are inseparable from American government and follow the American flag." See, also, State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033.

It has been repeatedly held that the fifth amendment to the federal Constitution is a restriction only upon the power of the United States, and not upon that of the states, but its provisions in this respect are so nearly identical with those of our own Constitution that the decisions thereon may well be cited in analogy. The said amendment provides that "no person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." Its scope was stated by Chief Justice Marshall, when presiding at the trial of Aaron Burr, as follows: "Many links," he says, "frequently compose that chain of testimony which is necessary to convict an individual of crime. It appears to the court to be the true sense of the rule that no witness is compellable to furnish any one of them against himself. It is certainly not only a possible, but a probable, case, that a witness, by disclosing a single fact, may complete the testimony against himself, and, to every effectual purpose, accuse himself as entirely as he would by stating every circumstance which would be required for his conviction. The fact of itself would be unavailing, but all other facts, without it, would be insufficient. While that remains concealed in his own bosom he is safe, but draw it from thence, and he is exposed to a prosecution. The rule which declares that no man is compellable to accuse himself would most obviously be infringed by compelling a witness to disclose a fact of this description."

The question as to how far Congress may deprive a witness of his constitutional privilege of refusing to testify, by protecting him from the consequences of his testimony, has been fully and elaborately discussed by the Supreme Court in several cases, and especially in Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110; and Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819. Section 860 of the Revised Statutes [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661], taken from the act of February 25, 1868, c. 13, 15 Stat. 37, was as follows: "No pleading of a party, nor any discovery or evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding in this or any foreign country, shall be given in evidence, or in any manner used against him or his property or estate, in any court of the United States, in any criminal proceeding, or for the enforcement of any penalty or forfeiture." In Counselman's Case the court held that the witness could not be compelled to testify, because the protection afforded by the statute was not equivalent to that of the Constitution. It says on page 585, 142 U. S., page 206, 12 Sup. Ct., 35 L. Ed. 1110: "We are clearly of opinion that no statute which leaves the party or witness subject to prosecution after he answers the criminating question put to him can have the effect of supplanting the privilege conferred by the Constitution of the United States. Section 860 of the Revised Statutes does not supply a complete protection from all the perils against which the constitutional prohibition was designed to guard, and is not a full substitute for that prohibition. In view of the constitutional provision, a statutory enactment, to be valid, must afford absolute immunity against future prosecution for the offense to which the question relates. In this respect, we give our assent rather to the doctrine of Emery's Case, in Massachusetts, than to that of People v. Kelley, in New York; and we consider that the ruling of this court in Boyd v. United States, supra, supports the view we take. Section 860, moreover, affords no protection against that use of compelled testimony, which consists in gaining therefrom a knowledge of the details of a crime, and of sources of information which may supply other means of convicting the witness or party." In view of this decision, Congress passed the act of February 11, 1893, c. 83, 27 Stat. 443 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3173]. It was held in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819, that the act deprived the witness of his constitutional right to refuse to answer, inasmuch as it afforded absolute immunity against prosecution, federal or state, for the offense to which the question related. It is interesting to note that this case was decided by a bare majority of the court; Justices Field, Shiras, Gray, and White dissenting on the ground of the absolute sanctity of the constitutional provision. While I am deeply impressed with the force of the dissenting opinions in that case I feel compelled to hold, on grounds of the highest public policy, that the witness may be required to testify where the statute affords him in fact, as well as in theory, absolute immunity from prosecution or molestation of any kind on account of all transactions referred to in his involuntary testimony. At the same time, I feel the full responsibility of holding that in any case constitutional provisions securing the rights and liberties of the citizen can be changed or modified by legislative enactment. I realize the danger pointed out by the Supreme Court of the United States in Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746, where it says: "It may be that it is the obnoxious thing in its mildest and least repulsive form, but illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way, namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure. This can only be obviated by adhering to the rule that constitutional provisions for the security of person and property should be liberally construed. A close and literal construction deprives them of half their efficacy, and leads to gradual depreciation of the right, as if it consisted more in sound than in substance. It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be, 'Obsta principiis.'"

The above opinion, written tentatively before the opinion of the court assumed its present shape, is now filed as an expression of my individual views. Speaking for myself, it is perhaps proper to add that my views of the protection afforded by article 1, § 11, of the Constitution of this state, are somewhat broader than those generally adopted by the courts, though held by some distinguished jurists. I believe there is something dearer to the human heart than the mere money involved in a fine, something more terrible even than going to jail. To compel a man to reveal the innermost secrets of his life, that would destroy his reputation, render him infamous in the eyes of his fellow men, or tend to break up a happy home, might inflict suffering upon the innocent, as well as the guilty, equal to any punishment known to the law. Tears shed by a faithful wife over a dishonored bed are bitterer than those over an honored grave. Among the great jurists who have expressed similar views I will quote but one extract from the dissenting opinion of Justice Field in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819, where he says, on page 631, 161 U. S., page 653, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed. 819: "The amendment also protects him from all compulsory testimony which would expose him to infamy and disgrace, though the facts disclosed might not lead to a criminal prosecution. It is contended, indeed, that it was not the object of the constitutional safeguard to protect the witness against infamy and disgrace. It is urged that its sole purpose was to protect him against incriminating testimony with reference to the offense under prosecution. But I do not agree that such limited protection was all that was secured. As stated by counsel of the appellant: 'It is entirely possible, and certainly not impossible, that the framers of the Constitution reasoned that, in bestowing upon witnesses in criminal cases the privilege of silence when in danger of self-incrimination, they would at the same time save him in all such cases from the shame and infamy of confessing disgraceful crimes, and thus preserve to him some measure of self-respect.' * * * It is true, as counsel observes, that 'both the safeguard of the Constitution and the common-law rule spring alike from that sentiment of personal respect, liberty, independence, and dignity which has inhabited the breasts of English-speaking peoples for centuries, and to save which they have always been ready to sacrifice many governmental facilities and conveniences. In scarcely anything has that sentiment been more manifest than in the abhorrence felt at the legal compulsion upon witnesses to make confessions which must cover the witness with lasting shame, and leave him degraded both in his own eyes and those of others. What can be more abhorrent * * * than to compel a man who has fought his way from obscurity to dignity and honor to reveal crimes of which he had repented and of which the world was in ignorance." In the case at bar none of the questions tend to subject the witness to infamy or disgrace. However dangerous in its tendencies and demoralizing in its results, gaming is not generally regarded as disgraceful in this state. I do not intend by this statement to justify gambling in the slightest degree, but my duty to the defendant requires me to state facts as they are, no matter how abhorrent to my personal sense of moral obligation.

I must confess some hesitation in conceding that the doctrine of statutory substitution can ever apply to constitutional guaranties, and I am induced to do so in this case only upon controlling principles of public policy, and upon the assurance that absolute immunity is guarantied to the witness. It is significant that the case of Brown v. Walker was decided by a bare majority of the court; Justices Field, Shiras, Gray, and White dissenting in most vigorous terms, on the ground that no statute requiring the witness to testify could be, legally or in fact, the full equivalent of the constitutional protection of absolute silence. Justice Field says, on page 630, 161 U. S., page 652, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed. 819: "The constitutional amendment contemplates that the witness shall be shielded from prosecution by reason of any expressions forced from him whilst he was a witness in a criminal case. It was intended that against such attempted enforcement he might invoke, if desired, and obtain, the shield of absolute silence. No different protection from that afforded by the amendment can be substituted in place of it. The force and extent of the constitutional guaranty are in no respect to be weakened or modified, and the like consideration may be urged with reference to all the clauses and provisions of the Constitution designed for the peace and security of the citizen in the enjoyment of rights or privileges which the Constitution intended to grant and protect. No phrases or words of any provision securing such rights or privileges to the citizen in the Constitution are to be qualified, limited, or frittered away. All are to be construed liberally, that they may have the widest and most ample effect. No compromise of phrases can be made by which one of less sweeping character and less protective force in its influences can be substituted for any of them. The citizen cannot be denied the protection of absolute silence which he may invoke, not only with reference to the offense charged, but with respect to any act of criminality which may be suggested." Justice Shiras, with the concurrence of Justices Gray and White, says, on page 610, 161 U. S., page 656, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed. 819: "It is too obvious to require argument that, when the people of the United States, in the fifth amendment to the Constitution, declared that no person should be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, it was their intention, not merely that every person should have such immunity, but that his right thereto should not be divested or impaired by any act of Congress." Again the same Justices say, on page 621, 161 U. S., page 660, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed.

819: "As already said, the very fact that the founders of our institutions, by making the immunity an express provision of the Constitution, disclosed an intention to protect it from legislative attack, creates a presumption against any act professing to dispense with the constitutional privilege." Again they say, on page 627, 161 U. S., page 662, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed. 819: "If, indeed, experience has shown, or shall show, that one or more of the provisions of the Constitution has become unsuited to affairs as they now exist, and unduly fettered the courts in the enforcement of useful laws, the remedy must be found in the right of the nation to amend the fundamental law, and not in appeals to the courts to substitute for a constitutional guaranty the doubtful and uncertain provisions of an experimental statute. It is certainly speaking within bounds to say that the effect of the provision in question, as a protection to the witness, is purely conjectural. No court can foresee all the results and consequences that may follow from enforcing this law in any given case. It is quite certain that the witness is compelled to testify against himself. Can any court be certain that a sure and sufficient substitute for the constitutional immunity has been supplied by this act; and, if there be room for reasonable doubt, is not the conclusion an obvious and necessary one?" They conclude by saying, on page 628, 161 U. S., page 663, 16 Sup. Ct., 40 L. Ed. 819: "But surely no apology for the Constitution as it exists is called for. The task of the courts is performed if the Constitution is sustained in its entirety, in its letter and spirit."

I am deeply impressed with the meaning of those words, and whenever I give my assent to any statutory substitution it is only upon the condition that it gives to the witness an equal protection, which is always completely within his reach.

WALKER, J. (concurring). The correctness of the views expressed in the opinion of the court, as written by the Chief Justice, has been demonstrated both by principle and authority. The question as to the respondent's right of appeal is not presented on this record. It appears to me, after careful consideration of the facts as they are shown in the transcript, that the case was brought here only for the purpose of having construed the statute (Code, § 1215), which provides as follows: "No person shall be excused, on any prosecution, from testifying touching any unlawful gaming done by himself or others; but no discovery, made by the witness upon such examination, shall be used against him, in any penal or criminal prosecution, and he shall be altogether pardoned of the offense so done, or participated in by him." While the judge finds that the witness was "contumacious" in refusing to answer, it is evident that he did not intend to use that word in the sense that the witness was actually disrespectful to the court, and refused obstinately and perversely or without any reason to answer the question, after the law had been fully explained and made clear to him. There appears to have been some doubt entertained in the court below as to the true construction of the statute, and the formal finding of facts was made in order to obtain the opinion of this court as to the law, and to have a final and authoritative interpretation of section 1215 of the Code, so that there may be no doubt in the future as to whether or not a witness is fully protected in answering any question which would otherwise tend to criminate him. This conclusion is justified not only by the manner in which the finding is stated, but by the fact that only a nominal fine—$1—was imposed upon the witness. In view of this state of the record, it seems very clear that the question as to the witness' right of appeal from the judge's order is not presented. In regard to contempts, it is provided by Code, c. 14, § 648 (6), that the contumacious and unlawful refusal of any person to answer any legal and proper interrogatory shall subject him to punishment "for contempt," and not "as for contempt"; and the proceeding by which the facts are ascertained, and the particulars of the offense specified and spread upon the record, and the punishment is imposed, "may be summary," when the alleged contempt is committed "in the immediate view and presence of the court." By Code, § 654 (4), it is provided that any person summoned as a witness, and refusing to attend or to be sworn or to answer as such witness, may be attached and punished "as for contempt." The different phraseology of the two sections upon the same subject-matter raises an important and interesting question as to the right of appeal. It will be observed that section 660 provides that the court "may" punish summarily when the contempt is committed in its immediate view and presence, not that it "shall" do so; and when it does decide, under the circumstances of the particular case, that summary punishment shall be imposed, it is required to find the facts and "specify them on its record," but the requirement does not of itself give the right to have the judgment of the court reviewed by appeal or certiorari. State v. Mott, 49 N. C. 449. We are not now privileged to express an opinion as to how far, if at all, the principle of that case should control in this. Whether, if there is any method of review, it is by appeal, certiorari, or habeas corpus, is not, it seems to me, before us for decision; and, when the question is properly presented, the solution of it will be attended with some difficulty, as the language of the two sections of the Code to which reference has been made is not altogether free from ambiguity. As the question of the right of appeal is not, therefore, free from doubt, and is one fit for careful and serious consideration, it is well not to anticipate a decision of it by the slightest intimation as to the answer that it should receive. It is not only important, but it is expressly required by the statute, that the court should "specify" the facts and particulars of the offense on the record; and then the reviewing tribunal, if the decision of the court is reviewable, may for itself decide whether a contempt has been committed.

In this connection the language of the court in Ex parte Summers, 27 N. C. 149, may be pertinent. Since that decision was made, the law has been amended so as to require the facts to be stated on the record. The court in that case said: "It befits every court which has a proper tenderness for the rights of the citizen, and a due respect to its own character, to state facts explicitly, not suppressing those on which the person might be entitled to be discharged, more than it would insert others, which did not exist, for the sake of justifying the commitment. A court which knows its duty, and is not conscious of violating it, will ever be desirous of putting upon the record or in its process the truth of the case, especially as thereby a higher court may be able to enlarge a citizen illegally committed or fined. But if the commitment or fine be in a general form for a contempt, all other courts are bound by it, and the party can only free himself by purging the contempt before the court that has adjudged it." And again, "referring to the appeal which the respondent had taken in that case, the court says: "But in truth this is not, we think, the proper method of contesting the propriety or lawfulness of this order, if there be any such method. From the very nature of contempts, and in order that the punishment may be efficacious, the punishment must be immediate and peremptory, and not subject to suspension by appeal at the mere will of the offender, nor by any proceeding in the nature of an appeal. Suppose one to come into court and abuse the judge on the bench. Or suppose a sheriff with a writ in his hand, in the presence of the court, positively refuses to return it, so that the party's action will be discontinued. What would sentences for these contempts be worth if the culprit could supersede them by appeal, certiorari, or writ of error? Manifestly, nothing, and the authority of the court would really be contemptible if it could be thus eluded and prostrated. There is no instance, therefore, of the re-examination of an order committing or fining a person for a contempt, with the view of hearing the evidence and trying the question de novo, nor directly to reverse or quash an order of commitment, or imposing a fine for an intrinsic insufficiency. If there be such insufficiency upon the face of the order, the party has his remedy by habeas corpus, and by action against those who act on the order, either against his person or property." The same may be said of Summers' Case as was said of State v. Mott, supra. Whether its principle should apply to a state of facts such as is disclosed in this record must be left for the present, at least, as an open question, for the reasons we have already given.

In the present case the facts are not fully stated, and it is not shown what was the manner or demeanor of the witness; and this omission was proper, for it sufficiently appears that nothing more was put upon the record because it was the purpose to present the single question as to the meaning of section 1215 of the Code. A similar question was before this court for its consideration in La Fontaine v. Underwriters' Association, 83 N. C. 132, in which the court construed section 488 (5) of the Code; the provision of that section in regard to exemption from prosecution being much less broad and comprehensive in affording protection to the witness than is the provision of section 1215. It is as follows: "But his [the witness'] answer shall not be used as evidence against him in any criminal proceeding or prosecution." This was held in that case to be a sufficient exemption from criminal liability, and exposed the witness to punishment for contempt if he refused to answer any proper and legal question upon the ground that it would tend to convict him of a criminal offense. There was a full discussion in that case of the question whether the answer of the witness, while not tending directly to criminate him, might not furnish a clew which would lead to the discovery of evidence against him, or supply one link in the chain, so that it would, in connection with other facts, have that tendency, or whether it would not disclose some fact which, though not in itself any evidence of guilt, or even a circumstance tending to show guilt, might disclose other facts and circumstances which would form a complete chain, and lead to his conviction. The court reached the conclusion, after a consideration of this view of the matter, that the testimony of the witness cannot be used directly or indirectly, either in the pending proceeding or in any other prosecution, and that if any evidence attempted to be used in any such proceeding against the witness can be traced to a statement made by him while on the stand, as the cause which led to its discovery, the witness will be protected, and can plead or otherwise avail himself of the fact in bar of the prosecution. We all agree, as I understand, that the first three questions did not tend to criminate the witness, and he was bound to answer them. The ground taken by the respondent, that those who participated in the game, and whose names he would disclose if he answered the questions, might in their turn give evidence against him, has been held to be untenable; the doctrine being grounded more on the fear of retaliation than on any sound principle of law. Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 22 Am. Dec. 449; La Fontaine v. Underwriters, supra. The fourth question tended to criminate the witness, but he was fully protected and pardoned by the statute, "and his constitutional right, therefore, to give evidence against himself, was maintained intact." La Fontaine v. Underwriters, supra. The clause of the Constitution (article 3, § 6) which confers power on the Governor to pardon persons convicted of criminal offenses does not seem to have been intended as an exclusive grant of such power, and the Legislature may exercise the right of pardon in the form in which it is authorized to do so by the statute under consideration. This court has decided that the Legislature may grant amnesty (State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. 242), which has been defined to be "a sovereign act of pardon and forgetfulness for past acts of a criminal nature" (Black's Law Dict., p. 68). It is at least coextensive in its meaning with the word "pardon," so far as its effect is concerned, because it effaces or wipes out the offense which has been committed; "the difference between the two being that a pardon is granted to one who is certainly guilty, sometimes before, but usually after, conviction, and the court takes no notice of it unless pleaded or in some way claimed by the person pardoned, and it is usually granted by the crown or by the executive; but amnesty is extended to those who may be guilty, and is usually granted by Parliament or the Legislature, and to whole classes before trial. Amnesty is an abolition or oblivion of the offense. Pardon is its forgiveness." State v. Blalock, supra. In that case this court virtually held that the Legislature can pardon an offense, and it certainly must have the power to do so when that power is exercised in furtherance of the prosecution of crimes and of the detection and punishment of criminals. As soon as the witness testifies in a case which brings him within the protection of the statute, he is at once pardoned of his own offense, the same as if it had never been committed, and he is in no danger of being prejudiced by any self-crimination. Even when the witness is not protected by the statute, the question which tends to criminate him is not for that reason incompetent. The right to refuse to answer any such question is a personal privilege of the witness, and, if he voluntarily relinquishes the privilege and chooses to answer, no party to the suit can complain. State v. Allen, 107 N. C. 805, 11 S. E. 1016; Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576, 11 S. E. 830; State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033. It has also been ruled to be a question of law for the judge to decide whether the testimony of the witness may criminate him. If in no possible view it can have that tendency, the court decides the question as one of law; but if it may subject him to prosecution, depending upon the answer he gives to the question, it has been said that the witness has the right to decide whether it will or not. For example, when the question calls simply for an affirmative or negative response, the witness must be the judge, for he only knows what the answer will be—whether "Yes" or "No"—but it is manifestly the duty of the court to inform him as to his rights and his privilege, and to instruct him as to how he may claim and exercise the same. When, however, he is fully informed by the court that the law compels him to answer, and that he has no privilege, or that the question which is asked has no possible tendency to criminate him, he must answer it, or his refusal to do so will be at his peril, for the plain reason that the court must decide that question as one of law, and the witness must submit to that decision. If he persists in his refusal to answer, he may be summarily punished for his contumacy. 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. (1st Ed.) p. 43; Code, § 648. And right here the question will arise whether he has the right to a review of the proceedings by appeal. Whether he has or not, it would be the duty of the court in such a case to state fully in the record "the particulars of the offense," and then pronounce its judgment, so that the witness may avail himself of any remedy open to him for a review of the court's decision by appeal or otherwise, if the decision can be reviewed, or so that a revising tribunal may determine whether the judgment is warranted by the facts so specified in the record. When we have before us a record thus made up, we will be called upon to decide what is the procedure in such a case, if there is any, for reviewing or revising the judgment of the court. The contempt committed in the case at bar, as shown in the record, is more technical than actual; and it is not incumbent upon us to do more under the circumstances than affirm the judgment, which, by the way, is all that is asked to be done by the Attorney General in his well-considered brief.

The other questions are so fully and ably discussed in the opinion of the court, delivered by the Chief Justice, that it is not necessary for any reference to be made to them in this opinion.

(135 N. C. 63)

STATE et al. v. ARMOUR PACKING CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 19, 1904.)

TAXATION—LICENSE TAXES—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—STATUTES—ENACTMENT—MODE—PROOF—LEGISLATIVE JOURNALS—IMPEACHMENT—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—FINDINGS OF FACT.

1. Where the trial judge found the facts with reference to the enactment of a statute claimed to have been erroneously enacted, the Supreme Court on appeal could not consider any extraneous facts, though agreed on, for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of regularity arising from the ratification of the act.

2. Where the trial court in an action to recover license taxes under the revenue act of 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 143, c. 9) found that it appeared by the legislative journals that such act was read as a whole on three several days in each house, and that the ayes and noes were entered on the journals on the second and third readings, a further finding that after the bill had passed the House it was amended by the Senate, the amendments affecting about 30 sections of the bill, and, after being sent to a conference committee, was adopted, and as thus adopted was not read on three several days in each house, nor were the ayes and noes entered on the journals on the second and third readings, did not establish the invalidity of such enactment, in the absence of a showing that any of the amendments were of such a kind as were required to be passed and the ayes and noes recorded in the manner prescribed by Const. art. 2, § 14.

3. On an issue as to whether or not a statute was passed in the method provided by the Constitution, the legislative journals required to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State by Code, § 2867, or a certified copy thereof, are the only evidence admissible to overcome the presumption arising from the ratification of the act that it was properly passed, and such journals cannot be contradicted by extraneous proof.

4. Acts 1901, p. 148, c. 9, § 91, providing that an annual franchise tax shall be assessed on each and every corporation organized under the laws of the state or doing business within the state, payable in the county where such corporation has its principal office, is not limited to domestic corporations, but applies as well to foreign corporations doing business within the state.

5. Laws 1901, p. 152, c. 9, Schedule C, provides for the imposition of license taxes on a designated class of corporations, including railroads, banks, etc., to be fixed at a certain per cent. of their gross earnings, and a tax on other corporations in proportion to capital stock. Section 87 provides that the taxes assessed by such schedule shall be for the privilege of carrying on business, and shall be subject to the other regulations mentioned in section 35, which expressly provides that a tax may be imposed by the county in addition to the state tax on the subjects of taxation mentioned in that section; and section 102 declares that, when a specific license tax is levied for the privilege of carrying on any business, the county may levy the same tax, unless a provision to the contrary is made in the section levying the specific tax. Held that, since section 91, providing for the levy of a license tax on corporations other than those specified in Schedule C, to be paid in the county where such corporation has its principal office, contained no such exemption clause, a corporation subject to taxation under such section was liable to the state, and also to the county where its principal office is located.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Brown, Judge.

Action by the state and the commissioners of New Hanover county against the Armour Packing Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought to recover license taxes alleged to be due by the defendant to the plaintiffs under section 91 of the revenue act of 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 148, c. 9). A jury trial was waived, and the court found as facts that the defendant is a corporation of the state of New Jersey, with a capital stock of $1,000,000, and was engaged during the years 1901 and 1902 in the business of selling, dealing in, and distributing meats, canned goods, and other articles of trade at wholesale in this state, with its principal office at Wilmington, and three offices at other places in this state, all office reports being sent directly to Kansas City; that license taxes under said section were duly levied by the proper authorities of New Hanover county for the years 1901 and 1902, and a demand made upon the defendant for the payment of the same, and a similar demand also made by the state for its taxes for those years, but payment was refused; that the revenue act of 1901 appears by the Senate and House journals to have been read as a whole on three several days in each house of the General Assembly, and the ayes and noes were entered on the journals upon the second and third readings; that the bill was amended in the Senate, it appears in the journal, as to several sections, but there is nothing in the entries on the journal to show that section 91 was one of the sections so amended. The defendant introduced in evidence the original bill filed in the State Librarian's office, and from the entries therein it appears that the bill was amended in the Senate by inserting in what was section 88, between the words "corporation" and the words "railroad," the words "organized under the laws of this state," and that section 85, as thus amended, became section 95, and that thereafter section 95 was amended by inserting after the word "state" and before the word "railroads" the words "or doing business in this state," and by adding to the section the words, "provided, further, that the tax provided for under this section shall be payable in the county of this state where it has its principal office"; that said amendments were reported from a committee of conference, and concurred in without a vote, on three several days, and without entering the ayes and noes on the journals, and section 95 was then numbered 91; that the defendant has paid the taxes due under section 86 of said act, and imposed upon all agents of packing houses doing business in this state. No point was made in the court below as to the joinder of the plaintiffs, the state and the county, in one action. State v. Georgia, 112 N. C. 34, 17 S. E. 10, 19 L. R. A. 485. The court gave judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appealed.

J. D. Bellamy, for appellant. Geo. Rountree and J. O. Carr, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The contentions of the defendant in this case relate to the validity and the interpretation of section 91 of the revenue act, it being chapter 9, p. 148, of the Acts of 1901, and are as follows: (1) That section 91 was not passed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, art. 2, § 14, as the said section was amended, after the original bill had passed its several readings in each house, by the insertion of the words "or doing business in this state," and of the proviso, which is as follows: "Provided further, that the tax provided for under this section shall be payable in the county of this state where it has its principal office." And that, after the bill was thus amended, it was not read three several times in each house, nor were the ayes and noes on the second and third readings entered on the journal, as required by the said article and section of the Constitution. (2) That neither the state nor any county thereof can collect the tax, because section 91 of the revenue act of 1901 applies only to corporations organized under the laws of this state. And (3) that, even if the state can collect the tax under section 91 of said act, no county can do so, as it is a tax on the franchise of the corporation, and not a license or privilege tax, and the act confers no authority upon a county to collect such a tax. We will consider these propositions in the order above stated.

In the Constitution of the state (article 2, § 14) it is provided "that no law shall be passed to impose any tax upon the people of the state or to allow the counties to do so, unless the bill for the purpose shall have been read three several times in each house of the General Assembly and passed three several readings, which readings shall have been on three different days and agreed to by each house respectively, and unless the yeas and nays on the second and third readings of the bill shall have been entered on the journal." Assuming, for the sake of the argument, that the defendant, a nonresident corporation, and not a citizen of this state, can avail itself of any noncompliance with the provisions of that section (which, by its terms, applies only to a law imposing a tax upon the people of the state), for the reason that it is entitled to the rights and privileges of the citizens of this state, or to the equal protection of its laws (Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432), and assuming further that the section embraces an amendment to a bill, as well as the bill itself, if it is a material one, and imposes a new tax or increases a tax already provided for in the bill, we do not think that the defendant has succeeded in showing that the bill was not passed in strict accordance with the provisions of that section, or that any amendment to the bill, imposing the license taxes which the plaintiffs seek to recover in this case, was passed without a compliance with the requirements of the Constitution as contained in that section. The judge below found the facts by consent of the parties, a jury trial having been expressly waived, and any decision we may make must have reference to those facts as found and set out in the case, and can rest on them alone. We are not at liberty to consider any extraneous facts, or any evidence of such facts, nor any facts, even if they have been agreed upon, provided the law forbids them to be used for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of regularity arising from the ratification of the act; nor can the defendant show in any other way, or by any other evidence than that which the law says shall be the only kind of proof, the fact that the requirements of the Constitution were not observed. The judge finds "that the revenue act of 1901 appears by the Senate and House journals to have been read as a whole on three several days in each house of the General Assembly, and that the yeas and noes were entered on the journals upon the second and third readings." It is true he further finds that the bill, after it passed the House, was amended in the Senate, the amendments affecting about 30 sections of the bill; that a conference committee was appointed; and that its report recommending that the House concur in a large number of the Senate's amendments, and that the Senate recede from certain of its amendments, was adopted; and that the bill, as thus amended, was not read upon three several days in each house, nor were the yeas and noes entered upon the journals on the second and third readings. But it nowhere appears by any competent proof or by the admission of facts which we can consider that any of those amendments were of such a kind as to require them to be passed in the manner provided in article 2, § 14, of the Constitution, if that section applies to amendments to a bill—which it is not now necessary for us to decide.

We have, then, the ratification of the bill, which imports that it has become a law in due course of procedure, and its authentication as a bill that has passed the proper legislative body is complete and unimpeachable (Scarborough v. Robinson, 81 N. C. 409; Carr v. Coke, 116 N. C. 223, 22 S. E. 16; Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294; Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. Law, 29; Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616, 45 S. E. 1023) unless the Constitution requires that it should be passed in a certain way, which must appear in the journals, in which case reference may be had to the journals, as evidence in the court below, to determine whether it passed in that way. Bank v. Commissioners, 119 N. C. 214, 25 S. E. 966. We have the further fact, which was found by the judge, that the bill was read "as a whole" on three several days in each house, and the yeas and noes on the second and third readings duly entered on the journals. In order to show that this tax was imposed by an amendment in the Senate, the defendant asks us to consider the facts found by the judge as to the entries on the original bill which is filed in the State Librarian's office. This we are not permitted to do, although it may appear therefrom that such an amendment was adopted without compliance with article 2, § 14. The Constitution requires that it should appear, not from the entries on the original bill, but from the journal, that the bill was properly read, and that the necessary entry of the yeas and noes was made. If the journal shows that the bill was regularly passed, no evidence will be received to contradict what is therein recorded. The law requires the journals of the General Assembly to be deposited with the Secretary of State (Code, § 2867), and these journals, or a copy of them, certified as provided by law, are the only evidence that can be resorted to in order to overcome the presumption arising from the ratification of the act, and to invalidate it. It can be done in this way, but in no other. If it does not appear in the journals that the bill has been passed as required by article 2, § 14, the act is invalid; and if it appears that it has so passed, then it is valid. In neither case can the journals be contradicted by extraneous proof. In Gatlin v. Tarboro, 78 N. C. 119, this court, by Rodman, J., in discussing the necessity of proving that 30 days' notice of the application to pass a private bill had been given, says: "We cannot accept the agreement of the parties that no notice was in fact given as proof that it did not appear to the Legislature that the required notice had been given. In such a case the best and only proof is by the record. Our opinion on this point is supported by a recent decision in Illinois. Happel v. Brethauer, 70 Ill. 163, 22 Am. Rep. 70. If any weight were allowed to admissions of this sort, the law might change as each case was presented." In the case of Happel v. Brethauer, just cited, the court held that, if the Constitution had not been complied with in the passage of a bill, the fact must be shown by reference to the journals; and the court says, "In no other mode can we be properly advised." In Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640, it was held that on a question touching the validity of an act the court can look beyond the authentication of the act to the journal of either branch of the Legislature to see if the bill passed by the required number of votes, and that the legislative declaration upon that question is conclusive. In Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269, where a learned discussion of the question will be found, the court held that the Constitution required a journal to be kept of the proceedings of the Legislature, and that journal showed that the bill then under consideration had passed by the requisite majority. "In the face of the solemn record," says the court, "in which the Senate certifies its proceedings, in a matter of fact relating to its own conduct—in the apparent performance of its legal functions—this court is asked to inquire into or to dispute the veracity of the certificate. To do this would be to violate both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution, to invade a co-ordinate and independent department of the government, and to interfere with the separate and legitimate power and functions of the Legislature." In 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 491, we find it stated that "the journals of either house are the proper evidence of the action of that house upon all matters before it." To the same effect are the following authorities: Cooley's Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) p. 201; Black's Const. Law, 60; Odranoux's Const. Lim. 382; Happel v. Brethauer, 70 Ill. 166, 22 Am. Rep. 70; Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 31 N. W. 203; Detroit v. Wentz, 91 Mich. 78, 51 N. W. 787, 16 L. R. A. 59; White v. Hinton (Wyo.) 30 Pac. 953, 17 L. R. A. 86; Op. of Justices, 52 N. H. 622. In State v. Smith, 44 Ohio St.

343, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 529, it is said: "There are two rules in this country as to what evidence is admissible to authenticate the passage of a statute. One is according to the English doctrine, which is that it is not competent to go behind the parliamentary rolls; the other is that it is competent to go behind the enrollment of the statute to the journal. There is no sanction or authority for receiving evidence beyond the enrollment and the journal, and these records are conclusive and binding upon the courts." Numerous cases decided in this country are cited by the court to sustain its conclusion. The burden is always on the party who alleges that a statute was not passed according to the constitutional requirements, and he must furnish the competent evidence necessary to overcome the presumption arising from the ratification of the act. This proof must appear in the record. Railroad v. Wren, 43 Ill. 77; Larrison v. Railroad, 77 Ill. 11. We do not think that such proof as is sufficient to impeach section 91 of the act has been introduced in this case, if we exclude the entries on the original bill as incompetent, which we must do, as the provision of the Constitution is designed "not only to compel each member present to assume as well as to feel his due share of responsibility in legislation," but also to furnish "definite and conclusive evidence whether the bill has been passed by the requisite majority or not." Cooley on Stat. Lim., supra.

Having concluded that the revenue act, including section 91, is a valid enactment, we must next inquire whether that section applies only to corporations organized under the laws of this state. It is provided in the section that "on each and every corporation organized under the laws of this state or doing business in this state an annual franchise tax shall be assessed." The contention of the defendant's counsel is that the word "or" should be construed to mean "and," as it is further provided in the section that any corporation failing to pay the tax shall forfeit its charter, which provision could not apply to the defendant, as it is a nonresident, and that the tax shall be payable in the county "where it has its principal office," the defendant having its principal office outside the state, though its principal office in this state—where it has four offices—is in Wilmington. The object in the interpretation of all statutes is to ascertain the meaning and the intent of the Legislature, to the end that the intent may be enforced; and the construction must be according to the language employed, if it is not ambiguous, as it must be presumed that such language has been used by the Legislature as fit and suitable to express its will correctly. Black, Int. of Laws, 35. We cannot change words or insert one word for another unless it is necessary to do so in order to make that clear or intelligible which otherwise will be ambiguous or meaningless. We find no such necessity in this case. The Legislature, in our opinion, has said precisely what it meant, and has expressed that meaning with sufficient clearness by its language to enable us to see and understand it without interfering with the phraseology, or the form of expression, which it chose to use in declaring its purpose. No good reason can be assigned why the Legislature should tax domestic corporations, and not tax those of other states who seek to do business in this state, and who thus come in competition with our home institutions. Such a course would seem to be a clear discrimination against the latter, and, if lawful, would not be fair and just; and we would not impute such a motive to the Legislature without the use by it of language which would leave no other construction possible. We do not think the considerations urged as reasons why we should adopt plaintiff's interpretation of the section are sufficient to induce us to change the words of the statute so as to give it a meaning of which it is not now susceptible.

The third ground of objection to the tax is equally untenable. It is true that section 91 provides for an annual franchise tax; but this section is in Schedule C, and section 87 of the act, which is the first section of Schedule C, provides that taxes imposed by that schedule "shall be for the privilege of carrying on the business or doing the act named and shall be subject to the other regulations mentioned in section 35 under Schedule B." Turning to section 35, we find it to be expressly provided that a tax may be imposed by the county, in addition to the state tax, upon the subjects of taxation mentioned in that section. It is provided by section 102 of the act (Schedule C) that, when a specific license tax is levied for the privilege of carrying on any business, the county may levy the same tax, unless a provision to the contrary is made in the section levying the specific license tax. Schedule C provides for what is called "license taxes" to be paid by a designated class of corporations, such as railroads, banks, building and loan associations, insurance, telegraph, telephone, and express companies, the amount of the tax being fixed at a certain per cent. on gross receipts or earnings; and on other corporations a tax is levied for carrying on their business, the assessment of which is graduated according to the capital stock paid in or subscribed, and this is called a "franchise tax," but it is nevertheless, by the very terms of section 87, a privilege or license tax. It is to be observed, in this connection, that sections 89 and 90, which provide for the tax on the first class of corporations we have mentioned, contain a clause exempting those corporations from a county tax, and the taxes imposed by those sections are paid directly to the State Treasurer; but section 91 contains no such clause of exemption, so as to bring it within the operation of the proviso to section 102, and the tax, by section 91, is required to be paid in the county where the corporation has its principal office, which would indicate that a county as well as a state tax was contemplated. Upon a review of the several sections of the revenue act relating to this matter, we are constrained to think that the defendant is liable for the taxes sought to be recovered in this action. But it is only liable, under the act, to the state, and to the county where it has its principal office if the latter has seen fit to impose the tax.

It must be certified that there is no error in the judgment of the superior court. No error.

DOUGLAS, J., concurs only in result.

(135 N. C. 164)

HELMS v. HELMS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 26, 1904.)

DEEDS — CONSTRUCTION — CONDITIONS SUBSEQUENT — COVENANTS — ESTOPPEL IN PAIS — MUTUAL MISTAKE — EVIDENCE — TRIAL — ISSUES.

1. The refusal to submit issues, the answers to which will not affect the result, is not error.

2. On the issue whether, by mutual mistake, a provision that the grantor's deed should be void if grantee failed to support grantor was omitted from the deed, evidence that the grantor stated to the grantee, at the time, and before delivery of the deed, that it should be void if grantee failed to support grantor, is insufficient to support such claim.

3. A provision in a deed, that it shall be void on the grantee's failure to support the grantor, is a condition subsequent, a breach of which is available only to the grantor.

4. A clause in a deed, following the statement of a nominal consideration of one dollar, reciting, "and for the further consideration of the support during" the life of the grantor by the grantee, is not a condition subsequent, but a matter of consideration, or at most a covenant.

5. An owner conveyed land by deed, which required the grantee therein to support the owner for life. Thereafter the owner conveyed the same land to a third person. Held, that one claiming under such third person was not subrogated to the owner's right to enforce her claim against the grantee for support, which claim arose after the execution of the deed to his grantor.

6. A declaration, by a grantee in a deed duly recorded, to the effect that he does not claim any interest in the land conveyed, does not operate as an estoppel in pais in favor of a subsequent grantee from the same grantor, having actual notice of the prior deed.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Union County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by William L. Helms against Hane Helms and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Adams, Jerome & Armfield, for appellants. Redwine & Stack, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. Elmira Helms, being the owner of an undivided one-sixth interest in the locus in quo, executed a deed on the 14th day of August, 1897, to William L. Helms, conveying such interest to him, in consideration of "one dollar to her paid by William L. Helms, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and the further consideration of the support during the natural life of the party of the first part." Following the covenant of warranty are these words: "And it is further understood and agreed between the parties that the above lands shall stand good for the support and maintenance of the said Elmira Helms during her natural life." This deed was recorded August 14, 1897. On the 17th of August, 1898, the said Elmira conveyed her one-sixth interest in a part of the land to Gabriel W. Helms. This interest was afterwards conveyed to defendant Haney Helms. Elmira died February 3, 1903. W. L. Helms on April 7, 1903, brought this special proceeding, making the other tenants in common parties defendant, for the partition of the land, claiming one-sixth interest therein by virtue of said deed from Elmira. The defendant Haney Helms filed a separate answer, denying that the said William L. owned any interest in the land, for that, in the execution of the deed, it was understood and agreed that the consideration thereof was the future support and maintenance of the said Elmira by him, and that he undertook and agreed that he would support her during her natural life, and, if he failed to do so, said deed would be void. He also says that such condition should have been inserted in the deed, but was omitted by "inadvertence or otherwise" of the draughtsman; that he never supported the said Elmira, and disclaimed having any interest in said land. He sets up the deed from Elmira to Gabriel, and the heirs of Gabriel to himself, for her undivided interest in the land. He further says that the real owners of said land have made partition thereof and are in possession of their respective shares. He asks that the deed from Elmira to the plaintiff be canceled, etc. By an amended answer the defendant Haney says that the plaintiff failed and refused to support the said Elmira, and that in her last sickness she required attention, etc., amounting in value to $10 per month, and that by reason thereof the land became subject to a charge of several hundred dollars; that by the deed of Elmira to Gabriel Helms, and from the heirs of Gabriel to him, he is subrogated to the rights of Elmira "in and to the charge on the land for the support," etc., "of said Elmira"; and he hereby pleads the same as an estoppel or bar to any claim for the said land by the said W. L. Helms. The plaintiff filed a reply to the new matter set up in the answer, denying same. The cause was transferred to the civil issue docket for trial. The plaintiff tendered the following issue: "Is the plaintiff the owner and entitled to be let into possession of the one-sixth interest in the land described in the complaint?" The defendant tendered several issues directed to the inquiry whether there was an agreement between Elmira and

W. L. Helms that the deed should be void if W. L. Helms failed to support said Elmira, and whether such agreement was omitted by the mutual mistake or ignorance of the parties or of the draughtsman; also whether W. L. Helms supported said Elmira, and the value of such support. His honor declined to submit the issues tendered by the defendant, and adopted that tendered by the plaintiff. Defendant excepted.

In respect to the first two issues tendered by the defendants, it is sufficient to say that, if found in the affirmative, such finding could not have affected the result or judgment. It would have amounted simply to a finding that the parties made an agreement and that they failed to insert it in the deed. The proposition is stated by the defendant when he placed M. L. Flow upon the stand, and proposed to prove by him that he "drew the deed, and that Elmira stated to W. L. Helms at the time, and before delivering the deed, that the deed should be void if W. L. Helms failed to provide for and take care of Elmira." There is no suggestion in the evidence offered that there was any agreement or understanding that the provision should be put in the deed, or that the draughtsman was instructed to do so. Green v. Sherrod, 105 N. C. 197, 10 S. E. 986, is exactly in point, as are also Norris v. McLam, 104 N. C. 159, 10 S. E. 140, and Frazier v. Frazier, 129 N. C. 30, 39 S. E. 634. If the deed had contained the words suggested, they would have constituted a condition subsequent. Could advantage have been taken of its breach by any one except the grantor, and is there any allegation that she did so? The exception to his honor's refusal to submit these issues cannot be sustained.

The other issues tendered were immaterial. The only questions upon which the decision of the cause depended are whether the words, "and for the further consideration of the support during the natural life of the party of the first part by the party of the second part," create a condition subsequent, and, if so, whether, in the light of the pleadings, the said Elmira availed herself of the breach, or whether her deed vested in the defendant the power to enter for condition broken. The defendant Haney Helms was introduced by the plaintiff. The defendants, upon cross-examination, proposed to show by him that the plaintiff never supported, cared for, or maintained Elmira in any way whatever, or contributed thereto, after the execution of the deed; that he admitted he did not claim any interest in the land in controversy; that such admissions were made before and after the death of Elmira; that in consequence of such statements he took the deed from the heirs of Gabriel Helms; that W. R. Williams and wife supported Elmira; that the plaintiff never took exclusive possession of said land, but simply went on the same to live with Elmira a short time after execution of the deed, and remained there only six months, and abandoned all claim to the land, etc. To all of this evidence the plaintiff objected, and upon the objection being sustained the defendant excepted. Defendant moved to dismiss the proceeding under the Hinsdale Act, and to his honor's refusal to allow the motion excepted. Defendant introduced M. L. Flow, and proposed to ask him the question hereinbefore set out; also, as to conversations with plaintiff in regard to the land, before and since the death of Elmira. All of this proposed evidence was, upon objection, excluded, and defendant excepted. The defendant offered to show by the tax list that plaintiff had not listed the land for taxes. This was excluded. Defendant renewed his motion to dismiss, and to his honor's refusal excepted. The court instructed the jury that if they believed the evidence, which was documentary, to answer the issue, "Yes," and to this the defendant excepted.

The defendant assigns a large number of errors. They all involve the same question, and must be disposed of upon the same principle. Does the language of the deed operate as a condition subsequent, the breach of which entitles the grantor to avoid the deed and divests the title out of plaintiff, or does it operate as a covenant to furnish support, a breach of which constitutes a charge upon the land? The rule of construction is thus stated: "Conditions subsequent are not favored in the law, and are construed strictly, because they tend to destroy estates." Kent's Com. (13th Ed.) *130. "If it be doubtful whether a clause in a deed be a covenant or a condition, the courts will incline against the latter construction; for a covenant is far preferable to the tenant." Id. *132. "A conveyance in consideration of support to be furnished the grantor or another person does not create a condition, unless apt words of condition are used; and even then it will not be held to create a condition, unless it is apparent from the whole instrument that a strict condition was intended." Jones, Law of Conveyances, p. 534, § 646.

In Laxton v. Tilley, 66 N. C. 327, the deed recited that it was made "for and in consideration of $200 and the faithful maintenance of T. L. and wife, P. L." Held, that the maintenance was a charge upon the land. In McNeely v. McNeely, 82 N. C. 183, the land was devised "to my son Billy, at the death of his mother, by him seeing to her." It was held that the words "by him seeing to her" did not operate as a condition to terminate or impair his estate. Smith, C. J., says: "The words are in themselves vague and indefinite, and, if an essential and defeating condition of the gift, would be very difficult of application. What is meant by a 'seeing to' the widow, and what neglects fall short of that duty? * * * And how is the dividing line to be run between such omissions as are, and such as are not, fatal to the devise? * * * Titles would be rendered very precarious and uncertain if such matters in pais were allowed to defeat a vested estate." In Gray v. West, 93 N. C. 442, 53 Am. Rep. 462, the language was "that A. G. should have support out of the land." Held, that the support was a charge on the rents and profits. In Misenheimer v. Sifford, 94 N. C. 592, the devise was to A., "provided he maintain his mother during life comfortably, and shall give her house room and firewood during her life or widowhood." Held a charge on the rents and profits, and not a condition. In Outland v. Outland, 118 N. C. 138, 23 S. E. 972, the language was construed a charge on the land. Wall v. Wall, 126 N. C. 405, 35 S. E. 811. The language in Tilley v. King, 109 N. C. 461, 13 S. E. 936, was: "And if P. H. T. stays with us until after our deaths, then I give this land to him." This was held (Shepherd, J., delivering the opinion) a condition precedent. He says: "The words used by the testator are words of strict condition." The learned justice distinguishes the case from those "where a devising clause is followed by or coupled with a proviso that the devisee shall pay to another a specific sum, or to support or maintain a certain person," citing Misenheimer v. Sifford, supra. Erwin v. Erwin, 115 N. C. 366, 20 S. E. 520, which appears to hold otherwise, is overruled in Allen v. Allen, 121 N. C. 333, 28 S. E. 513; Montgomery, J., saying "that, being in doubt, we are disposed to adopt the first view, because the law favors the vesting of estates, and leans to the view of a charge, rather than a condition precedent."

Looking to other jurisdictions, we find the same trend of thought. In Lindsey v. Lindsey, 62 Ga. 546, Jackson, J., says: "The consideration of the deed is the continued support of the father by his son, to whom it is made. This is not a condition precedent." In McCardle v. Kennedy, 92 Ga. 198, 17 S. E. 1001, 44 Am. St. Rep. 85, it is said: "The failure to pay the purchase money, or the failure to maintain and support the grantor, if that be the consideration, is not a sufficient reason for rescinding the contract of sale." In Pownal v. Taylor, 10 Leigh, 172, 34 Am. Dec. 725, Tucker, P., says: "There is nothing, I think, in the proposition that the provision for support and maintenance constituted a condition for the breach of which the grantor might re-enter. It was a charge, not a condition. It was a declaration of a beneficial interest, or a trust, which might be enforced in equity, but which was perfectly consistent with the existence of the fee in the grantee." Speaking of the right of the grantor to re-enter, he says: "This cannot be, unless the grantor had expressly reserved the right to re-enter upon failure of the grantee to fulfill the purposes of the grant." A deed was made "in consideration of natural love and affection, as well as for the better maintenance and support" of the grantor. It was held that the maintenance, etc., was the consideration, and not a condition subsequent.

etc. Risley v. McNiece, 71 Ind. 434. The same view is expressed by the Supreme Court of Illinois, the judge saying: "There is nothing in the form of the language here employed to indicate that it was intended that the conveyance was upon a condition. The words 'upon condition' do not appear. There is no clause providing that the grantor shall re-enter in any event, and these are the usual indications of an intent to create a condition subsequent." Gallaher v. Herbert, 117 Ill. 160, 7 N. E. 511. In Ayer v. Emery, 14 Allen (96 Mass.) 67, the same principle is announced; Bigelow, O. J., saying: "But it is perfectly well settled that an estate on condition cannot be created by deed, except when the terms of the grant will admit of no other reasonable interpretation." See, also, Studdard v. Wells, 120 Mo. 25, 25 S. W. 201.

While several of the cases cited arose upon the construction of wills, we find no distinction made, and no reason for making any, between wills and deeds. The difficulties which readily occur in treating provisions of this kind as conditions are numerous. The uncertainty into which titles would be thrown is a strong reason for construing provisions for support as covenants, and not conditions, is recognized by the courts. To treat them as mere personal covenants, having no security for their performance save the personal liability of the grantee, would often lead to injustice, leaving persons who had made provision for support in old age or sickness without adequate protection or relief. The courts have almost uniformly treated the claim for support and maintenance as a charge upon the land, which will follow it into the hands of purchasers. In this way the substantial rights of both grantor and grantee are preserved. "The grantee, by accepting the deed and entering into possession under it, becomes bound by the agreement providing for the support of the grantor, and the provision for support thus becomes equivalent to a life annuity." Devlin on Deeds, § 807. It is also said that courts of equity will freely rescind conveyances by parents to sons upon breach of the agreement to support. Buffalow v. Buffalow, 22 N. C. 241; Jones on Conveyances, 646.

The last clause in the deed from Elmira to plaintiff, we think, shows that the parties understood that her support was to constitute a charge on the land. It was in this way that the land was to "stand good for the support and maintenance" of said Elmira during her natural life. We therefore conclude that she was during her life entitled to charge upon the land her support. It may be that in the light of the conduct of the plaintiff a court of equity would have declared him a trustee, and directed reconveyance of the land; but she sought neither remedy. Buffalow v. Buffalow, supra. The legal title was in the plaintiff, and could not be divested by a subsequent conveyance to some other person. "The grantor cannot rescind a deed, in consideration of support for his life, by exacting a subsequent conveyance, without the consent of the grantee, for the reason that the support has been withheld. He must resort to his action either for the value of the support withheld or to rescind on equitable grounds." Devlin on Deeds, 975; McCaudle v. Kennedy, 92 Ga. 198, 17 S. E. 1001, 44 Am. St. Rep. 85.

To the suggestion that the defendant was subrogated to the right of Elmira to enforce any claim that she had for her support, it may be said that such claim originated after the execution of the deed to his grantors. If the defendant had actually paid out money for her support, which it was the duty of the plaintiff to have furnished, it may be that equity would have subrogated him to such claim, to be enforced as a charge upon the land in some appropriate proceeding. This question is not presented, because there is no allegation that the plaintiff supported her. Whatever rights Williams may have had in this respect did not pass to the plaintiff by his conveyance. The declaration of the plaintiff as to his interest in the land could not operate as an estoppel in pais. It was proposed to show that he simply said that he did not claim any interest in the land. His deed was on record, and the defendant had notice of it. It would seem that he had actual notice. He took the risk of buying with the facts before him. There is nothing in the conduct of the plaintiff commending his claim to the favor of the court. His conduct is another illustration of the necessity for carefully safeguarding the rights of persons who convey their land to secure a support in their last days. In the reported cases of this and other states, as well as the experience of most lawyers, is found painful proof of the danger of weak and unusually ignorant persons making such dispositions of their property. Courts of equity will relieve them upon slight evidence of fraud, and courts of law will protect them as best they can by charging the support on the land. It would, however, render titles uncertain and precarious to construe into a condition that which is a matter of consideration, or at most a covenant.

We have carefully examined the numerous exceptions of the defendant, and find no error in his honor's rulings.

No error.

OLARK, C. J. (dissenting). Elmira Helms, being desirous of obtaining a support in her old age in exchange for her land, conveyed it to William Helms, in consideration of "one dollar and the further consideration of the support during the natural life of the party of the first part"; and then in her poor way she added, "and it is further understood and agreed between the parties that the above lands shall stand good for the support and maintenance of the said Elmira Helms during her natural life." She was not a learned and technical lawyer. Had she been, the instrument would have been worded differently; but it is impossible not to see that these parties "understood and agreed" upon something different from an absolute and untrammelled conveyance, and that, in fact, the consideration being for the grantor's support, the grantee was not to have the land absolutely unless and until such consideration was fully paid. It was agreed that the "lands shall stand good for the support and maintenance of said Elmira Helms during her natural life." The parties understood this, and expressed it intelligibly, though not in words of technical art. The plaintiff, being out of possession, cannot recover, certainly not in a court combining equity with law, without showing a compliance with his contract. Dreibach v. Serfass (Pa.) 17 Atl. 513, 3 L. R. A. 836; Williams v. Bentley, 27 Pa. 294. In fact, the court would adjudge upon the evidence that, by the abandonment of the performance of his part of the contract by the plaintiff, the instrument became null and void. Hawkins v. Pepper, 117 N. C. 407, 23 S. E. 434. Upon the face of the agreement, if there was no support whatever, there was to be no conveyance in exchange. The contract was in the nature of a conveyance reserving the vendor's lien till the purchase money was paid, whereupon only the title should become absolute. Till then it "stood good"—was retained—to secure such payment. In many states the vendor's lien exists till the purchase money is paid, though there be no reservation in the deed, and such was formerly the law in this state. Wynne v. Alston, 16 N. C. 163, later overruled by Womble v. Battle, 38 N. C. 182, upon the sole ground that our registration law was intended to destroy all secret liens or reservations, not upon the face of the deed. The reasoning does not apply here, where the condition is expressed, nor to the grantee in the instrument; for, as to him, the agreement is binding, with or without registration. There is no reason the parties cannot, and in such cases as this there is every reason why they should, retain title till the consideration is paid. Such provision, showing the manifest intent of the parties, should be construed according to the actual understanding and agreement of the parties, and upheld in this court of equity, however it might have been in a court of law. It is not technical language that we should seek, but to effectuate the true agreement and understanding of the parties.

In fact, the grantee never took possession of the land at all, nor listed it at any time for taxation, nor paid any part of the consideration. He admitted such facts, both before and since Elmira's death, and, in consequence of such default and abandonment of the contract, Elmira executed another deed to Gabriel Helms, under whom the defendant Haney Helms claims, to secure her support, which she thus obtained. The defendants offered this evidence; and, in view of the contract that the "lands shall stand good for the support of Elmira Helms during her natural life," the evidence should have been admitted. It matters little whether these words constituted an inartificially expressed mortgage, or a retention of the vendor's lien, or a defeasance upon failure of consideration. The important consideration is to effectuate the true and manifest agreement of the parties, which requires that the plaintiff, who has paid nothing whatever for the land, shall not recover it in spite of his agreement that the land "shall stand good" for the purchase money against those who paid the stipulated consideration after the plaintiff had abandoned and wholly failed to execute the contract. The evidence offered and excluded went to show that proper technical words to make this instrument a conveyance on condition or a mortgage were omitted by "ignorance or mistake"; grounds held sufficient in Green v. Sherrod, 105 N. C. 197, 10 S. E. 966, Norris v. McLam, 104 N. C. 159, 10 S. E. 140, and Frazier v. Frazier, 129 N. C. 30, 39 S. E. 684. Indeed, when, as was offered to be shown here, it was agreed between the parties at the time the deed was delivered that it should operate as a mortgage as against the original grantee, the court will so decree, though the defeasance clause was not omitted through ignorance, mistake, fraud, or undue advantage. Waters v. Crabtree, 105 N. C. 394, 11 S. E. 240; Watkins v. Williams, 123 N. C. 170, 31 S. E. 388; Porter v. White, 128 N. C. 42, 38 S. E. 24; Fuller v. Jenkins, 130 N. C. 554, 41 S. E. 706. In Laxton v. Tilley, 66 N. C. 827, the words, "In consideration of $200 and the faithful maintenance of T. L. and wife," were held a charge upon the land, and there are several cases to like purport. But here the clause is added, "stand good for the support of" the grantor during her natural life, which is stronger, and, taken in connection with the evidence offered, that the grantee never accepted or acted upon such contract, but immediately abandoned and altogether failed to act upon the contract, the judge should not have instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff; but he should have left it for them, in view of the ignorance of the grantor and the evidence of language cotemporaneous with the execution of the deed, to say whether the intention was to make a conveyance subject to the grantor's lien. If so, the purchase money not having been paid, the title remained vested in the grantor, and passed by her subsequent conveyance to the grantor of the defendant. There was an allegation in the complaint that technical words to express the "condition precedent" were omitted by ignorance or inadvertence. It was error to refuse to submit such issue and evidence to prove it. Davidson v. Gifford, 100 N. C. 18, 6 S. E. 718.

This was a conveyance upon condition.

"The land was to stand good"—remain the property of the grantor until and unless its owner, Elmira, was "supported during her natural life" by William Helms. Not having complied with this condition, and not having paid a dollar to the support of Elmira, but having stood by while others were supporting her under a similar contract made after his abandonment of this agreement, William Helms should not now recover the land from those who did support Elmira. It would be unconscionable. Being in possession, Elmira could not re-enter for condition broken. Frost v. Butler, 22 Am. Dec. 199. It is not conceivable that Elmira contracted that if William Helms did not support her, and should refuse to execute the contract altogether, she reserved the privilege to bring suit and have him declared a trustee and ordered to reconvey. She had neither the knowledge nor the means to do this, and where would she have gotten a support during the years of such litigation? Her contract, both written and verbal, was dictated by common sense. "The land was to stand good" for her support, and, if William Helms did not give the support, the land was good. It was to remain hers till the support was completed. No other construction can reasonably and justly be placed upon this agreement of the parties. Construed otherwise, it is a nullity.

(135 N. C. 181)

SIGMAN v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 23, 1904.)

APPEAL—CASE—RECORD—INDEX—EXCEPTIONS—RAILROADS—PERSONAL INJURIES—FEL-LOW SERVANTS.

1. Appeals will be dismissed where no index is sent up in the record and printed, and no marginal references prepared, as required by rules 10 and 28 (27 S. E. vii, viii).

2. Under Code, § 550, and Supreme Court rule 27 (27 S. E. viii), it is imperative that the exceptions be briefly and clearly stated and numbered in the case on appeal.

3. Under Supreme Court rule 22 (27 S. E. viii), providing that irrelevant matter not needed to explain exceptions or errors assigned shall not be included in the record on appeal, only enough of the record should be included to show that the case is properly constituted; and this, with the summons, pleadings, verdict, and judgment, and the case on appeal setting out so much of the proceedings at the trial as will throw light upon the exceptions taken, is all that is necessary.

4. An exception that "the court erred in its charge to the jury" is too broad to be considered.

5. Under Priv. Laws 1897, c. 56, p. 83, declaring that, where any servant or employé of a railroad company is injured in the course of his service or employment in the said company, the fact that the injury is due to the negligence of a fellow servant shall not be a defense, a workman injured by the negligence of a fellow servant while engaged in repairing a railroad bridge is within the terms of the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; Allen, Judge.

Action by E. M. Sigman against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. O. Caldwell, for appellant. Furches, Coble & Nicholson and R. B. McLaughlin, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. No index was sent up in the record and printed, nor any marginal references, as required by rules 19 (2), 19 (3), and 28 (27 S. E. vii, viii). As provided by rule 20, it was therefore optional with the court to dismiss the action or to postpone its consideration, and in the meantime to refer the record to the clerk, "to put the record in the prescribed shape," with an allowance to him of $5 therefor, and an order that execution issue forthwith for that amount, and for the cost of printing the additional matter. The court in this case chose the latter alternative. But these rules are required for the prompt consideration of the business coming up to this court, and, if they are not carefully complied with, it will become necessary hereafter to dismiss in cases of their nonobservance. The fullest notice to this effect has heretofore been given. Alexander v. Alexander, 120 N. C. 474, 27 S. E. 121; Lucas v. Railroad, 121 N. C. 508, 28 S. E. 285; Pretzfelder v. Insurance Co., 123 N. C. 168, 31 S. E. 470, 44 L. R. A. 424; Baker v. Hobgood, 128 N. C. 152, 35 S. E. 253; and Brinkley v. Smith, 130 N. C. 226, 41 S. E. 106, in which last attention is called to the fact that these requirements must be observed even in pauper appeals, except only the requirement as to printing.

The record is also defective in not containing the marginal references required by rule 21, nor are the exceptions "briefly and clearly stated and numbered" in the case on appeal as required by the Code, § 550, and also by rule 27 (27 S. E. viii). This is imperative, and the attention of the profession is called to this requirement as to stating the exceptions in the case on appeal. The statute and rule would not have been made if experience had not demonstrated that this provision was necessary for the prompt and orderly dispatch of the business coming before us. On the other hand, some records infringe upon rule 22 by sending up "irrelevant matter not needed to explain the exceptions or errors assigned." Durham v. Railroad, 108 N. C. 399, 12 S. E. 1040, 13 S. E. 1; Mining Co. v. Smelting Co., 119 N. C. 415, 28 S. E. 27; Hancock v. Railroad, 124 N. C. 228, 32 S. E. 679. As, for instance, in some cases the transcript is incumbered with pages of entries of continuances from term to term and other proceedings at terms prior to the trial term, which are often sent up; when they throw no possible light upon the exceptions assigned. The appellate court does not need a complete history of the cause, but only enough of the record to show that the case is properly constituted, and the summons, pleadings, verdict, and judgment, which are the "record proper," and the case on appeal, which should set out so much of the proceedings at the trial as will throw light upon the exceptions taken. The above, when properly indexed, with marginal references, and printed, will present to the court all that is necessary for the proper consideration of an appeal. More than this is an unnecessary expense to the appellant, and a hindrance, rather than a help, to the court, while less than the above moderate requirements is just ground for dismissal or other appropriate action. It is the duty of the appellant to see to it that the requirements as to the appeal are complied with. Cases cited, Clark's Code (3d Ed.) p. 921.

§ 5. See Master and Servant, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. § 365.

The record in this appeal having been put in shape by the clerk to whom the transcript was referred, and the additional matter printed, the exceptions have now been fully considered. The first exception, that the court erred in not nonsuiting the plaintiff at the close of the evidence, is without merit. The second exception is that "the court erred in its charge to the jury." This is "broadside," and cannot be considered. See numerous cases collected in Clark's Code (3d Ed.) pp. 513, 514, 773, 921. Neither the appellee nor the court can be thus called on to grope through the entire charge, when the appellant does not specifically point out by an exception wherein he has been hurt by an error therein. It admits of some surprise that an exception in such terms should still appear in any case sent to this court.

The other exceptions are to giving special instructions asked by the plaintiff, and for refusing certain instructions asked by the defendant, and for modification of the defendant's third prayer. Upon careful consideration of these matters, we find no error therein, and nothing requiring discussion in this opinion, as the propositions of law involved have been well settled by numerous decisions which the judge below carefully followed.

The plaintiff was injured by the negligence of a fellow servant while working upon and repairing a bridge of the defendant railroad. It is settled that the fellow-servant law (chapter 56, p. 83, Priv. Laws 1897) applies to railroad employees injured in the course of their service or employment with such corporation, whether they are running trains or rendering any other service. In Mott v. Railroad, 131 N. C., at page 237, 42 S. E. 602, it is said: "The language of the statute is both comprehensive and explicit. It embraces injuries sustained (in the words of the statute) by 'any servant or employé of any railroad company * * * in the course of his services or employment with said company.' The plaintiff was an employé, and was injured in the course of his service or employment." To same effect, Railroad v. Pontius, 157 U. S. 209, 15 Sup. Ct. 585, 39 L. Ed. 675; Tullis v. Railroad, 175 U. S. 352, 20 Sup. Ct. 136, 44 L. Ed. 192; Railroad v. Harris, 33 Kan. 416, 6 Pac. 571; Railroad v. Koehler, 37 Kan. 463, 15 Pac. 567; Railroad v. Stahley, 62 Fed. 363, 11 C. C. A. 88; and many other cases.

No error.

(125 N. C. 204)

DRUM v. MILLER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 26, 1904.)

TORTS — NEGLIGENCE — LIABILITY — NATURAL CONSEQUENCE OF ACTS — UNFORESEEN CONSEQUENCES — SCHOOLS — RELATION OF TEACHER TO PUPIL — RIGHT TO CHASTISE.

1. An act done by a teacher in the exercise of his authority, and not prompted by malice, is not actionable, though it may cause permanent injury, unless a person of ordinary prudence could reasonably have foreseen that a permanent injury would naturally or probably result from the act.

2. Where an act is itself lawful, liability depends not on the particular consequences or results that may flow from it, but upon whether a prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, would have foreseen the injury or damage that would naturally or probably have resulted from the act.

3. In order to render one who does a lawful act negligently liable, it is not necessary that he should have been able to have foreseen the injury in the precise form in which it in fact resulted, or that he should have anticipated the particular consequence which did actually flow from his act, but it is sufficient that the act is one which the perpetrator should, in the exercise of ordinary prudence, have foreseen would probably result in harm or injury of some kind.

4. In an action against a teacher for injuries to pupil caused by the teacher throwing a pencil at the pupil, which permanently injured his eye, an instruction that, unless the jury found that a reasonably prudent man might reasonably, or in the exercise of ordinary care, have expected that the injury complained of would result from his act in throwing the pencil, defendant should be found not liable, was erroneous, as requiring defendant to foresee not only that the injury would result, but that the particular injury would be the probable consequence of his act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County: Shaw, Judge.

Action by Arthur Drum against Abel S. Miller. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

This is an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for an injury to one of his eyes, which is alleged in the complaint to have been caused by the wrongful and negligent act of the defendant. There is not much dispute about the facts. At the time the injury was received the defendant was a teacher in a public school of Catawba county, and the plaintiff was one of his pupils. While the school was in session, and plaintiff's class was reciting one of its lessons, the attention of the plaintiff was attracted by some disturbance in the schoolroom, and when he turned his head to see what it was the defendant threw at him a pencil, which he at the time had in his hand. The plaintiff turned his head back just at the time the pencil reached him, and it struck him in the eye, inflicting a very painful and serious wound, and causing partial, if not total, blindness. The plaintiff insisted that the act of the defendant in throwing the pencil was done maliciously, and that, even if there was no malice, the injury to the plaintiff was a permanent one, and, in either view of the case, the defendant was liable to him, without regard to any question of negligence or of proximate cause. The defendant contended, on the contrary, that there was no malice, and that, if a permanent injury was the result of the act, he threw the pencil at the plaintiff for the purpose of attracting his attention, and in the exercise of his right of correction and discipline, without intending to cause any injury to the plaintiff, and not foreseeing at the time that such a result would flow from his act. Without objection, the court submitted to the jury two issues, as follows: "(1) Did the defendant wrongfully injure plaintiff, as alleged in the complaint? (2) What damage, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover?"

There were no prayers for instructions asked by the plaintiff. The court charged the jury as follows: That, if they believed the evidence, they should find "that the defendant was a school teacher, and that plaintiff was his pupil, and was reciting his lesson at the time of his alleged injury. A teacher has the authority to inflict upon his pupil such punishment as, in his judgment, may be necessary for the purpose of correction; and unless such punishment shall seriously endanger the life, limb, or health of the pupil, or shall disfigure him, or cause some permanent injury to him, or was inflicted not in the honest discharge of his duty as a teacher, but under the pretext of duty to gratify his malice, then the teacher would not be responsible for the injury to the child; or, if the injury was not the proximate cause of the punishment, the teacher would not be responsible therefor. An act is the proximate cause of an injury either when it is the direct cause thereof, or when the injury is the natural and probable consequence of the act, and when, in the exercise of ordinary care, an ordinarily prudent person would have foreseen that such consequences would likely be produced thereby. A party is presumed to have intended the necessary as well as the natural and probable consequence of his acts." The court then explained to the jury what is malice, and further charged them that, if the plaintiff was inattentive, and defendant threw the pencil at him for the purpose of punishing him, and inflicted a permanent injury upon him, or if he threw the pencil at the plaintiff for the purpose of gratifying his malice, and injured him, and the injury was proximately caused by the throwing of the pencil, they should answer the first issue "Yes"; but if they found that the pencil was thrown not for the purpose of punishing the plaintiff, but to recall his attention to the recitation, and they further found from all the surrounding circumstances that a reasonably prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, would not have foreseen that an injury would likely have resulted therefrom, then they should answer the first issue "No," although they should further find that the plaintiff was permanently injured, for, if injured under such circumstances, it was an accident; an accident being an event from a known cause. The jury were further instructed that, unless they found from the evidence that plaintiff's injury was the natural and probable consequence of defendant's act in pitching or throwing the pencil, and unless they found that a prudent man might reasonably, or in the exercise of ordinary care, have expected or anticipated that the injury would likely result from the defendant's act, they should answer the first issue "No." The court then gave the defendant's second prayer for instructions, as follows: "Unless you find from the evidence that the plaintiff's injury was the natural and probable consequence of the defendant's act in pitching or throwing the pencil, it will be your duty to answer the first issue 'No;'" and also the defendant's third prayer, as follows: "Unless you find from the evidence that a reasonable prudent man might reasonably, or in the exercise of ordinary care, have expected or anticipated that the injury complained of would likely result from the defendant's act in throwing or pitching the pencil, you should answer the first issue 'No.'" The jury answered the first issue "No," and therefore did not answer the second. There was a judgment in accordance with the verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

T. M. Hufham, for appellant. Self & Whitener, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). Several exceptions were taken by the plaintiff to the judge's charge, only two of which we deem it necessary to notice. One of these exceptions is based upon the plaintiff's contention that, if he was permanently injured by the act of the defendant, he is entitled to recover, whether that act was the proximate cause of the injury or not, or could or could not reasonably have been foreseen. We cannot agree with the plaintiff in this contention. It is undoubtedly true that a teacher is liable if, in correcting or disciplining a pupil, he acts maliciously, or inflicts a permanent injury; but he has the authority to correct his pupil when he is disobedient or inattentive to his duties, and any act done in the exercise of this authority, and not prompted by malice, is not actionable, though it may cause permanent injury, unless a person of ordinary prudence could reasonably foresee that a permanent injury of some kind would naturally or probably result from the act. There is a distinction, we think, between the case of an injury inflicted in the performance of a lawful act and one in which the act causing the injury is in itself unlawful, or is, at least, a wilful wrong. In the latter case the defendant is liable for any consequence that may flow from his act as the proximate cause thereof, whether he could foresee or anticipate it or not; but when the act is lawful, the liability depends, not upon the particular consequence or result that may flow from it, but upon the ability of a prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, to foresee that injury or damage will naturally or probably be the result of his act. In the one case he is presumed to intend the consequence of his unlawful act, but in the other, while the act is lawful, it must be performed in a careful manner, otherwise it becomes unlawful, if a prudent man, in the exercise of proper care, can foresee that it will naturally or probably cause injury to another, though it is not necessary that the evil result should be, in form, foreseen. Cooley, in his work on Torts (2d Ed.) p. 74, states the rule thus: "(1) In the case of any distinct legal wrong, which in itself constitutes an invasion of the right of another, the law will presume that some damage follows as a natural, necessary, and proximate result. Here the wrong itself fixes the right of action. We need not go further to show a right of recovery, though the extent of recovery may depend upon the evidence. (2) When the act or omission complained of is not in itself a distinct wrong, and can only become a wrong to any particular individual through injurious consequences resulting therefrom, this consequence must not only be shown, but it must be so connected by averment and evidence with the act or omission as to appear to have resulted therefrom according to the ordinary course of events, and as a proximate result of a sufficient cause. (3) If the original act was wrongful, and would naturally, according to the ordinary course of events, prove injurious to some other person or persons, and does actually result in injury through the intervention of other causes which are not wrongful, the injury shall be referred to the wrongful cause, passing by those which were innocent. But, if the original wrong only becomes injurious in consequence of the intervention of some distinct wrongful act or omission by another, the injury shall be imputed to the last wrong as the proximate cause, and not to that which was more remote." Pollock, in his treatise on Torts, pp. 14 to 35, discusses with great clearness and apt illustration this subject of proximate cause in its relation to the liability of persons for civil wrongs, and the following general principles (the most of them expressed in his words) may be gathered therefrom: A tort is an act or omission (not being merely a breach of duty arising out of a personal relation, or undertaken by contract), which is related to harm suffered by a determinate person in the following ways: (1) It may be an act which, without lawful justification or excuse, is intended by the agent to cause harm, and does cause the harm complained of.

(2) It may be an act in itself contrary to law or an omission of specific legal duty, which causes harm not intended by the person so acting or omitting. (3) It may be an act or omission causing harm which the person so acting or omitting did not intend to cause, but might and should with due diligence have foreseen and prevented. (4) It may, in special cases, consist merely in not avoiding or preventing harm which the party was bound, absolutely or within limits, to avoid or prevent. A special duty of this kind may be (1) absolute, (2) limited to answering for harm which is assignable to negligence. In some positions a man becomes, so to speak, an insurer to the public against a certain risk; in others he warrants only that all has been done for safety that reasonable care can do.

The commission of an act specifically forbidden by law, or the omission or failure to perform any duty specifically imposed by law, is generally equivalent to an act done with intent to cause wrongful injury. Where the harm that ensues from the unlawful act or omission is the very kind of harm which it was the aim of the law to prevent (and this is the commonest case), the justice and necessity of this rule are manifest without further comment. Even if the mischief to be prevented is not such as an ordinary man would foresee as the probable consequence of disobedience, there is some default in the mere fact that the law is disobeyed (at any rate, a court of law cannot admit discussion on that point), and the defaulter must take the consequences. "Then we have the general duty of using due care and caution. What is due care and caution under given circumstances has to be worked out in the special treatment of negligence. Here we may say that, generally speaking, the standard of duty is fixed by reference to what we should expect in the like case from a man of ordinary sense, knowledge, and prudence." In cases of tort the primary question of liability may itself depend, and it often does depend, on the nearness or remoteness of the harm or injury, and the liability itself must be founded on an act which is the immediate cause of the harm, or injury to a right, the rule of the law being that the proximate, and not the remote, cause is to be regarded. For, says Bacon: "It were infinite for the law to judge the causes of causes, and their impulsions one of another. Therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause, and judgeth of acts by that, without looking to any further degree." For the purpose, therefore, of civil liability, in the law of torts, those consequences and those only, are deemed immediate and proximate or natural and probable, which a person of average competence and knowledge, being in the like case of a person whose conduct is in question, and having the like opportunities of observation, might be expected to foresee as likely to follow upon such conduct. This is only where the particular consequence is not known to have been intended or foreseen by the actor. If proof of that be forthcoming, whether the consequence was immediate or not does not matter. That which a man actually foresees is to him, at all events, natural and probable. Pollock on Torts, p. 21. In the case of willful or intentional wrongdoing we have an act intended to do harm, and harm done by it, and the inference of liability from such an act may seem a plain matter under the general rule of liability and assuming that no just cause of exception to it is present. "It is clear law that the wrongdoer is liable to make good the consequences, and it is likewise obvious to common sense that he ought to be. He went about to do harm, and, having begun an act of wrongful mischief, he cannot stop the risk at his pleasure, nor confine it to the precise objects he laid out, but must abide it fully and to the end." The principle is commonly expressed in the maxim that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts. The doctrine of natural and probable consequence is most clearly illustrated, however, in the law of negligence, for there the substance of the wrong itself is failure to act with due foresight. It has been defined as "the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do," and for the purpose of civil liability the definition is sufficient and adequate, perhaps, to indicate the kind of act, or failure to act, which may be regarded as the immediate or proximate cause of any consequent harm or injury; for the prudent man, to whose ideal behavior we are to look as the true standard of duty, will be guided by a reasonable estimate of probability, and will not neglect what he can forecast as probable, but will order his precaution by the measure of what appears likely in the known course of things. If he fails so to order his conduct, and injury results, he is justly held to be the responsible author of it.

While, as we have just said, a person charged with negligence is liable only for those injuries which a prudent man in the exercise of care could have reasonably foreseen or expected as the natural and probable consequence of his act or his omission of duty, it must not be supposed that the principle thus stated requires that he should have been able to foresee the injury in the precise form in which it in fact resulted, or to anticipate the particular consequence which actually flowed from his act or omission of duty. "It is not an essential element of negligence that the defendant should have anticipated, or have had reason to anticipate, that his carelessness would injure another person. The improbability of injury to another is a circumstance that might be taken into account, but which is not conclusive of the question.

If, however, no reasonable person could have anticipated that injury to another might ensue, we think that there could be no negligence. It is certainly not essential that the negligent person should have anticipated injury to the particular person who was in fact injured, or the particular kind of injury produced." 1 Shear. & Redf. on Neg. (4th Ed.) § 21. It is quite sufficient to satisfy the principle and to bring any case within its operation that the party complained of should be able, in the exercise of the care of a man of ordinary prudence, to foresee that harm or injury will result, without reference to the particular kind. If he had or should have had this foresight, he is in no better case than the man who intends to do and actually does harm, so far as liability for the natural and probable consequence of his act or conduct is concerned. We believe this to be the doctrine to be gathered from the teachings of the text-writers and the decided cases, and the principle that a man is liable for those consequences only which an ordinarily prudent man can foresee as likely to flow from his acts, is, when thus restricted and understood, undoubtedly the correct one. It seems to be in consonance with a just appreciation of the causal connection which should exist between the act and the consequence of it in order to create civil liability. There is no sound or valid reason, so far as we are able to see, why the very injury that was inflicted by the wrongful or negligent act should have been foreseen, for, if the person complained of actually intended any harm to him who was injured by his act, it is conceded that he is liable, without regard to the particular nature of the injury, and there is no way of distinguishing such a case from one in which an act is negligently done, which the party doing it could well see at the time would cause harm, or injury, in its general sense, to another. There may be a difference in degree, but not in principle. In the one case there is an actual intention, while in the other there is an implied intention, which the law will not ordinarily permit to be contradicted, because it is a just and reasonable rule, as it is a maxim of the law, that a person is presumed to intend that which is the natural consequence of his act. When, therefore, a willful wrong is committed, or a negligent act which produces injury, the wrongdoer is liable, provided in the latter case he could have foreseen that harm might follow as a natural and probable result of his act; for, if he can presume that harm might naturally and probably follow, he must necessarily intend that it should follow, or he must have acted without caring whether it would or not, which, in effect, is the same thing. It may be stated as a general rule that, when one does an illegal or mischievous act, which is likely to prove injurious to another, or when he does a legal act in such a careless or improper manner that he should foresee, in the light of attending circumstances, that injury to a third person may naturally and probably ensue, he is answerable in some form of action for all of the consequences which may directly and naturally result from his conduct. It is not necessary that he should actually intend to do the particular injury which follows, nor, indeed, any injury at all, because the law in such cases will presume that he intended to do that which is the natural result of his conduct in the one case, and in the other he will be presumed to intend that which, in the exercise of the care of a prudent man, he should see will be followed by injurious consequences. In the case of conduct merely negligent the question of negligence itself will depend upon the further question whether injurious results should be expected to flow from the particular act. The act, in other words, becomes negligent, in a legal sense, by reason of the ability of a prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, to foresee that harmful results will follow its commission. The doctrine is thus expressed, and many authorities cited to support it, in 21 A. & E. (2d Ed.) p. 487: "In order, however, that a party may be liable for negligence, it is not necessary that he should have contemplated, or even been able to anticipate, the particular consequences which ensued, or the precise injuries sustained by the plaintiff. It is sufficient if, by the exercise of reasonable care, the defendant might have foreseen that some injury would result from his act or omission, or that consequences of a generally injurious nature might have been expected." It is not essential, therefore, in a case like this one, in order that the negligence of a party which causes an injury should become actionable, that the injury, in the precise form in which it in fact resulted, should have been foreseen. It is enough if it now appears to have been a natural and probable consequence of the negligent act, and the party sought to be charged with liability for the negligence should have foreseen by the exercise of ordinary care that some mischief would be done. 1 Thomp. Com. on Neg. § 59. In determining whether due care has been exercised in any given situation of the party alleged to have been negligent, reference must be had to the facts and circumstances of the case and to the surroundings of the party at the time, and he must be judged by the influence which those facts and circumstances and his surroundings would have had upon a man of ordinary prudence in shaping his conduct if he had been similarly situated. Hill v. Windsor, 118 Mass. 251.

Applying these general principles to the case in hand, we find that the defendant occupied that relation toward the plaintiff, who was his pupil, which entitled him to use such means for the purpose of correction and discipline as, in his judgment, were required under the circumstances, provided that he neither acted from malice nor inflicted permanent injury. State v. Pendergrass, 19 N. C. 365, 31 Am. Dec. 418; State v. Long, 117 N. C. 791, 23 S. E. 431. The law on this subject is thus well stated: "It is the duty of the teacher to enforce the rules and regulations adopted for the government of a school, and to maintain discipline in the school, and in order to maintain discipline and compel obedience to any lawful regulation the teacher may inflict corporal punishment upon a pupil, since the teacher for the time being stands, to some extent at least, in loco parentis, and has such a portion of the powers of the parents delegated to him, namely, that of restraint and correction, as may be deemed necessary to answer the purposes for which he is employed." A. & E. Enc. (2d Ed.) p. 244. And by another writer it is thus stated: "The teacher has the power to enforce obedience to the rules and to his commands. One of the means recognized by the law is corporal chastisement. He may thereby inflict temporary pain, but not seriously endanger life, limbs, or health, or disfigure the child, or cause any other permanent injury. He cannot lawfully beat the child, even moderately, to gratify his own evil passions. The chastisement must be honestly inflicted in punishment for some dereliction which the pupil understands. Plainly, if the teacher keeps himself within these limits and his lawful jurisdiction, he must decide the question of the expediency or necessity of the punishment and its degree. It is impossible he should inflict it without." Bishop on Noncontract Law, § 596, p. 269. If, when the case is again tried, the jury find that the defendant acted maliciously, he will, of course, be liable to the plaintiff for the consequent injury and damage, as was fully and clearly explained in the charge of the judge at the last trial; but if he inflicted a permanent injury in attempting to enforce the discipline of his school, and in so doing failed to exercise ordinary care, he will still be liable to the plaintiff if the jury further find that the injury was the natural and probable result of his negligence, and that the defendant, in the light of the attending circumstances, and in the exercise of ordinary care, ought reasonably to have foreseen that a permanent injury would be the natural and probable consequence of his act.

The court had charged the jury correctly, in accordance with the foregoing principles, until it gave the instruction contained in the defendant's third prayer. By that instruction the jury, before they could return a verdict for the plaintiff, were required to find that the defendant was, at the time, able to foresee, by the exercise of ordinary care, not only that injury would result, but that the particular injury which was received by the plaintiff would be the natural and probable consequence of his act. It is very likely that this instruction had great weight with the jury in deciding the case against the plaintiff, and we can well see how he might have been, and no doubt was, seriously prejudiced thereby. The language of Gaston, J., in State v. Pendergrass, 19 N. C., at page 367, 31 Am. Dec. 416, will be appropriate in this connection, as he states the rule of responsibility in such cases with his usual clearness: "We think that the instruction on this point should have been that, unless the jury could clearly infer from the evidence that the correction inflicted had produced, or was in its nature calculated to produce, lasting injury to the child, it did not exceed the limits of the power which had been granted to the defendant. We think, also, that the jury should have been further instructed that, however severe the pain inflicted, and however, in their judgment, it might seem disproportionate to the alleged negligence or offense of so young and tender a child, yet, if it did not produce nor threaten lasting mischief, it was their duty to acquit the defendant, unless the facts testified induced a conviction in their minds that the defendant did not act honestly in the performance of duty, according to her sense of right, but, under the pretext of duty, was gratifying malice." There the liability was made to depend upon the question whether the act charged to have been negligent threatened lasting injury. We can add nothing to what is so well said by that wise and learned judge. There was error in giving the defendant's third prayer for instruction, which entitles the plaintiff to another trial. We cannot consider this error as cured by the other parts of the charge though in themselves correct. Edwards v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 78, 39 S. E. 780; Id., 132 N. C. 101, 43 S. E. 585; Williams v. Haid, 118 N. C. 481, 24 S. E. 217; Tillett v. Railroad, 115 N. C. 662, 20 S. E. 480. The rule in this respect is well settled in those cases.

New trial.

DOUGLAS, J., concurs in result arguendo.

(194 N. C. 749)

STATE v. GARLAND, Sheriff.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 8, 1904.)

SHERIFFS—MALFEASANCE IN OFFICE—PURCHASE OF COUNTY CLAIMS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—PURCHASE FOR COUNTY—INVALID DIRECTION OF COMMISSIONERS.

1. Pub. Laws 1868-69, p. 607, c. 260, entitled "An act to declare it a misdemeanor for any county officer to speculate in county claims," which now appears as Code, § 1009, under the caption "County Claims, Speculation in, Indictable," provide that if any clerk, sheriff, or other officer shall purchase county claims at a less price than their true value, or speculate in such claims, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the intention of the statute is to prevent county officials from buying for their own benefit claims due by the county of which they are officials, and the act does not extend to a sheriff who purchases county claims, at the direction of the county commissioners, solely for the benefit of the county.

2. The fact that under Laws 1901, p. 352, c. 214, § 3, providing that no part of a special tax fund of a county should be paid out by the county commissioners without the concurrence of the finance committee, the county commissioners had no power to delegate to the sheriff the duty of passing on the validity of county claims which they directed him to buy, did not make the sheriff criminally responsible for following the instructions of the commissioners, so as to render him subject to prosecution under Code, § 1009, for purchasing county claims at less than their true value.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Shaw, Judge.

O. Garland, sheriff, was convicted of purchasing claims against the county at a less price than their full value, and appeals. Reversed.

S. J. Ervin, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

MONTGOMERY, J. The defendant was indicted in the superior court of Mitchell county for purchasing, while holding the office of sheriff of that county, willfully and unlawfully, certain claims against the county of Mitchell at a less price than their full value. The jury returned a special verdict, the substance of which, as to its material parts, is as follows: The county of Mitchell has been for many years largely in debt, and the General Assembly has enacted at various sessions laws authorizing the commissioners to levy special taxes to be used in compromising and settling the floating indebtedness of the county at less than its face value. Through those years it has been a custom of the several sheriffs of the county to take up such indebtedness as was offered by creditors, at 50 cents on the dollar, either in payment of taxes due to the county, or from the special tax fund at that rate—the sheriff having been instructed in each case to do so by the board of county commissioners; and, on settlements between the sheriffs and the county commissioners, they would be allowed credits for the claims at the rate they paid for them. The defendant in the present case was directed and instructed by the commissioners to accept all claims due by the county, and offered by the holders, at the rate of 50 per cent. of their face value, and to pay therefor, either in tax receipts or in cash, out of the special fund; and the defendant, under these instructions, acting as the agent of the board of commissioners, did in June, 1902, accept from a holder two certain claims, particularly numbered and specified, due and owing by the county, and he paid for the claims at the rate of 50 per cent. of their face value. The claims were paid for partly in tax receipts and the balance by a check. That amount was charged by the defendant on his books against the special tax fund, but paid by check drawn by him, as sheriff, on a bank in which the special and general tax fund was deposited under one account to his credit as sheriff. Thereafter, on a settlement between the sheriff and the commissioners, he produced the claims taken up by him from the holder, and he received a credit for the same as sheriff and tax collector only to the amount he had paid the holder, and no more. The jury further found that, in taking up the claims from the holder, the defendant, who at the time was sheriff of the county, "acted as the agent of and for and in behalf of Mitchell county, and under instructions and directions of the commissioners of Mitchell county, and not for or in his own behalf, and that, in settlement with the county, he was credited only with the amount he had paid Tappan [the holder] therefor."

The statute under which the defendant was indicted (Code, § 1009) is chapter 280, p. 607, Pub. Laws 1868-69. The act of 1868-69 had for its caption "An act to declare it a misdemeanor for any county officer to speculate in county claims." The caption of the Code section is, "County Claims, Speculation in, Indictable." The purchase of claims against the county by a county officer is not prohibited by the statute if a full price is paid therefor. If such an officer pays full price for a claim against the county, he has as much right to buy it as has anybody else. It is only when he buys such claims at less than their face or full value that the law interferes and declares such act a misdemeanor. The reason for this prohibition is apparent. If such conduct were allowed, the county officers might refuse to pay the indebtedness of the county at the full value of the claims, although the money might be in the treasury for that purpose, to the end that those who held such claims might be compelled to take less than their face value, or commence litigation for their collection. The intention and meaning of the statute therefore are to prevent county officials from buying for their own benefit claims due by the county of which they are officials. But if the meaning, from the context, was doubtful, the caption of the act of 1868-69, and that of Code, § 1009, might be invoked to aid in the construction of the law; and, as we have seen, those captions declare that the object of the law is to prevent county officers from speculating in claims due by their counties. They themselves are not allowed, under the pains of indictment, either to buy a claim due by the county, or to be interested in any sale or purchase by any other person or persons of such claims.

The defendant in this case, as we have seen, was directed by the county commissioners to buy these claims for the county, and he bought them, not for himself, but for the county. The county got the benefit of the purchase, and not one cent of profit in any way went into the pocket of the defendant. In fact and in law, as the jury found, he did not buy for himself, but for the county, through the direction of the commissioners. It was contended by the Attorney General in this court that under the act of 1901, p. 352, c. 214, no part of the special tax fund of the county could be used for any purpose, except by the joint act of the board of commissioners and the finance committee of Mitchell county, and that therefore the direction of the commissioners to the defendant was a nullity, and the action of the sheriff was on his own responsibility. It is true that the passing upon the validity of claims of the county of Mitchell by the commissioners and the finance committee was an act judicial in its character, and it could not be delegated to the sheriff, who virtually passed upon the claims which he bought, as both valid in law and due by the county; and it might be in some civil procedure that the holders of the claims which the sheriff purchased might be made to return the money and take back their claims, or it may be that any holder of claims against the county of Mitchell might, by due process of law, prevent the authorities of that county from preference among its creditors, because of a willingness on the part of some to compromise their claims against the counties. But all that is a very different matter from indicting and punishing the defendant, who is sheriff of the county, for following an invalid instruction. He has reaped no benefit. He made no purchase for himself, and the county alone was benefited. The judgment of guilty pronounced by his honor upon the special verdict was erroneous.

Reversed

(135 N. C. 258)

BERNHARDT v. CAROLINA & N. W. R. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 8, 1904.)

RECOVERY OF PAYMENT—PROTEST—VOLUNTARY CONTRACTS.

1. Where a consignee who had facilities for the transportation of lumber from the terminus of an initial carrier to his own yard by wagon and horses, but, for his own convenience, made a contract with a connecting carrier which had a switch leading into his yard, by which the cars were to be transferred from the initial carrier and brought directly into his yard, and was apprised at the time of making the contract what the charges would be, and objected to the same as extortionate, and stated that he would pay them under protest, but afterwards availed himself of the contract and paid the charges, he could not recover back the transfer charges so paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Caldwell County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by J. M. Bernhardt against the Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edmund Jones, for appellant. W. C. Newland, C. E. Childs, and J. H. Marion, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. The plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he was a dealer in lumber in the town of Lenoir, and that from November, 1899, to August, 1902, he received on his lumber yard a large number of cars loaded with lumber, which had been hauled over the road of the defendant the Caldwell & Northern Railroad Company to the terminus of its track at Lenoir, and then delivered it to the defendant the Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company; that the Carolina & Northwestern carried the cars a fourth of a mile over their track to the plaintiff's lumber yard, and for that service the plaintiff paid to the Carolina & Northwestern 50 cents per car, and in addition thereto the sum of 25 cents per car, as demurrage, for each and every day that such car remained unloaded, including the day next after, and also the day of its arrival; that the plaintiff was compelled to pay, and did pay under protest, the demurrage on the cars for the next day succeeding the day of their arrival, and also after on the day of their arrival, amounting to $225. The plaintiff further alleged that the demand of the defendants, and the compelling by them of the plaintiff, to pay the $225 demurrage for fractions of days, was tortious, wrongful, and unwarranted by law, and ought to be refunded to the plaintiff. The defendant the Carolina & Northwestern denies any knowledge of the number of cars delivered to the plaintiff, or that any amount was paid to them under protest for such service, and further avers that it had no concern with the matters and transactions set forth in the complaint, except as the agent of the Caldwell & Northern Railroad Company in collecting the charges of that company for the time cars were held by and for the plaintiff at Lenoir, and that all such charges so collected of the plaintiff were for the use and benefit of the Caldwell & Northern, and were collected and paid over to that company under instructions of that company. The defendant the Caldwell & Northern Railroad Company denied in its answer that the plaintiff ever paid any amount to the Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company for the use and benefit of this defendant, and further averred that it had an agreement with the Carolina & Northwestern by which this defendant was to pay said company 50 cents per day for all box cars and 25 cents per day for all flat cars handled by this defendant, belonging to said company, and the Carolina & Northwestern was to pay this defendant the sum of 50 cents per day for all box cars and 25 cents per day for all flat cars handled by the said company, belonging to this defendant; that this defendant never had any contract whatever with the plaintiff about delivering cars to his lumber yard, and has never delivered any cars to his yard; and that the plaintiff has never paid this defendant anything whatever for delivering cars to his yard."

At the trial, by consent, a jury trial was waived, and the court found the facts. Such of them as are necessary to the decision of the case will be stated:

The Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company switched the cars over its own track to the switch track extending to the plaintiff's lumber yard, and thence along said switch track to the plaintiff's lumber yard, for which the plaintiff paid that company 50 cents for each car so switched. The defendants entered into a contract in writing with each other with reference to the interchange of cars, by which platform cars were to be interchanged on the basis of 25 cents per day of 24 hours, or fraction thereof; no mileage to be charged in either instance. The Caldwell & Northern Railroad Company looked to the Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company for the 25 cents per day for each day that the cars stayed on Bernhardt's siding, and that the Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company would collect from Bernhardt accordingly. That agreement between the two companies was sent to and received by the plaintiff. The plaintiff wrote to the companies that the 25 cents per day for each day that the cars might be on his yard, Sundays not counted, would be satisfactory, or, in his own words, "I will pay for the day they are being unloaded, or as many days as I may delay them by not unloading." In reply to that letter, and before the matters complained of had arisen, the plaintiff received a letter from the superintendent of the Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company in the following words:

"Dear Sir: Yours 4th inst. in reference to car interchange. When the C. & N. deliver you cars to us at Lenoir to go in your track, we will put them over there, and when you notify us, we will take them out and place them back on the C. & N. track, but the C. & N. people will charge us for these cars from the time they are delivered to you until they are placed back on their track, and we will have to look to you for the amount. If the failure to place them back promptly is due to any carelessness on our part, then it will be for you to show the fact, but as the C. & N. holds us responsible for these cars, we will have to hold you to whatever amount they hold us, as we are doing this business at accommodation price, we cannot afford to lose anything in it. As above stated I shall do what I can to move these cars for you, but there will sometimes be failures (such as delayed trains) to place your cars that we cannot be responsible for. In such cases we propose to give our work preference.

"Now if at any time you notify our road that these cars are ready to be moved out, and they are not, if you will notify me, I will endeavor to push them out, but I am not on the grounds and cannot undertake to lose anything by failures.

"I would advise that you ask for C. & N. W. cars to go on C. & N. track, when you want lumber from them to your yard, in order that the cars when unloaded may be loaded by you out and save an extra switch, and relieve the possibility of not getting these cars back promptly after you unload them."

And in reply to that letter the plaintiff wrote that he would pay the 25 cents per day for cars required by it in the letter, but would do so under protest, and that he would endeavor to have it repaid to him, as he did not consider it a just or reasonable charge. The plaintiff afterwards paid the amounts, with full knowledge of all the terms and conditions existing between the two roads as to the charge on cars, and there was no agreement on the part of either of them to repay the same. The bills were made out by the Carolina & Northwestern against the plaintiff for the charges; the charges being for detention, and embracing fractions of days. The Carolina & Northwestern collected of the plaintiff the amount of the charges ($225), and accounted to the Caldwell & Northern for the same, along with all other of the Caldwell & Northern cars that went over the Carolina & Northwestern road, as the plaintiff had requested the Caldwell & Northern to do. The plaintiff could have unloaded the cars at the station in Lenoir, and hauled the lumber with wagons to his yard at a cost of 50 cents per car, but it was more convenient for him to have them switched to his yard by the Carolina & Northwestern. The charge was for a rental or car-service charge.

From all the facts found in the case, it is clear that the charges made for the detention of the cars against the plaintiff were not the ordinary charges for demurrage, and the rules governing that subject do not apply. The plaintiff had ready facilities for the transportation of lumber from the terminus or depot of the Caldwell & Northern to his own yard by wagon and horses, but, for his own convenience, he made a contract with the defendant companies, fixing the amount which should be due on the detention of cars upon the switch leading to his yard. The contract seems to be clear and explicit. The plaintiff knew what it meant—that is, that the charge for each car should be 25 cents a day, and 25 cents for each fraction of a day—and he protested against it before any charge had been incurred. But nevertheless afterwards he availed himself of the contract because of its greater convenience to him. If there had been room for misunderstanding between the parties as to the meaning of the contract when it was entered into, that became an immaterial matter when afterwards the plaintiff, upon presentation of bills containing charges for fractions of days, paid the charges. This is not a case where one under peculiar conditions is compelled to pay an extortionate demand, such as would shock the conscience—unconscionable and unreasonable—or suffer great injury to his person or property if he does not yield. The plaintiff, according to the findings of fact, as we have seen, had other facilities for carrying his lumber to his yard at a reasonable cost, and he only chose the method he adopted because it was more convenient to him. There was no mistake here about the facts. They were all known, and, if the plaintiff had reluctantly and under protest paid the charges, it was nevertheless his voluntary act, and he cannot recover them back. Devereux v. Ins. Co., 98 N. C. 6, 8 S. E. 639. "Money voluntarily paid with a knowledge of all the facts cannot be recovered back, although there is no debt. Commissioners v. Commissioners, 75 N. C. 240; Commissioners v. Setzer, 70 N. C. 426. Nor, if thus paid, can it be recovered back, though paid in satisfaction of an unjust demand, or one that had no validity." Brummitt v. McGuire, 107 N. C. 351, 12 S. E. 191.

The court gave judgment that plaintiff take nothing and that defendants recover their costs, and the same is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(135 N. C. 296)

GILLIS et al. v. ARRINDALE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 2, 1904.)

MINES—SALE OF MINERAL INTEREST—CONTRACT—DEED—FRAUD—ACTION BY SELLER—NATURE OF ACTION—ISSUES—JUDGMENT—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT.

1. Where the owners of land were induced by the fraud of defendant to execute to him a deed of the mineral rights in the land for an expressed consideration of $500, when they supposed they were executing, pursuant to a prior agreement, a contract giving defendant an option to purchase such interest for the sum of $3,000, and defendant entered on the land, and removed timber, etc., and subsequently the owners sued for cancellation of the deed, they were entitled to judgment for such damages as defendant may have done to the land, but not to damages as of the amount of the agreed purchase price.

2. Defendant was entitled to set up, by way of reducing plaintiffs' damages, the enhanced value of the land owing to any improvements placed thereon by him.

3. Plaintiffs alleged that they had been induced by the fraud of defendant to execute to him a deed of their mineral rights in lands for an expressed consideration of $500, when they supposed they were executing an option to purchase such interest for $3,000. The complaint prayed for judgment that the deed be canceled, and for damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were submitted to the jury as to whether the execution of the deed was obtained by fraud, whether the plaintiffs had been damaged, and as to the value of the improvements. The verdict on all the issues, save the one as to the fraud, which was found for plaintiffs, was set aside, and on further proceedings an issue was submitted as to what was the true consideration. Held, that the submission of such issue was proper.

4. The verdict found that the deed was procured by fraud, and that the consideration agreed to be given was $3,000. Held, that on the allegations and verdict plaintiffs' equity was one for reformation, and not for cancellation.

5. Though the complaint had not sought a money judgment, it was error to refuse to permit plaintiffs to amend so that judgment might be entered not only for reformation, but for the sum of $3,000.

6. Several tenants in common contracted to give defendant an option to purchase their mineral interest in lands at a specified price, but by the fraud of defendant they were induced, when they supposed they were executing such a contract, to execute a conveyance for a sum less than that agreed on. Prior to such conveyance one of the tenants had mortgaged his share, and by foreclosure and deed such share had passed to another one of the tenants, and thereafter the tenants sued for a reformation of the deed to defendant. Held, that the purchasing tenant could not compel defendant to take the foreclosed share at the price agreed on between the parties.

7. In case defendant should elect to take such share under the deed as reformed, the purchasing tenant would be entitled to the compensation on the basis of reformation.

8. In a suit by tenants in common for the reformation of a deed of the mineral interest in the lands on the ground that it expressed a less consideration than that which had been agreed on by the parties, and that it had been obtained by the fraud of defendant, one of plaintiffs was asked what was the fair value of the property, to which he responded that it was worth the price that plaintiffs claimed had been agreed on, and that he never would have agreed to anything else, and that all the owners in common with him had agreed on such price. Held, that the testimony was competent for the purpose of corroborating plaintiffs' contention as to the agreed price.

9. In a suit for the reformation of a deed of mineral interests in lands on the ground that it had been fraudulently procured, and expressed a less consideration than had been agreed on, defendant tendered in writing to plaintiffs before the trial a proposition to compromise, and in open court tendered the money in accordance therewith. Held that, the offer not being in compliance with plaintiff's claim, plaintiffs were under no obligation to accept the proposition, but were entitled to stand upon their rights under the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Person County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Suit by R. H. Gillis and others against John A. Arringdale. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, all parties appeal. Reversed on plaintiffs' appeal, and affirmed on defendant's.

Kitchin & Carlton, for plaintiffs. Rountree & Carr and Manning & Foushee, for defendant.

Plaintiffs' Appeal.

CONNOR, J. The plaintiffs alleged that prior to the 1st day of May, 1900, they owned the tract of land in controversy as tenants in common, and that prior to said day the said land had been partitioned between them; that the portion of it allotted to the plaintiff J. J. Gillis had been mortgaged to T. O. Brooks; that during the month of May, 1900, the plaintiffs agreed with the defendant, through his agent, in consideration of $150 to give him a 10-year option to buy the minerals on said land at the price of $3,000; that some time thereafter the said agent, in whom the plaintiffs had great confidence, procured their signatures to a paper writing upon the representation that it correctly set out the terms of said contract, the agent paying to each of the plaintiffs the sum of $25; that, relying upon the representation of the agent, they signed the said paper writing; that by such representation the agent prevented the plaintiffs from reading the paper; that the plaintiffs always thought said paper set forth the true contract price until the month of May, 1901, when the defendant offered to settle with them by paying the sum of $500 for the minerals on the entire tract of land, instead of the true contract price of $3,000—being $500 to each of them—which the plaintiffs refused to accept; that upon examining the paper writing, which had been recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Person county, they discovered that it was not the contract or option as they had been led to believe, but, on the contrary, it was a deed conveying said mineral interest for the sum of $500. The said deed contains the following clause: "That the said parties of the first part for and in consideration of the sum of $150, the receipt whereof is fully acknowledged, have bargained, sold and conveyed and by these presents do bargain, sell and convey unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, all the mineral rights, metals and minerals to be found in, on or under the tract of land in Holloway's township, Person county, North Carolina, as described as follows." (Here follows a description of the land.) The said paper writing also contains the following clause: "It is further understood between the parties to this deed that said John A. Arringdale or his heirs and assigns shall commence to develop said mines by searching and prospecting for the same within six months from the date hereof, and he shall have ten years within which to search for, prospect for and open up any mine or mines on said land, and after making search for and opening up the same, if the said John A. Arringdale shall find any mine or mines that he will care to operate, then he shall pay to the parties of the first part or their authorized agent, or deposit in the Bank of Virgilina, which shall constitute a lawful tender, the additional sum of $500 to their credit, after having notified the parties of the first part that he intends to operate the same." The plaintiffs further allege that the defendant went into possession of the land and cut and destroyed a large quantity of timber. They demand judgment, first, that the deed be declared void and canceled; second, for $3,000 damages.

The defendant admits that he procured from the plaintiffs an option for the sum of $150, and that he was represented in the negotiation by his agent. He further says that the terms of the option were correctly set forth in the deed, and denies that any fraud was practiced upon the plaintiffs by his agent. He also denies each and every allegation of fraud or misrepresentation as to the terms of the deed, and admits that he went into possession of the land, and says he spent many thousands of dollars in prospecting for minerals and putting up machinery on the land; that all of the improvements were put on it by the defendant before the plaintiffs made any claim or allegation that there was any mistake in the deed, or any fraud practiced upon them. The cause came on for trial at August term, 1902, before Judge McNeill, when the issues submitted to the jury were as follows: (1) Was the execution of the deed obtained from the plaintiffs by the fraud and misrepresentation of C. S. Garner, as alleged in the complaint? (2) If so, were the plaintiffs damaged thereby? To both of these issues the jury responded in the affirmative. (3) What is the value of the improvements placed upon the land by the defendant for mining the same? The jury responded "$4,000." His honor set aside the verdict upon the second and third issues, and made an order retaining the cause for further proceedings. The defendant excepted, and entered notice of appeal, but, being of opinion that such appeal was premature, it was, by consent, dismissed.

The cause came on again for trial before Judge Allen at August term, 1903, when the following issue was submitted to the jury: "What was the true consideration agreed upon between the plaintiffs and the defendant for the mineral rights and privileges conveyed? Ans. $3,000." The plaintiffs thereupon tendered a judgment upon the verdict, adjudging that: "Upon consideration of the verdict and of the admissions of the defendant * * * and allegations of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs recover of the defendant the sum of $3,000, with interest," etc., and that said judgment be declared a lien on the land. His honor refused to sign the judgment, indorsing the following entry thereon: "This judgment tendered by the plaintiffs, and refused on the ground that the action is not one for a judgment on the debt, and that, if it remains unpaid, the plaintiffs have their remedy by an independent action at law." The plaintiffs excepted. The plaintiffs then moved to so amend the complaint that it would conform to the judgment. His honor refused the amendment, and signed the judgment set out in the record. Said judgment directs the correction of the deed by striking out the words "five hundred dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof "three thousand dollars." The plaintiffs appealed.

The prayer for judgment indicates that the plaintiffs were not entirely clear as to the relief which they desired. They seemed to have conceived themselves entitled to have the deed canceled, and be remitted to their original status. They would, in this view of the case, have been entitled to judgment for such damage as the defendant may have done to the land by cutting and removing the timber, etc.; not to the purchase price. They could not have the land and the price of it. If the defendant had conceded, upon the finding of the jury, that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the deed canceled, he would have been entitled to set up, by way of reducing the plaintiff's damages, such improvements as he had placed upon the land to the extent, not of the cost to him, but of the enhanced value of the land. The defendant, however, does not offer to surrender the land and permit the cancellation of the deed, for the very obvious reason that he has expended large sums of money in prospecting for minerals and in putting up machinery on the land. He could not, in the light of the verdict of the jury, take the land for his improvements. His honor Judge McNeill for this reason set the verdict aside in regard to the value of the improvements. We think that his honor Judge Allen submitted the proper issue. Upon the coming in of the verdict the plaintiffs were entitled to have the deed corrected.

The only question, therefore, presented upon the plaintiff's appeal is whether the judge should, after making the correction, have proceeded to render judgment for the purchase price as fixed by the jury. He was of opinion that, because the action did not contemplate this result, the plaintiffs were not entitled to such relief. We are of opinion that the conclusion reached in the trial is entirely consistent with the allegations in the complaint; that upon the allegations and the verdict the plaintiffs' equity was for reformation, and not cancellation. It being the purpose of the Code system to avoid a multiplicity of suits and afford complete relief in one action, the courts should be liberal in allowing amendments with this end in view; especially so in respect to the prayer for judgment. It has been uniformly held that judgment should be rendered in accordance with the facts alleged and proved, without regard to the prayer. While we hesitate to question the wisdom of the learned and careful judge who tried this cause in refusing to permit the amendment upon such terms and conditions as upon the whole case he thought proper, we are not able to see from the record before us any good reason why the amendment, if necessary, should not have been allowed, and an end put to the litigation. It has been frequently held by this court that the plaintiff may in one action have relief upon equitable and legal rights. Ely v. Early, 94 N. C. 1.

In regard to the share of J. J. Gillis, it appears by the admission of both parties that prior to the execution of the deed in controversy he had executed a mortgage to T. O. Brooks, which was duly recorded; that said Brooks, on the 1st day of October, 1900, sold the land pursuant to the power contained in the mortgage, and it was purchased by A. S. Gillis, to whom he executed a deed, which was recorded on November 25, 1900. In June, 1901, J. J. Gillis received notice from the defendant that he had paid $500 into the Bank of Virgilina, whereupon he (the said Gillis) collected his part thereof ($83.33), and signed a receipt in full for his share of the money due on the sale. The plaintiff A. S. Gillis insists that he is entitled to stand in the place of J. J. Gillis and receive the $500, and that the receipt by him of the $83.33 does not affect his rights. As the plaintiff A. S. Gillis claims title paramount to the defendant, of course his title is in no manner affected by the action of the plaintiff J. J. Gillis. He does not acquire the right to compel the defendant to take the J. J. Gillis share at $500. If, however, the defendant elects to take such share under his contract, he would pay the $500 to the plaintiff A. S. Gillis. This would seem to be the rights of the parties upon the facts herein stated. The defendant should exercise his election at or before the next term of the superior court of Person county, at which term judgment should be entered in accordance with this opinion.

Error.

Defendant's Appeal.

In the defendant's appeal in this cause we find no error in the trial before Judge McNeill. Upon the trial before Judge Allen the plaintiff R. H. Gillis was introduced as a witness, and testified in regard to the terms of the option and the execution of the contract as set out in the plaintiffs' appeal. He was asked the following question: "At the time when you made this contract, what, in your opinion, was the fair and reasonable value of the minerals on this tract of land of 465 acres, if that was the size of it? Answer. $3,000. I never would have agreed to anything else." The defendant objected to the question and answer, and, upon his objection being overruled, excepted. He was asked the further question: "At what price had you and the other owners of this property—the minerals, I mean—held the same for some time? Answer. $3,000." The defendant objected, and, upon his objection being overruled, excepted.

We find no error in his honor's ruling in this respect. The testimony was competent for the purpose of corroborating the plaintiffs' contention that the price agreed to be paid was $3,000, and not $500. The defendant tendered in writing to the plaintiffs, before the trial of the case, a proposition to compromise, and in open court tendered the plaintiffs the money in accordance with said proposition. The plaintiffs declined to accept it, and his honor held that it was not a compliance with the rights of the plaintiffs as set forth in the pleadings, to which the defendant excepted. We concur with his honor's ruling in this respect. The plaintiffs were under no obligation to accept the proposition to compromise. They were entitled to stand up on their rights under the contract.

Upon a review of the entire record, we find no error, and the judgment must be affirmed.

(135 N. C. 342)

MINISH v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 3, 1904.)

CARRIERS—TICKETS—MILEAGE BOOKS—DEATH OF OWNER.

1. A mileage book, at the death of the one to whom it is issued, goes to her personal representatives, and cannot be used by her husband to transport her remains.

Appeal from Superior Court, Caldwell County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by W. L. Minish against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff for nominal damages, both parties appeal. Action dismissed.

Edmund Jones and Lawrence Wakefield, for plaintiff. S. J. Ervin, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff had no contract with the defendant to transport the body of his deceased wife from Washington to Hickory. The mileage book was issued to her, and at her death the unused mileage goes to her personal representatives. In no aspect of the evidence is the plaintiff entitled to maintain the action. It must be dismissed.

Action dismissed.

(135 N. C. 237)

MARKS v. HARRIET COTTON MILLS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 3, 1904.)

SERVANT'S INJURIES—NEGLIGENCE—EXPOSED COGWHEELS—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—MASTER'S DUTY—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

1. In an action for injuries to a servant whose hand was caught in open cogwheels, testimony that the cogwheels should have been covered was incompetent, as invading the province of the jury.

2. A master is not bound to furnish the best known machinery, implements, and appliances, but only such as are reasonably fit and safe, and as are in general use.

3. In an action for injuries to a servant whose hand was caught in open cogwheels, it was error to permit the jury to consider the testimony of one witness that he had seen one machine with such cogs boxed in.

4. An employé assumes the ordinary perils of his service.

5. The fact that cogwheels in which a servant's hand was caught would have been less dangerous, had they been boxed in, did not show negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. H. Marks against the Harriet Cotton Mills. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Winston & Bryant, for appellant. Guthrie & Guthrie, for appellee.

WALKER, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by the defendant's negligence. He alleges that the defendant employed him to operate one of the machines in its cotton mill, called a "speeder," and that he was ordered by the boss or foreman to clean the machine while it was running; that the cogwheels of the speeder were not boxed or cased, as they should have been, and that, owing to its condition, it was dangerous to run the machine at a great speed, as was done by the defendant while the plaintiff was cleaning it, all of which was unknown to him, as he was an inexperienced hand, and had not been warned of the danger, or instructed how to avoid it. The excessive speed and the exposed condition of the cogs caused the plaintiff's hand to be caught in the wheels and severely injured.

¶ 2. See Master and Servant, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. §§ 181, 182, 185, 184.

In order to prove the unsafe condition of the machine, the plaintiff introduced as a witness Ola Woodlief, who was permitted to testify, notwithstanding the defendant's objection, that the cogwheels should have been covered or encased. Similar testimony was permitted to be given by other witnesses. It is only necessary that we should consider the competency of this testimony, as our opinion in regard to it is adverse to the plaintiff, who recovered the judgment below, and the other matters may not be presented at the next trial, if there is one. The defendant's motion to nonsuit, which was denied by the court, and to which ruling exception was taken, presents a question which calls for a most careful consideration. As the facts may be varied if the case is tried again, we refrain from expressing any opinion upon that ruling, lest one or the other of the parties may be thereby prejudiced.

It may be stated as a rule, which is, of course, subject to exceptions, though this case is not within any of them, that a witness can testify only to facts, and it is left to the court and the jury to draw inferences and conclusions and to form opinions from the facts to which the witness testifies. He should not be permitted to express his opinion upon the very question to be determined by the jury under instructions from the court. This case furnishes a striking illustration of the wisdom of the rule. If the witness is allowed to testify that the cogwheels should have been covered, it will be seen that what he says is the full equivalent of an opinion that the defendant was guilty of negligence. It was, in substance, the same as if he had testified that the accident would not have occurred if the cogs had been encased, and that the defendant therefore did not do what, under the circumstances, it should have done. If this is not a substantial declaration by the witness that the defendant was negligent, it is barely one degree removed from it. The witness, in our judgment, was permitted to invade the province of the court and the jury in thus testifying. A witness should state facts, the jury should find the facts, and the court should declare and explain the law. The functions of the three, within their several spheres, are clearly defined, and should always be kept separate and distinct. Whether the speeder was so constructed as that its operation was safe to the defendant's employes was the very question upon which the parties were at issue, and which the jury were impaneled to decide. The witness' opinion upon that question was incompetent, and the plaintiff's objection to it should have been sustained.

Authorities in support of this ruling are abundant. We need cite only a few of them: Tillett v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 1031, 24 S. E. 111; Wolf v. Arthur, 112 N. C. 691, 16 S. E. 843; Smith v. Smith, 117 N. C. 323, 23 S. E. 270; Summerlin v. Railroad, 133 N. C. 550, 45 S. E. 898; Burwell v. Sneed, 104 N. C. 118, 10 S. E. 152; Cogdell v. Railroad, 180 N. C. 313, 41 S. E. 541; Cogdell v. Railroad, 132 N. C. 852, 44 S. E. 618; Harley v. B. C. M. Co., 142 N. Y. 31, 86 N. E. 813.

The witness Roberson, who also testified that the machine "should have been boxed," was permitted in addition to say, after objection by the defendant, that "he had seen an intermediate frame with these cogs boxed up." This was also incompetent. The employer does not guaranty the safety of his employes. He is not bound to furnish them an absolutely safe place to work in, but is required simply to use reasonable care and prudence in providing such a place. He is not bound to furnish the best known machinery, implements, and appliances, but only such as are reasonably fit and safe, and as are in general use. He meets the requirements of the law if in the selection of machinery and appliances he uses that degree of care which a man of ordinary prudence would use, having regard to his own safety, if he were supplying them for his own personal use. It is culpable negligence which makes the employer liable, not a mere error of judgment. We believe this is substantially the rule, which has been recognized as the correct one, and recommended for our guide in all such cases. It measures accurately the duty of the employer, and fixes the limit of his responsibility to his employes. Harley v. B. C. M. Co., supra. This court has said that all machinery is to some extent dangerous, but the fact that it is dangerous does not of itself make the owner liable in damages. It is the negligence of the employer in not providing for his employes safe machinery, and a reasonably safe place in which to work, that renders him liable for any resulting injury to them, and this negligence consists in his failure to adopt and use all approved appliances which are in general use and necessary to the safety of the employes in the performance of their duties; and this rule applies, it is said, even as between carrier and passenger. Witsell v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 557, 27 S. E. 125; Dorsett v. Mfg. Co., 131 N. C. 254, 42 S. E. 612. If the employer is required to adopt every new appliance as soon as it is known and approved, but before it has come into general use, it would devolve upon him the duty, at his peril, of securing at once the latest and best of all appliances, which, as also said by this court, would be too great a burden to impose upon him, even though the safety of the employes would be thereby enhanced. Witsell v. Railroad, supra. The rule which calls for the care of the prudent man is in such cases the best and safest one for adoption. It is perfectly just to the employé, and not unfair to his employer, and is but the outgrowth of the elementary principle that the employé, with certain statutory exceptions, assumes the ordinary risks and perils of the service in which he is engaged, but not the risk of his employer's negligence. When any injury to him results from one of the ordinary risks or perils of the service, it is the misfortune of the employé, and he must bear the loss, it being damnum absque injuria; but the employer must take care that ordinary risks and perils of the employment are not increased by reason of any omission on his part to provide for the safety of his employées. To the extent that he fails in this plain duty, he must answer in damages to his employé for any injuries the latter may sustain which are proximately caused by his negligence. The testimony of the witness that he "had seen a frame with the cogs boxed up" was admitted in violation of the rule we have just stated, as it was equivalent to saying that the defendant had not adopted the best appliances for safety, though there was no proof that they were in general use. The testimony, as given, was collateral to the issue. It is suggested that the plaintiff could not begin to prove the fact that the boxed machines are in general use unless this kind of testimony is admissible. This reason for admitting the testimony is more apparent than real, and we do not think it is at all sound. A point presented in a case should not be decided as an abstract proposition, but with reference to the facts and actual state of the case. The question and answer were not excluded, but admitted, in this case; and there was no additional evidence offered by the plaintiff tending to show that cogwheels in mills, other than the one mentioned by the witness, are boxed. The plaintiff, perhaps, might have shown that boxes were in general use by proving that a number of mills used them, but this he did not attempt to do. He had the full benefit of the right to begin his proof, and did begin it, but failed to complete it. If the fact that the speeders are boxed in one mill is proof of the general usage to that effect, then the evidence was properly admitted. But can it be successfully contended that it is any evidence of such general usage? There can be but one answer to this question. General usage cannot be established by proof of isolated instances, and certainly not by one instance. It would be unsafe to test the degree of care required of the defendant by proof of what some other person may have done. The latter is not shown to be the ideally prudent man, whose care is the standard for our guidance, and whose example may always be followed. Another reason suggested in support of the admissibility of this evidence would require the employer to guaranty the safety of his employé, as it is said he should box the speeder because there is less danger when the cogs are not exposed.

This is a clear departure, we think, from the rule of responsibility in such cases. If the employer should be required to do everything necessary to free his machine from all danger to his employées, there would be no such thing as the assumption of risk, for there would be no risk to assume. The argument in behalf of the admissibility of the evidence that there is less danger in speeders which are boxed than in those which are not boxed leads to the conclusion that all speeders should be boxed, without regard to the degree of care required of the employer. Again, whether the general use of a certain device for the safety of employées can be proved by the testimony of different witnesses that it is used in a number of mills, as well as by that of one witness who can speak of his personal knowledge in regard to such general use, is quite a different question from the one we have in this case, which is whether it was proper to let the jury hear and consider evidence as to its use in only one mill. If the evidence was competent for the purpose of beginning the plaintiff's proof, when he failed to add to it evidence of a like kind as to other mills, the court should have excluded what had already been admitted, for, in any view, it could only be competent as evidence of one of a series of similar facts, or as a first link in the chain of proof. The error in permitting the witnesses, against the defendant's objection, to testify as above set forth entitles the latter to another trial. It is not necessary that we should consider the other exceptions, as the questions they raise may not be presented if the case should again come before us.

New trial.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring in result). I concur with the court in the conclusion that, according to our decisions, which I will frankly say have in some instances gone too far, the defendant is entitled to a new trial on account of the admission of the witness' opinion that the cogwheels should be boxed. I do not concur in the opinion of the court, wherein it says that it was error to permit the witness to testify that he "had seen a frame with the cogs boxed up." The witness does not appear to have expressed any opinion as to the best appliance for safety, nor in fact as to any other matter. He merely stated a simple fact which was material to the case. How else could the plaintiff begin to prove that boxed cogs were in general use, except by witnesses who had seen them in other mills? Even experts could not prove that they were in general use unless they knew the fact of their own knowledge. Whether boxes are the best method of protecting cogs may be a question of expert opinion, but whether they are in general use is a fact to which any one can testify. It is not necessary to prove it by any one witness, as it is difficult and frequently impossible to find any one man who has been through a sufficient number of mills to know the general custom. On the other hand, one witness may testify as to certain mills, and other witnesses as to other mills. It cannot be held that the testimony of a witness is incompetent simply because he does not testify as to a sufficient number of mills, because in that event the first witness would always be incompetent, and so all the witnesses would be excluded in turn. Moreover, the fact of general use is not the exclusive test, nor can a box be called a new and untried device. The true test is the question what a man of ordinary prudence, having due regard for the rights and safety of his fellow men, would do under similar circumstances. Suppose that cogwheels, placed in a position of constant danger to passers-by, could be conveniently covered at small expense and without materially interfering with their efficiency; would it not be the duty of the owner to have them covered? The fact that a witness saw cogwheels boxed in another mill would be admissible as tending to show that they could be boxed, and that they were boxed in other mills of a similar kind. What weight the jury would give to the evidence is another question, and one entirely for them. Whether cogs in a given position can be boxed without interfering with their efficiency may require some experience to determine, but surely it does not require any expert knowledge for a man to know that there is less danger from machinery when it is boxed up so that he cannot possibly get into it, than there is if it is left open so that he may get into it. There is certainly less danger of falling out of a window when the blinds are closed and securely fastened than when they are open. I see no error in the admission of that part of the testimony.

CLARK, C. J., concurs in the concurring opinion.

(135 N. C. 808)

SOUTHERN LOAN & TRUST CO. v.
BENBOW.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 3, 1904.)

EVIDENCE — LETTERS — IDENTIFICATION — COMPETENCY — EXCLUSION — WAIVER OF CONDITIONS — FORCE OF EVIDENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY — FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS — CONSIDERATION — ADEQUACY — APPEAL — QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

1. Where plaintiff introduced in evidence the entire record in supplementary proceedings, it thereby waived its exception to the previous exclusion of parts of such record, objected to as being fragmentary.

2. Letters which witness thought that he had dictated, though he had no recollection of doing so, and which were typewritten, and signed by another, there being nothing to show that, even if witness had dictated them, they were correctly transcribed, or ever seen by him after they were written, were not sufficiently identified to be admissible in evidence.

3. An autograph letter as to a conversation had with defendant, which does not purport to give defendant's exact language, or to contain the entire conversation, or any substantial part thereof, but simply states, in the writer's own language, as the result of the conversation, that defendant said he wanted to pay certain notes, is not competent evidence.

4. The release by a wife of her right of dower involved in signing mortgages for $50,000 is a valuable consideration for a note for $15,000 executed by her husband to her.

5. The probative force of testimony is a question for the consideration of the jury alone.

6. Whether the consideration for a note transferred by a husband to his wife was adequate was a question of fact for the jury.

7. The question whether the consideration for a note transferred by a husband to his wife was so inadequate as to suggest fraud could not be considered on appeal in the face of the verdict of the jury that the note was transferred for a valuable consideration, and not in fraud of creditors.

Clark, C. J., and Montgomery, J., dissent.

On petition for rehearing. Petition allowed.

For former opinion, see 42 S. E. 896.

DOUGLAS, J. This case is now before us on a petition to rehear. After the most careful consideration we are forced to the opinion that the petition should be allowed, and the judgment of the court below affirmed, as we find no substantial error in the record. We do not think it necessary to discuss any exceptions other than those decided in the former opinion. 131 N. C. 415, 42 S. E. 896. The plaintiff offered to read in evidence certain parts of the testimony of D. W. C. Benbow and of the statement of Mrs. Mary E. Benbow given in supplementary proceedings. Upon objection by the defendants this testimony was excluded by the court as being fragmentary. The plaintiff then, reserving his exceptions, introduced in evidence the entire record in the supplementary proceedings. Even if the evidence as originally offered had been competent, and therefore improperly excluded—a question we do not find it necessary to decide—the plaintiff waived his right of exception by introducing the entire record, which, of course, included the part previously offered. If he wished to take advantage of his exception, he should have relied upon it, and not have sought the inconsistent benefits of having his evidence before the jury and the right to a new trial on account of its previous exclusion if it failed of its desired effect. In other words, he should not have the benefit of both its exclusion and admission at the same time. This point has been expressly decided in Cheek v. Lumber Co. (at this term) 46 S. E. 488. We see no essential difference between such a case and the effect of introducing testimony after a demurrer to the evidence has been overruled, which is held to be a waiver of the exception. In both cases substantial justice seems to require that a party should either rely on his exception or abandon it. This was the rule in both the state and federal courts before the passage of the so-called "Hinsdale Act" (Laws 1897, p. 155, c. 100, amended by Laws 1899, p. 263, c. 131), and rests equally upon reason and authority. Purnell v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953; Cox v. Railroad, 123 N. C. 604, 31 S. E. 848; Gates v. Max, 125 N. C. 139, 34 S. E. 266; Railway v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 14 Sup. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 597; Runkle v. Burnham, 153 U. S. 216, 14 Sup. Ct. 837, 38 L. Ed. 694.

Another exception of the plaintiff was to the exclusion of certain letters written by R. B. King to certain of Benbow's creditors. King testified that he had no recollection of writing the letters, nor of anything therein contained, and that the letters did not refresh his memory in the slightest degree. After examining the letters, all that he was willing to say was that one of them was in his handwriting, and the others, typewritten and signed by Mr. Kimball in the name of the firm, were probably dictated by him, as he had personal charge of those matters of litigation. He further testified, in substance, in answer to repeated questions, that he always tried to tell the truth, and that he would not have stated in those letters anything that at the time he did not believe to be true. In no view of the case could any of the letters other than that in King's handwriting be competent against any of the defendants. They are typewritten, and signed by Kimball. King thinks he dictated them, but has no recollection of doing so. Even if that fact were established, there is no evidence that the letters were correctly transcribed, or that they were ever seen by King after they were written. The fact that they were not signed by him would tend to show that they were written and mailed in his absence. If he had read them over, he would probably have signed them. We do not think there was such identification of the papers themselves as is absolutely essential for their introduction under any circumstances.

Mr. King's autograph letter is sufficiently identified as the original paper, but we think that it is otherwise incompetent. It does not profess to give Dr. Benbow's exact language, nor in fact does it repeat the conversation at all. It does not pretend to contain the entire conversation between Mr. King and Dr. Benbow, or any substantial part thereof, but simply states, in the writer's own language, as the result of their conversation, that Dr. Benbow said he wanted to pay certain notes, and to have them sent to Greensboro for that purpose. Mr. King testified that he had a great many conversations with Dr. Benbow, and it is evident that these letters were never intended to contain a record of the numerous conversations, but merely to state such isolated parts thereof or conclusions therefrom as were necessary to the immediate correspondence. This clearly takes the letters out of the rule laid down in 1 Greenleaf, §§ 439a, 439b, even if we were inclined to carry the principle to the full extent covered by the wording of the section. The author cites but three cases from this state. Green v. Cawthorn, 15 N. C. 409; State v. Lyon, 89 N. C. 568, and Bryan v. Moring, 94 N. C. 687. The first case involved no writing whatever, but merely held that: "Where A. communicated to B. a statement made to him by C., and upon his examination could not recollect its substance, C. is a competent witness to prove it." There each witness testified to his personal recollection. In Lyon's Case the witness was permitted to examine an alleged libelous article in a newspaper, not to prove the truth of its contents, but to refresh his recollection as to whether he had seen it. In that case the court says on page 571: "It is not necessary that the mind should be able to recall the distinct facts, when the witness has such assurance of them as enables him to testify. Among the classes into which Mr. Greenleaf distributed this species of evidence is one in which the witness fails to recognize the writing nor does it awaken his memory, yet, knowing the writing to be genuine, his mind is so convinced as to be enabled thereby to swear positively to the fact"—citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 437. In turning to the section of Greenleaf then relied upon by the court, we find that it is omitted by his progressive editor from the latest edition of the work that bears his name, and relegated to the appendix as being out of date. What Prof. Greenleaf himself said is as follows: "Where the writing in question neither is recognized by the witness as one which he remembers to have before seen, nor awakens his memory to the recollection of anything contained in it, but, nevertheless, knowing the writing to be genuine, his mind is so convinced that he is on that ground enabled to swear positively as to the fact." The italics are ours, and we are compelled to say do not seem to us to mirror the condition of the witness' mind upon the letters in question. In Bryan v. Moring, the witness, referring to the paper offered in evidence, which was the testimony taken down by him in the ex parte probate of the will before the clerk, testified that: "I was requested by the clerk to take down the testimony, and did so by consent of counsel. I took down the substance of the evidence of J. E. Bryan, and this paper contains everything of importance testified to by him, omitting repetition merely, and is in the main correct. It contains the substance of his evidence accurately." In that case the evidence was taken down for the express purpose of preserving it, and the writer testified that it contained accurately the substance of all that was said. It was admitted as impeaching testimony. In State v. Pierce, 91 N. C. 606, the written papers, offered only as impeaching evidence, were the written examinations of the impeached witness before the coroner and committing magistrate, both of whom fully identified the papers. State v. Jordan, 110 N. C. 491, 14 S. E. 752, also referred to the written examination of a witness taken down by the committing magistrate, and offered at the trial to impeach the witness. In Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 128 N. C. 366, 38 S. E. 906, the question is thus stated in the opinion of the court on page 369, 128 N. C., and page 909, 38 S. E.: "The first assignment of error cannot be sustained. The admitted paper was a memorandum of the examination of the defendant Mehegan before a committee of the board of directors of the plaintiff bank, and taken down by the witness Davis, who testified as follows: 'Mehegan was present before the committee. He was examined. His examination was put in writing. I read every sentence to Mehegan as Mr. Fountain propounded the questions. Then I wrote down Mehegan's answer. I read the questions and answers as they were made, and he said that they were correct. The entire paper is in my handwriting. Then read the whole over to Mehegan. He never refused to sign; never was asked to sign it.' Under such circumstances, we think the paper was admissible as part of the testimony of Davis, with whose credibility, of course, its own was involved." This case comes nearer to that at bar than any other of which we are aware, but its bare statement shows its essential points of difference. It contained all of Mehegan's testimony which was reduced to writing for the purpose of preservation; while the witness by whom it was proved clearly remembered the transaction, and testified to its attendant circumstances. Moreover, Mehegan was not only a party to the action, but was the principal on the bond upon which the action was brought, against whom lay the primary right of recovery with the right of exoneration in his codefendant. None of these conditions exist in the case at bar. While Dr. Benbow was, perhaps, a proper party, the only substantial recovery is sought against Charles D. Benbow personally and as executor of his mother. Against him, under the circumstances of this case, we do not think that the admissions of Dr. Benbow would be competent, even if properly shown.

One very serious, if not insurmountable, objection to the admission of any writing of which the witness has no recollection whatever, and which does not at all refresh his memory, is that it deprives the adverse party of all benefit of his legal right of cross-examination. The right to ask questions is worthless without the power to elicit answers. Where the witness remembers nothing, the paper itself becomes the witness, and is protected by its inanimate nature from the utmost skill of the cross-examiner. Cross-examination, while frequently used to discredit a witness, is by no means confined to that purpose. Indeed, its general, as well as most useful, purpose is to bring out the statements and circumstances attending and qualifying the evidence in chief, the force of which is in this way frequently destroyed without attacking the credibility of the witness. This court has said in Howie v. Rea, 75 N. C. 326, that evidence should be "authenticated by the two great tests of truth, an oath, and a cross-examination."

The remaining question is whether there is any evidence of a valuable consideration for the transfer of the Fisher note from Dr. Benbow to his wife. He testifies that he transferred it to her as part payment on his note for $15,000, then held by her. This involves the question whether there was any valuable consideration for the latter note. Aside from the validity of a gift by one who has no debts, and the meritorious consideration of a promise to repay to a faithful wife the money her father gave her, which is not before us, we think that the release of her right of dower involved in signing the mortgages for $50,000 was a valuable consideration. Upon a careful reconsideration of the case we think that there is evidence tending to prove that Mrs. Benbow signed the mortgages in consideration of her husband's promise of a home. Aside from her verified answer in the record introduced by the plaintiff, a reasonable construction of her statement, viewed in the light most favorable to her, tends to prove the fact.

As there is no question as to the admissibility of the evidence, all that we can pass on is its probative tendency, its probative force being for the consideration of the jury alone. It is well settled that the inchoate right of dower is a valuable right possessing the elements of property, and that its relinquishment constitutes a valuable consideration. 10 A. & E. Enc. (2d Ed.) 142, 143; 2 Kerr on Real Property, § 914; 2 Scribner on Dower, pp. 7, 8. Bullard v. Briggs, 7 Pick. 533, 19 Am. Dec. 292: "A husband mortgages his land, and, in consideration of his wife's releasing her right of dower to the mortgagee, conveys the equity of redemption to a stranger in fee for the benefit of the wife, but by a deed containing no declaration of the trust, and purporting to be for the consideration of a sum of money paid by the grantee. Held, as against creditors of the husband, that the relinquishment of the right of dower was a valid consideration for the conveyance of the equity of redemption; that parol evidence was admissible to show that it was the true consideration; that, if the transaction was honest, and the right of dower equivalent in value to the equity of redemption, the conveyance was valid." In that case the court says on page 538: "The consideration for this intended settlement on the wife was her right of dower in the estate which the husband was about to mortgage. Without her relinquishment, he could not raise the money wanted for his support and his debts. His days were numbered by intemperance and disease.

Though she had no actual estate in the dower during the life of her husband, yet she had an interest and a right of which she could not be divested but by her consent or crime, or her dying before her husband. It was a valuable interest, which is frequently the subject of contract and bargain. It was an interest which the law recognizes as the subject of conveyance by fine in England and by deed with us. It is more or less valuable according to the relative ages, constitutions, and habits of the husband and wife. It is more than a possibility, and may well be denominated a contingent interest." In Wheeler v. Kirtland, 27 N. J. Eq. 534, the court says on page 535: "The character of inchoate dower has been the subject of much contrariety of opinion. It is said not to be an estate. It is not the subject of grant. It cannot be taken upon execution. Equity will not apply it to the satisfaction of the debts of the wife. As dower was a humane provision for the sustenance of the widow and younger children, some limit was imposed on the power to defeat its consummation. Yet, while not technically an estate, it cannot, at this day, be denied that inchoate dower is a valuable interest in land. It is an interest which the courts have repeatedly recognized. Its presence works a breach of the covenants against incumbrances. Carter v. Denman, 23 N. J. Law, 260. Its relinquishment is a valuable consideration to support a conveyance by her husband to her against his creditors (Wright v. Stanard, 2 Brock. 311 [Fed. Cas. No. 18,094]), or a promissory note given by a purchaser (Nims v. Bigelow, 45 N. H. 343)." In Farwell v. Johnston, 34 Mich. 342, the court says on page 344: "The objection for want of consideration is without any foundation. It has always been held that a release by a wife of an interest which was within her own option to release or not—as, for example, a right of dower—is a valuable consideration, which will support a post-nuptial settlement, and therefore will suffice for any other purpose. This is elementary law, and was never disputed." In Gwathmey v. Pearce, 74 N. C. 398, the entire opinion of this court is as follows: "Where a wife conveys her separate property to secure a debt of her husband's, the relation which she sustains to the transaction is that of surety. Purvis and Wife v. Carstarphan, 73 N. C. 575. Here the wife joined her husband in the conveyance of his land in trust to pay his debt; in which land she had, under our dower statute, a vested right to dower, to be allotted after her husband's death; and she joined in the deed for the purpose of binding her dower. After her husband's death, the whole land, her dower included, was sold under the trust deed to pay the debt. This made the wife a creditor of her husband's estate to the amount of the value of her dower in the land. This is the only point in this case, and it was rightly decided by his honor." In Gore v. Townsend, 105 N. C. 228, 11 S. E. 160; 8 L. R. A. 443, this court, in a learned and elaborate opinion by Justice Avery, held that a wife's inchoate right of dower has a present value as property, and that when she incumbers it by joining with her husband in a mortgage to secure his debt she becomes his surety, and as such is entitled to exoneration. It is urged here that Dr. Benbow's note for $15,000 represented an amount greatly in excess of the value of Mrs. Benbow's right of dower in the lands covered by the mortgages signed by her. This may be true, but we have neither the right nor the means to find such a fact. All that we can say is that there was competent evidence tending to prove a valuable consideration. Whether the consideration was adequate was a question of fact for the determination of the jury. In this connection we can perhaps do no better than to quote the words of Chief Justice Marshall in Wright v. Stanard, 2 Brock. 311, 315, Fed. Cas. No. 18,094, as follows: "The first is the difference between the value of the dower which has been relinquished and the property which has been settled in compensation for that dower. The court has already said that this difference, if the conveyance be made with a real intent to pass the property, does not, of itself, vitiate the deed in a court of law. If the value of the dower had been a few dollars or cents less than the value of the property conveyed in satisfaction of it, no person would suppose the deed to be a nullity on that account. And, if a small difference of value would not avoid it, what is the difference that will? Where does the law stop? The difference may be so great as to satisfy the conscience of the jury that the conveyance is intended to cover the property from the just claims of creditors; but as a mere question of law I can find nothing in the books which will justify a court in saying that a deed otherwise unexceptionable is void because the consideration is of less value than the property conveyed." Our attention has not been called to any evidence as to the value of the mortgaged property, and there is no such legal presumption. As a matter of experience, we all know that the loan rarely exceeds two-thirds of the value of the security, and is generally much less. If, in the case at bar, the inequality were so great as to suggest the element of fraud, it should have been presented to the jury in the court below, but cannot be considered here in the face of their verdict. In the absence of substantial error in the trial below, we have come to the conclusion that the petition must be allowed, and the judgment affirmed.

Petition allowed.

MONTGOMERY, J. (dissenting). I dissent in this case from the opinion of the court, but do not deem it necessary to write anything further than to refer to the opinion of the court written by me in the case as reported in 113 N. C. 418, 42 S. E. 548.

CLARK, C. J., concurs in the dissenting opinion.

(68 S. C. 326)

CREIGHTON v. T. D. CREIGHTON & CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 29, 1904.)

ACTION ON ACCOUNT—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

1. Under Code, § 179, providing that a party need not set forth in a pleading the items of an account therein alleged, but shall deliver, on demand, a copy of the account, a demurrer will not lie because the account shows nothing due the plaintiff.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; McDonald, Special Judge.

Action by Irma L. Creighton against T. D. Creighton & Co. From an order overruling demurrer, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nathans & Sinkler and J. O. Patterson, for appellant. Davis & Best, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. This is an action on an account for a balance amounting to $1,633.00, which the plaintiff alleges is due her by the defendant for general merchandise sold and delivered. Upon notice, demanding a copy of the account mentioned in the complaint, the plaintiff served a copy of the account, which showed that she was due the defendant T. R. McGahan a balance amounting to $225.53. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, for the reason that the itemized statement of account upon which plaintiff brings this action shows that the plaintiff is indebted to the defendant, T. R. McGahan.

The sole assignment of error is that the circuit judge should have sustained the demurrer for the reasons therein stated. Section 179 of the Code contains these provisions: "It shall not be necessary for a party to set forth in a pleading the items of an account therein alleged, but shall deliver to the adverse party within ten days after demand therefor, in writing, a copy of the account. * * * The court, or a judge thereof, * * * may in all cases order a bill of particulars of the claim of either party to be furnished." It will be observed, first, that the Code does not make a copy of the account, part of the complaint; and, second, that the court, or a judge thereof, may order a further account when the one delivered is defective. In volume 3, Enc. of Pl. & Pr., pp. 519, 520, the purpose and effect of a bill of particulars is thus stated: "A bill of particulars does not set forth the cause of action or the ground of defense. These constitute the function of the original pleading. The chief office of a bill of particulars is to amplify a pleading, and more minutely specify the claim or defense set up. Another object of the bill of particulars is to prevent surprise on the trial by furnishing the information which a reasonable man would require respecting the matters against which he is called upon to defend himself, and by thus limiting the generality of the pleading its effect is to confine the proof to the particulars specified therein." On pages 535 and 536 of the same volume it is said: "An objection to the sufficiency of a bill of particulars cannot be made on the trial or afterwards. When the bill of particulars is not sufficiently explicit, a motion should be made to the court for a more specific bill, the objection cannot be taken by demurrer." The authorities reflecting the practice prevailing before the adoption of the Code of Procedure are to the effect that the bill of particulars does not form part of the original pleading. In Davis v. Hunt, 2 Bailey, 412, the doctrine is thus stated; "The bill of particulars forms no part of the record. * * * If evidence is offered of demands not contained in the bill of particulars, the evidence may be objected to. But when evidence is given which fully sustains the count, it can be no ground for nonsuit that it does not agree with that which is no part of the count." The case of Vidal v. Clarke, 2 Rich. Law, 359, decides that the bill of particulars filed with the declaration is no part of the count, and that a variance thereof between the proof and the bill of particulars is not a ground for nonsuit. These authorities conclusively show that his honor the circuit judge was not in error when he overruled the demurrer.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

¶ 1. See Pleading, vol. 20, Cent. Dig. § 400.

(68 S. C. 324)

Ex parte POWELL.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 28, 1904.)

MORTGAGE—SATISFACTION—PURCHASE AT TAX SALE.

1. Purchase by a mortgagee at tax sale of one of several tracts conveyed by the mortgage satisfies the debt as to the other tracts conveyed only to the amount of the value of the tract purchased.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Hudson, Judge.

Action by G. W. Fetner against T. G. Patrick and others. Petition of Eliza J. Powell. From an order denying the same, she appeals. Affirmed.

Lyles & McMahan and Jno. T. Duncan, for appellant. Weston & Aycock and R. W. Shand, for respondent Patrick.

WOODS, J. J. W. Powell executed to T. G. Patrick a mortgage on two tracts of land, and a chattel mortgage to secure the payment of a bond. One of the tracts was sold by Powell, and the proceeds applied to the debt. After the bond became due, Patrick assigned to Eliza J. Powell, the petitioner herein, the chattel mortgage security, but not the debt, and she assigned to him in exchange her interest in a certain judgment of foreclosure against J. W. Powell, covering land other than that embraced in Patrick's mortgage, in order to secure, among other obligations, the payment of Powell's bond. Patrick purchased at a tax sale the remaining tract covered by his mortgage. Powell contended that the debt was thereby extinguished, but the court, in Powell v. Patrick, 64 S. C. 190, 41 S. E. 894, refused to so hold. The same question is now raised on behalf of Eliza J. Powell. The circuit judge held that the debt was not extinguished, but that Patrick should account for the real value of the land purchased at the sale. From this finding Mrs. Powell, the petitioner, appeals.

Little can be added to the clear and conclusive reasoning of the circuit decree. Trimmer v. Vise, 17 S. C. 499, 43 Am. Rep. 624, holds that by the purchase by the mortgagee, except under judicial proceedings, of one tract of land where the mortgage covers three tracts, the debt is extinguished only in the proportion which the true value of the parcel purchased bears to the whole mortgaged property. This case is followed in Hull v. Young, 29 S. C. 64, 6 S. E. 938; Ency. Law, 1069. Trimmer v. Vise is referred to in Powell v. Patrick, and, after discussing the doctrine of merger laid down in that case and in Devereux v. Taft, 20 S. C. 555, the court goes on to show that "equity will prevent or permit a merger, as will best subserve the purposes of justice and the actual and just intention of the parties." It is true, as a general rule, unless an assignment of a chattel mortgage is accompanied by an assignment of the debt thereby secured, no right passes to the assignee. 7 Cyc. 57. If this rule is applied, then, under the case of Trimmer v. Vise, supra, Patrick's rights as owner of the chattel mortgage would prevent extinguishment of the debt. If, on the other hand, as may be inferred from Powell v. Patrick, Eliza J. Powell acquired rights under the assignment, then, as stated by the circuit judge, she has no equity to release her from her obligation to Patrick, unless she can place him in the position he occupied before she received from him the chattel mortgage. We think Mrs. Powell did acquire by the assignment the equitable right to enforce the chattel mortgage to the same amount and extent that the securities assigned by her to Patrick should be used by him in the collection of his debt. Mrs. Powell made an exchange of securities with Patrick, and the security assigned by her to him would be no more satisfied by the purchase at tax sale than the chattel mortgage, for which it was exchanged, would have been, had it remained in his hands. Mrs. Powell does not occupy the position of surety, but of one who has voluntarily assumed her present relation to Patrick for full value, and she can have no higher equity against Patrick than J. W. Powell had; and this court held in Powell v. Patrick, supra, that the debt and securities of Patrick as against J. W. Powell were not satisfied by the tax sale.

Appellant does not raise the question as to her right to have the respondent account for the proportion which the true value of the parcel purchased bears to the whole mortgaged property, instead of the actual value, and hence that point is not before the court.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

¶ 1. See Mortgages, vol. 26, Cent. Dig. § 226.

(68 S. C. 325)

LOCKWOOD v. LOCKWOOD et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 29, 1904.)

ADMINISTRATION—DEBTS DUE PUBLIC—PRIORITIES.

1. Where a county treasurer deposited county funds in an unincorporated bank, the debts are, upon the death of the banker and the insolvency of his estate, debts due the public, within Code 1902, § 2538, and payable in full before other debts.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Beaufort County; Purdey, Judge.

Action by Laura M. Lockwood, executrix of William H. Lockwood, against Willie Hill Lockwood and others. From the decree, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George Galletly, W. S. Tillinghast, and Elliott & Thomas, for appellants. Thos. Talbird, for respondents

GARY, A. J. William H. Lockwood, who for many years had conducted a private unincorporated banking business at Beaufort under the name of the Bank of Beaufort, died testate and insolvent on the 23d day of July, 1902. At the time of his death many persons had claims against him for money deposited in his bank. Among the depositors were H. Q. Adams, county treasurer, and George Gage, clerk and treasurer of the town of Beaufort, who claimed that they were entitled to a preference in the payment of debts, under section 2538, Code Laws, because the sums due them were debts due the public. His honor the circuit judge rendered a decree that they were entitled to such preference. The only question raised by the appellants' exceptions is whether the circuit judge erred in adjudging that these depositors were entitled to such preference. The appellants contend that there is no evidence that the public money was loaned Lockwood—only that certain money was credited to Adams and Gage as treasurers.

Before considering whether this case comes within the provisions of section 2538 of the Code of Laws, we will therefore first determine to whom the money belonged that was deposited by the said treasurers. The circuit judge, in his decree, makes the following finding of fact, to which there was no exception: "There is no contention as to one fact which settles this issue, and that is that H. Q. Adams deposited the money with the deceased as treasurer of Beaufort county, and that George Gage deposited the funds of the town of Beaufort as treasurer of said town. This fact is not disputed. This money did not belong to Mr. Adams or to Mr. Gage. They recognized this, and Mr. Lockwood, the deceased, recognized this, and must, from the nature of things, have known the source from whence these funds came." From a consent order set out in the record, it appears that H. Q. Adams, county treasurer, has established a claim against the said estate to the amount of $4,187.39, and that George Gage, treasurer of the town of Beaufort, has established a claim to the amount of $1,331.77, both of whom claim and set up in their answers priorities as debts due the public. The sums deposited by the treasurers were trust funds, and the case of Gary v. Bank, 26 S. O. 538, 2 S. E. 568, 4 Am. St. Rep. 733, shows that they could not have been drawn out of the bank by them as individuals, but only in their official capacity. The county and town of Beaufort were the owners of such funds, and the receipt of them by Lockwood's bank, under the circumstances hereinbefore mentioned, created a liability on his part in favor of the said owners. When he died before repaying said sums, of course, this liability became a debt against his estate.

Having shown that the county and town of Beaufort are the owners of the sum deposited as aforesaid, we will next consider whether the liability to a county or a town for money deposited can be construed as a debt due the public, against the estate of the person with whom the deposit was made. The question whether the liability to a county could be considered as a debt due the public, against the estate of a deceased person, was not settled in this state until the case of Baxter v. Baxter, 23 S. C. 114, which decided that a debt due by a surety, at the time of his death, on a county treasurer's bond, for a default of his principal, is a debt due to the public, and as such is entitled to priority of payment out of the assets of the deceased, under section 2538 of the Code of Laws. In the case just mentioned the court says: "The language used in the act is very general and comprehensive—'debts due to the public.' No limitation is either expressed or implied by the terms used in the act, and we are aware of no rule of construction which would justify us in fixing any limit to general terms when the Legislature has not seen fit to do so. Hence, when we find that there is a debt, and that it is due to the public, we are bound to place it in the class which the Legislature has declared shall be entitled to preference. We are less reluctant to reach this conclusion when we see that the court both in the case of the Commissioners v. Greenwood [1 Desaus. 450] and Klinck v. Keckley [2 Hill, Eq. 250], seemed to assume, without, however, deciding the question, that debts arising from default in accounting for public money did belong to the class protected by the act, and were not disposed to coincide in the limitations placed upon those terms by Judge O'Neill. Again, if the preference given to the state rested upon the ground of prerogative, then there might be good reason for confining the preference to such debts as were due to the state as a sovereign—as, for instance, taxes; but the above cases show that such is not the ground upon which the preference is based, but that it rests solely upon the terms of the act, and the only question, therefore, is as to the proper construction of the language there used." There is no difference in principle between the case just mentioned and the one under consideration. In the case of Baxter v. Baxter, the liability was created by an express agreement, while in the present case it arose from an implied obligation.

¶ 1. See Banks and Banking, vol. 6, Cent. Dig. § 139, 191.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(54 W. Va. 665)

STEWART et al. v. LYONS et al.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Dec. 12, 1903.)

WILLS—CONTEST—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE—EX-ECUTION—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—UN-DUE INFLUENCE.

1. In a contest at law over a will, either the proponent or the contestant may demur to the evidence. How the evidence is considered.

2. Evidence of witnesses present at the execution of a will is entitled to peculiar weight, and especially is this the case with the attesting witnesses.

3. It is not necessary that a testator possess high quality or strength of mind, to make a valid will, nor that he then have as strong mind as he formerly had. The mind may be debilitated, the memory enfeebled, the understanding weak, the character may be peculiar and eccentric, and he may even want capacity to transact many of the business affairs of life; still it is sufficient if he understands the nature of the business in which he is engaged when making a will, has a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, the object or objects of his bounty, and how he wishes to dispose of his property.

4. When incapacity of a testator is alleged against a will, the vital question is as to his capacity of mind at the time when the will was made.

5. Undue influence, to avoid a will, must be such as overcomes the free agency of the testator at the time of actual execution of the will.

6. The influence resulting from attachment or love, or mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another, if free agency is not impaired, does not affect a will. The influence must amount to force or coercion destroying free agency. It must not be the influence of affection or attachment. It must not be mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another, as that would be strong ground to support the will. Further, there must be proof that it was obtained by this coercion, by importunity that could not be resisted; that it was done merely for the sake of peace, so that the motive was tantamount to force and fear.

7. The will of a person of competent testamentary mind and memory is not to be set aside on evidence tending to show only a possibility or suspicion of undue influence.

8. Merely because a testator may be incompetent to safely transact the general business affairs of life does not render him incompetent to make a will.

9. The fact that a man and woman have had or still have unlawful sexual intercourse will not, alone, invalidate the will of one in favor of the other, or afford a presumption of undue influence. It is only a circumstance to be considered along with other matters.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Wetzel County; M. H. Willis, Judge.

Action by Frank Stewart and others against Aaron Lyons and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

B. M. Ambler, J. A. Howard, and R. E. L. Snodgrass, for plaintiffs in error. W. G. Snodgrass, T. P. Jacobs, and E. L. Robinson, for defendants in error.

BRANNON, J. A writing was admitted to probate by the clerk of the county court of Wetzel county as the will of Mary A. Brookover. When this probate came up for confirmation before the county court, Aaron Lyons and others contested such confirmation and denied the validity of the will, and upon trial of the contest the court held the paper not to be such will, and refused to confirm the probate made by the clerk. An appeal was taken by Houston Stewart, the sole devisee and legatee under the will, to the circuit court, and after two trials without decision, by reason of hung juries, a third trial was had before a jury; and the proponent demurred to the evidence of the contestants, and the court, having compelled the contestants, over their objection, to join in the demurrer, gave judgment that the writing was the will of Mary A. Brookover, from which judgment the contestants have sued out a writ of error from this court.

The first question presented for decision is based on the compulsion of the contestants to join in the demurrer to evidence. It is argued that he who bears the burden of proof cannot compel his adversary to join in demurrer to evidence, and that, as the proponent of a will carries the burden of proof, there is error in the ruling of the court compelling the contestants to unite in the demurrer. In West Virginia, the rule is not that a party on whom rests the burden cannot demur. Either party may demur to the evidence unless the case be very clearly against the demurrant, or the court itself has reasonable doubt as to what facts should reasonably be inferred from the evidence. Hollandsworth v. Stone, 47 W. Va. 773, 35 S. E. 864; Bowman v. Dewing, 50 W. Va. 445, 40 S. E. 576. The evidence on both sides must be incorporated in the demurrer. Then comes the question of the principle of the consideration of that evidence, and here the rule is properly put, in the opinion by Judge Dent in the latter case, that all the evidence on both sides must be considered as if there were a motion to set aside a verdict for the demurree, and that is, discard all evidence of the demurrant conflicting with that of the demurree, or the credit of which is impeached, and all inferences which do not fairly arise from his own evidence, and as admitting all that may be fairly and reasonably inferred from the evidence of the demurree. Shaver v. Edgell, 48 W. Va. 502, 37 S. E. 664; Hogg's Plead. & Forms, 537; Lewis v. Railroad, 47 W. Va. 656, 35 S. E. 908, 81 Am. St. Rep. 816; Gunn v. Railroad, 86 W. Va. 165, 14 S. E. 465, 32 Am. St. Rep. 842; Garrett v. Ramsey, 28 W. Va. 345. Therefore there is no error in enforcing a joinder in the demurrer.

*Rehearing denied April 26, 1904.

The next question is the sanity of the testatrix. Mary Lyons was born a poor country girl, without opportunities for education, culture, or refinement. "Chill penury repressed the living rage and froze the genial current of the soul." She worked as a domestic, as a menial, from childhood. When up in years somewhat, after hard years, she accepted the offer of marriage with an aged man, Jennings, who owned a home in the town of New Martinsville, so that she might have a home, or perhaps under promise that it would be given to her at her husband's death, as it was. She was compelled to, and did, support her aged husband and herself at the washtub of the families of New Martinsville. After her husband's death she continued at the washtub or in the kitchens of other people. Some years later she married a very respectable man, Brookover, prominent in his county, who was twice its sheriff, and once a justice, and who owned a home in New Martinsville, and some land near it—a few acres—which he devised to her. Thus she was owner of considerable property, not of great value when she so acquired it, but which later came to be of considerable worth, but not a large estate. She was a dutiful, kindly wife to both husbands. She had only one child, which died when a few weeks old. She had brothers and sisters, the contestants of her will. Her aged mother lived with Mrs. Brookover, and while there secured a pension. The brothers and sisters claimed part of it from the mother, and Mrs. Brookover, proposing to take care of her, denied them their right, and a bitter quarrel arose between her and her brothers and sisters about it, and they became perfectly estranged, not exchanging visits, and Mrs. Brookover forbade them entry to her house. She blamed one brother, also, for furnishing her mother tobacco. The feeling between them for years before her death was intense, as is admitted on both sides. Mrs. Brookover was warm and kindly to friends, but intensely resentful and bitter towards enemies, or those whom she regarded as such. We can say that if, for real or fancied cause, she took up a dislike or prejudice against a person, she never forgave or relented. She was illiterate—just able to read a little print. She was rude, sometimes coarse, often using profane language, especially when excited or angered. Sometimes, as a witness says, she seemed refined, but often otherwise. A witness says she came in the last years of her life several times a day to his saloon and drank liquor. This does not seem well established, but certain it is that no set drink habit or inebriety is established. No one says she was a drunkard, or ever seen drunk. She was, in the opinion of several witnesses, peculiar and eccentric, but not many features or exemplifications of this are shown. For instance: She owned a little dog, and, when she moved from the house to which it was accustomed, it refused to go with her. She manifested special attachment to it, going back to see it, taking it candy, and on one occasion killing a chicken and giving it the gravy to lick, and covering it up to keep it warm. When her husband Brookover died, she sent to Sistersville to an undertaker, saying she wanted a fine casket for him; refused to take one offered; wanted a silver one, saying she wanted "pap" to be put away nicely, as he had been good to her, and she did not want a wood coffin that would let the water in. She wanted a silver one, the witness thinking she meant an aluminum one. She refused to accept one he offered, and ordered him to get one regardless of cost, and he ordered a heavy steel one, costing $190, and she was pleased with it. On one occasion she shoved about an acquaintance visiting her house, and kicked him, and he caught her foot and threw her. The witness says he regarded that she did this in joke. Her husband Brookover had a life insurance policy, and upon his death she went to the agent to inquire about it, and learned that Brookover had got the money on it, when she exclaimed: "The damned old son of a bitch! If I had known that, I wouldn't have bought him an iron coffin. I would have bought him a chestnut coffin, so he could go through hell a-crackin'." She was offered a good price for some property, but, suspecting that the purchase was being made for a certain person, she said she would sell, but she would see that person in hell before she would sell to him; she would not sell to "them sons of bitches." She became incensed at this family because in the great flood in the Ohio the water deluged her home, and she went into the house of this family, and she thought that her husband was not treated right while there. The head of this family says she got angry; he did not know why. A witness says that she was governed by prejudice, and "would always have foolish, silly talk. I can't recollect the talk." He then relates the talk just given in relation to selling some property. One of the strongest witnesses against the sanity of the testatrix is Dr. Dinsmore, a doctor, of Pennsylvania, who visited Mrs. Brookover when he practiced in New Martinsville, some eight years before her death. He says she was sick; was averse to his examination; indisposed to answer questions or to exhibit interest in herself; and from this, chiefly, he concluded she was of weak mind. He thought she would not improve in mind in time. He treated her for not only "mental depravity and constitutional weakness, but for other disabilities of the system," not saying what disabilities. When asked what he meant by "mental depravity," he said: "Weakness of mind—a weak state of mind." When asked if she was a non compos mentis, he declined to say so, saying that might conflict with the answer he had already given. A physician (Curtis), who treated her only once, gave the opinion that she was insane, and thought she would be liable to delusion, but did not know that she had delusion. His acquaintance with her was limited, he said. A witness (Hall) said she had no discriminating judgment. His chief reason was that she brought suit to sell her own property, devised by her husband. There were debts against his estate, some admitted by her, some denied, and she brought a suit to fix debts and sell some of her husband's realty therefor, and Hall, a lawyer, purchased under the decree; a surplus being left from that part sold, which surplus went to her. He said, when she would consult any one about a matter, she used the standing expression, "You wouldn't do it, would you?" He did not think she was able to transact business. But he says he contracted with her for the property at $3,000. He told about her going to his house to see the dog, and bring it candy and other things to eat. Col. McElldowney says she was a woman of inferior mind, and could be influenced for good or evil. Dr. Underwood said she was "irrational," and "had no capacity to transact business. Her mind at times was unsound." She would generally call her husband "old man," sometimes "old devil." I infer it was jocose conversation. It does not appear that it was in anger. I have given the bulk and substance of the evidence and facts claimed to prove the incompetency. The evidence to sustain the capacity of the testatrix goes to show, in effect, as follows: That she felt it necessary to toil for a living, and did so, working in many families. She rented out her own house at a higher rent, and rented for herself a smaller house for a lower rent, to save money. No waste of money by her is shown. She went to a bank to deposit money coming to her from the sale of some land after paying her husband's debts, so as to have it draw interest. She went to see about her husband's life insurance, to get the benefit of it. The Ohio River Railroad Company trespassed on her land, or denied her a stipulated crossing, and she tore down a fence the company had built, and this cut off one part of her land from another. She made a compromise contract with the attorney of the company. She was active and persistent in claiming the right to her mother's pension, as she was keeping her. She rented her property, paid taxes, cared for her houses, had repairing done, and consulted lawyers about this and that of her business. The evidence fully shows that she was persistent in caring for property and claiming her rights in it. She was careful to take receipts for money paid. She was scrupulous to close up the funeral expenses of her husband, saying she wanted the matter closed. The will discloses her idea that the property would sell better divided into lots, and evinces a desire that her home lot be not sold for a number of years. In August, 1899, the testatrix was seized with an acute, sudden attack of vomiting and purging, and died in a few hours, aged about 50 years. She went to the house of Hattie Debolt. Hattie Debolt was living in the house of Mrs. Brookover as tenant. Hattie Debolt urged Mrs. Brookover to go to bed, and tendered her a gown; but Mrs. Brookover sent her to her own house to get her own gown, and gave her specific directions to bring her watch, that she might know when to take her medicine, and to get certain letters from her trunk and elsewhere she could find them. She told Hattie Debolt that if she died she did not want certain people to have anything to do about burying her, perhaps referring to undertaking. She also told Hattie Debolt to read the letters, and she would know what to do, if she died. Hattie Debolt says that she knew a Mr. Stewart was going with Mrs. Brookover, and she supposed that Mrs. Brookover meant that he would take care of her after death, and that Mrs. Brookover often said she did not want her relatives about. Mrs. Brookover, when active and in usual health, set about making her will; giving to an attorney who usually attended to her business (Snodgrass) a memorandum of her wishes. He prepared the will, and gave it to her, telling her that he preferred that it should not appear in his writing, as he had resided in the same town (Mannington) where Stewart lived, and it might be charged that he had unduly influenced her to make the will in favor of Stewart, and told her to go to another lawyer (Bowers) and get him to copy it. She did so. Some time later she called on Snodgrass to go to the office of Bowers with her to witness the will. They went, and the will was executed, Snodgrass and Bowers witnessing it, and it was committed by her to the custody of Bowers. This was 13 months before her death. Stewart was not present. It is to be noted that the first draft simply provided for payment of debts and funeral expenses, but, when she had Bowers to redraft it, she provided that "the funeral expenses incurred in purchasing casket and all other things necessary shall be equal to that incurred in the burial of my late husband, A. P. Brookover, Esq." Some time after her last husband's death, Houston Stewart met with Mrs. Brookover, and formed an attachment to her, visited her a number of times, and wrote her many love letters, breathing great love, devotion, and tenderness for her. We have no letters of hers in reply, but her letters from him were found in her possession—some found by Hattie Debolt and given by her to an attorney against the will, and others found in her house by one of the appraisers and given to the same attorney. Considering the great number of his letters, and the considerable period of time covered by them, and his visitation to her, we are warranted in saying that she reciprocated his affection. Her will says: "The reason I make this kind of disposition of my property is because the devisee, Houston Stewart, has favored me and accommodated me when my relatives did not, and refused to do so."

We hold that the evidence is not sufficient to overthrow this will. Courts must be cautious how they deny to the owners of property the full right of disposition. The law gives to the owner absolute dominion over it, and full—indeed, arbitrary—power of disposition; and this right is, under the law, sacred, next to the right to life and liberty. We may say that the act of Mrs. Brookover in giving her estate—not large—to a stranger in blood, and disinheriting her blood, was wrong, but the law does not regard sentiment in this matter. It can only inquire whether the fact tends to show incompetency. It is the strongest argument against the will, but when we consider the circumstances it loses weight. Remember that the testatrix was a lonely widow, childless, friendless, desolate; her own kindred estranged; bitter feelings between them; she cherishing resentment against them, saying in her last solemn act that they had abandoned her—sent her no helping hand. To whom would she give the little property? To whom more probably, more reasonably, than to Stewart, who loved her, visited her, expressed warm affection for her when others were cold, and who, as she certifies in her will, befriended and accommodated her? It is said there was illicit relation between them. It is not proven. Stewart denies it under oath. But even if there was such relation, what of it? If she was competent, the law gave her absolute power to will him all she had. We cannot now try them for illicit intercourse. They are both now in that city teeming with the countless millions of all past time, and we have no just right to condemn without proof.

"No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose)
The bosom of his father and his God."

Was Mary Brookover competent in mind to make that will? This is the sole, single question, and all criticism upon testatrix and devisee and their relations, all argument based on the disinheritance of her kindred, are unavailing and abortive in law. So are all arguments or evidence going only to show mere peculiarity or eccentricity of character, disposition, or habits of the testatrix, if they do not overthrow her testamentary capacity.

Who has not peculiarity, personal weakness? How many of us guilty of profanity, rudeness, coarseness, unjustifiable hot blood, at times? This woman saw a hard life from childhood up. She was always a "poor, o'er-labored wight," against whom fair fortune turned its face; and little wonder that she, like many others in like circumstances, was irritable, coarse, and embittered. She had no chance for education. "Put yourself in her place." What if she was unskilled and incompetent to transact business? Most women are. She had little property to experience her in business until late years, and that not of a character to give her much experience, but the little she had she seems to have attended to well. She did not waste, but guarded her property with watchful eye. Witness her care for the bank deposit, the life insurance, the pension money of her mother; the struggle with the railroad company for a crossing; taking receipts for payments; paying taxes; scrutinizing debts presented against her husband's estate; her affectionate solicitude for the fitting burial of her husband from whom she derived her estate, and the reason she gave for that solicitude; her anxiety and care, in the agony of deadly sickness in her dying hours, for those letters, sacred to her, which she did not wish the world to see, and which, notwithstanding her thoughtful care to protect herself and her lover, were wrongfully taken from proper custody and used as weapons against her will, and to cast aspersion on his and her names. Witness the sedate preparation of her will and the change from its first draft, so as to provide as secure a burial, against water entering her casket, as she had sedulously provided for her husband. Is this evidence of insanity? How many shudder at the thought of the invasion of the caskets of loved ones by water, and resort to vaults and other devices, at last wholly unavailing, to shut it out, as if water were not as pure as the devouring worm! The shudder is but human. This woman was not singular and alone in this weakness. Or shall we call it weakness? It seems that she still had sense enough to have emotions tender and human, and, whatever her character, they found a place in her breast. Call to witness for her sanity her care to prepare her will. She knew that without it her kin would get her estate, and that she declared again and again should not be. True, one witness says that some months before her death she said the law should take its course, but many times over she declared the reverse. And she could change her mind. And her will shows she did so, if ever she had intended otherwise. Call to mind her contract with Hall for the sale of some lands. It is not said that she did not get a fair price, or that she got the worse of the bargain. While he says she had no discriminating judgment and talked silly, he gives no good, adequate reason, and his contract with her goes to the contrary; and it seems he would have taken her deed and paid her $3,000 if she had not brought suit to convene liens and fix debts, some of which she disputed, against her husband. This suit is no evidence of insanity. The suit was necessary and prudent, yet Hall, on the witness stand, at first gave that suit as evidence of her incapacity. Recall that she directed that the land be not sold in bulk, if sold, but in lots, and that her house in town be not sold for some years. Why? Because property in New Martinsville and its suburbs had already greatly increased, and she expected it would continue to do so, and thus the more benefit her devisee, or else she had pride in having the lots go for the benefit of many. Whatever her motive, this manifests her appreciation of the property, and prudence for the future. She knew her property. The circumstances appealed to for the defeat of the will are frail, and some of them operate the other way. The attack upon the will, at most, amounts to charges of coarseness, profanity, intense prejudice against certain enemies, and chiefly that the testatrix was incompetent to transact business. No mania, no delusions, are shown. No senility, for she was a vigorous, active, restless woman, of energy and positiveness of character. Here I will add a very potent fact. Five of the contestants' witnesses, at least—Robinson, Col. McEldowney, T. S. McEldowney, Hall, and Dr. Underwood—while stating that she was incompetent to transact business, yet, when asked if Mrs. Brookover had sufficient power of mind to know what property she owned, and to know who were her relatives, and to know how she wanted to dispose of her property, and to know what she was doing with her property, and to know that she was willing it to Stewart, all answered that she did. This alone fixes her capacity. Regardless of all other evidence, this establishes the ability of Mrs. Brookover to make the will. In addition we have the evidence of Bowers and Snodgrass, the attesting witnesses, squarely sustaining competency at the very moment of its execution, and that is the most important point of time to be considered. Martin v. Thayer, 37 W. Va. 38, 16 S. E. 430; Delaplain v. Grubb, 44 W. Va. 612, 30 S. E. 201, 67 Am. St. Rep. 758; Farnsworth v. Noffsinger, 46 W. Va. 410, 33 S. E. 246. "Evidence of witnesses present at the execution of the will is entitled to peculiar weight, and especially is this the case with attesting witnesses." Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659 (Syl. point 15) 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668. Then we have for the proponent the evidence of Thompson, clerk of the county court, who says he tried to buy property of her, but could not agree on the price, thus attesting her ability to care for herself. He knew her, took a bond of her as executrix of her husband, and who fully attests her soundness of mind. Under the circumstances of this case, the following law vindicates this will against impeachment for insanity: "It is not necessary that a person should possess the highest quality of mind in order to make a will, nor that he should have the same strength of mind which he may formerly have had. The mind may be in some degree debilitated, the memory may be enfeebled, the understanding may be weak, the character may be eccentric, and he may even want capacity to transact many of the ordinary business affairs of life; but it is sufficient if he understands the nature of the business in which he is engaged, has a recollection of the property which he means to dispose of, the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which he wishes to distribute it among them. Where legal capacity is shown, and the testator acts freely, the validity of the will cannot be impeached, however unreasonable, imprudent, or unaccountable it may seem to the jury or to others." Nicholas v. Kershner, 20 W. Va. 251; Martin v. Thayer, 37 W. Va. 38, 16 S. E. 430.

Attack is made upon the motives of the attesting witnesses. Bowers is assaulted on two grounds. One that he was paid by Stewart for drafting the will. He was entitled to pay from some quarter. Stewart gave him a note for $100, payable on condition that the will should be sustained. Bowers swears that Mrs. Brookover owed him for legal services. If so, the estate would be liable in Stewart's hands for its payment if the will should stand; otherwise not. Stewart did no wrong in giving such a note. Bowers did no wrong in taking it. It is charged against Snodgrass that he read the love letters of Stewart to Mrs. Brookover, and answered them, and knew Stewart's designs upon the woman, and was in conspiracy with Stewart. This charge is gratuitous. It is not sustained by evidence, unless by far-fetched inference or suspicion for want of evidence. Snodgrass was the general and confidential attorney of Mrs. Brookover in winding up her husband's estate, and her adviser. She could not read writing or write. She would get some one to do so, and reasonably would call on Snodgrass. We do not see that this impeaches his evidence. Be this even as it may, the evidence for sanity is enough without his evidence, and evidence assailing the will is not sufficient. I refer to this matter, but do not deem it material.

The next charge to overthrow the will is that Stewart procured it by undue influence. The claim is that he wrote her love letters, in effect promising marriage, when he did not intend to do so, and thus induced the will. There is no evidence of any request or importunity by or for Stewart to Mrs. Brookover to make the will. He was absent when it was made. So we cannot say that influence was operative when it was made at the attorney's office. "Undue influence, to avoid a will, must be such as to overcome the free agency of the testator at the time the instrument was made." Forney v. Ferrell, 4 W. Va. 729. The testatrix again and again through years declared that her kin should not have her property, and declared that she intended to will it to Stewart. She gave an attorney direction to draw a will in his favor more than 18 months before death, so that she had ample time for reconsideration and revocation, and so the will reflects sedate design. To whom else would she give her property? What is undue influence that will overthrow a will? The evidence shows affection, attention, and kindness from Stewart to the lonely widow bereft of friendly kin. His letters show this. "A disposition of property induced by gratitude for kindness, affection, and esteem is not the result of undue influence." 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 497. "The influence resulting from attachment, or mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another, if the free agency of the party is not impaired, does not affect the validity of the act." Greer v. Greer, 9 Grat. 330. In Parramore v. Taylor, 11 Grat. 239, and Simmerman v. Songer, 29 Grat. 24, the court adopted the following from Williams on Executors: "The influence to vitiate a will must amount to force and coercion destroying free agency. It must not be the influence of affection or attachment. It must not be the mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another, for that would be very strong ground in support of a testamentary act. Further, there must be proof that it was obtained by this coercion by importunity that could not be resisted; that it was done merely for the sake of peace, so that the motive was tantamount to force and fear." These principles are found in Forney v. Farrell, 4 W. Va. 742. The Supreme Court says that, to set aside a deed or will for undue influence, it must be shown "that the party had no free will, but stood in vincula." "It must amount to force and coercion destroying free agency." Conley v. Nailor, 118 U. S. 127, 135, 6 Sup. Ct. 1001, 30 L. Ed. 112. "Even earnest entreaty, importunity, and persuasion may be employed, as well as appeals to remember past kindness or relieve distress. The criterion is, is the influence irresistible? If so, the will is not the instrument of the testator, and cannot stand. If it is not, the influence is not undue, and its existence is immaterial, even though the testator did in fact yield to it." 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 498. These principles were held in Delaplaine v. Grubb, 44 W. Va. 612, 80 S. E. 201, 67 Am. St. Rep. 788. In Beyer v. Le Fevre, 186 U. S. 114, 22 Sup. Ct. 706, 46 L. Ed. 1080, Justice Brewer, in the court's opinion, said: "One who is familiar with the volume of litigation now flooding the courts cannot fail to be attracted by the fact that actions to set aside wills are of frequent occurrence. In such actions the testator cannot be heard, and very trifling matters are often pressed upon the attention of the court or jury as evidence of want of mental capacity or of the existence of undue influence. Whatever rule may obtain elsewhere, we wish it distinctly understood to be the rule of the federal courts that the will of a person found to be possessed of sound mind and memory is not to be set aside on evidence tending to show only a possibility or suspicion of undue influence. The expressed intention of the testator should not be thwarted without clear reason therefor." Justice Brewer said, as we say in this case, there is no evidence of importunity, even request, by Stewart that Mrs. Brookover should make a will in his favor, no threat, no coercion, nothing to show that it was not her free will, but everything to show that it was. The only ground is those love letters, impliedly promising marriage. If Mrs. Brookover loved Stewart, she had perfect right to give him her property when she no longer needed it herself. But illicit intercourse is hinted at. It is merely hinted by the contestants, but not proven. It is disproven. But suppose it were so. It would not be an undue influence to overthrow the will. "Undue influence, long past, and not shown to be in any way connected with the testamentary act, is not evidence to impeach a will. Where a testator and legatee unlawfully cohabited, and it was alleged that years previous she had falsely accused the testator of seducing her, the facts are not sufficient evidence of undue influence over the mind of a testator in the testamentary act, where it appears the will was properly and formally drawn, and every one but the attorney who drafted it was excluded from the room when the instructions were given." Wainwright's Appeal, 89 Pa. 220. In this case Stewart was miles away, and no one present but testatrix and attorneys. A man devised his estate to a woman with whom he had unlawfully cohabited, disregarding his brothers and sisters. It was held that undue influence could not be presumed from such cohabitation, but it must be proven that undue influence was actually exerted. Porchet v. Porchet, 82 Ky. 93, 56 Am. Rep. 880. Fraud or undue influence must have some effect upon the testator "in producing the very act of making the will." "A will cannot be invalidated because produced by influences springing from a lawful or unlawful marital relation, unless such influence has been unduly exercised; and, to have the effect of avoiding the will, the influence must place some restraint upon, and prevent the free exercise of, the testator's judgment and motives in making the will." Monroe v. Barclay, 17 Ohio St. 302, 93 Am. Dec. 620. In Goodbar v. Lidikey, 136 Ind. 1, 35 N. E. 691, 43 Am. St. Rep. 296, the court held that the presumptions in favor of a will attacked for undue influence are increased, rather than diminished, from the circumstance that a bequest was made to one with whom the testator maintained intimate and confidential relations during life. The court said this is particularly so where the testator has no wife or children, but only brothers and sisters. One may will his property to a paramour, if he chooses, unless courts assume to make wills for others. But there is in this case no evidence of sexual intercourse, only a charge based on suspicion; there is no intimacy shown, only occasional visits. Stewart lived and did business 40 miles away, and traveled over a wide territory, selling tombstones, and was seldom in New Martinsville. But we must not forget that the law puts the heavy burden of proving undue influence upon those who attack the will. McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683 (Syl., point 11), 41 Am. Rep. 682.

Exception is made because certain non-expert and expert witnesses were not allowed to answer certain questions as to whether Mrs. Brookover was capable of transacting business. A sufficient answer is that the questions do not show what must have been the answers, nor is it shown what it was proposed to prove by the questions. We cannot say whether there would have been any answer, or what answer, or whether material. "Where an answer to a question is excluded, the exception must show what the party asking the question expected to prove." Brock v. Bear (Va.) 42 S. E. 307; Jackson v. Hough, 38 W. Va. 236, 18 S. E. 575. But in fact there is no substantial ground of excepting even guessing at answers. The questions contemplated mere answers of opinion. "The mere opinions of witnesses not experts are entitled to little or no regard, unless supported by good reason, founded on facts which warrant them; and, if the reasons and facts on which they are founded are frivolous, the opinions are worth but little or nothing." Jarret v. Jarret, 11 W. Va. 584 (Syl., point 10). These witnesses were all allowed to state their facts fully, and it was for the jury to judge what they showed, not for the witnesses to tell the jury what, in their opinion, should be their conclusion from those facts. The facts were mostly or all light and frivolous. Should a trial be upturned for so light a cause? Dr. Dinsmore knew the woman slightly; had practiced in New Martinsville the latter part of 1891 and nine months in 1892, six years before the will, and then moved to Pennsylvania. He called on Mrs. Brookover once, and, because she was indisposed to be examined and receive treatment, as many people are, he took up the opinion that her mind was not good—a very inadequate reason. He stated facts, and gave opinion as to her mind, and the jury could well form an opinion as to the effect of his evidence as an expert; and simply because he was not allowed to give his opinion—his mere opinion—as to her capacity for business, we are asked to reverse a trial. What though Mrs. Brookover was not accomplished in business? That capacity is not necessary to make a will. Is a man or woman inefficient in business to be denied the right to make a will? If she was capable of recollecting the property she was about to dispose of, the manner of disposing of it, and the object of her bounty, that is enough, though she could not transact general business. Greer v. Greer, 9 Grat. 830. That she knew her property well, the will, as well as all the evidence, shows, as it gives one direction as to one piece of real estate, another as to another. And not only three witnesses of the proponent, but also five witnesses of the contestants, with hardly any to the reverse, say distinctly that when she made that will she had ample power and strength of mind to know what property she had, how she was disposing of it, what she wanted to do with it, and the person to whom she was giving it. This being decidedly shown by the evidence, this being the test under all the authorities, and this exclusion of evidence touching only the question of insanity, other evidence becomes practically immaterial and unavailing; and therefore the excluded evidence, even if we dare guess what it would have been, could not—ought not, in justice—have changed the result.

Therefore we affirm the judgment.

(185 N. C. 378)

HILL et al. v. GETTYS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

MORTGAGES — FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATION — ACTION TO SET ASIDE — JURY QUESTION — EQUITY — ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

1. In an action to set aside a mortgage, evidence examined, and held to present a question for the jury as to whether the mortgage was procured by the false and fraudulent representations of the mortgagee that he would take up and cancel other mortgages against the land.

2. Where the execution of a mortgage has been procured by the fraudulent representation of the mortgagee that he would take up and cancel other mortgages existing against the land, in consideration of the execution of a mortgage thereon to himself, equity will grant relief on failure of the mortgagee to discharge the obligations assumed.

3. That plaintiffs, in an action to set aside a mortgage procured by fraudulent representations, have an adequate remedy by way of defense to an action to foreclose the mortgage, will not defeat the plaintiffs' equitable remedy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; Jones, Judge.

Action by J. L. Hill and others against P. E. Gettys and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is a civil action, invoking the equitable power of the court to set aside a mortgage executed by the plaintiffs to the defendant C. C. Gettys, for that the same was without any consideration, and the execution thereof was procured by the false and fraudulent representations of the mortgagee. The defendant, at the close of the plaintiffs' testimony, moved the court for a judgment of nonsuit, and upon the refusal to grant the motion the defendant introduced testimony, and at the close of the entire evidence renewed his motion, which was again refused. The defendant excepted. His honor submitted the following issues to the jury: "(1) Did the defendant C. C. Gettys procure the execution of the mortgage or trust deed in controversy upon the false and fraudulent representation that he would pay off and discharge the Coxe and Gallert mortgages, or either of them, and did he fail to do so? (2) Was the mortgage or trust deed executed without consideration?" The jury responded to both issues in the affirmative, and the court, upon the verdict, rendered judgment directing the cancellation of the mortgage. The defendant appealed.

Eaves & Rucker, for appellants. McBrayer & Justice, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. The only assignment of error in the record is the refusal of his honor to dismiss the action as upon nonsuit at the conclusion of the evidence. The testimony on behalf of the plaintiffs tended to show that W. S. Hill, Sr., the husband of the feme plaintiff, was indebted to Frank Coxe in the sum of about $85, to S. Gallert in the sum of about $55, and to the defendant P. E. Gettys in the sum of $360, subject to certain credits; that said debt was tainted with usury; that the several debts were secured by mortgage on the land of W. S. Hill, Sr., who was insane; that Coxe and Gallert held mortgages of prior date to that of the defendant; that the defendant went to the house of the plaintiffs and falsely represented to them that Coxe was about to foreclose his mortgage; that if the plaintiff, the wife of said W. S. Hill, Sr., and her children, would execute to him a mortgage on the land of said Mary H. Hill for the sum of $150, he, Gettys, would take up the Coxe and Gallert mortgages and cancel the same, applying the difference between the aggregate amount thereof to the credit of his mortgage; that upon said promise or representation the plaintiffs executed the mortgage in controversy; that thereafter the defendant purchased the Coxe and Gallert mortgages, but failed and refused to cancel the same or deliver them to the plaintiffs; that no other consideration than the said representation passed to the plaintiffs for the execution of said mortgage; that W. S. Hill, Sr., died shortly thereafter, whereupon the defendant qualified as his administrator, and immediately filed a petition for the sale of his land, setting up the two said mortgages as debts against his intestate's estate. The defendant introduced testimony tending to contradict the contention of the plaintiffs, and to show that the purpose of the mortgage executed by the plaintiffs was to secure a credit on the debt of said W. S. Hill, Sr., to the defendant. He admitted that he bought the Coxe and Gallert mortgages, but denied that he did so with the proceeds of the mortgage in controversy.

A court of equity will not cancel a bond or mortgage simply because it is made without consideration. The party will be left to make his defense, in so far as it may be available, when an action is brought to enforce or foreclose the mortgage. Nor will a court of equity cancel a bond or mortgage because the obligee or mortgagee fails or refuses to perform or discharge some promise or agreement made at the time of its execution. Where, however, as the jury have found in this case, the execution of the bond or mortgage has been procured by the false and fraudulent representation that the obligee or mortgagee would discharge the obligation assumed, there is no reason why a court of equity should not grant relief. A false and fraudulent representation or promise we understand to be one made with the intention in the mind of the promisor not to perform the promise. This is the misrepresentation of a subsisting fact, false within the knowledge of the party making it, and calculated to deceive. Speaking of an actionable fraud, Lord Bowen, in Edington v. Fitzminnia, 29 L. R. Chan. Div. 459, says: "There must be a misrepresentation of a subsisting fact; but the state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion. It is true that it is difficult to prove what the state of a man's mind at a particular time is, but, if it can be ascertained, it is as much a fact as anything else. A misstatement as to the state of a man's mind is therefore a misstatement of a fact." "The general rule in regard to promises is that they are without the domain of the law unless they create a contract, a breach of which gives to the injured party simply a right of action for damages, and not a right to treat the other party as guilty of a fraud. But that proceeds upon the ground that to fail to perform a promise is no indication that there was fraud in the transaction. There may, however, have been fraud in it, and this fraud may have consisted in making a promise with intent not to perform it. To profess an intent to do or not to do, when the party intends the contrary, is as clear a case of misrepresentation and of fraud as could be made. A promise is a solemn affirmation of intention as a present fact." 1 Bigelow on Fraud, 484. The author is discussing, of course, civil remedies. "When a promise is made with no intention of performing it, and for the very purpose of accomplishing a fraud, it is a most apt and effectual means to that end, and the victim has a remedy by action or defense." Goodwin v. Horne, 60 N. H. 485. "The intent is always a question for the jury, and, to determine whether the intent was fraudulent, the jury have necessarily to look to the circumstances connected with the transaction, or those immediately preceding or following it." Des Farges v. Pugh, 98 N. C. 81, 58 Am. Rep. 446.

We think that, for the purpose of disposing of the motion for nonsuit, there was evidence proper to be submitted to the jury. They have found that the promise was false and fraudulent. In the absence of any exception to his honor's charge, we must assume that he explained to them the distinction between the failure to perform a promise honestly made and one made with the purpose not to perform, which is a fraud upon the party relying upon it, as an inducement for his action. And as a mortgagee is a trustee, as held in Bobbitt v. Blackwell, 120 N. C. 253, 26 S. E. 817, and cases therein cited, a court of equity will compel him to faithfully execute his trust or surrender the trust property. In this case the only purpose of the mortgage, as well as its sole consideration, was to take up the Coxe and Gallert mortgages. When the purpose failed, either through the inability or bad faith of the trustee, the trust was at an end, and we see no reason why the trustee should not be compelled to reconvey. Surely he should not be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong, and convert to his own use property to which he held only the legal title, and for which he had paid nothing.

To the suggestion that the plaintiffs have an adequate remedy by way of defense to an action to foreclose the mortgage, it is sufficient to say that equity will always relieve against a mortgage, which is a conveyance of the legal title with a clause of defeasance. If this were not true, the act of 1893 (page 37, c. 6), a wise and most salutary statute, gives a remedy to remove a cloud from title created by the mortgage.

The judgment must be affirmed.

(134 N. C. 743)

STATE v. GOULDEN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 26, 1904.)

BIGAMY — EVIDENCE — KNOWLEDGE OF EXISTENCE OF FIRST SPOUSE — BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. In a prosecution for bigamy, evidence that defendant had said about three weeks before the second marriage that he wished he could hear that his first wife was dead, so that he could be a free man, is competent to prove the first marriage.

2. In a prosecution for bigamy, in which defendant had testified that he drove his first wife away, his reasons for so doing were inadmissible.

3. Under Code, § 983, declaring that a second marriage during the life of the former husband or wife is bigamy, and providing that nothing therein contained shall extend to any person marrying a second time whose spouse shall have been continually absent for the space of seven years, and shall not have been known by such person to have been living within that time, the burden is on defendant in a prosecution for bigamy to show that he did not know that his first wife, from whom he had separated, was living during the seven years prior to his second marriage.

4. Under the statute, absence of a wife, resulting from having been driven away by the husband, is not such absence as to excuse him from inquiry even after the lapse of seven years.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; McNeill, Judge.

Julius Goulden, alias Uriah Goulden, was convicted of bigamy, and appeals. Affirmed.

O. O. McMichael, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

CLARK, O. J. The defendant was indicted under Code, § 983, for bigamy. The admissions of the defendant were competent to prove the first marriage. State v. Wylde, 110 N. C. 500, 15 S. E. 5; State v. Melton, 120 N. C. 591, 26 S. E. 933; 2 McLain, Cr. Law, § 1083, and cases cited in note 6; 2 Bish. Stat. Cr. (2d Ed.) § 610. It was therefore not error to admit evidence that when the defendant, about three weeks before the second marriage, stated his intention to marry, and was charged with the existence of his first wife, he had replied, "I wish I could hear she was dead, so I could be a free man." The defendant stated that he drove his wife off. It was not error to refuse to permit him to give his reasons for so doing, for it was not matter pertinent to the issue.

The court charged the jury: "The burden is on the defendant to show that he did not know that his first wife was living for the seven years prior to his second marriage." In this there was no error. The Code (section 988), after prescribing that a second marriage during the lifetime of the former husband or wife is bigamy, and fixing the punishment therefor, contains the following proviso: "Provided that nothing herein contained shall extend to any person marrying a second time, whose husband or wife shall have been continually absent from such person for the space of seven years then last past, and shall not have been known by such person to have been living within that time, nor shall extend to any person who at the time of such second marriage shall have been lawfully divorced from the bond of the first marriage, nor to any person whose former marriage shall have been declared void by the sentence of any court of competent jurisdiction." The burden is on the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt both marriages, and that at the date of the second marriage the husband or wife of the defendant by the first marriage was still living. This completes the offense, but the proviso exempts the defendant, notwithstanding, from conviction and punishment, if either one of three things peculiarly within his knowledge, are shown; i. e. (1) that such former wife or husband had been continually absent for seven years at the date of the second marriage, and shall not have been known by the defendant to have been living within that time; or (2) that the defendant had been lawfully divorced at the time of the second marriage; or (3) that the first marriage has been declared void by any court of competent jurisdiction. These are matters of defense to withdraw the defendant from liability notwithstanding proof that bigamy has been actually committed by a second marriage during the lifetime of the first husband or wife. These matters being set out in the proviso, withdrawing the defendant from liability, by our uniform decisions they are not required to be negated in the indictment, and, of course, the state is not required to prove what it is not called on to allege.

¶ 1. See Bigamy, vol. 6, Cent. Dig. §§ 43, 51.

In State v. Norman, 13 N. C. 222, construing the act of 1790, now substantially the above section 988 of the Code (save that the punishment is not death, as was then the case), Henderson, C. J., says that the proviso therein "withdraws the case from the operation of the act," and the burden was upon the defendant to show the divorce, which in that case was the part of the proviso relied on. This ruling that the state is not called on to negative in the indictment matter of defense set out in a proviso when it withdraws a case from the operation of the body of the section has been cited and approved. State v. Davis, 109 N. C. 784, 14 S. E. 55; State v. Melton, 120 N. C. 596, 26 S. E. 933; State v. Call, 121 N. C. 649, 28 S. E. 517; State v. Newcomb, 126 N. C. 1106, 36 S. E. 147—in which last case the authorities are reviewed. The burden is on the defendant to show as a matter of defense that his wife had absented herself for the space of seven years next before the second marriage, and that he was ignorant all that time that she was living. The authorities for this are abundant. State v. Barrow, 31 La. Ann. 691; State v. Lyons, 3 La. Ann. 154; Stanglein v. State, 17 Ohio St. 453; State v. Abbe, 29 Vt. 69, 67 Am. Dec. 754; Fleming v. People, 27 N. Y. 329; State v. Williams, 20 Iowa, 98; 2 Wharton, Cr. Law (10th Ed.) §§ 1704, 1705; 2 McClain, Cr. Law, § 1080. The state could rarely prove that a defendant was not ignorant that his wife was living, while he can as a witness in his own behalf testify that he was.

Speaking of another (the second) ground of defense allowed in the proviso, Lord Denman, C. J., said in Murray v. Reg., 7 Q. B. 706, that it would be as reasonable to require the prosecution to deny that the statute had been repealed as to negative a divorce; one being as much a matter of defense as the other. The matters set out in the proviso are, as above stated, matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, and none more so than whether he was ignorant of his wife's existence at all times within seven years before the second marriage. "In such cases * * * the negative is not to be proved by the prosecutor, but, on the contrary, the affirmative must be proved by the defendant as matter of defense." Wharton, Cr. Law, § 614; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 79. In Rex v. Jarvis, 1 East, 643, Lord Mansfield said: "It is a known distinction that what comes by way of proviso in a statute must be insisted on by way of defense by the party accused; but where exceptions are in the enacting part of the law it must appear in the charge that the defendant does not fall within any of them." All the authorities concur that neither the belief of the defendant, however honest, that the first spouse is dead, nor ignorance of his or her being alive for less than seven years, is a defense. Reg. v. Cullen, 9 C. & P. 681; Com. v. Hayden, 163 Mass. 453, 40 N. E. 846, 28 L. R. A. 318, 47 Am. St. Rep. 468; Com. v. Mash, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 472. In 2 Wharton, Cr. Law (10th Ed.) § 1705, it is well said: "'Men readily believe what they wish to be true,' is a maxim of the old jurists. To sustain a second marriage, and to vacate a first, because one of the parties believed the other to be dead, would make the existence of the marital relation determinable, not by certain extrinsic facts, easily capable of forensic ascertainment and proof, but by the subjective condition of individuals." In this case the evidence is that the first wife had lived within 20 or 30 miles of the defendant ever since he testified that he drove her off, and, though his testimony was that he had not heard of her for 24 years, except that he heard a year before his second marriage that she was dead, he showed no effort to verify that fact, and the state offered evidence tending to show that the defendant knew she was alive within seven years of the bigamous marriage. Indeed, he having driven her off, such involuntary departure, being absence procured by the defendant himself, is not such "absence" as would have excused the defendant from inquiry even after the lapse of seven years. Parker v. State, 77 Ala. 47, 54 Am. Rep. 43.

No error.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). I am inclined to agree with the line of authorities holding that, where it has been shown that the wife has been absent from her husband for over seven years, the burden of proving that he knew she was alive at the time of the second marriage rests upon the state; otherwise the defendant would be required to prove a negative, which he could do only by going upon the stand and submitting to cross-examination. He would be forced to become a witness in his own case, with all its possible consequences. On the other hand, the state could prove the fact affirmatively by any evidence, direct or circumstantial, that the jury might believe; as, for instance, that the defendant had been seen with his wife within the seven years, or that she had been seen in the neighborhood, or that some one had told him she was alive, or that her whereabouts were generally known in the community. Any one of these facts would tend to prove his guilty knowledge. To require a defendant to prove a divorce is essentially a different matter, and, indeed, is the converse of the former. A divorce is an affirmative fact, peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, and which can be easily and conclusively proved by a mere transcript of the record, without requiring the defendant to become a witness or involve himself in any dangerous consequences. "Cessante ratione legis, cessat et ipsa lex."

(135 N. C. 106)

JUNGE et al. v. MacKNIGHT.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 19, 1904.)

DEFAULT JUDGMENT—OPENING FOR IRREGULARITY.

1. Code, § 385, provides that judgment by default final may be had at the return term, on failure of defendant to answer, proof of service of summons being made, on a verified complaint alleging a contract to pay a sum of money fixed by the terms of the contract, or capable of being ascertained therefrom by computation. Section 386 provides that in all other actions, except those mentioned in section 385, when defendant shall fail to answer, and on a like proof judgment by default and inquiry may be had at the return term, and inquiry shall be executed at the next succeeding term. Held, that judgment by default final may be rendered at the return term only in the case provided in section 385, unless elsewhere provided for, and that, there being no provision for such judgment at such time in an action to remove cloud on title, rendition of it at such time is an irregularity, for which it should be set aside.

Connor and Walker, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. P. Junge and another against Harry P. MacKnight. The court refused to set aside a default judgment, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. P. MacKnight, in pro. per. U. L. Spence and W. J. Adams, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. The plaintiff filed his complaint at the May term, 1903, of the superior court of Moore county, and alleged therein that he was the owner in fee and in the possession of a certain lot of land, described in the complaint, and that the defendant, through an alleged deed of the sheriff of the county, made under an execution, had cast a cloud upon the plaintiff's title. The prayer for judgment was that the deed from the sheriff to the defendant be declared void and canceled. The defendant having filed no answer, a judgment by default final was entered up against him. In that judgment it was decreed that the title to the property was in plaintiff, that the deed from the defendant to the sheriff was of no effect and void, and that it be delivered up and canceled. At the next term of the superior court the defendant, after having given the plaintiff proper notice, made a motion in writing to set aside the judgment by default final, on the ground that it was irregular, and because the summons was not served on the defendant 10 days before the first day of the term of the court at which the judgment was entered. His honor refused the motion, on the ground that the facts as he found them showed that the summons was served on the defendant 10 days before the beginning of the term of the court.

We are of the opinion that the judgment should have been set aside for irregularity. Judgments by default final can be rendered in this state only in the cases mentioned in section 385 of the Code, and this case does not fall under that section. In section 386 of the Code it is provided that in all other actions, except those mentioned in 385, when the defendant shall fail to answer, and upon a like proof, judgment by default and inquiry may be had at the return term, and inquiry shall be had at the next succeeding term. In the same section (386) it is further provided that, except when a reference may be ordered to state a long account, the inquiry shall be executed by a jury, unless by consent the court is to try the facts as well as the law. The clear meaning of section 386 of the Code is that in all actions, except those embraced in section 385 of the Code, a plaintiff cannot recover a judgment by default final upon the failure of the defendant to answer until he has proved all the material allegations of his complaint.

In Georgia there are special exceptions, as with us, in which judgment by default final may be had, and we find numerous cases in the courts of that state in which it is held that a plaintiff cannot take a judgment by default, upon the failure of the defendant to file an answer, until he has proved all the material allegations of his complaint; and in Sanner v. Sayne, 78 Ga. 468, 3 S. E. 651, the court said: "The defendant, while in default, may resist passively whatever is brought to attack him, but cannot make a counter attack. Though not allowed to return the fire, he is not obliged to run, but may stand until he is shot down. Exceptions to the general rule are made by statute, but this case is within the relief itself." And in regard to the plaintiff the court said: "Whether, on matters of fact, he is before the jury or before the judge, can make no difference in his burden. He must produce enough evidence to manifest the truth of every material allegation. There is a trial to that extent, though there be no issue in the record. There must be an examination of evidence and a determination of such facts as the declaration necessarily involves. The law itself, by requiring evidence, puts the truth of these facts in issue, and keeps up the issue until the facts are established." If this action had been for the recovery of, or for the possession of, the land, the defendant having failed to answer and to file the undertaking required by section 237 of the Code, judgment by default final might have been rendered against him, under the provisions of section 390 of the Code. Jones v. Best, 121 N. C. 154, 28 S. E. 187. The last-mentioned section of the Code furnishes the only additional exception to the rule laid down in section 385.

Reversed.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). Code, § 385, allows a judgment by default final at the return term, "on failure of the defendant to answer," upon a verified complaint alleging an express or implied contract to pay a "sum of money fixed by the terms of the contract, or capable of being ascertained therefrom by computation." And section 386 provides: "In all other actions, except those mentioned in the preceding section, when the defendant shall fail to answer, and upon a like proof [as to service of summons, etc.], judgment by default and inquiry shall be had at the return term, and inquiry shall be executed at the next succeeding term." This language is too explicit to admit of two constructions. When the action is one sounding in damages, and there is judgment by default and inquiry, the inquiry must be made at the next term by a jury. In most other cases, especially in proceedings formerly cognizable in equity, the judgment by default and inquiry at the return term upon failure to answer authorizes a judgment final pro confesso at the next term by the court, on inspection of the record without further proof, if the complaint is verified. The statute has authorized a final judgment at the return term only in the instances stated in section 385. The general rule (section 208) is that the decision of a cause is to be had not before the second term, and the exception made as to final judgment at the return term when no answer is filed is restricted to the plain cases mentioned in section 385, probably for the reason that it could not be known till the court was on the point of adjourning that no answer would be filed, and in all cases but a plain action for a definite money demand on a verified complaint the court would not ordinarily have opportunity to consider the effect of a judgment pro confesso, or it may be that it was intended, except as to such plain actions, to give a defendant who had been inadvertent, or badly advised, opportunity at the next term to ask leave, upon cause shown, then to file answer before final judgment passes against him.

In 1 Black on Judgments (2d Ed.) § 28, it is said: "An order that a bill be taken pro confesso is interlocutory (as in our Code, § 386), and intended to prepare the case for final decree. Its effect is similar to that of a default in an action at common law, by which the defendant is deemed to have admitted all that is well pleaded in the declaration. The defendant has lost his standing in court, and is not entitled to notice of its further proceedings; but the matters set forth in the bill do not pass in rem judicatam until the final decree"—which by our Code (section 386) is at the next term, though in most cases, except those sounding in damages, judgment passes at that term, as is above stated, without further proof, if the complaint was duly verified. See, also, 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 989; 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 90, 104. In Rouillac v. Miller, 90 N. C. 176, Smith, C. J., notes as an innovation that final judgments "are now allowed" at the return term upon a verified complaint for a money demand, certain in its nature, and italicizes the class of cases in which summary judgment at the first term is committed. That final judgment is authorized only in cases falling under section 385 is again noted in Brown v. Rhinehart, 112 N. C. 772, 16 S. E. 840, Battle v. Baird, 118 N. C. 863, 24 S. E. 668, Stewart v. Bryan, 121 N. C. 46, 28 S. E. 18, and McLeod v. Nimocks, 122 N. C. 437, 29 S. E. 577.

It may be noted here that by chapter 626, p. 863, Laws 1901, judgment at the return term is further authorized in actions "upon a bill, note, bill of exchange, liquidated and settled account, or for divorce," where the summons shall be served and the complaint filed in the clerk's office "at least 30 days before the term," whereupon the action shall stand for trial at the return term. Except in such cases, section 385 still presents the only instance in which the law authorizes a final judgment at the return term, except when judgment is taken in ejectment under Code, § 237, for failure to file a defense bond. Jones v. Best, 121 N. C. 154, 28 S. E. 187.

CONNOR, J. (dissenting). I regret that I cannot concur in the opinion of the court in this case. His honor having found as a fact that a summons was served upon the defendant ten days before the first day of the term, and the plaintiff having filed and verified the complaint within the first three days, the defendant was in default, in that he filed no answer during the term, nor obtained an extension of time therefor. This presents the question as to the status of the case at the last moment of the term. The several sections of the Code must be read together, and so construed as to bring about a harmonious and orderly system of procedure. The plaintiff complied strictly with section 233 of the Code by setting forth in the complaint a concise statement of the facts constituting his cause of action. The defendant within the time fixed should have filed a demurrer or an answer. If a demurrer, he should have set forth his grounds thereof; if an answer, it should have contained a general or specific denial of each material allegation of the complaint controverted by him, or of any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief, and, in addition thereto, if he so desired, any new matter by way of avoidance or counterclaim. Upon his failure to do either, within the time prescribed, it is expressly provided that "every material allegation of the complaint not controverted by the answer * * * shall for the purpose of action be taken as true." Section 268 of the Code. In this condition of the record the inquiry arises as to what is the next step to be taken. Section 385 provides that, "where complaint sets forth one or more causes of action, each consisting of the breach of an express or implied contract to pay," etc., "upon proof of personal service," etc., "and upon the complaint being verified, judgment shall be entered at the return term for the amount mentioned in the complaint," etc., "and where the defendant, by his answer in such an action, shall not deny the plaintiff's claim, but shall set up a counterclaim," etc. Section 386 provides that "in all actions, except those mentioned in the preceding section, when the defendant shall fail to answer, and upon a like proof, judgment by default and inquiry may be had at the return term, and inquiry shall be executed at the next succeeding term. If the taking of an intricate or long account be necessary to execute properly the inquiry, the court, at the return term, may order the account," etc.; "in all other cases, the inquiry shall be executed by a jury, unless by consent the court is to try the facts as well as the law." It is manifest that this section of the Code relates to causes of action for the recovery of money, either by way of damages for breach of contract or action sounding in tort. It will be observed that this action is neither, but may be assimilated, under the practice prevailing prior to the adoption of the Code, to a bill in equity to quiet and remove cloud from title. The action is brought under chapter 6, p. 37, of the Laws of 1893, entitled "An act to determine conflicting claims to real property," and the complaint states a cause of action coming within the terms of this act. In the condition of the pleadings at the last moment of the return term of the court, there was nothing to be tried by a jury, nothing in respect to which inquiry was to be made. As the record then stood, no issues could be formulated, because an issue arises "upon a material allegation in the complaint controverted by the answer." Section 393.

This leads us to inquire as to the effect of a failure to answer. We find, by referring to the practice prevailing prior to the adoption of the Code, that "on the expiration of the time for pleading, a rule to plead having been given, and a plea demanded, when necessary, the plaintiff's attorney should search for a plea, if not delivered to him, with the clerk of the papers, who receives special pleas in the king's bench, and with the clerk of the judgments, who keeps the general issue book at the king's bench office, or at the prothonotary's office in the common pleas; and, if no plea be delivered or found at either of those offices, the plaintiff's attorney may sign judgment as for want of a plea. A judgment by default is interlocutory or final. When the action sounds in damages, as in assumpsit, covenant, trover, trespass, etc., the judgment is only interlocutory, 'that the plaintiff ought to recover his damages,' leaving the amount of them to be afterwards ascertained. In debt, the judgment is commonly final," etc. Tidd's Practice, p. 563. It will be observed that in almost, if not every, form of action at common law, except debt, damages were demanded as a part of the recovery, either for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the recovery, or, as in detinue, trover, and replevin, etc., for the value of the property and damages for the detention. It is therefore probable that in every judgment by default, except in debt, the judgment was by default and inquiry. This may not be strictly accurate, but is sufficiently so for the purpose of this discussion. In courts of equity, where no answer was filed to the bill, it was the privilege of the plaintiff to have a decree pro confesso. "The proceeding which is termed taking a bill pro confesso is the method adopted by the court for rendering its process effectual, where the defendant fails to appear and answer, by treating the defendant's contumacy as an admission of the complainant's case, and by making an order that the facts of the bill shall be considered as true, and decreeing against the defendant according to the equity arising upon the case stated by the complainant." Beach on Modern Eq. Prac. § 191.

The mode of procedure in taking the bill pro confesso is prescribed by rules of courts. It is only necessary to inquire, for the purpose of this discussion, as to the effect of the decree pro confesso upon the right of the plaintiff to proceed to final decree. If the allegations in the bill are distinct and positive, they may be taken as true without proof. "The defendants are concluded by that decree, so far, at least, as it is supported by the allegations of the bill, taking the same to be true. Being carefully based on these allegations, and not extending beyond them, it cannot now be questioned by the defendants, unless it is shown to be erroneous by other statements contained in the bill itself. A confession of facts properly pleaded dispenses with proof of those facts, and is as effective for the purposes of the suit as if the facts were proved; and a decree pro confesso regards the statements of the bill as confessed." Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 104, 5 Sup. Ct. 788, 29 L. Ed. 105. This court has held, in accordance with the rules of practice prevailing in courts of law and equity, that "all facts averred in the complaint, and not controverted by the defendant, must be taken as true for the purposes of the action." Oates v. Gray, 66 N. C. 442; Dick, J., saying: "The object of the Code was to abolish the different forms of action and the technical and artificial modes of pleading used at common law, but not to dispense with the certainty, regularity, and uniformity which are essential in every system adopted for the administration of justice. The plaintiff must state his cause of action with the same substantial certainty as was formerly required in a declaration; and the defendant must controvert the allegations of the complaint, or they will be taken as true for the purposes of this action." The Constitution has not abolished the principles of equity. Indeed, it could not. On the contrary, it fully recognizes them, and they must be applied as far as may be under the existing statutory method of procedure, but, when that is silent and inadequate, by the method and practice of the late court of equity in this state. Morisey v. Swinson, 104 N. C. 555, 562, 10 S. E. 754. It has been further held that by a failure to deny the allegations in the answer the fact is admitted, and the effect of the admission is as available to the plaintiff as if found by the jury (Bonham v. Craig, 80 N. C. 224), or, as is said in Cook v. Guirkin, 119 N. C. 13, 25 S. E. 715, has the same force and effect as a finding of the jury.

After a default the defendant may not be heard to deny any facts set forth in the complaint; but he may be heard in respect to the judgment or decree tendered by the plaintiff upon his complaint. The plaintiff may have, upon the failure to answer the complaint, such judgment as upon the facts stated he is entitled to, and the defendant may be heard to object to the form of the judgment tendered. The failure to answer does not admit that he is entitled to the relief demanded, but that he is entitled to such relief as the law gives him upon the facts alleged. This court, in McLeod v. Nimocks, 122 N. C. 437, 29 S. E. 577, says: "The defendant does not complain of that part of the judgment which institutes an inquiry as to the damages which the plaintiff may have sustained by reason of the matters set out in the complaint, but he insists that the judgment by default final, for the conversion of the cotton and embezzlement of the proceeds, is such a judgment as could not have been rendered under section 386 of the Code. We think his contention not well founded. The action sounded in damages, and was for a tort. The tortious conduct of the defendant was set forth in the complaint as the basis for demanding the damages. The judgment by default and inquiry, the defendant having said nothing in answer to the plaintiff's complaint, was conclusive that the plaintiff had a cause of action against the defendant of the nature declared in the complaint, and would have been entitled to nominal damages without any proof. That cause of action was admitted by the defendant's failure to answer." Here no damages were demanded, and there was nothing to submit to the jury; the facts alleged in the complaint having been admitted by the failure to answer. We therefore think that, upon failure to answer, the plaintiff was entitled to such relief in accordance with the facts stated in the complaint, and that by failure to answer the defendant could not call upon the plaintiff to make proofs of these facts. It would be a strange result if the new Code of Procedure, the purpose of which is to simplify and expedite remedial justice, should work out this result. That the plaintiff may take judgment in an action of this kind for want of an answer is shown by section 2, c. 6, p. 37, of the Laws of 1893—"that if a defendant in such action shall disclaim in such answer any interest in the estate or property or suffer judgment to be taken against him in such answer, plaintiff could not recover cost."

An examination of the complaint and judgment develops the fact that in this respect the judgment is erroneous, in that it taxes the defendant with the cost. The judgment is strictly in conformity to the relief to which the plaintiff is entitled upon the facts set forth in his complaint. The plaintiff alleges that one Lasker was on the 14th day of October, 1899, the owner of the land in controversy; that on said day he executed a mortgage containing power of sale, which was duly recorded October 23, 1899 (a certified copy of the mortgage is attached to the complaint); that said mortgage was given to secure a note of $25,000, due on October 14, 1902, with interest from date, payment quarterly, and that upon default in payment of interest the power of sale should be executed; that on April 8, 1901, the mortgagee, pursuant to the power of sale, there having been default in the payment of interest, sold the land, after advertisement, etc., and that plaintiff purchased, paid the purchase money, and took deed therefor (a certified copy of the deed is attached to the complaint); that after the execution and registration of the mortgage certain judgments were recovered and docketed against said Lasker; that the defendant had execution issued on said judgment, and after the sale under the mortgage, August 11, 1902, had the land sold, and purchased at said execution sale, and took deed from the sheriff therefor (a certified copy of the deed is attached to the complaint); that at the time of issuing said execution the judgment debtor was dead; that the plaintiff claims title to said land under said sheriff's deed, etc.; that said deed is a cloud upon plaintiff's title. These facts being admitted by the failure to answer, there can be no possible doubt of plaintiff's right to the relief demanded, under chapter 6, p. 37, Laws 1893. Daniels v. Baxter, 120 N. C. 14, 26 S. E. 635; Rumbo v. Mfg. Co., 129 N. C. 9, 39 S. E. 581; Bispham, Eq. § 474; Beach, Modern Eq. 556, 558. The question is important to the courts and to the profession. I am quite sure, from an experience on the superior court bench and at the bar, that in all actions for the recovery of property, when no damages are claimed, or when it is not necessary to assess the value of the property, as well as in actions for relief formerly sought in courts of equity, fixing rights of property, etc., it is, and has been for many years, the custom to take judgment by default final, in accordance with the facts stated in the verified complaint. The law, as held by the court in this case, will render many judgments taken in accordance with the course and practice of the court irregular, and, I cannot but think, seriously delay and embarrass the administration of remedial justice. By simply standing mute the defendant can, in actions of this character, and others in which no damages, or an uncertain amount, is demanded, put the plaintiff to the expense and annoyance of proving the allegations of his complaint. I must confess, with all deference, that I would be at a loss to know what issue should be submitted to the jury in this case. There is not a material allegation of the complaint controverted. Should an issue be submitted upon each allegation, as if denied, or the general issues, I think great confusion must ensue from the construction put upon the several sections of the Code.

There is another view of this case upon which I think the judgment of his honor should be affirmed. Conceding that the judgment is irregular in the respect pointed out by the court, it is held by this court that such a judgment will not be set aside unless the defendant set forth facts showing prima facie a valid defense, and the validity of the defense is for the court, and not with the party. Jeffries v. Aaron, 120 N. C. 167, 26 S. E. 696. The defendant based his motion to set this judgment aside upon the ground that the summons was not served on him 10 days before the first day of the term. After a war of affidavits, which I have examined, his honor, it seems to me, could not have done otherwise than refuse the motion. In the case on appeal it is stated that the defendant did not at any time request the court to find any of the facts set forth in the affidavit, except as to the date of the summons. He attached to his original affidavit an answer which he proposed to file. An examination of it shows that, although he denies as of his own knowledge the existence of documents, papers, and records of which it is difficult to understand how he could be ignorant, he does not really and seriously—he does not really, taking his entire answer—set up any substantial defense to the action. He swears to many legal conclusions, such as that the mortgage and deed of the plaintiff are void, for that, he says in his brief, there is no allegation that they were stamped, and it does not so appear from the copies taken from the registry. I cannot think that from any point of view the plaintiff should be put to further test or trouble in this case. This court has frequently held that an irregular judgment may be set aside at any time. The safety of titles to property dependent upon the validity of such judgment was secured by the principle announced in Jeffries v. Aaron, supra, which seems to be overruled by the decision in this case. I cannot but think that the doctrine now announced will endanger many titles, as in suits for foreclosure of mortgages and many other actions affecting title to land. The case of Jeffries v. Aaron cannot be distinguished from the one before us. It is “a motion to set aside a judgment by default final upon an open account.” Faircloth, C. J., says: “The motion is not put upon the ground of mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect.” This court reversed the court below, setting aside the judgment. See, also, Stancill v. Gay, 92 N. C. 455; Peoples v. Norwood, 94 N. C. 167.

I cannot think that from any point of view the plaintiff should be put to further test or trouble in this case.

WALKER, J., concurs in the dissenting opinion.

(126 N. C. 371)

CITY OF WINSTON et al. v. BEESON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 2, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LICENSE TAXES—SUBJECTS—TRADING STAMPS—"GIFT ENTERPRISE."

1. Code, § 3800, provides that cities and towns may levy taxes for municipal purposes on all persons, privileges, and subjects within the corporate limits liable to taxation for state and county purposes. Revenue Act 1903, pp. 337, 348, c. 247, §§ 51, 76, imposes a license tax of $50 on any person or establishment offering or engaged in selling trading stamps. Winston City Charter, § 65, subsec. 11, provides that each distiller of fruits or grains, compounder of spirituous liquors, and each gift enterprise or lottery, together with each railroad company having a depot or office in the town, shall pay a license tax not exceeding $50 a year; and section 66, subsec. 13, declares that the board of aldermen shall have power to impose a license tax on any business carried on in a city, not enumerated, not exceeding $10 a year. Held that, since the city was limited by its charter in the imposition of license taxes, it was not entitled to impose a license tax of $50 on dealers in trading stamps therein, either under Code, § 3800, or Revenue Act 1903, pp. 337, 348, c. 247, §§ 51, 76.

2. Manufacturers and dealers in trading stamps sold to merchants; to be given to cash customers, and absolutely redeemable in goods offered by the trading stamp concern, without restrictions, except as to the number redeemable at any one time, were not engaged in a "gift enterprise," within Winston City Charter, § 65, subsec. 11, authorizing the city to levy a license tax on each gift enterprise or lottery, not exceeding $50 per year.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

E. E. Beeson and another were charged with selling trading stamps without having first obtained a license, and from a judgment finding them not guilty the state and the city of Winston appeal. Affirmed.

The defendant the Sperry & Hutchinson Company was tried in the superior court upon appeal from the mayor of Winston, who fined it $20, for issuing and selling to merchants what are known as "trading stamps," without obtaining a license so to do, contrary to the provisions of an ordinance of that city forbidding the sale of such stamps to merchants or manufacturers, or the use of the same by the latter, without having paid the license tax of $50 imposed by the ordinance for the privilege; and the defendant Beeson was tried for issuing and selling trading stamps as manager and agent of his codefendant, in violation of the said ordinance passed under the authority given in the charter of the city of Winston (section 65, subsec. 11), which is as follows: "Each distiller of fruits or grains, each distiller or compounder of spirituous liquors, each gift enterprise or lottery, each railroad company having a depot or office in town, a license tax of not exceeding $50 a year." It is not claimed by the state that any other special authority has been given by the Legislature, in the charter of Winston, to impose a license tax of $50 upon the defendants, except that contained in the above extract from the charter. Subsection 13 of section 66 of the charter provides "that the board of aldermen shall have the power to impose a license tax on any business carried on in the city of Winston not before enumerated herein, not to exceed ten dollars a year." Priv. Acts 1891, p. 1362, c. 307, as amended by Priv. Acts 1899, p. 206, c. 103. No special reference is made in the verdict to the charter of the city as contained in the two chapters of the acts of 1891 and 1899, above referred to, but it was admitted that the present charter is the one to be found in those two chapters; and counsel referred to the charter in the argument, and especially to the provisions of it which relate to taxation. We will therefore consider it as a part of the case. It may be that, as a section of the charter was put in evidence, we should consider the other sections without any agreement; but, however that may be, we hold that, under the circumstances, the charter as a whole is now before us.

The jury returned a special verdict as follows: "That the Sperry & Hutchinson Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey, and the defendant Ernest E. Beeson is the local agent and manager thereof, located in the city of Winston, North Carolina. That the said defendant Beeson, for and on behalf of his company, located a business in the city of Winston in the following manner: That he first applied to the proper officers, and paid the license fees prescribed by the revenue act for trading stamp companies, and duly received his license for doing business in the said county and state, and then applied to the city of Winston, asking for a license, and offering to pay \$10, as prescribed by the ordinances of the city for advertising businesses, whereupon the city, through its officers, declined to grant said license for less than \$50. Thereupon the defendants began business in the city of Winston. That said Beeson approached a good many merchants in various businesses in the city of Winston, and entered into contracts with them to use what was known as a 'trading stamp.' That he did on the 30th day of October, 1903, enter into a contract with W. B. Hudson, which contract is hereto attached and made a part of this record, and marked 'Exhibit No. 1.' That, in carrying out said contract with said Hudson and with others, the defendants advertised in the newspapers the business of the said parties with whom it had contracted for one week, had books called 'directories' printed, and circulated throughout the town in the various homes and business establishments in the city of Winston, which books contain the names of the various merchants with whom the defendant company had contracted, and containing an explanation of the business, and having blank leaves diagramed for the purpose of pasting thereon stamps, which said book is made a part of this record, marked 'Exhibit No. 2.' That the defendant company, in pursuance of this contract marked 'Exhibit No. 1,' promises and agrees to advertise the business of the parties with whom it contracts in various forms and ways, and to induce persons to go to the store of the said parties with whom it contracts, and there buy goods and make demand upon the merchants for trading stamps. That the defendants sold to the said W. B. Hudson, and proposes to sell to all others, certain trading stamps, and delivered to the said Hudson one pad of trading stamps, containing 990 trading stamps, which are small stamps, about the size of a postage stamp, containing certain numbers, and the name of the Sperry & Hutchinson Company, which stamps are exact in form as those which will be found pasted on the first blank leaf of Exhibit No. 2. That these stamps are sold to the merchants for about one-half cent each, and it contracts that, on demand of customers, the merchants will give, for every ten cents worth of goods which he sells for cash to said customers, one of said stamps. That the customer gathers said stamps in this way, and when he obtains, either through his own purchases, or through the purchases of others, stamps to the number of 990, which are pasted in a book in form as hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit No. 2,' he then goes to the storehouse of the Sperry & Hutchinson Company, which is established in the city of Winston, and managed by defendant Beeson, and there selects an article of merchandise. That said articles of merchandise consist of furniture, tableware, and other articles of virtue, which are marked as worth one book, worth two books, etc., meaning that 990 stamps aggregated and put in a book constitute one book, and entitles the holder thereof to get any article of his own selection in said store, which is valued and labeled for one book, and so on. That the Sperry & Hutchinson Company purchase their goods and merchandise in large quantities, and the managers of the various stores make requisition to the general house for goods as they are needed in the various establishments. That the said merchandise of the Sperry & Hutchinson Company are such articles as are usually found in stores of general merchandise, and those labeled 'One book' are approximately worth \$4.50, those labeled 'Two books,' \$9.00, etc., and will compare favorably in price with the retail prices of such articles in any other establishment in the city of Winston. That the defendant, in circulating the directory, which is marked 'Exhibit No. 2,' in order to induce persons to trade with the merchants using the trading stamps, pastes on the first blank page of said directory ten stamps, which is given by defendant company, without consideration, to the persons having the directory. That these and all other stamps issued by merchants are redeemable by the Sperry & Hutchinson Company at its store in Winston, or at any of its various stores throughout this state or the United States, as above stated. That the defendant company has done business in the city of Raleigh for six months, and at this time $14\frac{1}{16}$ of the stamps issued by the merchants have been presented to and redeemed by the defendant company. That no percentage is found of the number of lapsed stamps, or stamps which are not finally redeemed. That in North Carolina there are at this time storehouses of defendant company located and doing business, among others, in the cities of Raleigh, Greensboro, Durham, and High Point. That there is no time limit to the redemption of said stamps. That they are transferable by those who have them, and are bound, under the contract, to be redeemed, whenever presented in the number above set forth, to any of the various houses of the Sperry & Hutchinson Company. That the contracts of defendant company made in the city of Winston with others, as above set forth, are for a period of one year, except that the contract which defendant made with E. W. O'Hanlon was as follows: That it differs from the contract marked 'Exhibit No. 1,' in that the words, 'parties of the first and second parts mutually agree that this agreement shall be and remain in force for one year from the date of the opening of the store aforesaid of the party of the first part,' were stricken out of the contract, and it was agreed that the contract should continue at the option of either of the parties to said contract, and that the said defendants would not enter into a similar contract with any other drug store in Winston during the continuance of the contract with the said E. W. O'Hanlon. That the defendant Beeson delivered stamps to W. B. Hudson, a grocery merchant in the city of Winston, and the said Hudson delivered said stamps to one of his customers, according to the terms of the contract as above set forth. Defendant only redeems stamps when presented in a full book, consisting of 990 stamps. The portion of the charter of Winston and the ordinance under which defendant was arrested appear in this record as a part of this verdict. And the jurors say that they find the foregoing facts, and, if upon said facts, the defendant is guilty in law, they find him guilty, and, if upon the foregoing facts, the defendant is not guilty, in law, they find him not guilty."

Watson, Buxton & Watson and the Attorney General, for appellants. Glenn, Manly & Hendren and W. B. Crisp, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). It is provided by section 3500 of the Code that cities and towns may levy taxes for municipal purposes on all persons, privileges, and subjects within the corporate limits which are liable to taxation for state and county purposes. By the revenue act of 1903, pp. 337, 348, c. 247, §§ 51, 76, a license tax of $20 is imposed "on any gift enterprise or any person or establishment offering any article for sale and proposing to present a purchaser with a gift or prize as an inducement to purchase," and a license tax of $50 in each county where the business is conducted is imposed "upon every person, firm or corporation, who issues or sells to merchants or manufacturers any trading stamps or other devices to be redeemed by the person issuing or selling the same." The city of Winston could therefore have required the defendant corporation to pay a license tax of $50, under section 3800 of the Code and section 76 of the revenue act, if it were not for the clause in its charter by which the tax on all subjects not otherwise specifically provided for is limited to $10. It is not provided in section 3800 that cities and towns may lay taxes to the same amount as the state and counties can impose, but upon the same privileges and subjects as are taxed for state and county purposes. The amount of the tax is left to be determined by the charter of the particular city or town, and, if there is no restriction in the charter, then by ordinance; but, whenever such a limitation upon the city or town to tax is inserted in its charter, the power to tax by ordinance or otherwise must be exercised within the limit thus fixed by the law. Municipal corporations can levy no taxes except such as are authorized by their charters, or, where the charters are silent, such as are otherwise authorized by law. Winston v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 210, 6 S. E. 114; State v. Bean, 91 N. C. 554; Latta v. Williams, 87 N. C. 126. All these cases relate to license or privilege taxes. As to taxes on property, see Redmond v. Commissioners, 106 N. C. 122, 10 S. E. 845, 7 L. E. A. 539. By these considerations and authorities we are brought to the conclusion that the city of Winston had no authority to lay a privilege or license tax upon the defendant company exceeding in amount $10, which is the maximum allowed by its charter, unless it has acquired the power to exact the payment of a higher tax by virtue of the provision of section 65, subsec. 11, which authorizes it to impose on "each gift enterprise a license tax not exceeding $50 for each year."

If the business as conducted by the defendant corporation in the city of Winston is a "gift enterprise," the tax was lawfully imposed; but, if it is not such an enterprise, the defendants were justified in refusing to pay the tax, and the judgment below was right. In this contention between the parties, after a careful examination of the authorities and a consideration of the question involved, we are with the defendants, as we think it must be conceded that, unless the city had the power under the provision of the charter last mentioned, it was without power to pass the ordinance under which this prosecution was instituted before the mayor, and we must hold that it had no such power under that provision.

In passing upon the question whether the business of the defendant company falls within the meaning of the term "gift enterprise," we must not confine ourselves solely to any definition of those words which is intended to convey to our minds the meaning they have acquired by mere popular use, nor should we give to those words simply a literal interpretation. We must go deeper than that, and ascertain what was the real purpose and intention of the Legislature in using them, or, in other words, what is their legal meaning and import. We would fall short of a full and proper investigation of the question if we should be content with saying that the company's business is in a general sense an "enterprise" at which "gifts" are used as an inducement to attract purchasers to the stores of its customers or patrons, and therefore it must be "a gift enterprise." This would be "sticking in the bark." The words had a well-known and definite meaning in the law when the statutes we have mentioned were passed, and, by a well-settled rule of statutory construction, they must have that meaning in any interpretation we may give to those statutes. The law lexicographers define a "gift enterprise" as a scheme for the division and distribution of certain articles of property, to be determined by chance, among those who have taken shares in the scheme. Black's Law Dictionary, p. 539; Bouvier's Law Dict. vol. 1, p. 884; Anderson's Law Dic. p. 488. In Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17, it was said, in approving the definition just given, that the words "gift enterprise," as thus understood, had attained such notoriety that the courts would take judicial notice of what is meant when they appear in legislative enactments. It has been said in some of the books and by several of the courts that while the word "lottery" is not a technical term of the law, and to dispose of property of any kind by lottery is not an offense which has a recognized and established legal definition, and that the meaning of the word must be determined by reference to its popular sense and the mischief intended to be redressed by the statutes, yet, when thus construed, it indicates a scheme for the distribution of prizes and for the obtaining of money or goods by chance. The word "lottery" has been variously defined as a game of hazard, in which small sums are ventured for the chance of obtaining a larger value, either in money or other articles, a distribution of prizes won by lot or chance, a kind of game of hazard, wherein several lots of goods or merchandise are deposited in prizes for the benefit of the fortunate, or a sort of gaming contract, by which, for a valuable consideration, one may, by favor of the lot, obtain a prize of a value superior to the amount or value of that which he risks. State v. Mumford, 73 Mo. 650, 39 Am. Rep. 532; State v. Clarke, 33 N. H. 334, 68 Am. Dec. 723. Tested by any one of these approved definitions, a lottery always involves the element of chance, fortune, or hazard. It is gaming, pure and simple.

This being established, let us see if it assists us in arriving at the meaning of the words "gift enterprise" as used in the charter of Winston. The rule of construction is that associated words explain and limit each other. When a word used in a statute is ambiguous or vague, its meaning may be made clear and specific by considering the company in which it is found, and the meaning of the terms which are associated with it. This idea is expressed in the maxim nosctur a sociis. Black's Interpretation of Laws, 135; Sutherland, Stat. Cons. § 262. We find not only in the charter under consideration, but in other statutes of the state relating to revenue, that the words "gift enterprise" are used in close and intimate association with the word "lottery." In the revenue act passed at the same session as the charter of Winston, it was provided (Acts 1891, p. 293, c. 323, § 15) that a tax should be laid on every gift enterprise, or on any person or establishment offering any article for sale, and proposing to present purchasers with any gift or prize as an inducement to purchase, and on any lottery, whether known as a "beneficial association," "gift concert," or otherwise, provided that the section should not be construed as giving license or as relieving such persons or establishments from any penalties incurred by a violation of the law. This provision has been retained, we believe, in every revenue act passed since that year. It would seem plain, from the connection in which the words are used, and also by the very use of the words themselves, that the Legislature intended to tax only those enterprises, schemes, and offers of bargains which involve substantially the same sort of gambling upon chances as in any other kind of lottery, and which appealed to the disposition or propensity for engaging in hazards and chances with the hope that luck and good fortune may give a good return for a small outlay. The provision refers to gifts or prizes, the precise nature of which are not known at the time, and to cases in which the element of uncertainty is always present. It is restricted, therefore, to the kind of enterprises which appeal to the gambling instinct. The Legislature has not looked upon the business of the defendant company as a gift enterprise, for in the revenue acts of 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 137, c. 9) and 1902 it was not taxed as such, but was excluded from that class (section 51), and placed in a class by itself (section 76), and so taxed as to indicate that it was considered a perfectly legitimate and proper business. There is no saving in section 76 concerning criminal prosecution, as there is in section 51. A statute of similar import to the provision in this charter was held in Commonwealth v. Emerson, 165 Mass. 146, 42 N. E. 559, to embrace such a scheme or offer of bargains into which chance entered as one of its elements, and by which persons are induced to buy what they do not want in the hope or expectation or upon the hazard of getting something else as a gratuity, which it might turn out they did want, but the exact character of which they do not at the time know. It would be strange indeed that the Legislature should link two such terms together in many statutes, without intending that they should have a kindred meaning, but intending, on the contrary, that they should be diversely construed. We prefer to conclude that the purpose was not to impose a tax upon a perfectly innocent and harmless business, and to place it in the same class and category with lotteries, which have fallen under the ban of an enlightened public sentiment and under the condemnation of the law, but to tax such "enterprises" as partake of the nature of lotteries, and hold out temptations and allurements to the unwary and credulous, or to those who are willing always to take chances on results, in the hope of getting a great deal for a very little.

Having reached the conclusion that the words "gift enterprise," as used in the charter, refer only to such a one as includes the element of chance, we must next inquire whether the business of the defendant company comes within the meaning of those words as thus construed. From the definitions we have already given of a lottery or scheme for the disposition or distribution of prizes or property by chance, it appears that three things must concur in order to constitute it: (1) There must be the purchase of a right; (2) the right must be a contingent one to receive something greater than that which is purchased; and (3) the contingent right must depend upon a lot or chance. We have not been able to discover any one of these elements in the plan devised by the defendant company for the conduct of its business. The right to have the stamps redeemed depends upon no contingency, chance, or lot whatsoever. The person receiving the stamps upon the purchase of goods is not in any degree deprived of his choice or will. Indeed, by the contract he is given full and free exercise of his choice and will. The right of selection among the articles kept by the stamp company in its store is expressly given, and the stamp collector may choose the best or the most valuable, or such a one as may be most useful to him or pleasing to his taste, as he may be minded. The articles are all publicly exhibited, and, before the purchases are made or the stamps collected, any person proposing to buy and to receive the stamps from the merchant has free access to the store, where he may see and examine the goods from which his selection may be made. There is therefore no uncertainty as to the nature, character, or value of the premium, if we may so call it, with which the stamps will be redeemed. The fact that the stamps are redeemed at a place other than the one where they are issued certainly does not introduce into the scheme any element of chance. We can discern no practical difference between this arrangement of the parties and one by which the merchant agrees to discount his bills where cash is paid by his customer at the time of the purchase; and the giving of stamps redeemable at a store of another in goods to be selected by the holder, instead of an actual discount by the merchant, does not, in law, vary the case, or change the real and substantial character of the transaction. The plan, as outlined in the verdict, seems to be one for advertising the merchant's business and his wares, and enabling him to sell his goods for cash instead of on time. This, it must be conceded, is an advantage to him. It is also a benefit to the customer, who practically receives a discount, and who will buy more cautiously and judiciously if he pays cash, and will spend only according to his means. The stamp company is undoubtedly benefited, also, by the sale of its goods, and anything it may gain by the failure to present stamps for redemption. But where is there anything in the transaction, from first to last, that bears any likeness or resemblance to a lottery or an enterprise of chance? What declared policy of the state or law forbids it? It was suggested that the gain to the stamp company by the failure to present stamps at the store for redemption in goods involved an element of chance. If this is so, the government and the banks are engaged in a prohibited business, for both benefit by the loss of bills and currency which they put in circulation. The same may be said of railroad companies who issue tickets which may not be used, and never come back to them for redemption. Can it be correctly said that this is the result of chance? Many other similar instances might be mentioned, but it has never been supposed that the business in which such gains are made was for that reason unlawful. Nor does the fact that the defendant's business is novel make it unlawful or subject it to taxation.

We turn now to the books, and find that the decisions of the courts of other states are in perfect accord with the view we take of this matter. The Court of Appeals of Virginia has recently considered the same question in Young v. Commonwealth (Va.) 45 S. E. 827, in which the court says: "We find nothing in the contract between Sperry & Hutchinson and the defendant, nor the transactions with customers in pursuance of such contract, that is not a legitimate exercise of one's right to prosecute his own business in his own way. As has already been said, it appears to be simply one of many devices fallen upon in these days of sharp competition between tradespeople to attract customers, or to induce those who have bought once to buy again, and in this respect is as innocent as any other form of advertising." Substantially the same is said in Ex parte McKenna, 126 Cal. 429, 58 Pac. 916. "It appears," says the court, "to be simply a device to attract customers, or to induce those who have bought once to buy again, and in this respect is as innocent as any form of advertising." In State v. Shugart (Ala.) 35 South. 23, the business of the defendant is thus described: "The scheme, if such it may be termed, was only a mode of advertising by those merchants who entered into it. The articles of property given away by the company, of which the appellee was the manager, was not by lot or chance, nor by way of distribution of prizes among share or ticket holders in any chance scheme. We are quite clear that there was nothing in the transaction offensive to the statute against lotteries and gift enterprises." In State v. Dalton, 22 R. I. 77, 46 Atl. 234, 48 L. R. A. 775, 84 Am. St. Rep. 818, will be found an able and elaborate discussion of the question, and an unanswerable argument sustaining the defendant's contention that there is no element of chance in its enterprise, if it may be so called. In that case the court says: "In other words, the act recognizes the right of a person to give away an article of merchandise in connection with, and as an inducement to, the making of a sale of some other article, but provides, in effect, that the giving of such article must be done by him directly, and not through a third person. We fail to see that there is any substantial difference in principle between the two methods, or that either bears any resemblance to a lottery. The element of chance, which is the basal principle in every scheme in the nature of a lottery, is wholly wanting." See, also, People v. Dycker, 72 App. Div. (N. Y.) 308, 76 N. Y. Supp. 111; Com. v. Emerson, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 559; Com. v. Sisson, 178 Mass. 578, 60 N. E. 385; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465; Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 22 Atl. 4, 12 L. R. A. 425, 28 Am. St. Rep. 268. Several cases have been decided the same way in the lower courts of some of the other states. They involved the very question we have under consideration, but, as they have not been reviewed by the courts of last resort, we will not make further reference to them.

Since this opinion was prepared, we have read the case of Lansburgh & Sperry v. Dist. of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512, which has been called to our attention. We do not think anything said in that case, which was necessary to its decision, conflicts with what we have herein decided. The only point in that case was whether the business of the defendants came within the meaning of a "gift enterprise," as defined by the statute of the District. This will appear from the following passage in the opinion of the court: "Without the necessity of declaring that the acts proved in this case constitute the conduct of a lottery or gift enterprise, as those words are commonly understood, or even of finding that the element of chance operates intentionally and distinctively in the scheme of the trading stamp company, we think, nevertheless, that they come within the prohibition of the statute, which, as before said, furnishes its own definition of 'gift enterprise.'"

The defendant's counsel also contended that the ordinance is not a legitimate exercise of the police power, is discriminating, prohibitory and unreasonable, and is unconstitutional and void. We need not consider this sweeping attack upon the validity of the ordinance, though it is supported by a very learned and able argument, for we have concluded that the business of the defendant, as described in the special verdict, does not come within the meaning of the term "gift enterprise," as used in the charter. The city of Winston, being limited in the power to pass ordinances by its charter and the general law, was without the necessary authority to pass the ordinance upon which this prosecution is based.

The court properly adjudged, upon the special verdict, that the defendants are not guilty. Affirmed.

(134 N. C. 457)

HUGHES et al. v. CLARK et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 22, 1904.)

Concurring opinion. For opinion, see 46 S. E. 956.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring in result only). I am compelled to concur in the judgment of the court, since, however erroneous the opinion of the court may be, it would be manifestly inequitable to compel the defendant to specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land, the use of which this court will not permit him to enjoy. I do not think that the case of Collins v. Land Co., 128 N. C. 563, 39 S. E. 21, 83 Am. St. Rep. 720, has any application to the case at bar; but, in any event, my views have been so fully expressed in my dissenting opinion in that case that it is needless to repeat them here.

As to the other question in the case, the solution seems very simple. The plaintiff owns the 10 feet in controversy in fee simple, subject only to whatever rights of easement the public or adjacent proprietors may have therein. When the easement ceases to exist, by abandonment or otherwise, the owner retains the fee, and recovers the unrestricted use of his property. I freely admit that the town cannot entirely close up the street, or sell or give any part of it to any one, but I am not aware of any law by which a private donor or donee can compel the town to accept a street of any specified width. If the town keeps open a street of suitable width, I see no reason why it cannot refuse to accept or subsequently abandon such part as may be neither necessary nor convenient for public use. This is simply an abandonment of the public easement pro tanto, and in no sense a gift, concession, or conveyance to any one. We all know that a well-paved street of 40 feet would be much more useful than 50 feet of mudholes, and that it would cost proportionately more to pave a wider street than one of less width. It is common knowledge that the city of Washington, in spite of the national aid it constantly receives, found it impossible to bear the expense of paving its residence streets at their original width, and permitted a certain number of feet to be inclosed by the adjacent owners. As there the fee never was in the adjacent owners, they acquired only such permissive use as the city might give them. In the case at bar the fee was already in the plaintiff, and the abandonment of the public use simply relieved that much of his land of the burden of the pre-existing easement.

(135 N. C. 382)

ROBINSON et al. v. CITY OF GOLDSBORO et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

CITIES—ISSUE OF BONDS FOR WATERWORKS—NECESSITY OF ELECTION.

1. Under Priv. Laws 1901, p. 944, c. 397, providing that the aldermen of a city may issue bonds for waterworks, provided that before they are issued the proposition shall be submitted to the voters at an election, such submission to the voters is a prerequisite to the power to issue the bonds.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wayne County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by J. J. Robinson and others against the city of Goldsboro and others. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The city of Goldsboro was incorporated by chapter 397, p. 944, Priv. Laws 1901. Among other corporate powers conferred by the charter, the city was authorized to establish a system of sewerage, waterworks, electric lights, etc., and for that purpose to purchase the system of waterworks and electric lights then in operation in said city. The board of aldermen, for the purpose of providing the means with which to establish or purchase and maintain the said system of waterworks, etc., and for certain other purposes set forth in the charter, were authorized to issue bonds of said city "as and when the board of aldermen may determine * * * from time to time to an amount not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of two hundred thousand dollars and to issue said bonds for any of said purposes, or for two or more, or for all." By section 65 of the charter, it is provided that, before any of the bonds provided for shall be issued, the proposition shall be submitted to the qualified voters at an election. The time and manner of holding the election are provided for. Pursuant to the provisions of the charter, an election was held, and an issue of bonds voted, for the specified purposes, to an amount fixed at said election. An issue of bonds to the amount of $2,500 for the purpose of purchasing the electric light plant was approved, and bonds issued in accordance therewith. The total amount of bonds voted and issued was $110,000. On April 14, 1904, the board of aldermen adopted a resolution, reciting in the preamble thereof the purchase of the electric light plant; that said plant was inadequate to supply the city with light; the public necessity for an increase of its capacity, with additional machinery, fixtures, etc.; the inability of the city to furnish adequate light without contracting a debt for the purpose of enlarging and increasing the capacity of the plant, etc. The plaintiff, in behalf of himself and all other taxpayers of such city, seeks to enjoin the board of aldermen from issuing such bonds, for that the proposition has not been submitted to the voters of the city. The court below granted the injunction, and the defendants appealed.

A. C. Davis, for appellants. F. A. Daniels, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. The defendants rely upon the decision of this court in Fawcett v. Mt. Airy, 134 N. C. —, 45 S. E. 1029, to sustain their resolution to issue the bonds without the approval of the voters of the city. It is there held that in the absence of any restrictive provision in the charter, or by special or general legislation, the power may be conferred upon municipal corporations to contract debts and issue bonds for necessary expenses, and that furnishing light and water is a necessary expense. The facts set forth in the pleadings in this case, however, bring it directly within the principle announced in Wadsworth v. Concord, 133 N. C. 587, 45 S. E. 948. The charter expressly provides that bonds for the purpose set out may be issued to the amount of $200,000 when the proposition has been submitted to and approved by the voters. The principle upon which that case is based is thus stated—quoting Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 449: "Respecting the mode in which contracts by corporations should be made, it is important to observe that when, as is sometimes the case, the mode of contracting is specially and plainly prescribed and limited, that mode is exclusive, and must be pursued, or the contract will not bind the corporation." The power to issue bonds for the purpose of establishing an electric light plant—and we think this language includes making adequate provision for lighting the city—is expressly conferred subject to the approval of the qualified voters of said city. Certainly, until this power is exhausted, it excludes any other. It would be an idle thing for the General Assembly to prescribe the method by which and the terms upon which a municipal corporation could issue bonds, if, in disregard of such provisions, it could proceed to do so. It is clearly within the power of the General Assembly to restrict, which, of course, includes the power to prescribe, the terms upon which it may be exercised. Const. art. 8, § 4.

The judgment must be affirmed.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring in result). In concurring in the result of the opinion of the court, it is perhaps needless to say that, in view of the uniform decisions of this court and my fixed convictions of constitutional obligation, I would have dissented in Fawcett v. Mt. Airy had I been present when the opinion was filed. My views have been so recently expressed in my concurring opinion in Wadsworth v. Concord, 133 N. C. 601, 45 S. E. 948, that it is useless to repeat them now.

(135 N. C. 385)

JOHNSON v. GRAND FOUNTAIN OF UNITED ORDER OF TRUE RE- FORMERS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

RECORDARI—DISMISSAL—APPEAL—BENEFICIARY ASSOCIATIONS—CHANGING CONSTITU- TION—APPEARANCE.

1. A recordari granted defendant by the superior court as substitute for an appeal from a justice not being docketed at that or the succeeding term, plaintiff may at a subsequent term docket the case, and have it dismissed.

2. A beneficiary association may not change its constitution, after its contract with a member, to his detriment, except by consent, the burden of showing which is on it.

3. The refusal of the superior court to dismiss a recordari granted as a substitute for an appeal from a justice, while not appealable, being excepted to, is reviewable on an appeal from the court's action in setting aside a verdict and granting a new trial on the ground of an error of law.

4. Any lack of service on defendant is cured by its coming into court, without any special appearance, asking for a recordari, and trying the cause on its merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by Nelson Johnson, administrator, against the Grand Fountain of the United Order of True Reformers. From an order setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Louis M. Swind and J. S. Fitts, for appellant. J. S. Lanier, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. Judgment was rendered before a justice of the peace 30th September, 1902. The defendant took no appeal, but at December term, 1902, on application to the superior court, obtained an order for a recordari and supersedeas. The defendant failed to give bond or to have the case docketed either at that term or at the next succeeding term of the superior court, which was held in February, 1903. At the March term the plaintiff moved to docket and dismiss. This was refused, and the plaintiff excepted. At the September term, 1903, the recordari and supersedeas not having been yet docketed, the plaintiff again moved to docket and dismiss. This was refused, and the defendant was allowed to docket the recordari and supersedeas at that term, and the plaintiff again excepted. A trial by jury was had, with verdict against the defendant, which the court set aside on the ground that he had misdirected the jury to allow sick benefits, whereas, subsequent to the contract, the general order had changed its constitution so as to provide that sick benefits should not be paid by the defendant, but by the subordinate lodges, and the plaintiff excepted.

There was error in both particulars. The recordari was granted as a substitute for an appeal, and, not having been docketed, the plaintiff had a right to docket the case and have it dismissed at March term, 1903, and also at September term. Clark's Code (3d Ed.) p. 731; Brown v. Plott, 129 N. C. 272, 40 S. E. 45; Davenport v. Grissom, 113 N. C. 38, 18 S. E. 78; Ballard v. Gay, 108 N. C. 544, 13 S. E. 207; Boing v. Railroad, 88 N. C. 62.

As to the second ground, the defendant could not change its constitution, subsequent to the contract, to the detriment of the other party, except by mutual consent. Bragaw v. Supreme Lodge, 128 N. C. 356, 38 S. E. 905, 54 L. R. A. 602. And this was not shown. It was error against the plaintiff to put the burden upon him to show that there was no consent to the change. The opposite was held to be the law. Hill v. Life Ass'n, 128 N. C. 463, 39 S. E. 56; Strauss v. Life Ass'n, 128 N. C. 465, 39 S. E. 55, 54 L. R. A. 605, 83 Am. St. Rep. 699; Simmons v. Life Ass'n, 128 N. C. 469, 39 S. E. 966; Bragaw v. Supreme Lodge, 128 N. C., at page 357, 38 S. E. 905, 54 L. R. A. 602.

The judge having set aside the verdict and granted a new trial for a supposed error of law, an appeal lies to review him. Bryan v. Heck, 67 N. C. 322; Gay v. Nash, 84 N. C. 335; Thomas v. Myers, 87 N. C. 31; Wood v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 48, 42 S. E. 462. The refusal to dismiss not being a final judgment, no appeal then lay, and the plaintiff properly noted an exception, which brings the ruling up for review on this appeal. Fertilizer Co. v. Marshburn, 122 N. C. 411, 29 S. E. 411, and other cases cited in Clark's Code (3d Ed.) p. 738.

The defendant's exception to the jurisdiction, taken in this court, that the defendant is a foreign corporation, and not domesticated here, and hence cannot be sued here, is without merit. The summons was served on its agent. Jester v. Steam Packet Co., 131 N. C. 54, 42 S. E. 447. Even if there had been originally lack of service, the defendant waived objection by coming into court, asking for a recordari, and trying the cause upon its merits. Clark v. Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 111, 14 S. E. 518. It would have been otherwise if the defendant had entered a special appearance, and, that being overruled, had excepted and gone to trial. State v. Johnson, 109 N. C. 852, 13 S. E. 843.

The order setting aside the verdict and judgment is reversed. This renders it unnecessary to direct the dismissal of the recordari. Reversed.

(125 N. C. 373.)

WOMACK v. GROSS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

DEPOSITIONS—COMMISSION—OMISSION OF COMMISSIONER'S NAME—FAILURE TO OBJECT IN TIME—PROOF OF GROUNDS FOR ADMISSION—NECESSITY—APPEAL—INSUFFICIENCY OF RECORD—WAIVER.

1. Code, § 1361, provides that at any time before trial or hearing a party may move to reject a deposition for irregularity in taking it. Section 1360 provides that a deposition shall not be quashed for irregularity after the trial begins, where it has been on file long enough to permit earlier objection. A deposition was taken November 2d, and trial had January 25th. The commission under which it was taken omitted the commissioner's name. The opposite party appeared at the taking, cross-examined the witness, and made no objection till after trial was begun. Held a waiver of the defect.

2. Where a deposition is rejected in limine as invalid, it is not incumbent on the party offering it to give evidence of grounds for its admission under Code, § 1358, specifying the instances in which depositions properly taken may be read at the trial.

3. Appellee's agreement that a rejected deposition need not be sent up to the Supreme Court on appeal "because not material to the decision," admits that the rejected evidence was material, so that the failure to send up the deposition will not prevent a reversal for error in its rejection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by Q. L. Womack against J. C. Gross and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Eaves & Rucker, for appellants. McBrayer & Justice, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On objection by the plaintiff the court refused to permit the deposition of Susan Gross to be read in evidence on the ground that the name of the commissioner was not inserted in the commission. The defendant excepted. The commission was properly signed, sealed, and issued, and the plaintiff accepted service of the notice, which stated the time and place at which the deposition would be taken, and the name of the commissioner. Before said commissioner the plaintiff appeared without exception, and cross-examined the witness. The deposition was taken November 21, 1903, and the trial took place January 25, 1904. There was no exception to the deposition till after the trial began. The Code, § 1361, provides how and when an objection on account of irregularity may be made. Section 1360 provides that no deposition shall be quashed for irregularity after a trial begins, where the deposition has been filed sufficiently long before the trial to permit objection to be made sooner. The irregularity in failing to fill in the name of the commissioner to whom the commission was issued, and who duly took and returned the deposition, was waived by the plaintiff appearing before him by counsel without exception, and cross-examining the witness, and by not making any exception till after the trial was begun. Willeford v. Bailey, 132 N. C. 403, 43 S. E. 928 (where the commissioner was not named in the notice); Davison v. Land Co., 118 N. C. 369, 24 S. E. 14 (where the commission was neither signed nor sealed); Carroll v. Hodges, 98 N. C. 419, 4 S. E. 199; Woodley v. Hassell, 94 N. C. 159; Barnhardt v. Smith, 86 N. C. 480; Kerchner v. Reilly, 72 N. C. 173. The deposition having been rejected in limine for the reason given, it was not incumbent upon the defendant to put in evidence grounds, under section 1358, for its admission, for that would have been a vain thing to do after the deposition had been already rejected as invalid. It is also true that, when evidence is rejected, the party offering it should state its purport, or send it up if written (as a deposition), that the court may see that it was competent and relevant, and that its rejection was injurious, and not merely harmless error. Straus v. Beardsley, 79 N. C. 59. But the agreement of the appellee that the deposition should not be sent up "because not material to the decision" is an admission that failure to send it up should not be prejudicial to the appellant, and, in effect, that the rejected evidence was material, if wrongly rejected.

¶ 1. See Depositions, vol. 16, Cent. Dig. §§ 309, 316, 338.

For the error in rejecting the deposition, there must be a new trial.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring). I concur in the opinion of the court upon the ground therein stated that "there was no exception to the deposition till after the trial began." I am very much influenced in this view by the reasoning of the court in Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 151, 21 L. Ed. 123, where the deposition was taken before an officer not authorized by law. The court said, on page 159: "It is to be observed that the objections made are all formal, rather than substantial. Still they are quite sufficient to require the rejection of the deposition, if there is nothing in the case to countervail their effect. But it is obvious that all the provisions made in the statute respecting notice to the adverse party, the oath of the witness, the reasons for making the deposition, and the rank or character of the magistrate authorized to take it, were introduced for the protection of the party against whom the testimony of the witness is intended to be used. It is not to be doubted that he may waive them. A party may waive any provision, either of a contract or of a statute, intended for his benefit. If, therefore, it appears that the plaintiff in error did waive his rights under the act of Congress—if he did practically consent that the deposition should be taken and returned to the court as it was, and if by his waiver he has misled his antagonist; if he refrained from making objections known to him at a time when they might have been removed, and until after the possibility of such removal had ceased—he ought not to be permitted to raise the objections at all. If he may, he is allowed to avail himself of what is substantially a fraud. Parties to suits at law may assert their rights to the fullest extent, but neither a plaintiff nor a defendant is at liberty to deceive, either actively or passively, his adversary, and a court whose province it is to administer justice will take care that on the trial of every cause neither party shall reap any advantage from his own fraud." In the case at bar it appears that the deposition was taken on the 21st day of November, and that the trial took place on the 25th day of the following January. This apparently gave the plaintiff ample opportunity to examine the deposition and object to any irregularity of form or substance. I do not mean to say that a failure to object in proper time would validate a blank commission. Merely formal irregularities may be cured, and substantial rights may be waived, but it is impossible to validate that which has no legal existence. The plaintiff's conduct does not have the legal effect of creating a commissioner, but is construed by the court, in the furtherance of substantial justice, into a consent to the taking of the deposition under the circumstances under which it was taken. By withholding all objection when he knew the facts, or by reasonable diligence might have known them, until it was too late to remedy defects which might otherwise have been remedied, he is deemed to have acquiesced. A void commission is essentially different from a defect in notice. The only object in the latter is to give the opposite party a reasonable opportunity of attending. If he actually attends, and proceeds with the examination, the object of the notice is attained. This is not so with other irregularities, which he generally has no means of knowing until after he does attend. Hence his attendance is not necessarily a waiver as to them; but even then he should assert his right of objection in good faith and in due time. This seems to be the essential principle aimed at by sections 1360 and 1361 of the Code.

(135 N. C. 423)

SETZER & RUSSELL v. DEAL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1904.)

BILLS AND NOTES—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—FACTS PUTTING ON INQUIRY.

1. Knowledge on the part of a bona fide purchaser of a note of the assignor's crookedness in business matters does not defeat the purchaser's title, or charge him with the duty of making inquiry about the note.

2. The fact that the firm in which the assignor of a note was a partner had its place of business next door to the purchaser's place of business was irrelevant on the question of the purchaser's character as a bona fide holder of the note.

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by Setzer & Russell against A. A. Deal. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

E. B. Cline, for appellants. Self & Whitener and T. M. Hufham, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. All the evidence was to the effect that the defendant executed two notes to the Deering Harvester Company—one in the sum of $50, and the other in the sum of $55—for an Ideal binder sold by that company to him; that those notes were destroyed in the presence of the defendant by Yoder, and that thereupon the defendant executed the note sued upon in this action. Yoder claimed to be one of the firm of the Hickory Implement Company, and testified that he indorsed the same to the plaintiffs for value. The defendant attempted to prove that Yoder and the plaintiffs conspired to cheat the Deering Harvester Company by destroying the evidence of the indebtedness of the defendant to that company, and in taking the note of the defendant for the amount. There is abundant evidence in the case going to show that Yoder practiced a fraud upon the Deering Harvester Company in the transaction, but we can see from the evidence only one suspicious circumstance tending to prove the complicity of the plaintiffs in the matter, viz., that, according to the defendant's testimony, after the plaintiffs alleged they bought the note sued upon, the defendant called upon the plaintiffs, and asked them if they had bought the note from Yoder, and, if so; what they paid for it, and they declined to answer the questions. That was, as we have said, after the alleged purchase of the note. The defendant, with the purpose to show that the plaintiffs were in possession of such facts as should have put them on inquiry as to the title of Yoder to the notes sued on, asked Setzer, one of the plaintiffs, if he did not know at the time of the transfer of the notes that there were charges against Yoder of crookedness in business transactions. And the witness was further asked for the same purpose if he tried to find out anything else about the note, and, further, if he knew the Hickory Implement Company did business next door to the plaintiffs. The witness was compelled to answer that he had heard there were some charges against Yoder; that he did not make inquiry about the note or the plaintiffs' title to it; and that he did know that the Hickory Implement Company conducted business next door to the plaintiffs. We are of the opinion that the evidence was incompetent. The defendant had executed the note. It was not due when it was transferred, and the plaintiffs had testified that they had given $100 for it, and knew nothing, nor had heard anything, to its dishonor; and the defendant had introduced no evidence in contradiction. The purchase of the notes seems to have been made for value, in good faith, and in due course of business. Any knowledge on the part of the purchaser of the assignor's crookedness in business matters could not be allowed to defeat the rule of law which gave to a purchaser of a note for value, in good faith, and in regular course of business, the title to the property. It would be almost impossible for the business of banking to be carried on if it was incumbent that bank officers, whenever negotiable paper was offered for discount or sale, inquire into whether any of the parties to be charged were crooked in their business methods.

We cannot see what connection the fact that the Hickory Implement Company did business next door to the plaintiffs could have to do with the matter. Neither in fact nor in law did it have any connection with the matter. We see nothing in the evidence, as we have said, which put the plaintiffs upon notice to look into or find out anything about Yoder's right to the note. "What circumstances will amount to actual or constructive notice of any defect or infirmity in the title to the note, so as to let it in as a bar or defense against a holder for value, has been a matter of much discussion, and of no small diversity of judicial opinion. It is agreed on all sides that express notice is not indispensable, but it will be sufficient if the circumstances are of such a strong and pointed character as necessarily to cast a shade upon the transaction and to put the holder upon inquiry." Story, From. Notes, § 197. The same principle of law was held in Lottin v. Hill, 131 N. C. 105, 42 S. E. 549.

New trial.

(135 N. C. 429)

FOY v. CITY OF WINSTON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREETS—OBSTRUCTIONS—HITCHING TIMBERS.

1. Since under the system of procedure in force in North Carolina there is no general verdict, but the jury is required to respond to issues, a request to charge that "plaintiff cannot recover" is properly refused.

¶ 1. See Bills and Notes, vol. 7, Cent. Dig. § 825.

2. Where, in an action for injuries, there was no conflict in the evidence, and from the facts only one inference could be drawn, the question of negligence was for the court, and should not have been submitted to the jury.

3. Plaintiff, a blind man, unattended, attempted to cross a street between regular crossings, and ran against a strip of timber 2 inches square and about 10 feet long, nailed lengthwise along the street across two electric light poles set in the outer edge of the sidewalk, about 4½ or 5 feet above the ground. The strip had been in that place for about six years, and was used for hitching animals, and did not obstruct any one passing along the sidewalk or along the street. Held, that the presence of such strip under such circumstances did not constitute negligence on the part of the city.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by Pleasant Foy against the city of Winston. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Watson, Buxton & Watson, for appellant. Lindsay Patterson, for appellee.

OLARK, C. J. The plaintiff, a blind man, and unattended, attempted to cross the street, not at a regular crossing. There was a row of electric light poles on the outer edge of the sidewalk, and to two of such poles, which were about 5 feet apart, was nailed a strip about 2 inches square and about 10 feet long, which projected beyond one pole about 3 feet and some 6 or 8 inches beyond the other pole. This strip was nailed 4½ feet or 5 feet above the ground, and had been there some six years, and was used for a hitching post, being on the edge of the sidewalk around the courthouse square. The strip did not obstruct any one passing along the sidewalk or along the street. The plaintiff, coming down the walk from the courthouse, instead of turning to the left or right and going to the corner of the square where the street crossings are, attempted to go diagonally across the street at that point, and, not discovering by the use of his stick that there was any strip nailed from one post to the other, ran against it, and was hurt. Why he should have run against it with such impetus as to be seriously hurt (if he was) does not appear. "The defendant asked the court to hold as a matter of law that the plaintiff could not recover, and to so charge the jury. The court declined to so hold or charge, but left the question to the jury to decide on the entire testimony whether there was negligence on the part of the defendant in causing the injury. The defendant excepted." There was no error in refusing to charge that "the plaintiff cannot recover." This instruction is not applicable to our present system, under which there is no general verdict, but the jury respond to issues. Vanderbilt v. Brown, 128 N. C. 501, 39 S. E. 36; Bradley v. Railroad, 126 N. C. 740, 36 S. E. 181; Willis v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 909, 29 S. E. 941; and several other cases there cited. But the judge erred in "leaving the question to the jury to decide on the entire testimony whether there was negligence on the part of the defendant in causing the injury." There was no conflict in the evidence, and when the facts are known, and only one inference can be drawn from them, negligence is a question of law for the court. We do not see where in the defendant was negligent. The strip nailed to two electric light poles standing along the outer edge of the sidewalk around the courthouse square did not impede travel along the sidewalk or along the street, nor interfere with those passing from one side of the street to the other at the regular and usual crossing places. The strip, used as a hitching rack, was a convenience to those coming to the courthouse on business otherwise than on foot, to have some place to hitch their horses, and it was no inconvenience to any one else. Those living in the country, or too far from the courthouse to walk, are entitled to some consideration for their convenience as to hitching their animals. The strip had been there, used for this purpose, and without complaint, so far as shown, for about six years. There was no negligence of the defendant shown, and it was the plaintiff's own fault that, blind and unattended, he attempted to cross the street at other than one of the regular crossings provided for the public. In an action by this same plaintiff against the defendant for a different injury (126 N. C. 381, 35 S. E. 609) it was held that it was not negligence per se for him to pass along the public sidewalk without a guide, provided he used ordinary care; adding that "ordinary care on the part of a blind man means a higher degree of care than would be required of a person in possession of all his senses." We did not mean to be understood as giving the plaintiff permission to leave the sidewalk and public crossings provided for pedestrians, and to plunge across the streets at any point he chose. Besides, instead of using a "higher degree of care than would be required of a person in possession of all his senses," he used less, since no one in possession of his eyes with ordinary care would have run against the horse rack. We are, however, not resting the decision upon the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, but upon the ground that no negligence has been shown on the part of the defendant.

Error.

DOUGLAS, J. (concurring in result). The opinion of the court says: "When the facts are known, and only one inference can be drawn from them, negligence is a question of law for the court." I know there are precedents tending in that direction; but it seems to me, on the better and greater weight of authority, that the rule is too broadly stated, even if intrinsically correct. Under the rule of "the prudent man," which seems now to be meeting with practically universal acceptance, negligence, especially in its proximate relation to the injury, is a mixed question of law and fact for the determination of the jury. The court can in proper cases direct the plaintiff to be consulted, on the ground that there is no evidence tending to prove negligence; but any intimation that the court can weigh the evidence and harmonize conflicting inferences, and then say that negligence has or has not been proved, either on the part of the plaintiff or the defendant, is a proposition too dangerous in its tendencies to admit of my approval.

(125 N. C. 400)

WESTBROOKS et al. v. WILSON et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

WILLS—UNDUE INFLUENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. On an issue of devisavit vel non, the court, after correctly defining mental capacity requisite to make a will, and stating the test thereof, and what constituted undue influence, charged that the caveators contended that, if testator had sufficient mind to know the consequences of his act, yet his mind was weak, and he was surrounded by the beneficiaries of the will, whose influence, domination, and control over him were such as to put him in fear and coerce his conduct, and by these means his will was perverted from its free action, or thrust aside entirely, and the will of the beneficiaries substituted; that the caveators must show by the greater weight of evidence that these influences existed, and the beneficiaries were successful in procuring the making of the will as it was made; and that if the jury found that testator lived an adulterous life with his mistress (mother of the beneficiaries), recognizing her illegitimate children by him, and abandoning his legitimate ones, these facts would not, alone, show undue influence and coercion, but might be considered in passing thereon. Held that, in view of the whole charge, error in instructing that, if the jury found the will was "influenced" by the beneficiaries, they would find for the caveators, was not ground for reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Proceedings by Lottie Wilson and others for the probate of a will, in which J. F. Westbrooks and others appear as caveators. Judgment for the caveators, and the propounders appeal. Affirmed.

This was an issue devisavit vel non, the caveators being the children and only heirs at law of the alleged testator. The propounders were the children of one Lottie Wilson, to whom the larger portion of the estate was given in the alleged will. The caveators alleged and introduced evidence tending to prove that their father, at the date of his will, was 82 years of age; that by reason of dissipation, sickness, and old age, his mental and physical powers were so much impaired that he was incapable of making a valid will or other disposition of his property; that, if not legally incapable of doing so, he was the victim of fraud and undue influence exerted over him by Lottie Wilson, with whom he lived in an illicit relationship, and of her two sons, who were bastards, living in the same house; that the said Lottie Wilson, an unchaste, immoral woman, wielded an almost irresistible influence over him; that, by reason of his age, condition of health, and an accident sustained by being thrown from a mule, he was easily influenced by said Lottie Wilson, who had absolute control over him; the two sons of said Lottie were named as executors to the alleged will; that he was coerced and compelled to sign it by threats and other undue influence of the said parties. The propounders, admitting the age and infirm condition of the alleged testator, denied that he was incapable of executing the will, or that any undue influence or coercion was exerted over him. The usual issue was submitted to the jury, to which they responded in the negative, and from the judgment rendered thereon the propounders appealed.

Eaves & Rucker, for appellants. McBrayer & Justice, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. The only exception and assignment of error in the record is directed to the eighth special instruction given in response to the prayer of the caveators, to wit: "The burden is upon the caveators to establish fraud or undue influence, and, in passing upon this question, it is your duty to take into consideration the relation of the alleged testator to the devisees; his age and state of health at the time; the circumstances surrounding him, and the manner of disposition of such property; and if, from all the circumstances surrounding the execution of the said paper writing, you shall find that the said paper writing was influenced by the beneficiaries, or any of them, then you will answer the issue, 'No.'" The criticism of this instruction is to the use of the word "influenced," in the concluding sentence, in the absence of any qualifying word. The propounders say that thereby the jury were instructed to return a verdict in condemnation of the will if they found that the alleged testator was in any way or to any extent influenced to execute it by the propounders. The exception is well taken, and must be sustained, unless, as contended by the caveators, the error is rendered harmless by what is said in other portions of the charge. That a person may, by proper influences, be induced to make a valid disposition of his property, is well settled. As if such influences be addressed to his sense of justice, his affection, or his relation to other persons, there can be no possible valid objection, either in law or morals. The kind and degree of influence which the law denounces as undue, and therefore vitiating, are such as overrule and control, dominate and direct, the mind and will of the person operated upon. Wright v. Howe, 52 N. C. 412. It is a fraudulent influence which controls the mind of the testator so as to induce him to make a will which he would not have otherwise made. Marshall v. Fliinn, 49 N. C. 199.

The caveators make no contention in regard to the law, but direct attention to the entire charge of his honor, and say that, when read as a whole instruction, it is impossible for the jury to have been misled by the failure at this point to use the word "undue," or some other appropriate term. It is settled that if a charge is contradictory, in presenting material aspects of the law, a new trial will be awarded. This must be so, because this court cannot know to what extent the jury is misled or confused. Williams v. Haid, 118 N. C. 481, 24 S. E. 217. It is equally well settled that when, reading the entire charge, it is manifest that the jury could not, in any reasonable view, have misunderstood the real matter in controversy, or the law bearing thereon, a new trial will not be awarded. To the criticism made of the charge in Lewis v. Sloan, 68 N. C. 557, this court said: "But upon a consideration of the instructions as a whole, we think they called the attention of the jury, as fairly as could be expected, under the circumstances, to the material questions upon which they were to pass." The same rule is announced and followed in Dills v. Hampton, 92 N. C. 565, and State v. Keen, 95 N. C. 646.

His honor's charge was very full and clear. There is no possible criticism to be made of it—certainly not by the propounders—except in the particular pointed out. He gave the jury a full and clear statement of the contentions of the parties and of the testimony. He also stated correctly the definition and test of mental capacity requisite to make a will, and of what constituted such undue influence as would invalidate a will. He further said that "the caveators contend that if you should find that at all times the testator had sufficient mind to apprehend, understand, and know the consequences of his act in making the will and disposing of his property, yet the evidence shows that the testator's mind was very weak and feeble; that his disease was such as to weaken his mind; that, being weak in body and mind, he was surrounded by the beneficiaries of the will; and that their influence, domination, and control over him were such as to put him in fear, to coerce and influence and force his conduct in writing the will as it was made; and by these means the will of the testator was perverted from its free action, or thrust aside entirely, and the will of the beneficiaries substituted for the will of the testator. The caveators must show to you, by the greater weight of evidence, that these infectious influences existed, and that they (the beneficiaries) were successful in procuring the making of the will as it was made. If you find as a fact from the evidence that the testator lived an adulterous life, cut loose and abandoned his children begotten in lawful wedlock, and lived entirely or a greater part of the time with Lottie Wilson, his mistress, treating her as his lawful wife, and recognizing the children begotten by her as his offspring, these facts and circumstances alone would not be sufficient to show fraud, undue influence, and coercion in making the will; but you may consider them, along with other facts and circumstances, in passing upon the question of fraud, undue influence, and coercion, which is alleged by the caveators to have existed at the time of the execution of the will. If you find there was no fraud, undue influence, coercion, or threats which procured the execution of the will, and that the testator had mental capacity to make the will on the 24th of February, 1903, it would be your duty to answer the issue 'Yes.'" We think that, in view of this clear and explicit instruction in regard to the kind and degree of influence which would invalidate the will, the jury could not have understood his honor to say or to mean that any other test should be applied to the will, or that they should disregard all that he had theretofore said to them upon that point. The language of Mr. Justice Montgomery in Crenshaw v. Johnson, 120 N. C. 270, 26 S. E. 810, is directly in point: "If the charge, on the whole, was not full and clear on the point to which the exception is directed, we would have no hesitancy in ordering a new trial for the reason set out in the exception. But upon reading the whole charge, it is perfectly clear that on this point the jury could not have been misled. The language used by the judge, when taken in connection with the balance of the charge, was so manifestly an inadvertence that it could have produced no harm."

After a careful examination of the entire record, we find no reversible error. While it is not our province to pass upon the verdict, we think that it is amply supported by the evidence sent up to this court. We are not sure that his honor should not have told the jury that if they found the facts in regard to the age, mental and physical condition, habits, etc., of the testator, coupled with his relations with Lottie Wilson and her sons, to be as contended by the caveators, the burden of proof would have been on them to rebut the presumption of undue influence. Wills made by men under such conditions and surroundings should be sustained only when it clearly appears that they are the offspring of a sound and disposing mind, free from the baleful influence of those who have obtained control of the maker. There is no error.

DOUGLAS, J. (dubitante). I fear we are too much influenced in this case by its intrinsic equities, and that, in our desire to prevent injustice, we are ignoring those settled principles of law which experience has shown to be essential to the permanent administration of justice itself. It is always dangerous to stretch general principles too far to cover particular cases. A late eminent statesman, who was regarded as somewhat inflexible in his opinions, said that he was afraid to stretch a principle or a blanket too much at the edges, as he might split it down the middle. This case goes beyond Crenshaw's Case, 120 N. C. 270, 26 S. E. 810, because there the error and correcting portion of the charge were in a consecutive paragraph. I fear it comes within the rule laid down in Edwards v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 78, 39 S. E. 730, and Id., 132 N. C. 99, 43 S. E. 585.

(135 N. C. 348)

WILSON et al. v. GREEN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

LAW AND EQUITY—DISTINCTIONS—ABOLITION—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW—INJUNCTION—TAXATION—ASSESSMENTS—REVIEW.

1. Notwithstanding the abolition of the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, the distinction between legal and equitable principles has been retained, so that a court of equity will not assume jurisdiction where there is an adequate and complete remedy at law.

2. Acts 1903, p. 355, c. 251, providing for the appointment of discreet freeholders in each township to list property for taxation, which assessments are required to be returned to the county commissioners; creating a board of equalization, which is required to hear complaints, and revise the tax lists and assessments, with power to alter the same, to equalize the burden of taxation, and providing that the assessment so equalized shall be made subject to review by the state tax commissioners—creates a plain, complete, and adequate remedy for the review of tax assessments, and precludes a taxpayer from resorting to equity to restrain the collection of a tax on the ground that his property has been fraudulently assessed.

¶ 2. See Taxation, vol. 45, Cent. Dig. § 1223.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by F. H. Wilson and others against A. H. Green and others to restrain the collection of a tax assessment. From a judgment dissolving a temporary injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

This action was brought by the plaintiffs, in behalf of themselves and all other taxpayers of Raleigh township and the city of Raleigh who will come in and make themselves plaintiffs, to declare null and void the valuation and assessment of real property in said township and city for taxation as shown by the lists of the assessors made in the year 1903 for the years 1903-1904, and further to enjoin the board of commissioners of the county of Wake and the city of Raleigh from levying any tax based upon the said assessment, and the sheriff of Wake county from collecting any tax levied upon the valuation of real property for taxation in the township and city. The pleadings in the case and the evidence, which is in the form of affidavits, exhibits, and depositions, are very voluminous, but it will not serve any useful purpose for us to state at length their contents. A substantial statement of the grounds upon which the plaintiffs base their right to relief will be sufficient to present the point in the case. The plaintiffs allege that the commissioners appointed three list takers and assessors for Raleigh township at the meeting of the board in April, 1903, but that they were not "discreet freeholders in said township," as the law requires they should be, in that they had no such knowledge or experience in respect to the value of real property in said township as would render them competent to value the same for taxation, and that they were not freeholders in the township. It is further alleged that the board did not act together in fixing the value of property, but in many instances the valuation was made by one member, and in some cases by two members of the board, and merely acquiesced in by the said member or members, who took no part in the valuation, without having had any view of the property. Plaintiffs further allege that the board of list takers and assessors, and the board of equalization, to whom they made their return, instead of to the board of commissioners, as required by law, acted partially, arbitrarily, fraudulently, and oppressively in the discharge of their respective duties, and that plaintiffs and other taxpayers had no fair or reasonable opportunity to be heard in their own behalf concerning the valuation of their property, though they had requested the board of equalization to grant them a hearing, and that, by reason of the unlawful and wrongful conduct of the two boards, the real property in the said township was not fairly and uniformly assessed as required by the law, but grossly excessive, unequal, and discriminating valuations were placed thereon, and that the property of the plaintiffs and of those of the other taxpayers of the township who are similarly situated will not be "taxed by a uniform rule" and according to its value. Other grave and serious charges are made against the boards, but it is not necessary that they should be set out. The defendants, in their answer, which is full and explicit, deny all of the material allegations of the complaint, and aver that the board of list takers and assessors and the board of equalization acted fairly, impartially, and justly in the performance of their duties. They set forth with much detail the manner in which the property was valued, and how the assessments were afterwards adjusted and equalized. They allege that the assessment in force prior to the month of June, 1903, was far below the true value of the property, and that the increase in valuation was made only when it was found that property had been undervalued. They further aver that every taxpayer had a fair opportunity to be heard before the board of equalization, and, when any complaint of excessive valuation was made, it received full consideration from the board. They admit that O. D. Arthur, a member of the board of list takers and assessors, is not a freeholder in Wake county, but owns real property in the county of Carteret. The case came on to be heard before Judge W. R. Allen upon motion of the plaintiff for an injunction to the hearing, a restraining order having been previously granted by Judge Peebles, when an order was entered refusing the motion, and the plaintiffs excepted and appealed.

Busbee & Busbee, Battle & Mordecai, and Peele & Maynard, for appellants. Armistead Jones & Son, W. L. Watson, B. M. Gatling, and Argo & Shaffer, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). While, under our present procedure, we have but one form of action, the difference between actions at law and suits in equity having been abolished, yet the distinction between legal and equitable principles has been fully retained, and equity has no jurisdiction when there is an adequate, complete, and certain remedy at law; and it is equally well settled as a rule of the court of equity, which still obtains, that there will be no interference by injunction when there is a sufficient remedy at law. This simple and elementary doctrine is applicable to all cases when the complaining party can have adequate relief by the prosecution of his legal remedy in the courts, or when relief can be obtained by resorting to those methods of procedure pointed out by the statute, in cases where a body or tribunal, whether, strictly speaking, a court, or not, is invested with power and authority to hear and determine the matter, and to administer such relief as the nature of the case may require. This principle is especially applicable to controversies arising out of the exercise of the taxing power. If parties will act seasonably, and present their complaints, verified by proper proofs, to the officers of the law clothed with the necessary authority to act in the premises and to redress their grievances, they will find that the remedy afforded by the statute is adequate for the correction of all the errors and injustice liable to be committed by those who are appointed by law to assess property for taxation, in the performance of their official duties. By the act to provide for the assessment of property and the collection of taxes (Acts 1903, p. 355, c. 251), commonly called the "Machinery Act," the board of commissioners of each county is required to appoint three discreet freeholders in each township, to be known as the board of list takers and assessors, who shall list and assess the real and personal property in their respective townships for taxation (section 12), and make a complete return of their assessments, embracing an abstract of the taxable property, to the board of commissioners of the county (section 17). It is further provided that the commissioners and the chairman of the board of list takers and assessors for each township (including wards of cities and towns) shall constitute a board of equalization for the county, and shall meet on the second Monday in July and examine the returns of the list takers and assessors, and equalize the valuation of property liable to taxation, so that each tract of land or lot and each piece or article of personal property shall be entered on the tax list at its true value in money, by raising the valuation when, after investigation, they find that it is too low, and by reducing it when they find that it is too high. This board, it seems, is given ample power and authority to adjust all valuations to a uniform standard, so that the burden of taxation, as it should do, may rest equally upon all persons whose property has been assessed. Power is also conferred upon the board of commissioners of the county, by section 68 of the act, to revise the tax lists and valuations returned to them by the list takers and assessors; and they are authorized to continue in session from day to day, as long as may be necessary to make a complete and thorough revision of the lists and valuations. They are required to hear all persons objecting to the valuation of their property, or to the amount of the tax charged against them, and they may summon and examine witnesses, including the list takers and assessors, and correct the lists of the assessors as may be right and just, "so that the valuation of similar property throughout the county shall be as nearly uniform as possible." They have the right, upon a like examination and investigation, to raise the valuation of any property that they may decide has been undervalued. In addition to these provisions for securing a fair and just assessment of property, the Legislature has created a board of state tax commissioners, with the power, to use the language of the statute, "to exercise a general supervision over the tax-listers and assessing officers of this state, and to take such measures as will secure the enforcement of the provisions of this act, to the end that all the properties of this state liable to assessment for taxation shall be placed upon the assessment rolls and assessed at their true value in money," and "to receive complaints as to property liable to taxation that has not been assessed, or has been fraudulently or improperly assessed, and to investigate the same, and to take such proceedings as will correct the irregularity complained of, if found to exist." The board is required to meet regularly on the first Tuesday of March, June, July, August, September, and October of each year, and to adjourn the regular meeting from time to time when necessary for the proper transaction of business and the full performance of the duties of the board; and special meetings may be had at any time and at any place in the state, if deemed advisable. They have the power, under the act, to hear complaints and correct individual assessments, or they can, if they see fit, make a revision of the entire assessment.

It would seem that these provisions of the law are comprehensive enough to afford ample protection to the taxpayer against any excessive valuation, discrimination, or abuse of power by the taxing officers. A thorough and complete system of procedure is established, by virtue of which the taxpayer can be heard upon all questions concerning the valuation of his property for taxation, and be restored to any and all rights he may have lost by any irregular or fraudulent action of the assessors. The board of county commissioners and the board of state tax commissioners, if not the board of equalization, are not only authorized to adjust and equalize the aggregate valuation of property as fixed by the board of list takers and assessors, but they have the power to act as an original assessing body, and review the lists and make an assessment de novo. Section 9. It is important that the true extent and scope of the powers of these revising tribunals should be clearly understood and stated, because, if they are possessed of the authority which, as we think, was intended to be conferred upon them, the plaintiffs have failed to avail themselves of the complete and adequate remedy which is thus afforded by the statute for the redress of their alleged grievances. The remedy is not only certain, but is simple, speedy, and efficacious; and, by every rule of procedure and practice, it must be pursued and exhausted before the complainants can have recourse to the courts for equitable relief, and certainly before the court will extend its aid in preventing or retarding the collection of the public revenues. No rule which does not impose this duty upon the party who seeks injunctive relief against the collection of a tax could be enforced without the most disastrous consequences to the state. The revenues derived from taxation are continually needed for the support and maintenance of government, and the almost fatal results which would follow the issuing of an injunction directed against an entire tax levy should give pause to any court called upon to act in so grave a crisis. We may safely say that it should never be done, except upon the clearest necessity, and when required for the protection of the admitted natural or constitutional rights of the citizen, and even then in such a way as to produce the least harm to the public interests. The controlling principle in such cases is thus stated by the text-writers: "A court of equity will not by injunction pass upon the action of assessors and boards of review. Courts cannot convert themselves into assessors of property for purposes of taxation, and reassess in every case where the assessor has erred in his judgment as to the value of property. In nearly all the states—probably in all of them—provision is made by law for the correction of errors and irregularities of assessors in the assessment of property for the purposes of taxation. This is generally through boards of revision or equalization, as they are often termed, with sometimes a right of appeal from their decision to the courts of law. They are established to carry into effect the general rule of equality and uniformity of taxation required by constitutional or statutory provisions." 2 Beach on Inj. § 1204. And if the complainant does "not state that he applied to the board to correct the assessment, nor give a reason for not doing so, nor that he could not obtain relief in that way, if entitled to it," the action of the assessors cannot be called in question by an injunction. Id. § 1205. "The fundamental principle applicable to such cases is that a court of equity is not a court of errors to review the acts of public officers in the assessment and collection of taxes, nor will it revise their decision upon matters within their discretion if they have acted honestly. Where, therefore, a particular manner is provided by law, or a particular tribunal designated for the settlement and decision of all errors or inequalities in behalf of persons dissatisfied with a tax, they must avail themselves of the legal remedy thus prescribed, and will not be allowed to waive such relief, and seek in equity to enjoin the collection of the tax. And this upon the ground that where one has a complete and ample remedy at law, and slumbers upon his rights, he is estopped from invoking the aid of equity." 1 High on Inj. (3d Ed.) § 493. "If the taxpayer may have adequate relief for excessive taxation by an appeal or application to a board of review or equalization, but neglects to avail himself of such remedy, he will be denied relief by injunction." Id. § 493. "If the bill fails to negative the remedy at law, and presents no reasons for not pursuing that remedy, it is demurrable." Id. § 491. The doctrine as thus stated by the text-writers has been approved by the courts. Stanley v. Supervisors, 121 U. S. 535, 7 Sup. Ct. 1234, 30 L. Ed. 1000; Hughes v. Kline, 30 Pa. 227; Meade v. Haines, 81 Mich. 261, 45 N. W. 836; Keigwin v. Commissioners, 115 Ill. 347, 5 N. E. 575; Railroad v. Brooklyn, 123 N. Y. 375, 25 N. E. 476; Stewart v. Maple, 70 Pa. 221; Chisholm v. Adams, 71 Tex. 678, 10 S. W. 336; Bourne v. Boston, 2 Gray, 494; Macklot v. Davenport, 17 Iowa, 379; Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 41; Meyer v. Rosenblatt, 78 Mo. 495; Chapel v. Franklin County, 58 Neb. 544, 78 N. W. 1062; Commissioners v. Mining Co., 61 Md. 545.

We find a succinct statement of the principle in 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 436, as follows: "The statutory remedies thus provided to a party to have objections heard, and errors, such as overvaluation and other matters within the jurisdiction of the particular officers and boards, corrected, are exclusive, at least in the first instance. Courts will not inquire into objections which should have been made in this manner, especially in the absence of an attempt to pursue the ordinary remedy." Numerous and pertinent cases decided in the different states are collected in a note to this passage in support of what is therein stated as the law upon the subject. This court, in Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 852, 24 S. E. 738, which related to a local assessment, adopted and applied the same principle. The present Chief Justice, speaking for the court, says: "At any rate, the act itself prescribed a special method by which the validity and regularity of such assessment can be contested, and the plaintiffs, having that remedy, cannot proceed by injunction. * * * The act being constitutional, whether any particular lot is overassessed or improperly assessed is a matter which must be litigated in the manner and by the proceeding provided for that purpose by the act itself." In Covington v. Rockingham, 93 N. C. 139, it was sought to enjoin the collection of a tax upon the ground of overassessment and irregularities, and the court said: "If the tax list, as made up, contained errors, as it may have done, especially as most of the taxpayers failed to render a proper list of their taxable property, as they were notified to do and ought to have done, they were nevertheless not without remedy. They, or any one or more of them, including the plaintiffs, might have applied to the commissioners to readjust and correct any errors in the taxes charged against them, respectively. They had the power to correct errors. The settlement of the tax list is always more or less a summary proceeding, and ought to be subject to correction upon proper application; and the Legislature, having an eye to this necessity, has wisely provided by statute (Code, § 3823) the largest reasonable opportunity for correcting errors in it, even after it has passed into the hands of the collecting officer. This statute expressly embraces municipal corporations, such as the defendant, as well as counties. It does not however, appear that the plaintiffs sought such relief. If they had done so, any errors might have been corrected."

We conclude, therefore, that the plaintiffs have an adequate remedy for the correction of any inequalities in the assessments, and for the full redress of all the other grievances of which they complain.

We do not deem it necessary or profitable to discuss at length the other questions presented in the argument before us. The defendants have questioned the validity of that provision of the statute requiring the assessors to be freeholders, upon the ground that they are officers, and, by article 1, § 22, of the Constitution, no property qualification can affect the right to hold office. Even if the requirement is valid, the plaintiffs cannot attack the legality of the organization or formation of the board of assessors in this collateral proceeding by showing that the assessors were not freeholders. They should have applied to the board of commissioners to correct their mistake in appointing them, if there was any mistake, or at least have instituted some direct proceeding to test their qualification. Keigwin v. Commissioners, supra; McDonald v. Teague, 119 N. C. 604, 28 S. E. 158. They had this remedy in addition to the right of applying to the reviewing board for a revision and correction of the assessments. While it is not necessary to decide the question, it may well be doubted if, under section 30, c. 558, p. 795, of the Acts of 1901, an injunction will lie to restrain the collection of a tax because the valuation of property has been excessive or unequal. The party aggrieved seems to be afforded a plain legal remedy by that section, in such a case.

The plaintiffs admit that the assessments for the years immediately prior to June, 1903, were fair, equal, and uniform. If this be so, it would appear reasonable that the plaintiffs should be required to comply with the ordinary requirement or condition precedent to bringing an action to restrain the collection of a tax, by paying or at least tendering what is justly due, which could have been approximately ascertained. In this respect the case is not unlike Covington v. Rockingham, supra. 2 Cooley on Taxation (3d Ed.) p. 1425; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. Ed. 663. Judge Cooley says: "Where an injunction has been applied for to restrain the collection of a tax partly legal and partly not, the court has made the payment of the legal tax a condition precedent; and it has been strongly intimated, in a case where it was alleged the assessment had by fraud been made too high, that the payment of what the party conceded would be his just proportion ought to be required before an injunction should issue in order that the proceeding may be as little as possible injurious to the public interests." Cooley on Taxation, supra. It is but the familiar application of the universal rule that he who seeks equity at the hands of the court must first do equity. In respect to this requirement, it has been said, in a case not unlike this in principle, that the plaintiffs resist the rule by which the value of their property was ascertained, and then resist the tax. But surely they must pay the tax by some rule. Should they pay nothing, and escape wholly because they have been assessed too high? These questions answer themselves. Before they seek the aid of the court to be relieved of the excessive tax, they should pay what is due, and do that justice which is necessary to enable the court to hear them. It is not sufficient to say in their complaint that they are ready and willing to pay whatever may be found due. They must first pay what is conceded to be due, or what can be seen to be due on the face of the complaint. Surely something is due, and the state is not to be thus tied up as to that about which there is no contest by lumping it with that which is really contested. This is equity, and is in accordance with the first principles of equity jurisdiction. State Railroad Tax Cases, supra. "Where the officers intrusted by law with the duty of making an assessment have fraudulently assessed property above its real value for the purpose of relieving resident taxpayers from their due proportion of the taxes, and have not exercised their judgment upon the valuation, but have arbitrarily made an excessive assessment, while it would seem to be proper to enjoin a sale of land for the excess in such assessments, the injunction should not extend to the entire tax, and should only be allowed upon payment of the proportion which is justly due." 1 High, supra (3d Ed.) § 500; Merrill v. Humphrey, 24 Mich. 170. This was said in a case where it appeared there was no review or other method of relief provided by statute.

While we must deny to the plaintiffs the relief they seek in their complaint, they have made serious charges against those intrusted with the administration of this important branch of the law. It is true, the charges are denied, but it yet remains to be said that the law should be so justly administered as to avoid even the appearance of wrong. The state has no right to require of the taxpayer any more than his just proportion of the public burden in the way of taxation, and any exaction which exceeds this limit, and compels him to make a larger contribution than of right he should be called upon to make, is, of course, unjust and unlawful; and the revising tribunals who are invested with the necessary power and jurisdiction should see to it that he is protected against any wrongful exaction arising out of the abuse of power or the misconduct of subordinate officers. A fair assessment of property at its true value, with the lowest possible rate, is the true rule of taxation, for it is just to all, and distributes the burdens uniformly. These remarks are general, and not intended as any intimation of opinion that the allegations of the complaint are true, for that matter is not now before us.

So far as it appears from the pleadings and findings, the plaintiffs cannot prosecute this action with success. It must therefore be certified that there is no error in the ruling of the court refusing to continue the injunction to the hearing. No error.

(135 N. C. 314)

HINTON v. MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASS'N.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 3, 1904.)

LIFE INSURANCE—INSURABLE INTEREST—FRAUD —EVIDENCE—VARYING TERMS OF WRITTEN CONTRACT.

1. Where there are no ties of blood or marriage between insured in a life policy and the beneficiary, there must, in order to constitute an insurable interest, be some contract between the two, the fulfillment of which would be prevented by death.

2. Where it was agreed at the time application for a life policy was made that a person having no insurable interest in the life of insured should pay all the premiums and receive the proceeds of the policy, it was void.

3. A life policy payable to the estate of insured was secured under an agreement between insured and a person having no insurable interest in her life that this person would pay all premiums and take the proceeds of the policy. The policy was assigned to him, and he brought an action thereon as the administrator of assured, but in fact to secure the proceeds pursuant to the original agreement. Held, that he could not recover.

4. In an action on a life policy, evidence that the policy was procured pursuant to an agreement that plaintiff, though having no insurable interest in the life of insured, should pay the premiums and take the proceeds, and that plaintiff, though suing as administrator of the assured's estate, was in fact seeking a recovery so as to carry out the terms of the original agreement, was not objectionable as varying the terms of a written contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pasquotank County; M. H. Justice, Judge.

Action by John L. Hinton, as administrator of the estate of Mary F. Brothers, deceased, against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

John H. Hinsdale & Son, for appellant.
Pruden & Pruden and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. The plaintiff alleges that on November 8, 1897, the defendant corporation issued its policy to Mary F. Brothers for the sum of $2,000, payable to her executors or administrators, and that she paid the premiums on it as they fell due; that on the — day of July, 1900, the said Mary died intestate, and the plaintiff was duly appointed her administrator; that proper proofs of death were duly forwarded to and accepted by the defendant, and demand made for the payment of the amount of said policy and refused. The defendant, answering, admitted issuing the policy, denied that Mary F. Brothers paid the premiums, admitted the death, and denied that proper proofs of death were forwarded to and accepted by the defendant. The defendant also alleged that certain statements made by the insured in regard to her health were false; that such statements were by the terms of the policy made a part of the consideration upon which it was issued, etc. For a further defense the defendant alleged that, on and before the date of the policy, Mary F. Brothers was the wife of Joseph S. Brothers; that said Joseph purchased from C. L. Hinton, a son of the plaintiff, a tract of land, which he represented to contain 150 acres, for which the said Joseph promised to pay $2,000; that said C. L. Hinton executed a deed to the said Joseph, and at the same time, and as a part of the transaction, the said Joseph executed his note to C. L. Hinton for $2,000, and a mortgage on said land to secure its payment; that the plaintiff was the real owner of the land, and that C. L. Hinton acted for his benefit in the sale thereof; that on November 2, 1897, he transferred said note to the plaintiff; that the tract of land contained only 107 acres, and was not worth more than $500, as was well known to both parties to said contract; that before November 2, 1897, it was agreed between said Joseph and the plaintiff that said Joseph should insure his life for the sum of $2,000 to secure the said indebtedness; that in consequence of said agreement the said Joseph made application for such insurance, but the application was rejected by the company to which it was addressed; that thereafter, and before the 2d day of November, the plaintiff requested the said Mary F. Brothers to insure her life to secure the said indebtedness; that pursuant to such request she made application to the defendant for a certificate of membership; that, upon the faith of the representations made in the application, a certificate was issued, payable to the estate of Mary F. Brothers; that the plaintiff, having no insurable interest in the life of said Mary, and well knowing that the defendant would not issue a certificate to said Mary, payable to him as beneficiary, wrongfully and unlawfully entered into an agreement with the said Mary and the said Joseph, before or at the date of the application for said certificate, by which it was agreed that the said policy should, on its face, be made payable to the estate of the said Mary, but that the plaintiff should pay any and all dues and assessments upon said policy, and upon her death the amount of said policy should be paid to the plaintiff in full of the indebtedness of said Joseph, and he would cancel the said mortgage, etc.; that at the time of or before making such application the said Mary promised and agreed to assign said policy to the plaintiff; that pursuant to said agreement the plaintiff paid the admission fee, and all dues and assessments levied upon said policy; that in pursuance of said agreement the said Mary on the — day of December, 1897, executed an assignment of said certificate or policy to the plaintiff, a copy of said assignment being attached to the answer; that the husband of the said Mary did not sign or consent in writing to the execution of said agreement, and no notice of the assignment was given to the defendant until after the death of the said Mary F. Brothers; that upon the death of said Mary the plaintiff notified the defendant that he was the holder of said policy by assignment, made proof of claim as such, and requested payment of the amount thereof; the defendant refused to pay the amount to the plaintiff, or to recognize him as assignee, whereupon the plaintiff demanded payment to him as administrator; that, while this action is prosecuted by the plaintiff as administrator, the purpose is to secure the payment thereof for his sole benefit, personally, in pursuance of the said agreement; that the plaintiff had no insurable interest in the life of Mary F. Brothers; and that the agreement between the plaintiff, Joseph S., and Mary F. was a fraud upon the defendant, and, the policy was a wager, and in consequence thereof void.

It is provided in the policy that no assignment or change of beneficiary shall be valid without the consent of the company; that the assignee must have an insurable interest. The plaintiff filed no reply to the new matter set up in the answer. The defendant made a motion, before answering, to set aside the service of summons on the Insurance Commissioner. This was refused, and the defendant excepted. This question has been settled adversely to the defendant, and the exception cannot be sustained. Moore v. Life Ass'n, 129 N. C. 31, 39 S. E. 637.

When the cause was called for trial, the defendant tendered a series of issues directed to the several matters set up in the answer by way of defense to the action. The plaintiff objected, and the court declined to submit either of the defendant's issues, to which exception was noted. The court thereupon submitted the following issues:

"(1) Is defendant company indebted to the plaintiff as alleged in the complaint? (2) If so, in what sum? (3) Did Mary F. Brothers obtain the policy of insurance by fraudulent representation?" The defendant excepted. It was admitted that the said Mary was dead, and the plaintiff was her administrator. The plaintiff introduced the policy and so much of the answer as admitted the receipt of proofs of loss, and rested. The defendant introduced Joseph S. Brothers, and proposed to prove by him each and every allegation in the answer, as a further defense, as above set forth. The questions propounded to the witness are set forth in full in the case on appeal, and cover each and every one of said allegations. To this testimony the plaintiff objected. The objections were all sustained, and the defendant excepted. There were other exceptions to the exclusion of testimony in regard to the physical condition of the insured, and it may be that they will not arise upon another trial.

Without entering into a discussion of the several exceptions bearing upon this phase of the case, we think there was evidence proper to be submitted to the jury, under proper instructions, upon the third or some appropriate issue directed to the questions raised by the defense in regard to the condition of the health of the insured at the time the policy was issued, and the representations made by her in the application.

The defendant also offered to prove that Mary F. Brothers was a woman of no property with which to pay life insurance premiums or assessments, and no capacity or ability to earn any money for that purpose. This testimony, upon objection, was excluded, and the defendant excepted. The defendant offered to read the assignment in evidence. Upon the plaintiff's objection, it was excluded, and the defendant excepted. There was evidence tending to show that Mary F. Brothers worked in the field, did washing, picked cotton, and performed other like labor. She died a few months after giving birth to twins. She was illiterate and unable to sign her name.

The plaintiff's contention is that the entire testimony, if admitted, failed to show any defense to the action. If he is correct in this, of course, such testimony was immaterial, and its rejection harmless. The proposed testimony was clearly relevant to the issue, and the witness competent to testify to such facts as were within his knowledge.

It would seem very clear that if the testimony offered by the defendant is true, as we must, for the purpose of disposing of this appeal, take it to be, a fraud was practiced upon the insurance company. It is expressly alleged, and in support of the allegation was proposed to be shown, "that John L. Hinton had no insurable interest in the life of Mary F. Brothers, and, well knowing that the defendant would not issue a certificate of membership on the life of said

Mary F. Brothers, payable to him, as beneficiary, entered into an agreement with the said Mary F. Brothers and the said Joseph S. Brothers, her husband, before or at the date of the application for the certificate of membership or policy of insurance, by which it was agreed that the said policy should on its face be made payable to the estate of the said Mary F. Brothers, but that said John L. Hinton should pay any and all dues and assessments upon said policy, and upon her death the amount of said policy should be paid to the said John L. Hinton, who, upon receipt of the amount thereof from the defendant, should receive the same in full payment of the indebtedness of said Joseph S. Brothers to him, and that he should thereupon cancel and discharge the said mortgage upon the said tract of land.

* * * In the light of the further testimony proposed to be introduced that the real value of the land sold was but $500, and that the plaintiff paid the premiums and assessments, and within a month after the policy was issued the said Mary assigned it to the plaintiff, and that none of these facts were known to the defendant, although there was a plain provision in the policy that no assignment should be valid until notice given to the company, the defendant was entitled to have an issue submitted to the jury, inquiring as to the truth of the allegations; and, in our opinion, the proposed testimony was material and competent to be heard and considered by them upon such issue.

The defendant further says that the policy was what is known in the books as a wager upon the life of Mary F. Brothers, and therefore void as against public policy. Whatever conflict there may be—and it must be conceded that there is very much—as to what constitutes an insurable interest in the life of a person, this court has adopted a well-defined principle which meets our approval.

Burwell, J., in Trinity College v. Insurance Co., 113 N. C. 244, 18 S. E. 175, 22 L. R. A. 291, after naming several cases, says: "These instances and others that might be mentioned seem to show that, except in cases where there are ties of blood or marriage, the expectation of advantage from the continuance of the life of the insured, in order to be reasonable, as the law counts reasonableness, must be founded in the existence of some contract between the person whose life is insured and the beneficiary, the fulfillment of which the death will prevent; it must appear that by the death there may come damage which can be estimated by some rule of law, for which loss or damage the insurance company has undertaken to indemnify the beneficiary under its policy. When this contractual relation does not exist, and there are no ties of blood or marriage, an insurance policy becomes what the law denominates a wagering contract; and, under its rules, made and enforced in the interest of the best public policy, all such contracts must be declared illegal and void, no matter what good object they have in view." Merrimon, J., in Burbage v. Windley, 108 N. C. 357, 12 S. E. 839, 12 L. R. A. 409, says: "As the insured had no insurable interest in the life of the cestui que vie, the contract was simply a wager." In that case the premiums were paid by the beneficiary. In Albert v. Ins. Co., 122 N. C. 92, 30 S. E. 327, 65 Am. St. Rep. 693, the policy was taken out by the insured, and premiums paid by her. This court sustained the policy. We have no disposition to question that case. The writer, if the question was an open one in this state, would feel constrained to follow the authorities holding the contrary view. The decision is sustained by the authorities cited. The testimony proposed in this case was that the agreement was made before or at the time of the application, and that the plaintiff was to pay the entrance fee and all further assessments; he not then having, or expecting to have, any insurable interest in the life of the insured. This is a very different case from one where the insured has taken out a valid policy, paying the premium thereon, and, either as a gift to some friend, or as collateral security to a debt, assigns the policy with the knowledge of the company. The plaintiff was to be paid his debt from the proceeds of the policy, he paying all of the premiums and awaiting her death to reap the profits of his bargain. In Ruse v. Insurance Co., 23 N. Y. 516, Selden, J., says: "A policy obtained by a party who has no interest in the subject of insurance is a mere wager policy. Wagers in general (that is, innocent wagers) are at common law valid, but wagers involving immorality or crime, or in conflict with any public policy, are void. To which of these classes, then, does the wagering policy belong. * * * Such policies, if valid, not only afford facilities for a demoralizing system of gaming, but furnish strong temptation to the party interested to bring about the event insured against." The learned justice traces the history of the law and its development in England, resulting in the passage of the act of Parliament declaring all such policies void, saying: "My conclusion, therefore, is that the statute of 14 George III avoiding wager policies upon lives was simply declaratory of the common law, and that all such policies would be void independently of that act." Burbage v. Windley, supra.

While there are conflicting decisions in this country, a careful examination of them brings us to the conclusion that the foregoing is the sound view of the subject. "Of all wagering contracts, those concerning the lives of human beings should receive the strongest, the most emphatic, and the most persistent condemnation." Insurance Co. v. Sturges, 18 Kan. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 761; Price v. Knights of Honor, 68 Tex. 366, 4 S. W. 633;

Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. Ed. 251. Mr. Justice Field, in Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 779, 26 L. Ed. 924, says: "Such policies create a desire for the event. They are, therefore, independently of any statute on the subject, condemned as being against public policy." May on Ins. (4th Ed.) 44, 45.

The plaintiff, however, says that, conceding this to be the law, the insured had an insurable interest in her own life; the policy was valid when issued; the assignment, being invalid, did not affect the integrity of the policy; that the right to maintain this action by the administrator of the insured is not affected by the void assignment. It is held in many cases, and we have no disposition to question the principle, that every person has an insurable interest in his own life, and may insure his life for the benefit of his executors, administrators, or assigns; that such policy, being valid, may be assigned to one having an insurable interest. We do not question the validity of assignments of life insurance policies to a creditor, or the right of the creditor to receive the amount of his debt, together with such sums as he has paid on account of assessments or premiums, or an assignment to one having any other insurable interest. That a creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor is well settled. When the assignment of a policy is made in good faith to secure a subsisting debt, or a present loan, or a debt then contracted, the courts have sustained such assignment, certainly to the extent of such indebtedness and premiums paid out to keep the policy alive. Cammack v. Lewis, 82 U. S. 643, 21 L. Ed. 244; Ins. Co. v. Schaefer and Warnock v. Davis, supra; May on Insurance, 80 et seq. The defense made and the testimony proposed to be introduced go very far beyond the principle upon which these cases rest. The allegation here is that, at and before the application was made, there was an agreement between the plaintiff, the husband, and the insured that the policy, although, in truth and in fact, it was to be for the benefit of the plaintiff, who knew that he had no insurable interest in the life of the wife, and knew that the company would not issue the policy payable to him, should be made payable to the estate of the wife, and immediately assigned to the plaintiff, who was to pay the admission fee and all of the premiums.

In Keystone M. B. Ass'n v. Norris, 115 Pa. 446, 8 Atl. 638, 2 Am. St. Rep. 572, application was made by the assured for, and a policy issued on, her life, payable to her son-in-law, Norris. Pursuant to an agreement made before the application, Norris assigned the policy to one Spangler, having no insurable interest in the life of the insured, who paid all of the assessments. Notice of the assignment was given to the company. Spangler was the medical examiner of the company, and it was for that reason the policy was not made payable to him. Suit was brought upon the death of the assured by Norris to the use of Spangler. The court said: "If now we admit that Norris had such an interest in the assured as would have warranted him in taking a policy on her life, yet that fact cannot help out the plaintiff's case, since the policy was not founded on that interest, neither was it for the benefit of Norris, but for the benefit of one who had no interest in the insured's life." The principle upon which the testimony offered by the defendant is made material is thus stated by the Supreme Court of Texas in Life Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 338, 12 S. W. 621, 7 L. R. A. 217, 16 Am. St. Rep. 893, quoting from Bishop on Life Insurance: "The question is whether the policy was in fact intended to be what it purports to be, or whether the form was adopted as a cover for a mere wager. If the plaintiff and the insured confederate together to procure a policy for the plaintiff's benefit, when he is not, and does not expect to be, a creditor of the insured, and with a view of having the policy assigned to him without consideration, the policy is void. There are respectable authorities which hold that the assignment of the policy, without regard to any pre-existing agreement, to one having no insurable interest, is a fraud upon the company, against public policy, and therefore avoids the policy." This view is strongly stated by Horton, C. J., in Insurance Co. v. Crum, 36 Kan. 146, 12 Pac. 517, 59 Am. Rep. 537. To the suggestion that the attempted assignment was void, he says: "The law does not tolerate attempted frauds any more than it does those that are committed. * * * If the beneficiaries can now recover, they are doubly benefited by the questionable transaction in which they were engaged."

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in Gilbert v. Moose, 104 Pa. 74, 49 Am. Rep. 570, expresses itself in very vigorous terms regarding wagering life insurance contracts in every form: "The very foundation of the doctrine is that no one shall have a beneficial interest of any kind in a life policy, who is not presumed to be interested in the preservation of the life insured. * * * The beneficiary is directly interested in the death of the insured. Moreover, if such a transaction were permitted, the wager could always be concealed under the mere form of the policy. Nor can we see that, did the defendant's case depend upon an assignment directly from Moose to himself, how it could be bettered in the least." The opinion concludes with these words: "So fraught with dishonesty and disaster, and so dangerous even, to human life, has this insurance gambling become, that its toleration in a court of justice ought not for one moment to be thought of." Mr. May, in the last edition of his work on Insurance, comes to the same conclusion: "And although innocent wagers were once sustained, the courts will not now waste their time in discussing the question whether what is substantially a wager ought or ought not to be held good upon any grounds. Under the influence of a healthy public sentiment, they have become impatient of investigating disputes founded upon any species of gambling, and almost without exception refuse to enforce a contract supported by such a subject matter." May on Insurance, 74. It is said, however, that the suit is by the plaintiff as administrator, and the recovery will be for the benefit of the estate of Mary F. Brothers. The record shows that the defendant offered to show that, while the action is prosecuted in the name of the plaintiff as administrator, the purpose thereof is to secure the payment of the policy for the sole benefit of the said John L. Hinton personally, in pursuance of the agreement set forth in the answer. This was excluded. If this were proved, it would be a singular result if by this means the plaintiff can reap the profits of a contract denounced by the law as contrary to public policy. If the agreement alleged to have been made by the parties to the transaction is shown by competent evidence, and found by the verdict of a jury, it would be a reproach to the law if the two living parties can use its process to gather the fruits of their illegal agreement after the death of the one who was the ignorant and passive instrument of the scheme to make profit by her death. The testimony was competent. It is said, however, that to permit the testimony to be introduced violates the rule excluding parol evidence to contradict a written instrument. The proposed testimony in no manner contradicted the terms of the policy. It was offered to prove an agreement collateral to the policy. As his honor excluded the entire testimony offered by the defendant, as immaterial, and as the case was argued before us upon that view, we cannot indicate otherwise than by the general principles announced what portions of it are competent.

The extent of our decision is that the defendant is entitled, if it can, to show that the application was made and the policy obtained under the circumstances and for the purposes alleged, and that the defendant had no notice of the agreement or of the assignment of the policy.

For the refusal to submit the issues tendered by the defendant, or such others in lieu thereof as the court may think proper, and to receive testimony material and tending to prove the affirmative of the issues, there must be a new trial.

WALKER, J. I concur in the result of this appeal, upon the ground first stated by the Court in its opinion, namely, that the defendant is entitled to a new trial because of the erroneous ruling of the presiding judge upon the question as to the condition of the health of the insured at the time she applied for the policy and the same was issued to her, and as to the representations made in the application. This error extends to all the issues, as a false, fraudulent, and material representation in regard to the state of the insured's health, if found by the jury, will vitiate the policy.

(125 N. C. 338)

KISTLER et al. v. WEAVER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

INJUNCTION—REMOVAL OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW—STATUTES.

1. Acts 1885, p. 664, c. 401, provides that, in an application for an injunction to enjoin a trespass on land, it shall not be necessary to allege insolvency of the defendant, when the trespass is continuous in its nature, or is the cutting or destruction of timber or trees. Acts 1901, p. 900, c. 663, provides that when there is a bona fide contention as to the title to the land, or trees thereon, no order shall be entered permitting either party to cut the trees, except by consent, until the title shall be determined, and that if the claim of one of the parties is not asserted in good faith, and based on evidence establishing a prima facie title, then, on motion of the other party, if he shall satisfy the court of the bona fides of his claim, and produce evidence showing a prima facie title, he may be allowed by order to cut the trees on giving bond as required by law. Held, that neither of these acts has any application to an order requiring defendants to desist from removing lumber unless they first give bond to secure any damages plaintiffs may sustain by the removal.

2. Injunction will not lie where the plaintiffs have an adequate remedy at law.

3. Injunction will not lie to prevent the removal of personal property in the absence of allegation by the plaintiff that the defendants are insolvent.

4. Injunction will not lie when the title to personal property is the sole question involved.

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by Wilson Kistler and others against A. D. Weaver and others. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. W. Pless and Zebulon Weaver, for appellants. Avery & Ervin, for appellees.

WALKER, J. This action was brought to recover possession of a tract of land, and damages for a trespass committed thereon, in cutting timber, and removing from the land the cut timber and the lumber into which some of the timber had been sawed. Plaintiffs allege in their complaint that they are the owners of the land, and entitled to the possession thereof, and that the defendants are in the unlawful possession of the same, and are unlawfully and wrongfully cutting and removing timber therefrom, and also removing the lumber into which some of the timber has been sawed. There is no allegation of the insolvency of the defendants. Defendants, in their answer, denied the trespass, and also denied the title of plaintiffs to the land and timber and trees, and especially denied their right to an injunction against removing the lumber. Plaintiffs moved in the court below for an injunction restraining the defendants from cutting or sawing any timber trees on the land, and further restraining them from removing any lumber sawed from any timber trees which had been cut on the land. The court granted the injunction, providing, however, that, if the defendants gave bond, payable to the plaintiffs, with good and sufficient sureties, in the sum of $600, conditioned to secure all such damages as the plaintiffs may recover in the action, they could remove any and all lumber sawed and manufactured from trees cut on the said premises, and, if said bond is filed, the injunction should not apply to the removal of the lumber. To so much of the order of the court as restrained them from removing the lumber without giving bond as set forth in the order, the defendants excepted and appealed.

A court of equity will not enjoin an ordinary trespass, such as entering upon land and working turpentine trees, or cutting and making staves thereon, unless irreparable injury is threatened; that is, one for which there can be no sufficient recompense in money. It is therefore held that in such cases an averment of the defendant's insolvency is necessary, for, if he is not insolvent, and the plaintiff can recover an equivalent in money for the loss sustained by the trespass, the damage cannot in any proper sense be called irreparable. Gause v. Perkins, 56 N. C. 177, 69 Am. Dec. 728; Sharpe v. Loane, 124 N. C. 1, 32 S. E. 318; Lewis v. Lumber Co., 99 N. C. 11, 5 S. E. 19. By statute (Acts 1885, p. 664, c. 401) it is provided "that in an application for an injunction to enjoin a trespass on land it shall not be necessary to allege the insolvency of the defendant, when the trespass complained of is continuous in its nature, or is the cutting or destruction of timber trees." This act, as construed, does not deprive the court of the discretion to require a bond to be given by the defendant to secure plaintiffs' damages, or to appoint a receiver, instead of issuing an injunction. Ousby v. Neal, 99 N. C. 146, 5 S. E. 901; McKay v. Chapin, 120 N. C. 159, 26 S. E. 701. By the Acts of 1901, p. 900, c. 666, it is provided that when there is a bona fide contention as to the title of the land, or the timber trees thereon, no order shall be entered permitting either party to cut the trees, except by consent, until the title shall be determined, and that, if the claim of one of the parties is not asserted in good faith, and based upon evidence establishing a prima facie title, then, upon the motion of the other party, if he shall satisfy the court of the bona fides of his claim, and produce evidence showing a prima facie title, he may be allowed by order to cut the timber trees upon giving bond as required by law. The plaintiffs, in their brief, or citation of authorities, rely upon these acts and the cases in which they have been construed, but we do not perceive how they can have any bearing upon the particular question presented in this appeal. There was not only no exception to the order of the court so far as it enjoined the defendants from cutting the trees, but the defendants conceded the correctness of the order in that respect, as the plaintiffs had made out a prima facie case. The only exception is to that part of the order requiring the defendants to desist from removing the lumber unless they first give a bond to secure any damages plaintiffs may sustain by the removal. The acts relate to the cutting of timber; and the order of the court, to the removal of lumber, so far, at least, as exception has been taken to it. Even if the plaintiffs could show a good title to the lumber, it would seem that they could not have the defendants enjoined from removing it, because they would have a plain and adequate remedy at law by action, with the ancillary proceeding in claim and delivery, to recover it, or they could recover the value of the lumber in an action for the conversion of it, if they can show that they are the owners of it—a question which is not now before us for decision. The courts will not permit a party to resort to the extraordinary remedy of injunction where there is a simple and ordinary remedy at law for the recovery of the property itself, and especially will such relief be denied when the plaintiff who applies for it is in no danger of suffering any loss by reason of the insolvency of the defendant. An injunction will not issue when the title to personal property is the sole question involved. The question of title cannot be tried in that way. Baxter v. Baxter, 77 N. C. 118.

We were not informed upon what principle the ruling of the court in this case proceeded, but, in any view that we have been able to take of the matter, the decision appears to us to be erroneous. The exception of the defendants is sustained. Error.

(135 N. C. 406)

FIDELITY BLDG., LOAN & INVESTMENT ASS'N v. LASH et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

MORTGAGES — JUDGMENT LIENS — PRIORITY — HOMESTEAD — FORECLOSURE — PARTIES.

1. After the docketing of judgments against one of two tenants in common of a town lot, they both united in a mortgage on a strip 50 feet wide through the center of the lot. Thereafter there was a partition allotting a strip 70 feet wide on one side of the lot to the judgment debtor, a similar strip on the other side to the other co-tenant, and leaving the mortgaged strip undivided. Prior to this partition the judgment debtor had mortgaged his undivided interest in part of the strip which was afterwards allotted to him, and had also mortgaged to a different party his undivided interest in the entire lot. Thereafter execution issued on one of the judgments, and, a homestead having been allotted to the judgment debtor in the 70-foot strip set apart to him, his undivided interest in the 50-foot strip was sold. Thereafter the interest of the other co-tenant in the 50-foot strip was sold under the mortgage, and the mortgagee declared to be entitled to a lien on the homestead to the extent of the value of the judgment debtor's interest in the 50-foot strip. Held, that the homestead should have been sold under the mortgage, subject to the lien of the judgments.

2. At a sale under the mortgage covering the judgment debtor's undivided interest in a part of the land afterward allotted to him, the purchaser took the property subject to the lien of the judgments.

3. Though after the death of the judgment debtor the homestead might have been sold under the judgment lien, yet it was proper, all persons interested having been made parties to the proceeding by the mortgagee of the 50-foot strip, to move for a decree of sale in that case.

4. The administrator and heirs of the judgment debtor should have been made parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; McNeill, Judge.

Suit by the Fidelity Building, Loan & Investment Company against Frank Lash and others, for the foreclosure of a mortgage. From an order denying the petition of A. F. Messick, as administrator of Frank Lash, defendant, deceased, and certain judgment creditors, for the sale of certain property, said petitioners appeal. Reversed.

Watson, Buxton & Watson and L. M. Swink, for appellants. J. S. Grogan, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On 11th December, 1891, Frank Lash and Emma Alston were tenants in common of a lot of land in Winston, 200 feet wide by 100 feet deep, subject to the life estate therein of Amanda Lash. On that day a judgment before a justice of the peace was docketed against Frank Lash in favor of Vaughan & Popper for $50.41 and costs, and three others in favor of Gilmer & Mahler, aggregating $496.68 and costs. In December, 1892, Frank and Emma and the life tenant gave a mortgage for $400, for money borrowed, to the plaintiff, upon a strip 50 feet wide running through the center of said lot. The life tenant having died in December, 1894, immediately thereafter there was a partition made; the strip about 70 feet wide on the east side of said lot being allotted to Frank Lash, and the strip about 70 feet wide on the west side being allotted to Emma Alston, and the strip 50 feet wide in the center, which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff, being left undivided. In the meantime Frank Lash, in March, 1893, had mortgaged his undivided interest in part of said 70-foot strip, afterwards allotted to him, to one Tyson, to secure $125, and in May, 1894, had mortgaged his undivided interest in the entire lot (200x100) to one Brown to secure $500. In January, 1895, execution issued against Frank Lash on the Vaughan & Popper judgment. The homestead was allotted to him in the 70-foot strip, and his undivided interest in the 50-foot strip was sold, under execution issued upon that judgment, for $75, and applied upon the Vaughan & Popper judgment. Thus Frank Lash's interest in the lot was reduced to the 70-strip on the east side of said lot upon which his homestead had been allotted, and against which there was outstanding the lien of the judgments in favor of Gilmer & Mahler, $496.68 and costs, docketed 11th December, 1891, the mortgage ($125) to Tyson, March, 1893, and the $500 mortgage to Brown, May, 1894. The plaintiff began this suit February, 1894, making the above judgment and mortgage creditors and Emma Alston codefendants with Frank Lash, asking a sale of Emma Alston's interest in the 50-foot strip under the mortgage, and that the various liens be adjusted and their rights settled. Proceedings were had which resulted in a sale of Emma Alston's undivided interest in the 50-foot strip, and application of the proceeds to the plaintiff's mortgage, and a judgment, 2d July, 1898, decreeing that the three judgments of Gilmer & Mahler were the first lien upon the homestead tract of Frank Lash; that, by reason of the sale under execution of the 50-foot strip mortgaged to the plaintiff, the plaintiff, "under the doctrine of marshaling," was entitled to a lien upon the homestead of Frank Lash to the value of Frank Lash's interest in said 50-foot strip, not exceeding $75, balance due on the plaintiff's mortgage, subject to prior lien of judgment creditors, and that the mortgages of Tyson and Brown were also liens; that none of these liens could be enforced till the termination of the homestead estate; and that Brown and Tyson could have a receiver for the rents and profits, to apply upon their several mortgages, which has been done ever since.

Upon motion, on notice issued 6th December, 1899, it was ordered that the part of the homestead covered by the Tyson mortgage, made in March, 1893, should be sold subject to liens of judgment creditors. Upon the coming in of the report, the sale was confirmed, and the defendants excepted. The receiver remained in possession. In July, 1903, Frank Lash, the homesteader, died insolvent, and leaving neither widow nor child. A. F. Messick qualified as administrator, and at September term, 1903, he joined with the judgment creditors in a petition filed in the cause to have a commissioner appointed, and a sale of the homestead property, and application of proceeds in accordance with the terms of the aforesaid judgment of 1898. This motion being refused, the petitioners appealed, and assigned as error the judgment of 1899 confirming the sale under the Tyson mortgage, which was excepted to at the time, and the refusal at September term, 1903, to order a sale by a commissioner, and application of proceeds to the judgment liens, and to make the administrator a party, and to discharge the receiver.

The judgment of 1898, refusing to decree a sale under the mortgage, was based upon a mistaken conception of Vanstory v. Thornton, 112 N. C. 196, 17 S. E. 566, 34 Am. St. Rep. 483. The land should have been sold under the mortgage, subject to the lien of the docketed judgment. The decree adjudg ing the plaintiff subrogated to a lien upon the homestead to the value of the undivided interest of Frank Lash in the 50-foot strip raises a question which is not here presented, unless and until, under a sale of the property to pay the judgment liens, a surplus should arise, whose application to the balance due upon the plaintiff's mortgage shall be contested by the holder of the Brown mortgage. The sale under the Tyson mortgage by the decree made upon the motion, made in December, 1899, carried the property to the purchaser, subject to the lien of the judgments. The homestead having ceased, the judgment creditors might have sold under the judgment lien, but, as all the parties who could be interested are in court—the cause having been retained “for further orders”—it was very proper to bring the case forward, and ask for a decree of sale. Harrington v. Hatton, 129 N. C. 146, 39 S. E. 780. The administrator representing creditors should have been made a party, and also the heirs at law of Frank Lash, as there was a part of the homestead not covered by the Tyson mortgage, though their interest is remote, for, if the judgments and interest should not exhaust the property, the Brown mortgage and the balance due upon the plaintiff's mortgage will be quite sure to do so.

The purchaser under the Tyson mortgage obtained only Tyson's title in the part of the homestead covered by that mortgage, leaving in force the Brown mortgage upon the other part of the homestead, and leaving intact the judgment liens upon the entire homestead tract, which liens are prior to both mortgages.

Error.

(135 N. C. 292)

HOLDER v. CANNON MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 11, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—DISCHARGE FROM EMPLOYMENT—PROCUREMENT BY THIRD PERSON—ACTIONS—MALICE—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

1. In an action by a servant to recover damages from defendant for causing the servant's discharge by his employer, testimony by the servant that when his boss discharged him he told him that he had a letter from defendant, and that defendant wanted him discharged, and that his employer's superintendent told him the same thing, was hearsay.

2. Where hearsay testimony is not objected to, it is before the jury as evidence, and no exception to it is to be heard on appeal.

3. One who causes the discharge of another from the service of a third person maliciously and willfully is liable to the injured party in damages; and to show malice it is not necessary to show actual ill will or hatred, but it is sufficient if the act be done without legal excuse.

4. In an action for damages for causing plaintiff's discharge by his employer, where plaintiff's evidence tended to show that he was discharged by defendant without cause, and was subsequently discharged by his employer, while giving satisfaction in his work, because of a letter from the defendant demanding his discharge, it was proper for the court to refuse to instruct that the defendant did not wrongfully and unlawfully cause the discharge of plaintiff by his employer.

5. In an action for damages for causing plaintiff's discharge by his employer, a charge that, if the same person was assistant manager of defendant and of plaintiff's employer, and of his own motion directed plaintiff's discharge, the jury should find for defendant, was properly modified by inserting before the concluding phrase, “without demand or direction of the defendant.”

6. In order that a servant may have a cause of action against one who induces his employer to discharge him, it is not necessary that such one procure the discharge by false and fraudulent representations to his employer, but it is sufficient if the act was done willfully, maliciously, and unlawfully.

7. The conduct of a servant in going on a strike and refusing to make up for lost time cannot rightfully be used by his employer to effect his discharge from a subsequent employment.

Connor and Walker, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cabarrus County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by D. M. Holder against the Cannon Manufacturing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. G. Means, for appellant. Montgomery & Crowell and M. B. Stickley, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover of the defendant damages for causing him to be discharged from the service and employment of the Gibson Manufacturing Company. There was evidence to the effect that in June, 1903, the plaintiff was employed and at that time in the service of the Gibson Manufacturing Company, and that his work was satisfactory to the company, according to the testimony of W. B. Stafford, the boss of the weaving room in which the plaintiff worked. The plaintiff testified that when Stafford discharged him he asked Stafford the cause of the discharge, and Stafford replied that he had had a letter from the Cannon Manufacturing Company, and that that company wanted him discharged, but that he hated to do it. He also testified that B. A. Price, the superintendent of the Gibson Mill, told him that he had a letter from the Cannon Company, and had to follow it. He said further that he asked Roberts, the boss weaver at the Cannon Mill, whether he or Barnhardt, assistant manager of the defendant, wrote the letter, and that Roberts made no answer. Price and Stafford both testified for the defendant that they had never received any letter from any person connected with the Cannon Mill in reference to the discharge of the plaintiff, and that they never said one word to the plaintiff about having received such a letter. That evidence of the plaintiff was nothing but hearsay, and would not have been received if it had been objected to by the defendant. But, not having been objected to, it went to the jury as evidence, and there is no exception to it to be heard by us.

¶ 3. See Master and Servant, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. § 1294.

E. C. Barnhardt testified for the defendant that he was assistant manager of both the defendant company and the Gibson Company, and that he had the authority to discharge or have hands discharged; that he, as assistant manager of the Gibson Mill, had the plaintiff discharged of his own motion, without conference or suggestion from any officer or agent of the defendant company, and that there was no letter about discharging him. On cross-examination that witness said that he discharged the plaintiff because he refused to make up some lost time at the Cannon Mill, and he did not want that kind of a man at the Gibson Mill; that the plaintiff had gone out on a strike at the Cannon Mill; and that, upon seeing his looms standing still, he asked the plaintiff if he was sick, and he answered that he was not. The witness further testified that the defendant company is a different company from the Gibson Company, but that the general officers, managers, and assistant managers are the same in both companies, and attend to the business of each and both. In the fourth allegation of the complaint it was alleged that the defendant company, through its officers or agents, while the plaintiff was in the employment of the Gibson Company, unlawfully, willfully, and maliciously, for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff in his occupation and reputation, and of humiliating him, and depriving him of the right to earn a living, conspired to have discharged, and procured the discharge of, the plaintiff from the employment of the Gibson Company by certain false and fraudulent representations. In the answer there was a general denial of that allegation. On the trial the defendant undertook to show by evidence that it had no communication with or suggestion from the defendant company on the subject of the plaintiff's discharge from the employment of the Gibson Company, but that the Gibson Company acted in the matter solely and entirely upon information which came to Barnhardt, the assistant manager of the Gibson Company, by reason of his connection with the defendant company. Upon Barnhardt's testimony the defendant could have asked the court to instruct the jury that, as the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was indefinite as to time, the defendant company would not be responsible for the discharge of the plaintiff because of knowledge of the character of the plaintiff and of his conduct at the defendant's mill, acquired by Barnhardt as assistant manager of both mills. But no such request for instructions was made by the defendant. The jury took the view, notwithstanding the testimony of Price, of Stafford, and of Barnhardt, that no letter or communication had been received by the Gibson Company from the defendant on the subject of the plaintiff's discharge; that the plaintiff's testimony to that effect was true; and their verdict was rendered on that theory of the case.

The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that he was discharged without cause by the defendant company, and that he was discharged from the employment of the Gibson Company, while giving satisfaction in his work to that company, by a letter from the defendant demanding his discharge from the service of the Gibson Company, and upon that evidence, believed by the jury, the law applicable to the case seems to be clear. In order to constitute malice in a case like the present, it is not necessary that the defendant should show actual ill will or hatred to the plaintiff, but it is sufficient if the act done, to the apparent damage of the plaintiff, is without legal excuse. Any person who by any act causes the discharge of another from the service of a third party maliciously and willfully—that is, without lawful justification—is liable to the injured party for damages. Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780; Morgan v. Smith, 77 N. C. 37.

There was no exception to the charge of his honor. The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury to answer the first issue: "Did the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully cause the discharge of the plaintiff by the Gibson Manufacturing Company as alleged in the complaint?" "No." And the instruction was properly refused. Again, the defendant asked for an instruction that, if the jury should find from the evidence that Barnhardt was the assistant manager of the Gibson Company, and as such manager had the right to direct the discharge of the employees of the company, and as such manager of his own motion and in the exercise of his authority directed the plaintiff to be discharged from the employment of the Gibson Company, whether such discharge was right or wrong, the jury will answer the first issue "No." His honor, under the evidence in this case, added to the instruction the words, "without demand or direction of the defendant," in connection with the right of Barnhardt to discharge the plaintiff from the employment of the Gibson Company. The addition was proper.

A further special instruction was asked by the defendant on the question of the duty of the plaintiff to satisfy the jury by preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, through its officers and agents, unlawfully and maliciously caused the discharge of the plaintiff, which was given, except the following portion thereof, viz.: "And although the jury may find from the evidence that the Gibson Manufacturing Company discharged the plaintiff from its employment in consequence of representations made to it by the officers, agents, and servants of the defendant, and he would not have been discharged except for such representations, yet, if the jury further find from the evidence that such representations were true, they will answer the first issue 'No.'" We think that his honor committed no error in refusing to give that part of the instruction which we have quoted above. It is true that in the plaintiff's complaint there is an allegation that the defendant procured his discharge by conspiracy and by false and fraudulent representations to the Gibson Company, but such an allegation was not necessary or essential to the prosecution of the action by the plaintiff. It is sufficient that the act is alleged to have been done maliciously, willfully, and unlawfully. Jones v. Stanly, 76 N. C. 355; Haskins v. Royster, supra; Morgan v. Smith, supra. The question was not whether the plaintiff was discharged by reason of the false or fraudulent representations of the defendant, but was the discharge procured through malice; that is, without a lawful justification? The conduct of the plaintiff at the defendant's mill at the time he was discharged from the defendant's service was not such that the defendant could use with a subsequent employer to effect the discharge of the plaintiff. Furthermore, it did not appear on the trial what the representations in the letter were. The instructions asked and refused were based on the allegation in the complaint, and not on the evidence.

It is not to be understood by anything said in this opinion that one employer cannot inquire of another of the character and habits of a former employé of that other, and that an answer made in good faith and upon a knowledge of facts, and acted upon by the recipient, would subject the giver of the information to a suit in damages.

No error.

CONNOR, J. (dissenting). The plaintiff alleges that while he was in the employment of the Gibson Manufacturing Company, the defendant "unlawfully, willfully and maliciously, for the purpose of injuring the said plaintiff, * * * did contrive, conspire, and procure the discharge of the said plaintiff from the employment of the said Gibson Manufacturing Company by certain false and fraudulent representations to the said Gibson Manufacturing Company." The only evidence tending to sustain the allegation is that of the plaintiff, in which he says that Stafford, the boss of the weaverroom of the Gibson Company, told him that the defendant manufacturing company objected to his working there, and that he had a letter from the defendant company to discharge him. Passing by the objection that this was simply hearsay, there is not the slightest suggestion as to what officer, agent, or employé of the defendant company wrote or was authorized to write the alleged letter. There is not a scintilla of evidence tending to show that any letter was ever written by any officer or agent of the defendant company. On the contrary, Stafford and Price, the employés of the Gibson Company, denied that they or either of them had seen such a letter, or that they ever said to the plaintiff that such letter had been written or received by them. El C. Barnhardt, who was the assistant manager of the defendant company and of the Gibson Manufacturing Company, testified that he had the plaintiff discharged from the Gibson Company as the assistant manager of that company, and not of the defendant company; that he had him discharged of his own motion, without any suggestion from any officer or agent of the defendant company; that there was no letter about discharging him. There was not the slightest contradiction of this testimony. Although the allegation made by the plaintiff is that the defendant unlawfully and maliciously procured his discharge, the issue submitted is confined to the "wrongful and unlawful" discharge of the plaintiff. Notwithstanding this form of the issue, the judge below said to the jury, "You can also, if the charge was malicious—that is, intentional and willful, and without cause, and for the purpose of depriving the plaintiff of his job or service—award what are called punitive or exemplary damages for the wanton conduct of the defendant in bringing about the discharge, if by its servants and agents it did so." The objection to this instruction is found in the fact, first, that no issue was submitted to the jury in regard to the malicious conduct of the defendant, and, next, because there was no evidence tending to show malice. It may well be that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully procured the discharge of the plaintiff without having done so maliciously or wantonly. "The primary purpose of an action for damages is to recover compensation for the actual loss or injury sustained. The liability for punitive or exemplary damages, however, being for the purpose of punishment, or as an example, rests primarily upon the question of motive. And the jury are not at liberty to go beyond the allowance of a compensation, unless it be shown that the act was done willfully, maliciously, or wantonly, or was the result of a reckless indifference to the rights of others, which is equivalent to an intentional injury; and when there is no proof that the injury was so inflicted exemplary damages should not be allowed." Joyce on Damages, § 119; Wood v. Bank (Va.) 40 S. E. 931; Gilreath v. Allen, 32 N. C. 67. The wrongful injury gives the right of action for compensation. The malicious, wicked motive gives the right to punitive damages. Holmes v. Railroad, 94 N. C. 319. It is manifest that the jury awarded the plaintiff punitive damages because on his own evidence he was discharged about the 8th of August, and got a regular job on the 14th September. He testified that he earned $7.50 a week. For the reasons pointed out, and others apparent upon the record, I am unable to concur in the conclusion reached by a majority of the court. I think that, in any point of view, the defendant is entitled to a new trial.

WALKER, J., concurs in the dissenting opinion.

(135 N. C. 186)

SELF et al. v. SHUGART et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 26, 1904.)

LIMITATIONS—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION—SURETIES ON GUARDIAN'S BOND—FAILURE OF GUARDIAN TO ACCOUNT.

1. Code, § 155, subsec. 6, provides that actions against the sureties of a guardian must be brought by the ward within three years after the breach of the bond. Section 1617 allows guardian six months after the ward is of full age within which to account and settle with him. By section 1608 a guardian who wishes to resign must exhibit his final account for settlement. As to administration proceedings (which are analogous to guardianships), it is provided by section 1402 that administrators may be required to file their final accounts within two years from their qualification, and after that time, by section 1488, they shall not retain any of deceased's estate. Legatees and distributees, under section 1510, may sue to recover their legacies and distributive shares at any time after two years from the qualification of the personal representative, unless he shall have sooner filed his final account. By section 1525, after filing the final account, executors may petition for the settlement of the estate. Held that, as it is evident that a final account must precede a settlement, the ward's right of action for failure of the guardian to settle with him does not accrue, and limitations against it do not begin to run, until six months from the ward's majority.

Montgomery, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Surry County; Neal, Judge.

Action by the state, on the relation of Annie J. Self and another, against J. L. Shugart and others. From a judgment for relators, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Carter & Lewellyn and Glenn, Manly & Hendren, for appellants. Watson, Buxton & Watson and W. L. Reece, for appellees.

CLARK, O. J. On 23d April, 1888, the defendant Shugart qualified as guardian of Annie and James Franklin, and gave bond in the penal sum of $150, with Hollifield and McKaughn as sureties. The guardian made no returns to the clerk (except returning the sale of some real estate 3d May, 1888) until 11th September, 1902, which was after the plaintiffs had made a demand for settlement in August, 1902. Annie Franklin became of age in April, 1890, and married in January, 1896. James Franklin became of age in April, 1895. The plaintiffs resided in Alabama. No demand for settlement was made on the guardian till August, 1902.

The guardian is insolvent, and the question whether or not he is protected by the statute is not raised. The sole controversy is whether the sureties are released by either the three, six, or ten years' statute of limitations, all of which are pleaded. If the sureties are released by the failure of the wards to bring suit within three years after arriving of age, neither the subsequent demand and refusal, nor the filing a final account, after the statute became a bar, would revive it and set it in motion. Under the Revised Code (chapter 65, § 4) and statutes prior thereto, a delay of the ward for three years after attaining his majority to have a final settlement or to bring suit absolved the sureties from liability. Johnson's Ex'rs v. Taylor, 8 N. C. 271; Williams v. McNair, 98 N. C. 332, 4 S. E. 131, 133. But the plaintiffs contend that this is otherwise since the adoption of the Code of Civil Procedure. It has been held expressly against this contention of the plaintiffs in Norman v. Walker, 101 N. C. 24, 7 S. E. 408. There the guardian qualified in July, 1872; the ward became of age in September, 1876; the guardian died, before the ward became of age, without having settled his trust or made any of the required returns; in 1887 the ward made his demand upon the sureties, and brought action against them. It was held that it was the duty of the guardian within three months after his appointment to exhibit his account under oath to the clerk of the court and to make annual returns (Code, §§ 1577, 1580), that his failure to do so was a breach of the bond, and that by the Code (section 155 [6]), an action against the sureties on the official bond could be brought only within three years thereafter, except that by virtue of section 163 the beginning of the running of the statute as to a minor was postponed till his arrival at age. The plaintiffs' contention that the statute ran only from the filing of a final account (Code, § 154) was overruled, and Williams v. McNair, 98 N. C. 336, 4 S. E. 131, 133, was distinguished and held not in point. In Norman v. Walker, supra, the guardian having died before the ward became of age, the failure to settle with the ward at his majority was not relied on as a breach, but his failure to file his annual accounts. In Kennedy v. Cromwell, 108 N. C. 1, 13 S. E. 135, Norman v. Walker was quoted and approved, and it was held: (1) That an action for breach of the bond of an executor, administrator, or guardian is barred as to the sureties after three years from the breach complained of. Code, § 155 (6). (2) That, when a final account has been filed, an action to recover the amount shown thereby to be due is barred as to the sureties in six years from the filing of the account. Code, § 154 (2). (3) Whether a final account is or is not filed, if there is a demand and refusal, the principal, as well as the sureties, is absolved from liability if no action is brought within three years thereafter. This is because the refusal puts an end to the trust. (4) When there is neither final account filed nor demand and refusal, whether the executor, administrator, or guardian himself is protected by the lapse of six years or ten years was left an open question, though it was intimated that ten years would certainly be a bar. (5) That, when no final account has been filed, the statute begins to run from the arrival of the ward of age (Code, § 163), but whether, in such case, three years or ten years bars as to the principal, quære. (6) When the statute begins to run, the subsequent marriage of the feme plaintiff will not stop it. Code, § 169. These authorities are conclusive that, though there has been a change in the phraseology of the statute, the ward's right of action accrues against his guardian upon his arrival at age, and that the sureties on the guardian bond are protected by failure to bring action thereon within three years from any breach by failing to file his final account and settlement with his ward, which it is the guardian's duty to do upon the majority of the ward, while if a final account is filed, though there is no breach of the bond, yet as to the sureties the balance shown by such final account is conclusively presumed to be paid after the lapse of six years. The general rule is, as above, that the statute of limitations begins to run against the maintenance of an action by the ward against his guardian and his bond at his majority. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) 82, 121, and cases there cited; Angell on Limitations, § 178. The cases relied on by the plaintiffs are Williams v. McNair, 96 N. C. 336, 4 S. E. 131, 133, which was held not applicable to a case like this by Norman v. Walker, 101 N. C. 24, 7 S. E. 468; Woody v. Brooks, 102 N. C. 334, 9 S. E. 204, which was cited and followed in Kennedy v. Cromwell, supra; and, lastly, Stonestreet v. Frost, 123 N. C. 290, 31 S. E. 718. This last was an action against an administrator, whose office and duties, unlike those of a guardian, do not expire and absolutely terminate ex vi termini at a definite and predetermined date; and it was held that in such case, when there had been a demand and refusal to settle, and an action brought within three years thereafter, the sureties were not absolved from liability, although there had been a failure of the administrator, prior to the three years before action brought, to file his annual account. We think the true rule is that it is the duty of a guardian to settle with his ward on his arrival at age, and a failure to do this is such breach that, if the ward fails to bring action within three years, the sureties on the guardian bond are absolved from liability under the Code (section 155 [6]), for such failure to settle is necessarily "the breach complained of" in an action to recover any balance due by the guardian when no final account was filed, while, if such final account is filed in apt time, the balance shown thereby to be due the ward is presumed paid (as to the sureties) after six years.

As the guardianship ceases ex vi termini upon the arrival of the ward at age, the failure of the guardian to settle then is a breach of his duty for which the ward can maintain an action to recover the amount due, and the failure by the ward to bring such action within three years thereafter must release the sureties on the guardian bond, who have been exposed to an action during these three years, unless a final account is filed showing balance due, and then the statute is six years. The provision in the Code (section 1619) that the clerk may require the guardian to file his final account at any time after the lapse of six months from the ward's coming of age is not intended to bestow upon the guardian the ward's moneys and properties for six months after he becomes of age, nor to deprive him of the right to bring an action to recover them during the period, but simply means that the guardian is presumed to have settled with his ward within such six months, and after its lapse the clerk can call on the guardian to file his final account, with the receipts of the ward in full settlement, to complete the record in his office, for that section states that such return shall be "audited and recorded." Such final account is intended to be subsequent to the settlement with the ward, not preparatory thereto. The six-years statute, not the three-years statute, begins to run as to the sureties from this required final return, if any unpaid balance is shown, as the six-years' statute also runs from the final return of the administrator or executor, which is required to be filed at the end of two years from his qualification (Code, § 1402), but three years after the lapse of such two years is not a bar to an action against the sureties on the bond if the final account is not filed at the end of two years. That the three years runs as to sureties on the guardian bond from the arrival of the ward at age is held in Kennedy v. Cromwell, 108 N. C. 1, 13 S. E. 135 (paragraph 5 of the headnote).

Upon the facts agreed, judgment should have been entered in favor of the defendant sureties. Reversed.

WALKER, J. (concurring in result). The conclusion of the court that the plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations is, in my opinion, correct, but I cannot assent to the proposition that the statute begins to run when the ward becomes of age or sui juris, as a ruling to that effect would be in conflict with an express provision of the law. As a general rule, it is true that the statute runs from the time that the infant attains his majority, but an action or proceeding by him against his guardian for an account and settlement of the trust has been made an exception to the rule. It is provided, by section 1617 of the Code, that every guardian shall, within 12 months from the date of his qualification or appointment, and annually thereafter, so long as any of the ward's estate remains in his control, file in the office of the clerk of the superior court an inventory and account, under oath, of the property received by him and of the investments made by him, and also of his receipts and disbursements for the past year in the form of debit and credit; and if he fails to render an account, or files an insufficient or unsatisfactory one, he may be compelled by order of the clerk forthwith to file a full and satisfactory one; and by section 1619 it is provided that the guardian may be required to file his final account at any time after six months "from the ward's coming to full age or the cessation of the guardianship, but such account may be filed voluntarily at any time." It thus appears that by statute the guardian is allowed six months after the ward is of full age within which to account and settle with him, and he may defer the settlement until the expiration of that time if he chooses to do so. No such provision has been made in the case of an executor or administrator, who is required to settle his administration at the end of two years after his qualification, for it is provided as to him that he shall file his final account for settlement at that time (Code, § 1402), and that he "shall not hold or retain in his hands more of the deceased's estate than amounts to his necessary charges and disbursements and such debts as he shall legally pay, but all such estate, so remaining, shall immediately after the expiration of two years be divided and delivered or paid to the person" entitled thereto in law, or, in the case of an executor, under the will of the deceased (Code, § 1488).

An action against the sureties of a guardian must be brought by the ward within three years after the alleged breach of the bond. Code, § 155, subsec. 8. This does not refer necessarily to the failure of the guardian to file his annual account, but to any breach of the bond for which the ward, or any person suing in his behalf, may recover damages. In our case, the breach alleged is that the guardian, after the wards were of age, failed to account and to settle by paying the amount due from him to each of them. This is the substantial breach, the failure to file the annual account being only a technical breach, for which the damages would be nominal, unless a substantial injury could be shown. The cause of action, or, to be more accurate, the right of action (McLendon v. Com'rs, 71 N. C. 38), accrued when the guardian failed to account and settle at the time fixed by law. It surely was not intended that the guardian should be required to settle—that is, to pay to his ward the amount due by him—until he has filed his final account, provided he does not defer the filing of the account beyond the time prescribed by the statute. The Legislature, for some good and sufficient reason, perhaps because his trust, unlike that of an administrator, may continue during a long period of time, has seen fit to allow a guardian six months after the ward has arrived at full age to put himself in a state of preparedness for a settlement and to file his final account. Whatever may have been the reason for it, we find it so written in the statute, and to the provision we must give full force and effect.

In order to show that it was not intended there should be a settlement until the time when the final account of the fiduciary is due, or, in other words, that the filing of the account should precede the settlement, we need refer only to several sections of the Code wherein that intention is manifested, premising that in this respect there is no difference between the law as to an executor or administrator and that as to a guardian. Section 1402 provides that an executor or administrator "may be required to file his final account for settlement at any time after two years from his qualification," and no executor or administrator shall retain after that time any of the deceased's estate, except the amount of necessary charges and disbursements and of unpaid debts (section 1488). Legatees and distributees may sue to recover their legacies and distributive shares at any time after the lapse of two years from the qualification of the personal representative, unless he shall sooner file his final account for settlement (section 1510). An executor or administrator, who has filed his final account for settlement, may at any time thereafter petition for settlement of the estate committed to his charge (section 1525). Any guardian who wishes to resign must "exhibit his final account for settlement" (section 1908). These provisions of the statute show conclusively that the Legislature intended the final account always to precede the settlement. How can the ward or the court know what is due, until the final account has been filed? As the guardian cannot, therefore, be called to account and required to pay over to his ward what is due from him to the latter until six months after the ward has reached his majority, it follows that no action can be brought against him for that purpose until that time has expired.

In Cooper v. Cherry, 53 N. C. 323, it is said by Pearson, C. J., for the court, to be the settled doctrine "that no statute of limitations can begin to run and become a bar until the cause of action accrues, for the plain reason that the Legislature cannot be supposed to intend to require a creditor to do an impossible act under pain of having his right of action barred." The principle thus laid down applies as well to an action by a ward as to one by a distributee or next of kin. The right of action, therefore, accrued to the wards, in this case, six months after they respectively became of age, and the statute commenced to run from that time, and not from the time they reached their majority. It may make no practical difference in this case which time is fixed for the starting of the statute, as much more than 3½ years elapsed between the time the plaintiffs arrived at full age and the commencement of this action; but it may become very important hereafter in cases in which time will be material, and it is well that the time from which the statute runs—the terminus a quo—should be definitely and correctly stated.

The case of Norman v. Walker, 101 N. C. 24, 7 S. E. 468, is not in point. It appeared in that case that more than 3½ years had elapsed after the ward became of age and before the suit was commenced, and the question was not therefore involved. The same may be said of Kennedy v. Cromwell, 108 N. C. 1, 13 S. E. 135. The Code (section 155 [6]) provides that the action against the sureties of a guardian on his official bond shall be barred within three years after the breach thereof alleged. The breach in this case is the failure to account and settle at the proper time. I do not see why the principle settled by this court, that the filing of the final account terminates the trust, does not apply. If the filing of the final account terminates the trust and sets the statute in motion, the failure to file it at the time when it is due must have the same effect. Vaughan v. Hines, 87 N. C. 445; Hodges v. Council, 86 N. C. 181; Ivy v. Rogers, 16 N. C. 58.

DOUGLAS and CONNOR, JJ., concur in the concurring opinion.

MONTGOMERY, J. (dissenting). The law in force up to the time of the adoption of the Code of Civil Procedure—August, 1869—in respect to the right of sureties on guardian bonds to obstruct a recovery against them by the ward after a lapse of a statutory time, was in these words: "Any orphan or ward, coming to full age, and not calling on his guardian within three years thereafter for a full settlement of his guardianship, shall be forever barred as to the sureties on the bond of the guardian, from all recovery thereon." Chapter 65, § 4, Rev. Code (Acts 1795, c. 15). In Johnson's Ex'rs v. Taylor, 8 N. C. 271, that section of the Revised Code was construed to require more than a mere demand for such settlement. Hall, J., who wrote the opinion, said: "I think it is incumbent on the infant, after arriving at full age, not only to call for a full settlement, but to have a final adjustment of all accounts, matters, and things with his guardian in three years, and either sue for any balance that may be due him, or notify the sureties to the guardian bond of the true situation in which he stands to the guardian." The period prescribed for the commencement of a suit against the sureties on bonds of guardians, executors, and administrators, by the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure, § 34, subd. 6 (now subdivision 6, § 155, Code), is in these words: "An action, against the sureties of any executor, administrator, (collector) or guardian, on the official bond of their principal; within three years after the breach thereof complained of." There is no similarity in the language of the two provisions of law above referred to, and the section of the Code must have been intended to alter the statutory period in the Revised Code as to the commencement of actions against the sureties on the bonds of executors, administrators, and guardians. But what change was intended is not very clearly stated to our minds. The section of the Revised Code was perfectly clear. The three-years statute of limitations in all cases of breach of the bond began to run against the ward, from the day he became 21 years of age, as to the sureties. But what is meant by the words "within three years after the breach thereof complained of" in the Code section is not very clear to me, and I can find no decisions precisely on that point.

There are difficulties connected with this subject. The provisions of the bond of a guardian, as they are required to be by section 1574 of the Code, are stated in terms most general. It is required that the bond must be conditioned that such guardian "shall faithfully execute the trust reposed in him as such, and obey all lawful orders of the clerk or judge touching the guardianship of the estate committed to him." Breaches of such a bond may be stated, as, first, a failure to preserve and manage the ward's property, including not only that which he has received into his possession, but also that which he ought to have received; second, failure to properly care for and support the ward; third, to render an account of the balance to the proper court when required to do so, and to the ward when of age; and, fourth, to pay that balance to the ward when it is demanded by him. As to any breach of the bond which may occur during the minority of the ward, and which breach may be alleged in a suit by a ward against his guardian after he becomes of age, for a settlement of a balance due to him, as a breach complained of, the rule laid down in the Code is clear; as, for example, if the allegation should be that an annual return by the guardian was false, or that the guardian had failed to collect money or to get possession of property belonging to the ward, and which he could have collected or gotten possession of, then, if the ward did not commence his suit against the sureties on the bond within three years after he became of age, a plea of the statute of limitations set up by the sureties would be good; or, if there had been a final account filed by the guardian showing a balance due to the ward, and the ward had demanded the payment of that balance when he became of age, and the guardian had refused to pay it, then there would have been a breach of the bond, and the ward be compelled to commence his action against the sureties on his bond within three years from the refusal, or the sureties might obstruct the recovery by pleading the three-years statute of limitations. But in the latter case the law now in force (subdivision 6, § 155, Code) does not require that the ward shall commence his action within three years after his arrival at full age, but only within three years after the breach complained of. Suppose, then, that there had been no breach of the bond by the guardian during the minority of the ward, and that a final account had been filed which was true and satisfactory to the ward, and he should delay for a longer period than three years after the filing of the final account before demand of payment for the amount as due by the final account and refusal to pay the same, the refusal to pay would then be the breach of the bond, and from that time the ward could bring his action within the next three years against the sureties, and they could not plead the statute of three years. The six-years statute, however, from the filing of the final account by the guardian, would obstruct a recovery by the ward, for the reason that it would protect the guardian, himself, when sued on his official bond (section 154, subd. 2, Code), and the court would not permit a surety on the bond to be bound after the principal on the bond was released by law. Of course, a guardian who has returned no final account, or who had returned one with an admitted balance against himself in favor of the ward, would not be allowed to plead the statute of limitations, and certainly he would not be allowed to hold in his hands a fund which he had admitted was due to his ward, because of a lapse of time; but the suit would have to be brought against him not on his bond, but as trustee. Woody v. Brooks, 102 N. C. 334, 9 S. E. 294. In the case before us the guardian never made any return to the court during the minority of the plaintiffs—the wards. More than 3 years had elapsed after the youngest one of them had arrived at 21 years of age. Seven years after that time the defendant guardian made a report, in the nature of a final account, to the superior court, in which there was an amount admitted to be due to the plaintiffs. They at once brought this action against the defendants, the guardian, and the sureties on his bond. His refusal to pay it, or not paying it when the report was filed, was a breach of the bond; and while in the complaint the failure to make annual returns was stated, yet nowhere was it alleged that they were the breaches of the bond complained of. On the other hand, the plaintiffs accepted the final returns as true, and brought an action to recover the amount therein stated, and that was the breach complained of. It may be said that this view of the law, instead of lightening the burdens of securities and freeing them from stale demands, has the opposite tendency and effect; but it is to be said that this court cannot make the laws. Its duty is to construe them when its judgment is asked.

I think there is no error.

(135 N. C. 419)

LANCE v. BUTLER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Feb. Term, 1904.)

CONDITIONAL SALES—AGENCY—PARTNERSHIP—MORTGAGING FIRM PROPERTY—VALIDITY OF MORTGAGE—CONVERSION—CONFUSION OF GOODS—TRIAL—ISSUES.

1. A contract whereby the owner of goods delivered them to another, the owner retaining title, and the one receiving the goods agreeing to sell them and pay to the owner a specified portion of the price for which they were sold, created a mere agency, and was not a conditional sale within Code, § 1275, requiring all conditional sales to be reduced to writing and registered.

2. The proceeds of sales made by an agent are a trust fund in the hands of the agent, except as to his commissions for selling.

3. An agreement whereby one is to receive part of the profits of an enterprise, as a means only of ascertaining his compensation, does not create a partnership.

4. A partner has no authority, without the consent of the other partners, to mortgage firm property for his own debt, irrespective of whether the mortgagee knew that the assets were partnership property.

5. Where one not the owner of goods gave a mortgage thereon, and the true owner sued in conversion the mortgagee, who had sold the goods under the mortgage, a request for an issue as to whether the plaintiff was damaged by the sale, and, if so, how much, was proper.

6. Code, § 530, provides that the amount of any judgment shall bear interest until paid. Held, that where one not the owner of goods mortgaged them, and the true owner sued the mortgagee in conversion, and the issue was submitted as to whether plaintiff was damaged by the sale under the mortgage, and, if so, how much, the jury in their discretion might have allowed interest from the date of the conversion.

7. Where one not the owner of goods mortgaged them, and the true owner sued the mortgagee in conversion, and the issue submitted was, "What was the value of the goods sold under the mortgage?" to which the jury responded, "$300," it was error to allow interest except from the date of the judgment; Code, § 530, providing that the amount of any judgment shall bear interest until paid.

8. Such error in the judgment did not call for a reversal, but the judgment would be reformed so as to call for interest only from date of the judgment.

9. Where one who was an agent for another for the sale of goods mixed such goods with his own stock of goods, the title of his principal attached to the whole stock until the value of his goods were returned to him or properly accounted for.

10. Where one who was agent for the sale of goods for another allowed them to be mixed with his stock of goods, and then gave a mortgage on the entire stock, the mortgagee obtained no better title than the mortgagor had.

11. A contention that the court erred in giving undue prominence to the testimony of one particular witness was without merit, where his name was mentioned in the charge but once, and that on an issue which was answered as a proposition of law under an instruction of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by F. A. Lance against Washington Butler. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff entered into the following contract with Hunter & Lance:

"North Carolina—Buncombe County.

"This instrument of writing, witnesseth, that I have this day and with these presents do hereby consign to Z. T. Hunter and M. E. Lance, partners trading and doing business at Mills river, North Carolina, in Henderson County, under the firm name and style of Hunter & Lance, a certain stock of goods, wares, merchandise, books, accounts, choses in action and effects, together with the fixtures, including safe, show cases, scales, spool-cotton cabinets, etc., now in the store formerly occupied by T. C. Hunter & Co., at Arden, Buncombe County, N. C., and also one two horse wagon now in the blacksmith shop of Clayton & Reagan, at Arden, N. C., being all the property this day conveyed to me by Frank Carter, trustee.

"This consignment is made upon the following terms and conditions, to-wit: The said Hunter & Lance are to sell the goods in the course of their business for cash, at figures not less than the cost of the same to me, to-wit: One thousand and sixty-two and 52-100 dollars, the proceeds as they arise from the sale of said goods to be paid to me or my order, until the said cost, to-wit, $1062.52 is fully paid and discharged. The balance of the proceeds arising from the sale of said goods, if any there shall be, to be paid as follows: One half to me and one half to be retained by said Hunter & Lance as their compensation for selling and disposing of the same.

"The title to said goods hereby consigned is to remain in me, and said goods shall be kept separate from the general stock of said Hunter & Lance, so that they may at any and all times be fully identified as the goods hereby consigned.

"Interlineation in the 27th line of the first page of this instrument made before signing.

"Witness my hand and [seal], this December 17, 1892. F. A. Lance. [Seal.]

"Witness: Frank Carter."

"We hereby agree to receive, hold and dispose of the property consigned to us by the foregoing instrument, upon the conditions and for the purposes therein set forth.

"Hunter & Lance.

"Witness: Frank Carter."

Subsequently Hunter & Lance removed the goods to Greenville, S. C., where Z. T. Hunter executed a chattel mortgage to secure his individual indebtedness to the defendant under which they were sold, the plaintiff being present and forbidding the sale. This action is to recover damages for the conversion.

Jones & Jones, for appellant. Zebulon Weaver, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The real controversy is upon the second exception, that the contract above set out, by which the plaintiff consigned the stock of goods, etc., to Hunter & Lance, was a conditional sale, and therefore invalid as to the defendant, under Code, § 1275, because not registered. In a conditional sale the transfer of title to purchaser, or retention of it by him, depends upon the performance of some condition. 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) 437. Here the title to the goods was not passed to Hunter & Lance, but they were merely agents to sell the goods, remitting proceeds to plaintiff.

They were to keep the goods separate and apart, so as to be identified, and the title was to remain in the plaintiff. After remitting $1,062.52 of the proceeds, as received, to plaintiff, half of the balance of the proceeds were to be retained by Hunter & Lance as their compensation for selling and disposing of the goods. This was a mere agency, not a conditional sale, and registration of the instrument was not necessary. In Empire Drill Co. v. Allison, 94 N. C. 548, an agreement was held an agency to sell, though less clearly so than in this case, and though it was expressly styled therein a "conditional sale." It is clear, in this case, that the goods were not sold to Hunter & Lance, but they were to sell them to the public as agents for the plaintiff, and, after collecting and sending the plaintiff, out of sales, the amount he had paid for the goods ($1,062.52), one-half of the balance of sales were to be retained by the agents as their compensation for selling. The proceeds of sales were a trust fund in the hands of Hunter & Lance, except as to the commissions for selling. Brewery Co. v. Merritt (Mich.) 46 N. W. 379, 9 L. R. A. 270; 6 Am. & Eng. (2d Ed.) 450.

In Kootz v. Tuvlan, 118 N. C. 393, 24 S. E. 776, it is held that while an agreement to share profits, as such, is one of the tests of a partnership, an agreement to receive part of the profits for his services and attention, as a means only of ascertaining the compensation, does not create a partnership; citing to that effect Mauney v. Colt, 86 N. C. 463; Fertilizer Co. v. Reams, 106 N. C. 296, 11 S. E. 467. But even if this had been a partnership between the plaintiff and Hunter & Lance, Hunter had no power, without the consent of the other partners, to mortgage the firm property for his own debt (Hartness v. Wallace, 106 N. C. 427, 11 S. E. 259), and it can make no difference whether the mortgagee knew that it was partnership assets or not (Rogers v. Batchelor, 12 Pet. 229, 9 L. Ed. 1063, and citations of that case collected in 3 Rose's Notes, 728, 729).

The defendant properly asked that the third issue should be, "Was the plaintiff damaged by said sale; if so, how much?" Had it been submitted in that form, the jury, in their discretion, could have allowed interest from the date of the conversion. Stephens v. Koonce, 103 N. C. 286, 9 S. E. 315. In the form actually submitted, "What was the value of the goods sold by the defendant under his mortgage?" the jury responded, "$300." Upon this it was error to allow interest, except from the date of the judgment. Code, § 530. Besides, the date of the conversion, "6 February 1895," as stated in the judgment, is not found by the verdict. This error, however, does not call for a new trial, but the judgment will be reformed so that the $300 shall bear interest only from the date of the judgment. The error in the form of the issue not having been prejudicial to the defendant, his exception cannot be sustained. It is not merely error, but error in a material matter, and shown to be prejudicial to the appellant, which can justify the order for a new trial.

The defendant further insists that as the goods were not kept separate, but were mixed by Hunter & Lance with their own, the plaintiff cannot recover. But, as is said in Wells v. Batts, 112 N. C. 291, 17 S. E. 419, 34 Am. St. Rep. 506, "the party who occasions, or through whose fault or neglect occurs, the wrongful mixture, must bear the whole loss." By the mixing, the title of the plaintiff attached to the whole of the stock of Hunter & Lance until the value of the plaintiff's goods was returned to him or properly accounted for, and the defendant by his chattel mortgage could obtain no better title than his mortgagor possessed.

It is further contended that the court erred in unduly stressing the testimony of one particular witness, but the witness' name is mentioned in the charge but once, and that upon the first issue, "Were the goods consigned to Hunter & Lance?" and that issue, the defendant admits, should be and was answered as a proposition of law under the instruction of the court upon its construction of the written agreement.

The exceptions in the record, other than those above stated, are not set out in the brief (State v. Register, 133 N. C. 751, 46 S. E. 21), and are without merit. The judgment will be modified by allowing interest only from the trial.

Modified and affirmed.

(135 N. C. 431)

COGDELL et ux. v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1904.)

TELEGRAPHS—STATUS OF COMPANY—OBLIGATIONS AS COMMON CARRIER—FAILURE TO DELIVER MESSAGE—NEGLIGENCE—INABILITY TO FIND SENDEE—NOTIFICATION TO SENDER—PRESUMPTIONS—DEFENSES—MISSPELLING OF SENDEE'S NAME—DUTY TO MAKE INQUIRY—IDEM SONANS—QUESTION FOR JURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. A telegraph company is in the nature of a common carrier, and, subject to reasonable regulations, is required to receive and promptly transmit and deliver all messages tendered in good faith.

2. While a telegraph company may require prepayment, yet, if it accepts a message without such requirement, it is held to the same degree of care and diligence as if the proper charges had been prepaid.

3. If, for any reason, a telegraph company cannot deliver a message, it is its duty to so inform the sender, stating the reason therefor, so that the sender may supply the deficiency, whether it be in the address or additional cost of delivery; and the failure to so notify the sender of nondelivery is of itself evidence of negligence.

4. Proof, or admission, that a telegraph company received a message for transmission, and failed to deliver it to the sendee within a reasonable time, makes a prima facie case of negligence, and imposes on the company the burden of alleging and proving such facts as it may rely on in excuse, so that the plaintiff need not affirmatively prove the negligence; i. e., that the company might have found the sendee by proper diligence.

5. Where a fact admitted or proved raises a legal presumption of negligence which is not rebutted, any error in the admission of evidence tending to prove negligence is harmless.

6. A mistake in the spelling of the name of the sendee of a telegram does not relieve the telegraph company from the burden of showing that it could not have delivered the message with the exercise of reasonable diligence; but, if it could not have so delivered it on account of the misspelling, it devolved upon it to set up that fact in defense.

7. In order to impose on a telegraph company the duty of finding the sendee of a telegram, whose name is misspelled, it is not necessary that the similarity between the name as given and the correct name be sufficient to absolutely fix the identity of the sendee, but it must be such as to enable the company's employees at the terminal office to find the sendee with reasonable search and inquiry.

8. Where the name of the sendee of a telegram was written "Codgell," instead of "Cogdell," as it should have been, the question whether the similarity in the names was such as to suggest to the company's employees at the terminal office the identity of the sendee was properly submitted to the jury.

9. In an action against a telegraph company for damages for failure to properly deliver a message, a defense on the ground that the name of the sendee was misspelled by the sender does not raise the issue of contributory negligence, for the sender's negligence is antecedent to, and not concurrent with, the negligence of the telegraph company in failing to make proper inquiry as to the identity of the sendee; or, if there is no such similarity between the name as given by the sender and the correct name of the sendee as to enable the company to identify the sendee by the exercise of reasonable diligence, there is no negligence on the part of the company, and consequently no room for the application of the doctrine of contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Neal, Judge.

Action by C. M. Cogdell and wife against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Tillett and F. H. Busbee & Son, for appellant. Maxwell & Keerans, for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. This is an action brought by the feme plaintiff to recover damages for mental anguish alleged to have been suffered by her on account of her failure to attend her father's funeral, which she would have attended but for the negligence of the defendant in failing to deliver a telegram informing her of her father's death. The telegram was as follows: "Mount Olive, N. C., Nov. 3, 1902. Mrs. Frank Codgell, Charlotte, N. C. Your father died suddenly this morning. W. F. Martin." It is admitted in the complaint that the name of the sendee in the message was misspelled "Codgell," instead of "Cogdell," as it should have been. The mistake was caused by transposing the two letters "g" and "d."

The assignments of error include 39 exceptions. Thirty-two of these, referring to the admissibility of evidence, become practically immaterial in the view we take of the case. The exceptions to the refusal of prayers and to the instructions as given, aside from the usual defensive prayers for nonsuit and direction of the verdict, are substantially included, in principle at least, in the following prayer: "That the defendant company, having received a telegram for transmission addressed to Mrs. Frank Cogdell, was under no obligations to find, or attempt to find, the feme plaintiff and deliver the message to her, and the jury are therefore instructed to answer the first issue 'No.'" The record states that the defendant introduced no testimony.

In discussing the points involved in this case we will not attempt to follow the order of the exceptions, but will state the general principles as they suggest themselves. It is well settled that a telegraph company is in the nature of a common carrier, and, subject to reasonable regulations, is required to receive and promptly transmit and deliver all messages tendered in good faith. It may require prepayment, but, if it accepts a message without such requirement, it is held to the same degree of care and diligence as if the proper charges had been prepaid. If for any reason it cannot deliver the message, it becomes its duty to so inform the sender, stating the reason therefor, so that the sender may have the opportunity of supplying the deficiency, whether it be in the address or additional cost of delivery. The failure to notify the sender of such nondelivery is of itself evidence of negligence. Proof or admission that the company received a message for transmission and failed to deliver it to the sendee within a reasonable time raises a prima facie case of negligence, and imposes upon the defendant the burden of alleging and proving such facts as it may rely on in excuse. In the case at bar it clearly appears that a message was received by the defendant, which was intended for the plaintiff, although her name was misspelled by the transposition of two letters. The defendant did not prove, or even allege, any effort whatever to deliver the message. There is no evidence that it was sent to Charlotte, nor was any notice given to the sender of its nondelivery until eight or ten days after it was received for transmission. Apparently not even then would such notice have been given had not the sender called at the office and inquired what had become of the message. We think the defendant must lie under the burden which it made no attempt to lift or shift. Under these circumstances the plaintiff was not required to prove affirmatively the negligence of the defendant, or, what is equivalent thereto, that the defendant might have found the sendee by proper diligence. It follows that whatever error there may have been in the admission of evidence tending to prove that fact was immaterial and harmless in view of the legal presumption to the same effect. If any evidence had been introduced by the defendant to rebut the presumption so as to raise a question as to the relative weight of the evidence, the case would be different.

The above principles are too well settled by the decisions of this court to require any citations from other jurisdictions. The presumption of negligence from the acceptance and nondelivery of a telegram is held in the following cases: Sherrill v. Telegraph Co., 116 N. C. 655, 21 S. E. 429; Hendricks v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 304, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658; Landle v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 431, 35 S. E. 810, 78 Am. St. Rep. 668; Rosser v. Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 251, 41 S. E. 378; Hunter v. Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 602, 41 S. E. 796. In Sherrill's Case this court says, through Clarke, J., on page 656, 116 N. C., page 429, 21 S. E.: "The plaintiff having shown the delivery of the message to the defendant, with the charges prepaid (and it would have been the same if the defendant had accepted the message with charges to be collected), and the failure to deliver the message, a prima facie case was made out, and the burden rested on the defendant to show matter to excuse its failure." In Hendricks' Case this court says, on page 309, 126 N. C., page 545, 35 S. E., 78 Am. St. Rep. 658: "It is well settled that where a telegraph company receives a message for delivery, and fails to deliver it with reasonable diligence, it becomes prima facie liable, and that the burden rests upon it of alleging and proving such facts as it relies upon to excuse its failure." The same language is quoted with approval in Landle v. Telegraph Co., 126 N. C. 431, 436, 35 S. E. 810, 78 Am. St. Rep. 668. In Rosser's Case the court below charged the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence that the message was delivered to the defendant with the charges prepaid, and you further find from the evidence that the defendant failed to deliver the message, a prima facie case is made out, and the burden would then rest on the defendant to show matter to excuse its failure." In approving this instruction this court, through Cook, J., says on page 256, 130 N. C., page 379, 41 S. E.: "The message having been shown by the testimony, and also admitted in the answer, to have been received by defendant and the charges prepaid, it then became its duty to deliver it to the addressee at the point to which it was addressed. If, however, that could not be done, then it was incumbent upon defendant to show that it had performed its part of the contract in exercising due diligence in endeavoring to do so. * * * All of the facts relating to the transmission of the message were within the possession of the defendant, and it did not choose to disclose them to the court and jury. From the very nature of telegraphy, neither the sender nor sendee could personally know what became of the message, or why it was not received at its destination, or, if received, why not delivered."

That a telegraph company is in the nature of a common carrier, owing certain duties to the public irrespective of a personal contract, is held in Cashion v. Telegraph Co., 124 N. C. 459, 32 S. E. 746, 45 L. R. A. 160, and Landle v. Telegraph Co., 124 N. C. 528, 32 S. E. 886. In the former case this court says, on page 466, 124 N. C., page 747, 32 S. E., 45 L. R. A. 160: "One other principle must be kept in view: A telegraph company is in the nature of a common carrier. Claiming and exercising the right of condemnation, which can be done only for a public purpose, it is thereby affected with a public use. It owes certain duties to the public which are not dependent upon a personal contract, but which are imposed by operation of law. A simple contract is an agreement between two parties—a drawing together of two minds to a common intent—and must be voluntary as well as mutual. Whenever a man, at a proper time and place, presents a telegram to the company for transmittal, and at the same time tenders the proper fee, the company is bound to receive, transmit, and deliver it with reasonable care and diligence. It cannot refuse to receive it, and, while it may protect itself by reasonable regulations, it cannot insist upon a personal contract contrary to its usual custom or to public policy. As was said in Reese v. Telegraph Company, 123 Ind. 294, 24 N. E. 163, 7 L. R. A. 583, the failure of the telegraph company to promptly deliver a telegram "is not a mere breach of contract, but a failure to perform a duty which rests upon it as the servant of the people." In Landle's Case this court says, on page 533, 124 N. C., page 887, 32 S. E.: "Moreover, the defendant, as a common carrier, owed to the plaintiff a public duty which it should have performed with reasonable care and diligence. It cannot be relieved from liability for the proximate results of its own negligence, if it existed, by unreasonable regulations or technical objections."

That it is the duty of the telegraph company to promptly inform the sender of a message when for any reason it cannot be delivered is held in Hendricks v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 304, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658; Landle v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 431, 35 S. E. 810, 78 Am. St. Rep. 668; Bright v. Tel. Co., 132 N. C. 324, 43 S. E. 841; Hinson v. Tel. Co., 132 N. C. 467, 43 S. E. 945; and Bryan v. Tel. Co., 133 N. C. 603, 45 S. E. 938. In Hendricks' Case this court says, on page 311, 126 N. C., page 546, 35 S. E., 78 Am. St. Rep. 658: "We think that it is the duty of the company, in all cases where it is practicable to do so, to promptly inform the sender of a message that it cannot be delivered. While its failure to do so may not be negligence per se, it is clearly evidence of negligence. In many instances, by such a course, the damage could be greatly lessened, if not entirely avoided. A better address might be given, mutual friends might be communicated with, or even a letter might reach the addressee. In any event, the sender might be relieved from great anxiety, and would know what to expect. Moreover, it would tend to show diligence on the part of the company." This language is quoted with approval in Landle's Case. In Hinson's Case, Connor, J., speaking for the court, says: "Viewed from this standpoint, the defendant had in its possession a message addressed to M. L. Hinson, with no direction as to place of residence other than the city of Columbia, S. C. Its duty, upon this state of facts, was to use every reasonable effort to find and deliver the message to the sendee, and, upon failure to do so, to ask for a better address."

This would dispose of the case provided there had been no mistake in the spelling of the name of the sendee. In any event we do not think that such a mistake would relieve the defendant from the burden of showing that it could not have delivered the message with the exercise of reasonable diligence. The defendant does not allege any effort whatever on its part, but contends that the misspelling of the name relieved it from any such obligation. This contention cannot be sustained upon any legal principle. Suppose a telegraph company were to receive a prepaid message addressed to a well-known resident named "Brown"; could it justify itself in keeping both the money and the telegram, without any effort whatever to deliver, simply because the addressee happened to spell his name "Browne"? If the company was unable, after reasonable diligence, to deliver the message on account of the misspelling of the name, it should set those facts up in defense. This would then invoke the doctrine of idem sonans, and raise a question of fact, to be determined by the jury, as to whether the correct spelling of the name and that used in the message were sufficiently similar in sound to suggest to the average telegraph operator the identity of the sendee. We do not mean to say that the similarity of sound must be sufficient to absolutely fix the identity of the addressee, but that it must be such as to enable the employees of the company at the terminal office to find the addressee with reasonable search and inquiry. In the case at bar this question was properly left to the jury. There is much similarity in sound and much greater similarity in looks. The mistake is caused by the transposition of two letters—an error that is frequently committed by careful writers and typesetters. On the second page of the record in this case the word "sworn" is printed "sown," the "o" and the "w" being transposed. In Hermann v. Butler, 59 Ill. 225, a petition for certiorari was refused to review a judgment in favor of Seth Butler against said Hermann, entered by default upon summons wherein the plaintiff was designated as "Seth Bulter." As will be seen, the mistake consisted in the transposition of the letters "l" and "t." In State v. Patterson, 24 N. C. 359, 38 Am. Dec. 469, Gaston, J., speaking for the court, says: "It is also well established that a name merely misspelled is nevertheless the same name." Many variations in sound greater than that under consideration have been held to be merely misprisions in spelling in this state as well as in other jurisdictions; but it is useless to repeat them. A great many are set out in State v. Collins, 115 N. C. 716, 20 S. E. 452; and still more in 21 A. & E. Enc. (2d Ed.) 313 et seq. If the doctrine of idem sonans is applicable to criminal actions involving a long term in the penitentiary, we see no reason why it should not be invoked in civil cases where the attending circumstances justify its application. While the issue of contributory negligence was found in favor of the plaintiff, we feel compelled to say that in cases like the present we see no room for its application. The only negligence possibly imputable to the sendee is that of the sender in misspelling her name. This act of negligence was entirely antecedent to the negligence of the defendant, and in no sense concurrent therewith. Moreover, the defendant got the full benefit of that defense under the instructions as to the doctrine of idem sonans. If the dissimilarity in spelling were so great as to render it practically impossible for the defendant to identify the addressee after the exercise of due diligence, then there would be no negligence on the part of the defendant, and consequently neither occasion nor necessity for the defense of contributory negligence. If, on the contrary, the defendant could, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have identified the sendee and delivered the message in spite of the previous negligence of the sender in misspelling the name, it could not set up such antecedent negligence in bar of recovery.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed. Affirmed.

(125 N. C. 474)

WOMBLE v. MERCHANTS' GROCERY CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1904.)

SERVANT'S INJURIES—FALL OF ELEVATOR—NEG-LIGENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DUTY OF MASTER—INSPECTION—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

1. It is the duty of the master to provide the servant with safe appliances for his use.

2. A master is not bound to provide the servant with the safest, newest, and best appliances, but merely such as are reasonably safe and in general use.

3. It is the duty of the master to give the appliances which are used by the servant such inspection, in order to see that they are kept in proper repair, as, from the nature of the appliances and the circumstances connected therewith, a man of ordinary prudence and judgment would give.

4. In an action for injuries sustained by a servant, plaintiff relied on negligence in the original construction of the elevator the fall of which caused his injuries, and on a negligent failure to inspect it, and the court instructed the jury on both aspects of the case, but the issue was general in its terms. Held that, if the court committed error in instructing on either aspect of the case, defendant would be entitled to a reversal, since the court on appeal could not know on which aspect the jury founded their verdict.

5. In an action for injuries sustained by a servant owing to the fall of a freight elevator while he was operating the same, evidence held sufficient to render the question of defendant's negligence in the original construction of the elevator one for the jury.

6. In an action for injuries sustained by a servant owing to the fall of a freight elevator while he was operating it, it was proper to instruct that negligence was not to be inferred from the mere fact that an accident occurred.

7. The duty of a master to inspect a freight elevator, on which a servant rides while operating it, is a positive and affirmative duty, which is to be continuously performed.

8. In an action for injuries sustained by a servant owing to the fall of a freight elevator while he was operating it, the question as to whether there was sufficient inspection of the elevator is one for the jury.

9. In an action for injuries to a servant, contributory negligence is an affirmative defense, and any issue thereon must be tendered by defendant in order to be available.

10. A servant employed to operate a freight elevator does not assume the risk of injury owing to a fall of the elevator, in the absence of knowledge of any defect therein, and of any duty to inspect it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. C. Womble against the Merchants' Grocery Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendant company was engaged in the wholesale grocery business in the city of Greensboro, receiving and shipping large quantities of groceries and other goods, which were kept and stored in their storehouse in said city; that said storehouse was four stories high, in which there was an elevator for the purpose of carrying goods to the different floors and lowering them to the first floor for delivery and shipment. That plaintiff was employed by defendant, and among other duties required of and imposed upon him was that of transferring from floor to floor goods as aforesaid by the use of the elevator; that said elevator was furnished by the defendant company. That the said elevator was defective in its construction, and unsafe for the purposes for which it was used; that the defendant negligently failed to examine and inspect it, and that by reason thereof the defendant failed to ascertain its defective condition. That on the 31st day of August, 1900, while engaged in the work imposed upon him by the defendant, and not knowing of any defect in the elevator, plaintiff went upon said elevator in the discharge of his duty at the fourth floor of the said store; that by reason of its defective condition the cable or rope pulled out of its fastening, thus separating the elevator from the weight by which it was pulled, and by falling to the basement floor the plaintiff suffered serious injuries. The defendant denied the material allegations in the complaint, and alleged that the injury sustained by the plaintiff was incident to the risk assumed by him in his employment, and that the proximate cause of such injury was the negligence of the plaintiff. The court submitted the following issues to the jury: "(1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant? Answer. Yes. (2) If so, what damage has plaintiff sustained? Answer. Three thousand dollars." From a judgment upon the verdict the defendant appealed.

§ 3. See Master and Servant, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. §§ 236, 238.

W. P. Bynum, Jr., and King & Kimball, for appellant. Scales, Taylor & Scales, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. The defendant having demurred to the evidence and moved for nonsuit, its first exception is directed to the refusal of his honor to sustain the motion. The plaintiff testified, in substance: That he entered the employment of the defendant on January 20, 1899, coming to Greensboro from Chatham county, where he had lived up to that time. That he was hired to truck freight and handle goods. That the goods were trucked on different floors, and carried from one floor to another on an elevator. That he had seen one or two elevators before entering the service of the defendant, but had never been on one, and had never seen one work. In about a month after he entered the service of the defendant it removed its stock of goods to another building, and that the elevator by which he was injured was put into the building to which the defendant moved. That the elevator was a large one, run by a wire cable. That it would run with good speed. That a rope was used in pulling the elevator up, and there was a cable that ran over a pulley. That there was a weight in a box 2 feet by 8 inches at the back of the elevator on the side of the wall, and that the box ran from the upper floor to the bottom of a five-story building, counting the basement, and that the weight ascended and descended. That it ran to the fourth story. That goods were carried up from one floor to the other by this elevator, and that when the elevator was loaded the plaintiff would get on it and pull it up. That at the time he got hurt he usually rode on the elevator. A man who wanted to carry goods from one floor to another generally got on the elevator, and rode up if there was not too many goods on the elevator, and that sometimes as much as 2,000 pounds was put on, and that it was his duty to carry the goods from one floor to another, and that he did as others—rode on the elevator. That the proprietors and others rode on it. That he was certain he had ridden on the elevator with the president of the company. That no one had told him not to ride on the elevator. That on the day he was hurt there was 600 pounds of goods on the elevator, besides his own weight. This was a very small load. There was no understanding with him about inspecting the elevator, and it was no part of his duty to do so. That there was another man in the house that did more of that kind of work than the plaintiff. The elevator was never inspected while he was at work for the defendant, to his knowledge. That he knew of no defect in it. There was a stairway leading from one floor to another, which was constantly used, and he had the option of going up and down the elevator, and rode on it of his own volition, and for the reason that everybody else rode on it. He did not ride on it all the time; sometimes walked down the steps, sometimes rode on the elevator—being merely a matter of choice. That he had been operating this elevator from the time it was put up early in 1899 to August, 1900, and that it was a new elevator. The box containing the weight ran alongside of the wall, and extended from the basement floor up as high as the plaintiff's head above the fourth floor, and that there was an open space in the box near the top and above the fourth floor, but that he had never noticed as to whether the condition of the weight and its fastening to the cable could be seen through this opening at the top of the box when the elevator car was at the bottom floor. The cable was a wire rope composed of several strands of wire, and was about three-quarters of an inch in diameter, but he did not know how it fastened to the weight. That at the time of the accident he took off the brake, and the elevator fell from the fourth floor to the basement. That this took place when he stepped on the elevator and released the brake.

A witness introduced by the plaintiff testified that he was booker for the defendant at the time of the injury in question; that the goods were taken to their proper place by the elevator, and brought down in the same way when shipped. That the plaintiff's duties were to take the list of goods given him by the shipping clerk and get the goods out and bring them to the front door and put them on the dray. The elevator was not used by the officers of the company, but he believed he had seen Simpson go up on the elevator, but not often; it was a freight elevator; that investigation was made by the company as to the cause of the falling of the elevator, and witness could see where the planks were rough or uneven. After the accident witness noticed fastening of the cable to the weight, and the cable was fastened by running through an eye in the weight and running back about 18 inches and the lapped portions were fastened with four clamps screwed together with bolts and nuts; that one clamp held the cable ends together, and another fastened between that and the weight; that when witness first saw clamps after accident they seemed to be all right, and seemed to be securely fixed together, but the rope had slipped through; that the clamps were not loose; that the end of the cable was frayed; that the same clamps were used in fastening the cable back to the weight after the accident.

Defendant's first contention is that upon the plaintiff's evidence his honor should have dismissed the action. This contention presents the inquiry whether there was any evidence that the elevator was defective in its original construction or had become so by use, and whether there was any evidence of negligence in failing to inspect the elevator. We approve the instruction given by his honor in respect to the duty of the employer to furnish to his employé safe machinery and appliances. "When one enters the service of another, it becomes the duty of the employer to provide safe appliances for his use. It also becomes the duty of the employé from time to time to give inspection to these appliances, and to see that they are kept in proper repair. It is not the duty of the master to provide the safest and newest or best appliances, but the duty which the law imposes upon him is that he furnish reasonably safe appliances, such as are in general use, and that he give such inspection to them as from the nature of the appliances, and the circumstances connected therewith, that a man of ordinary prudence and judgment would have given." This charge is amply sustained by the authorities. Labatt, Master and Servant, § 14, and cases cited. The principle as applied to elevators used by employes is thus stated by the author of that very excellent work: "An employer may be held liable if the safety devices which he is bound to provide for an elevator designed for the use of his servants prove defective. The employer must also respond in damages if an elevator which is either conducted specially for the conveyance of the servants, or which, though constructed primarily for the carriage of freight, is also used with his acquiescence for the conveyance of servants, is in any other way abnormally dangerous to use." Labatt, Master and Servant, § 91; Balto. Boot Co. v. Jarmar, 93 Md. 404, 49 Atl. 847, 86 Am. St. Rep. 428; Chesson v. Lumber Co., 118 N. C. 59, 23 S. E. 925. The defendant, not controverting the duty which it owed to the plaintiff, insists that there is no evidence in the record proper to be submitted to the jury tending to show a breach of duty—that his honor should in response to its motion have dismissed the action. It will be observed that the complaint avers negligence in that (1) the elevator was defective in its original construction, and (2) that the defendant negligently failed to inspect it; that an inspection would have shown the defective condition of the cable, etc. His honor could not have dismissed the action, because it is conceded that the elevator has been in use 18 months, during which time the defendant had made no inspection. The motion was therefore properly refused. The defendant, however, excepts to his honor's charge, for the same reason upon which the motion to nonsuit the plaintiff is based. His honor having instructed the jury in respect to both aspects of the case, and the issue being general in its terms, if there is error in the charge in either aspect, the defendant would be entitled to a new trial. This court could not see upon which view the jury found their verdict. Pearce v. Fisher, 133 N. C. 333, 45 S. E. 638. This, therefore, presents the question whether there was any evidence of a defective construction of the elevator. His honor instructed the jury that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff; that he must show to them by the greater weight of the evidence that there was negligence on the part of the defendant, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. The elevator was operated by a wire cable which ran over a pulley; there was a weight in a box two feet by six inches, at the back of the elevator on the side of the wall, and this box ran from the bottom to the upper floor; the weight ascended and descended as the elevator ascended and descended; a rope was used in pulling the elevator up; the cable was fastened to the weight, went through an eye, and lapped back some 18 inches; the weight had torn some places in the shaft or box, more than at other places; the marks were fresh; the shaft was boxed up all the way except a few feet at the top; shaft was made of rough uneven planks; the lapped portion of the cable was fastened with four clamps screwed together with bolts and nuts; one clamp held the cable ends together, and another fastened between that and the weight; the clamps after the accident seemed to be all right, and seemed to be securely fixed together, but the rope had slipped through; the clamps were not loose; the end of the cable was frayed; the same clamps were used in fastening the cable back after the accident. The plaintiff insists that this testimony entitled him to go to the jury upon the allegation of a defective construction of the elevator. He relies upon the principle announced by Gaston, J., in Ellis v. R. R., 24 N. C. 138, that "although the burden is on the plaintiff to show negligence causing damage, when he shows damage resulting from the act of the defendant, which act, with the exertion of proper care, does not ordinarily produce damage, he makes out a prima facie case of negligence, which cannot be repelled but by proof of care or of some extraordinary accident which renders care useless." This principle has been frequently applied in this state. Aycock v. R. R., 89 N. C. 321, and other cases. Applied to actions of this character, the doctrine is thus stated by La-batt. § 834: "The rationale of this doctrine (spoken of in the cases as res ipsa loquitur) is that in some cases the very nature of the action may of itself, and through the presumption it carries, supply the requisite proof. It is applicable when, under the circumstances shown, the accident presumably would not have happened if due care had been exercised. Its essential import is that, on the facts proved, the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case without direct proof of negligence. * * * The doctrine does not dispense with the rule that the party who alleges negligence must prove it. It merely determines the mode of proving it, or what shall be prima facie evidence of negligence." While it is true that the courts uniformly hold that a person or corporation operating an elevator for passengers are held to the highest degree of care, the same as common carriers, whereas one operating a freight elevator upon which employes ride in the discharge of their duty are held to a lower degree of care, this distinction does not affect the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 346, 29 Atl. 380. Actions for injuries in either case are founded upon the averments of negligence—a breach of duty—the mode of proof may be the same. It may be that exculpatory evidence would be different. A defendant might be exonerated by showing a degree of care in one case which would be insufficient in the other. It is by no means clear that, in employment where human life is concerned and exposed, the distinction in regard to the degree of care is well founded. "When an accident has occurred, and the physical facts surrounding are such as to create a reasonable probability that the accident was the result of negligence in such case, the physical facts themselves are evidential, and furnish what the law terms 'evidence of negligence,' in conformity with the maxim, 'Res ipsa loquitur.'" Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 29 Atl. 380.

In the note to Huey v. Gahlenbec, 15 Atl. 520, 6 Am. St. Rep. 792, the annotator says: "In such case, however, it is hardly accurate to say that negligence is presumed from the mere fact of the injury, but rather that it may be inferred from the facts and circumstances disclosed, in the absence of evidence showing that it occurred without the fault of the defendant. Such a case comes within the principle of res ipsa loquitur; the facts and circumstances speak for themselves, and, in the absence of explanation or disproof, give rise to the inference of negligence."

The doctrine is well illustrated in the case of Houston v. Brush, supra, the court, Thompson, J., after discussing the authorities and the reason upon which the doctrine is based, saying: "In the case at bar the defendants owed the requisite duty to the plaintiff to bring the case within the rule. It is evident that the accident would not have occurred if the pin had not worked out so as to cause the wheel to fall. For aught that appears, the pin would not have worked out if it had been securely fastened into the block when the block was first attached to the derrick, and had been subsequently kept in that condition. It is not claimed that the pin could not have been fastened into the block so that it could not have worked out as it did. It did not appear that any new force or unforeseen or purely accidental occurrence intervened to remove the covering from the head of the pin, thus causing the accident, but it occurred while the derrick was being put to its ordinary use. * * * It was under the care and management of themselves [defendants] and their servants. The working out of the pin was an accident which in the ordinary course of things does not occur if those who have the care and management of a derrick use proper care. The case standing thus, we think the jury had a right to consider the fact that the pin came out as it did, and from it draw the inference that the defendants had failed to exercise ordinary care."

In Balto. Boot Co. v. Jamar, supra, the court said: "If the jury believed that maintaining the sheathing over the elevator, and especially over the portion of it where the shifting ropes were located, made its operation in that condition dangerous, that was itself a defect that might have been discovered by the use of ordinary care and diligence in inspecting the elevator."

In Winkelmann v. Colladay, 88 Md. 78, 40 Atl. 1078, the plaintiff, an employé, was injured by the falling of a dumb-waiter through a shaft running from the first to the fifth floor. The fall was occasioned by the breaking of the rope holding the dumb-waiter, but there was no evidence to show how or why the rope broke. It was held that the jury were authorized to infer from the fall of the dumb-waiter, unexplained, that the injury was caused by the negligence of the defendant in not providing safe appliances. The court said: "When something occurs which in the ordinary course of events would not occur without negligence, then the familiar doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applied. This doctrine is particularly applicable to cases in which bodies fall, and fall in places where they are liable to do injury." In this case the contention was made that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur did not apply between master and servant. It was rejected, the court saying, "No authority was cited for this contention in the court below, and none can be found." Howser v. R. R., 80 Md. 148, 30 Atl. 906, 27 L. R. A. 154, 45 Am. St. Rep. 332; Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 23, 29 N. W. 565; Posey v. Scoville (C. C.) 10 Fed. 140.

In Gerlach v. Edelmeyer, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 292, and Id., 88 N. Y. 645, it was held that "when an elevator fell without any apparent cause and injured the plaintiff, as ordinarily an elevator properly constructed and properly managed does not fall, and as that elevator did fall, the presumption is that there was something wrong either with the elevator or with the management of it, and that presumption would warrant a verdict for the plaintiff, unless it were rebutted by the defendant's evidence."

The doctrine was applied in Griffin v. Boston & A. Railroad, 148 Mass. 143, 19 N. E. 166, 1 L. R. A. 698, 12 Am. St. Rep. 526, to the unexplained spreading of the coupling link, resulting in the separation of cars, causing injury to an employé. It is said that while, either from the facts connected with the transaction, the manner in which the links spread, their appearance after the accident, or other circumstances, the jury could find that there was no negligence, yet the plaintiff was entitled to go to the jury.

In Folk v. Schaeffer, 186 Pa. 253, 40 Atl. 401, the injury was caused by the knot of a rope becoming untied and slipping. "There was no direct evidence of want of care in tying the knot, and the conclusion that it was improperly tied was an inference from the fact that it became untied. Ordinarily an accident would not have happened as this did if care had been exercised in tying the ropes. There was no difficulty in making them secure. Under the circumstances shown by the plaintiff, the burden was thrown on the defendant to show that due care had been used, and, in the absence of any explanation, the jury might infer want of care. The defendants were not required to satisfactorily explain the cause of the accident, but they were bound to rebut the presumption of negligence arising from the attendant circumstances." Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175; Springer v. Ford, 189 Ill. 430, 59 N. E. 953, 52 L. R. A. 930, 32 Am. St. Rep. 464.

In Kearny v. Railroad, 5 L. R. Q. B. 411, Cockburn, C. J., says: "Now we have the fact that a brick falls out of this structure and injures the plaintiff. The proximate cause appears to have been the looseness of the brick and the vibration of the train passing over the bridge, acting upon the defective condition of the brick. It is clear, therefore, that the structure in reference to this brick was out of repair. It is clear that it was incumbent on the defendant to use reasonable care and diligence, and I think the brick being loose affords prima facie a presumption that they had not used reasonable care and diligence." Scott v. Dock Co., Com. Law Rep. (N. S.) 134-220.

In the light of the foregoing and many other authorities, his honor correctly submitted the question of the defective construction of the elevator to the jury. It appears that the weights which should have ascended and descended free from obstruction or unnecessary friction struck against the sides of the box or shaft until they produced the condition described by the witness. The shaft or box was made of rough uneven planks; how far this contributed to the rope slipping was for the consideration of the jury. They may well have found that in such respect the elevator (which includes all of its parts) was defective in its construction. The principle of res ipsa loquitur in such cases carries the question of negligence to the jury, not relieving the plaintiff of the burden of proof, and not, we think, raising any presumption in his favor, but simply entitling the jury, in view of all the circumstances and conditions as shown by the plaintiff's evidence, to infer negligence, and say whether upon all of the evidence the plaintiff has sustained his allegation. His honor, in view of this principle, correctly said to the jury, in response to defendant's request, "Negligence on the part of defendant is not to be inferred from the mere fact that an accident occurred, and that in consequence thereof the plaintiff was injured," etc.

In regard to the second proposition, regarding the duty of inspection, we are of opinion, both upon reason and authority, that a failure to inspect an elevator approaches very near, if it does not constitute, negligence. The law is fully and ably discussed in Labatt on Master and Servant, c. 11. "Negligence on the part of the master may consist of acts of omission or of commission, and it necessarily follows that the continuing duty of inspection and supervision rests on the master. It will not do to say that, having furnished suitable and proper machinery and appliances, the master can thereafter remain passive so long as they work well and seem safe. The duty of inspection is affirmative, and must be continuously fulfilled and positively performed. Anything short of this would not be ordinary care." The duty of inspection being a positive and affirmative duty, to be continuously performed by the defendants, the court could not say, as a matter of law, how often such inspection should have taken place, or that it was proper to omit it at some particular time. It was for the jury to say whether the defendants had used reasonable care in this respect. Houston v. Brush, supra; Labatt, 157. We have, after a somewhat exhaustive examination of the authorities, found no case in which a failure to inspect an elevator for more than four months has been held sufficient to excuse the defendant. Labatt, § 158, note 6, "Elevator." A plaintiff was permitted to recover for injury where the clamp to which a derrick guy rope was fastened was inspected only once a week. Welsh v. Cornell, 63 N. Y. 44. In McGuigan v. Beatty, 186 Pa. 329, 40 Atl. 490, a failure to inspect a rope which held the weight for six months was evidence of negligence, the court saying: "In addition to this, there was an entire absence of testimony that the defendant had even inspected the rope, and the absence of such proof affords an inference that the duty to inspect had been neglected." "An elevator needs, and should have, constant care and inspection. The friction of the rope is constantly wearing the strands, and when they part it is necessarily weakened." Bier v. Standard Mfg. Co., 130 Pa. 446, 18 Atl. 637.

His honor's charge in respect to the duty of inspection is in accord with the authorities. A careful examination of the entire charge shows that the principles given to the jury for their guidance, and the contentions of the parties, were stated with great clearness and accuracy. The defendant, however, says that the plaintiff assumed the risk incident to his employment in the use of the elevator, and that he was guilty of contributory negligence. The last defense, if sustained by any evidence, is not open to the defendant, as it tendered no issue upon the question. It is always an affirmative defense, and the defendant carries the laboring oar. We find no evidence to sustain the plea, if presented. Without discussing the question as to whether the doctrine known as "assumption of risk" comes within the same rule, we have no hesitation in holding that there is nothing in the evidence to sustain the defense. Appleton, J., in Buzzell v. Mfg. Co., 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212, says: "The employé assumes the risks, more or less hazardous, of the service in which he is employed, but he has a right to presume that all proper attention shall be given to his safety, and that he shall not be carelessly and needlessly exposed to risks not necessarily resulting from his occupation, and preventable by ordinary care and precaution on the part of his employer." There is no suggestion that the plaintiff knew of any defect in the elevator or any of the appliances for its operation, or that any duty was imposed upon him to inspect it. There is no aspect of the evidence in which the plaintiff can be said to have assumed the risk incident to the negligence of the defendant. Lloyd v. Hanes, 126 N. C. 359, 35 S. E. 611. The defendant's first prayer was properly refused, because there was no evidence to sustain it. The sixth prayer was substantially given; the others were given as asked.

Upon a careful examination of the entire record and the defendant's exceptions and assignments, we find no error. The judgment must be affirmed.

(120 Ga. 218)

STEPHENS v. HENDERSON, Marshal.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS — MUNICIPAL REGULATIONS — VALIDITY — DOMESTIC WINES — SALE.

1. An ordinance enacted by the mayor and aldermen of Cartersville in 1887, providing for the inspection of all domestic wines sold in that city, fixing the fees of the inspector, and prescribing penalties for the violation of the ordinance, was not invalid as contravening the general domestic wine act of 1877 (Pub. Laws 1877, p. 83). It furnished sufficient foundation for an amending ordinance passed in 1903, which was also valid.

2. Any city or town where the sale of domestic wines has not been prohibited by a special act or the local option law may regulate the sale of such wines within its limits, provide penalties for a violation of such regulations, and impose a tax upon each place where such wines are sold. This, however, is not applicable to sales of wine made from grapes or berries grown on the land of the seller, or upon land leased or rented by him, unless such person establishes a place of business to make such sales, or engages regularly in the business of selling same within the territorial limits of such city or town.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Cartersville; A. M. Foute, Judge.

Habeas corpus by J. F. Stephens against J. A. Henderson, as marshal of the city of Cartersville, to secure relator's discharge from custody. From an order denying the petition and remanding the petitioner to custody, he brings error. Affirmed.

James B. Conyers, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., and T. O. Milner, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. On July 5, 1887, the mayor and aldermen of the city of Cartersville passed an ordinance creating the office of inspector of domestic wines. It was made the duty of this officer to inspect all wines offered for sale in the city of Cartersville, "and see that said wines are pure and unadulterated and not injurious to health, and in merchantable condition." It was also provided that all persons offering wines for sale in the city should first notify the inspector and have such wines examined in accordance with the terms of the ordinance. The ordinance also fixed the fees of the inspector, and prescribed penalties for the violation of its provisions. On November 5, 1903, this ordinance was amended by inserting therein a requirement that all persons offering domestic wines for sale should register their names in a book to be kept by the city for that purpose, changing the fee to be paid the inspector, and providing for a license tax to be required of all persons, firms, or corporations who should "establish a place of business for the purpose of selling domestic wines, or otherwise engage regularly in the business of selling domestic wines within the territorial limits of the said city of Cartersville." Stephens was arrested on a warrant charging him with violating the amendatory ordinance in selling wines without first registering and paying the special tax imposed by the city and the inspection fees required by law, and also in establishing a place of business for selling domestic wines in contravention of the ordinance of November 5, 1903. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that his detention was illegal, because: (1) The mayor and aldermen had no legal power to adopt the ordinance of July 5, 1887, and hence that ordinance was not the subject-matter of the amendment of November 5, 1903. (2) Petitioner is specially exempted by the act of 1895 of the General Assembly from the operation of said act as a manufacturer, unless he established a regular place of business for selling domestic wines. The writ was heard by the judge of the city court of Cartersville, who passed an order denying the prayers of the petition, and remanding the petitioner to the custody of the city authorities. Stephens excepted.

It will be seen that the only question for our decision is as to the constitutionality of the two ordinances of the city of Cartersville to which reference has been made, for only by the attack on their validity is the legality of the petitioner's detention called in question and room given for the operation of the writ of habeas corpus. We will not consider the point made by the plaintiff in error that, by the terms of the act of 1895 (Pol. Code 1895, § 757), he is exempted from the operation of the municipal ordinances of the city of Cartersville. That is a matter of defense in the municipal court, and involves questions of fact, which can only be determined on a trial of the case, and does not in any way affect the legality of the applicant's detention. The ordinances themselves, on their face, are in no way in conflict with the act mentioned, and the petitioner was arrested on a warrant charging him with a violation of their provisions. If, as a matter of fact, he is one of a class of citizens who are by general statute exempted from the operation of the ordinances in question, he must show it on his trial in the municipal court. It is not the function of the writ of habeas corpus, however, to determine the guilt or innocence of one accused of crime. Its only purpose is to ascertain the legality of the detention, and that is a matter to which the point now under discussion does not go.

2. The principal contention of counsel for the plaintiff in error is that the original ordinance passed in 1887 was invalid as contravening the general domestic wine act of 1877 (Pub. Laws 1877, p. 83), and from this it is argued that the amendment of 1903 was void, because it purported to amend something which in legal contemplation had no existence. We are satisfied that this contention is without merit. The original ordinance did not prohibit the sale of domestic wines; it merely provided for their inspection, as a safeguard against adulterations. It was clearly within the power of the municipal authorities under Political Code of 1895, § 1600, to enact such an ordinance as a general police regulation, just as a city may, without further express legislative authority. Pure food laws to protect its citizens against vicious and fraudulent adulteration of foodstuffs which might otherwise be foisted upon them by unscrupulous merchants may be enacted as police regulations. The domestic wine act of 1877 guaranteed the right of the manufacturer to sell, in quantities not less than one quart, wine made from grapes grown on his land; but it did not take away from the cities of the state the authority to prescribe that such wines when sold shall be free from injurious adulterations. This being true, the ordinance passed in 1887 was legal and valid, and furnished a sufficient foundation for the amending ordinance of 1903. The provisions of that amendment were likewise valid and legal. For the most part it carried out the scheme of inspection and prevention of adulteration inaugurated by the ordinance of 1887. The only feature of the amendment not contemplated by the original ordinance was a provision for a license tax on places where domestic wines are sold, and this was in entire harmony with section 756 of the Political Code, of 1895. We do not hesitate to hold that from nothing that appears in the record does it appear that the detention of the petitioner was illegal, and consequently that the court below did not err in refusing the prayers of the petition.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 36)

POWELL v. BRINSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

INJUNCTION — CUTTING TIMBER—PLAINTIFF'S TITLE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. In an action, brought under section 4927 of the Civil Code of 1895, to restrain the cutting of timber on land alleged to belong to the plaintiff (there being no allegation in the petition that the defendants were insolvent or that the threatened damage would be irreparable), where one of the plaintiff's muniments of title consisted of a sheriff's deed, and the execution which was the basis of the deed was not introduced in evidence, nor its record proved, but parol evidence was resorted to to show that it had been lost, the "perfect title" required by the statute was not made out, and it was proper to refuse an injunction.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by O. A. Powell, administrator, to restrain S. Brinson and another from cutting timber on land. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

J. W. Haygood and Eldridge Outts, for plaintiff in error. Townsend & Dickerson and M. E. O'Neal, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. This was an action, under section 4927 of the Civil Code of 1895, to restrain the cutting, boxing, or working of timber on land alleged to belong to the estate of which the plaintiff is administrator, the petition setting up that the plaintiff, as administrator, "holds perfect title to said lot of land." There was no allegation that the defendants were insolvent, or that the damages would be irreparable. The abstract of title attached to the petition showed (1) a grant from the state to Jesse Lockhart, dated December 4, 1829; (2) deed from Lockhart to Priester, dated August 28, 1851, recorded April 1, 1902; (3) judgment in favor of Priester against Bloodworth in Spalding superior court, dated November 22, 1858, reciting that the land in question is liable for the amount of the judgment for purchase money unpaid; (4) sheriff's deed from the sheriff of Miller county to Sears, reciting a levy on the property under the judgment mentioned above. From Sears the property descended in a chain of warranty deeds to the plaintiff's intestate. The sheriff's deed to Sears was dated October 2, 1860, recorded December 12, 1860, and re-recorded June 4, 1903. At the trial, in addition to the documentary evidence introduced to support the abstract of title, the plaintiff introduced the affidavits of various witnesses who testified, in substance, that the original f. fa. in favor of Priester against Bloodworth was lost, that diligent search had been made for it, and that it could not be found. It also appeared that the land in dispute was wild land, and that no one had been in actual possession of it for 10 years. The defendants introduced in evidence a deed from Bloodworth to Weems, dated February 13, 1855, three years prior to the rendition of the judgment in favor of Priester against Bloodworth, and recorded April 1, 1902. The bill of exceptions recites that "this deed was offered by the defendants with the statement that defendants claimed under it, and it was relied upon as showing title out of plaintiff's predecessor in title." It also recites that "after argument the court announced his decision that the plaintiff did not show perfect title, because of the fact that plaintiff failed to produce or prove the record of the f. fa. in favor of James W. Priester against S. W. Bloodworth, on which was based the sheriff's deed from Dunn to Sears relied upon by plaintiff as part of his title, and upon this express ground the court therefore ruled that plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction prayed for." To this ruling the plaintiff excepted.

It is well settled by the decisions of this court that the "perfect title" required by the Civil Code of 1895, § 4927, to warrant the grant of an injunction against the cutting of timber, in the absence of an allegation of insolvency or that the threatened damages will be irreparable, "must be a duly executed paper title, the exhibition of which will show both the 'right of possession' and the 'right of property' in the plaintiff. A paper title not meeting these requirements, or a title resting in parol, will not bring an injunction case within the provisions of this section." Wilcox Lumber Co. v. Bullock, 109 Ga. 532, 35 S. E. 52. See, also, Camp v. Dixon, 111 Ga. 674, 36 S. E. 878, where the subject is fully discussed; Dixon v. Monroe, 112 Ga. 158, 37 S. E. 180; Jenkins v. Carmen, 112 Ga. 476, 37 S. E. 719; Morgan v. Baxter, 113 Ga. 144, 38 S. E. 411. In the present case the absence of documentary proof of the existence or record of the execution in favor of Priester against Bloodworth constituted a break in the plaintiff's chain of title which was fatal to his right to an injunction under the Code section cited. The execution was necessary to give the sheriff the right to sell the property, and, as we have seen, parol proof of its existence will not suffice to make out the kind of title necessary to afford the plaintiff the remedy he seeks, in the absence of an allegation of insolvency or of irreparable damages. It must be borne in mind that the relative merits of the claim of title set up by the plaintiff and that made by the defendants is not involved in this decision. The question before us is one not of title, so much as procedure, and the title to the property in dispute is involved only to the extent that it is necessary to show the plaintiff's right to the relief he seeks. As we have shown, the title set up by him rested partly in parol, and the court below was clearly right in denying the injunction sought.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(119 Ga. 970)

COOPER v. LAZARUS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

APPEAL AND ERROR—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—FILING—DISMISSAL.

1. There is upon the bill of exceptions no entry showing that the same was ever filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court. The clerk certifies that he has no recollection that the paper was filed in his office within the time required by law. A mandamus proceeding was instituted in the trial court against the clerk to compel him to indorse an entry of filing upon the paper, showing that it was filed within due time, and final judgment has been rendered in such proceeding in favor of the clerk. The case was called in the Supreme Court for final disposition at a time to which it had been regularly postponed under the law, and it was held that the writ of error must be dismissed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Action between John R. Cooper, as receiver, and Rosalie Lazarus. There was judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Writ dismissed.

Steed & Ryals, Hardeman, Davis, Turner & Jones, and Ross & Grace, for plaintiff in error. Jno. R. L. Smith, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. The bill of exceptions was certified on June 13, 1903. It was filed in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court on August 5th, and was placed on the docket of the October term. No entry of filing in the office of the clerk of the superior court appears on the bill of exceptions. The clerk certifies that he cannot recall ever having heard of the bill of exceptions until the 29th day of July, when it was found in his office among the papers in the case, with no backing to indicate what it was, and nothing to show that it had ever been filed in his office. On August 10th the plaintiff in error made an application to this court for a mandamus against the clerk to compel him to mark the bill of exceptions filed as of June 15th, it being alleged that it was actually filed on that date. Upon this application a mandamus nisi was issued against the clerk, returnable to the October term. The clerk filed an answer, in which he denied that the bill of exceptions was filed on the date above mentioned, or on any other date within the time allowed by law for the filing of the same. The ruling of the court on this application is contained in the headnotes in Cooper v. Nisbet, 118 Ga. 872, 45 S. E. 692, and need not be repeated here. In accordance with the ruling then made, an order was passed on October 31st dismissing the application for mandamus, and directing the clerk of this court to transmit to the superior court of Bibb county the original bill of exceptions, in order that such appropriate proceedings might be had in that court as would be necessary to relieve the defects. At the conclusion of this order appeared the following: "It is further ordered that said bill of exceptions be returned to this court before the last day of the present term, or in default thereof the writ of error will be dismissed." On October 5th a motion to dismiss the writ of error on the ground that the bill of exceptions had never been filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court was filed by the defendant in error. When the case was reached on the call of the Macon circuit, it was postponed until a later day in the term, and finally passed to the heel of the docket. Being thus placed among the cases in which oral argument could not be heard during the October term, it was heard by briefs both on the merits and on the motion to dismiss; such briefs being filed at the time required by the order of the court usually passed in reference to such cases. Thereafter, during the October term, application was made to strike from the order passed on October 31st the words above quoted, which provided that, unless the bill of exceptions was returned to this court before the last day of the October term, the writ of error would be dismissed; it being alleged that the mandamus proceedings were still pending against the clerk in the superior court; that a trial had been had resulting in a verdict in favor of the clerk; that a new trial had been granted; that a second trial had been had, which also resulted in a verdict in favor of the clerk; that the judge had overruled a motion for a new trial; that the mandamus case was then pending in the Supreme Court on a bill of exceptions assigning error upon the refusal of the judge to grant a new trial; and that such mandamus case would not probably be disposed of before the adjournment of the October term. Upon the hearing of this application, an order was passed striking from the order of October 31st the words referred to, and it was further ordered that, as briefs had been duly filed in the case, the same should stand upon the docket until the further order of the court; it being distinctly provided in the order that nothing therein should prejudice the right of the defendant in error to move at the succeeding term, or thereafter, to strike the case from the docket, nor the right of the plaintiff in error to make such motion in reference to the case as the court might have authority to entertain, in the event the plaintiff in error is finally successful in the mandamus proceeding against the clerk of the superior court. Argument on the mandamus case was, by special order, heard during the October term, but the case was not decided during that term. Such was the status of the matter when the court finally adjourned for the October term. On March 20th the judgment in the mandamus case was affirmed. Cooper v. Nisbet, 118 Ga. 872, 45 S. E. 692. And when the cases which had been passed to the heel of the docket of the October term were called for reargument during the March term, as provided in the order above referred to, the case was again submitted to the court upon the briefs filed; the defendant in error still insisting upon her motion to dismiss.

It not appearing that the bill of exceptions had been filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court within the time required by law, and it being shown that the plaintiff in error had failed in the mandamus proceeding against the clerk to require an entry of filing to be placed upon the bill of exceptions, the writ of error must be dismissed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 67)

McINTYRE v. McINTYRE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

WILLS—PROBATE—CANCELLATION—EVIDENCE— MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—EXERCISE OF DISCRETION.

1. Where a first application for a new trial is made on discretionary grounds, the trial judge must exercise his discretion in approval or disapproval of the verdict.

The order overruling the motion for a new trial in this case showing on its face that the judge did not exercise the discretion which the law vested in him, a new trial must result, unless the evidence demanded the verdict.

This is true though the failure of the judge to exercise his discretion was not made the subject of a special exception.

2. Where a paper found among a decedent's papers is offered for probate as a will, and appears to have been canceled or obliterated in a material part, a presumption arises that the cancellations or obliterations were made by the deceased, and that he intended them to operate as a revocation.

3. The rule of the English courts that cancellations with a lead pencil are presumed to have been deliberative, and not final, has not been generally adopted by the American courts.

4. The rule of presumption above stated applies where the cancellations are made with a pencil, but the fact that they are so made may be considered by the jury, with other evidence, in determining whether the presumption of revocation has been rebutted.

5. Joint operation of act and intention is necessary to revoke a will.

6. Where an act is done by the testator which may or may not amount to revocation, revocation will not result if it appears that the act was dependent upon the efficacy of another act, such as the making of a new will, and that the testator did not intend to revoke his will unless the other act was consummated.

7. But where the will is completely revoked, the failure of another contemplated act cannot revive it.

8. The evidence did not demand the verdict rendered. The charge of the court was in the main correct, but in some respects not altogether accurate. The propounder was not an incompetent witness for the reason assigned in the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Pope Barrow, Judge.

Proceedings by D. B. McIntyre for the probate of the will of Edward McIntyre, deceased, to which W. R. McIntyre filed a caveat. The will was admitted to probate, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, caveator brings error. Reversed.

Osborne & Lawrence, for plaintiff in error. Adams & Adams, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. A paper alleged to be the last will and testament of Edward McIntyre was propounded for probate. A son of the deceased filed a caveat on the ground that the paper, though once a will, had been revoked by cancellation and obliteration. The finding of the ordinary was in favor of the caveator, and the propounder appealed to the superior court, where a verdict and judgment were rendered setting up the paper offered for probate as the will of the deceased. A motion for a new trial was filed by the caveator, and on the hearing the following order was passed: "In this case it appeared to me at the trial that the evidence inclined against the will, but the jury are the sole and exclusive judges of all questions of fact, and I have no more right to require them to take the facts of the case from the court than they have to require me to take the law from them. Upon this branch of the motion, therefore, I think it would be a usurpation of power to interfere with the verdict upon the ground that the evidence did not authorize it, for the reason that there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict." The order then recited that no error of law was committed, and that a new trial would not be granted. The caveator excepted.

1. The application was for a first new trial, and was based partly upon discretionary grounds; that is, that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and decidedly and strongly against the weight of the evidence. The order indicates that the trial judge did not exercise the discretion which the law contemplates he shall exercise in every such case where the evidence is conflicting. The order is very similar in verbiage to that passed in Thompson v. Warren, 118 Ga. 644, 45 S. E. 912, where a new trial was ordered by this court solely on the ground that the trial judge had not exercised any discretion with reference to the approval or disapproval of the verdict. It is contended that Thompson v. Warren is not controlling, because in that case there was a special exception raising the point upon which the decision was made, whereas there is no such exception in the present case. We do not think this a valid distinction, or that it was necessary to do more than file a general exception to the overruling of the motion. It is to be noted that in neither of the somewhat analogous cases of Rogers v. State, 101 Ga. 561, 28 S. E. 978, and Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Harden, 118 Ga. 453, 38 S. E. 949, both of which are cited in Thompson v. Warren, was there any special exception. The judgment must be reversed on this ground, irrespective of others, unless, as contended, the verdict was demanded by the evidence.

2. The paper offered for probate had been duly and legally executed as a will. Some time after its execution the testator drew pencil lines through certain portions of the will, and also caused slips of blank paper to be pasted over certain clauses in the will, through which pencil lines appear to have been previously drawn. The lines were lightly drawn, and left the writing perfectly legible. The will purported to have been executed in Effingham county, and a line was drawn through the word "Effingham," and the word "Chatham" written in pencil to the left. The abbreviation "Edwd." in the name of the testator was canceled in the same way, and the full name, "Edward," written above it. The remainder of the formal part of the will was left intact. Pencil lines were then drawn through 9 or 10 lines making bequests to testator's wife and son, and over some of these lines a blank slip was pasted. The 14 lines following were unaltered; these describing certain real estate and personal property, and stating that they were given to —, a blank slip being pasted over the name of the beneficiary. On this slip was written, "leave two lines," and diagonally to the right and above the slip was written "2 blank lines." The clause following was dealt with in the same way, the name of the beneficiary being covered with a slip of paper on which was written "3 lines." No slip was pasted over the name of the beneficiary of the property described in the next clause, but pencil lines were drawn through it, and the words "2 blank lines" written in pencil to the right. Pencil lines were drawn through the next clause, disposing of a share of stock in a corporation to testator's grandson. The following clauses, providing for the payment of debts, making disposition of cemetery lots, nominating testator's wife as executrix, and conferring upon her certain powers, were left intact. The date upon which the will appeared to have been executed was canceled with pencil lines, and the words "two (2) blank lines" written to the left. Pencil lines were also drawn through testator's signature and through the signatures of the witnesses, and the names of three other persons written to the left.

As a general rule, the burden is on a person attacking a paper offered for probate as a will to sustain the grounds of his attack. But by express provision of our statute, where a will has been canceled or obliterated in a material part, a presumption of revocation arises, and the burden is on the propounder to show that no revocation was intended. Civ. Code 1895, § 3343. See, also, Howard v. Hunter, 115 Ga. 358, 41 S. E. 638, 90 Am. St. Rep. 121; Cutler v. Cutler (N. C.) 40 S. E. 689, 89 Am. St. Rep. 854, 57 L. R. A. 209. How far the cancellation or obliteration must extend before this presumption will arise, is not settled. See Malone's Adm'r v. Hobbs (Va.) 39 Am. Dec. 266. Where the paper is found among the testator's effects, there is also a presumption that he made the cancellations or obliterations. See cases cited in note to Graham v. Burch, 28 Am. St. Rep. 351. The presumption that revocation was intended will certainly arise where the testator draws lines through, and pastes slips of paper over, clauses of the will disposing of portions of his property, and also draws lines through his signature and those of the subscribing witnesses. It having been shown that the paper offered for probate in this case had been in the custody of the deceased up to the time of his death, the propounder was met with both of the presumptions above alluded to.

3, 4. There are cases, chiefly English, holding that a cancellation with a pencil is presumptively deliberative, and not final, and no presumption of revocation arises from such cancellations. See 2 Green. Evid. (16th Ed.) § 681, p. 626, note 12; Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. Jr. 348, and cases cited in footnote "a." The American cases generally do not adopt this rule. Townshend v. Howard, 86 Me. 285, 29 Atl. 1077; Woodfill v. Patton, 76 Ind. 575, 40 Am. Rep. 269; Gardner on Wills, § 81, p. 258. Mr. Underhill characterizes the English rule as absurd, and says that "the true rule is that the cancellation of a will in lead pencil is only one fact to be considered in determining the effect of the cancellation, and the intention with which it was made. Where a will is produced with lead-pencil cancellations, it will be presumed that they were done by the testator animo revocandi; and it is upon the party claiming that they were deliberative, and not final, to establish that fact." 1 Under. on Wills, § 230. This statement of the law expresses our views.

5. Joint operation of act and intention is necessary to revoke a will. Howard v. Hunter, supra. As aptly and concisely expressed by James, L. J., in Cheese v. Lovejoy, 2 P. D. 251-253: "All the destroying in the world, without intention, will not revoke a will; nor all the intention in the world, without destroying. There must be the two." Here we have certainly the act, and an act of such a character as to give rise to a presumption of intention to revoke. It is contended that the evidence demanded a finding that this presumption had been rebutted, but this contention, as we shall presently show, cannot be sustained.

6, 7. Reference is made in the brief of counsel for the defendant in error to what is known as the "doctrine of dependent relative revocation." Under the operation of this doctrine, it has been held that if a testator cancel or destroy a will, with a present intention to make a new will as a substitute for the old, and the new will is not made, or, if made, fails of effect for some reason, it will be presumed that the testator preferred the old will to an intestacy, and this testament will be given effect. We believe this doctrine to be sound, when properly understood and properly qualified. It is a doctrine of presumed intention, and has grown up as a result of an effort which courts always make to arrive at the real intention of the testator. Some of the cases appear to go to extreme lengths in the application of this doctrine, and seem to defeat the very intention at which they were seeking to arrive. The doctrine, as we understand it and are willing to apply it, is this: The mere fact that the testator intended to make a new will, or made one which failed of effect, will not alone, in every case, prevent a cancellation or obliteration of a will from operating as a revocation. If it is clear that the cancellation and the making of the new will were parts of one scheme, and the revocation of the old will was so related to the making of the new as to be dependent upon it, then, if the new will be not made, or, if made, is invalid, the old will, though canceled, should be given effect, if its contents can be ascertained in any legal way. But if the old will is once revoked—if the act of revocation is completed—as if the will be totally destroyed by burning, and the like, or if any other act is done which evidences an unmistakable intention to revoke, though the will be not totally destroyed, the fact that the testator intended to make a new will, or made one which cannot take effect, counts for nothing. In other words, evidence that the testator intended to make or did actually make a new will, which was inoperative, may throw light on the question of intention to revoke the old one, but it can never revive a will once completely revoked. See, on the subject, Page on Wills, § 276; Schoul. on Wills (3d Ed.) § 398; Pritch. on Wills, § 272; 1 Woer. Am. Law Adm. (2d Ed.) § 48, *90, 91; Semmes v. Semmes, 7 Har. & J. 388; Banks

v. Banks, 65 Mo. 432; Hairston v. Hairston, 36 Miss. 276; Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205, 42 Am. Rep. 363; Gardiner v. Gardiner (N. H.) 19 Atl. 651, 8 L. R. A. 383; Will of Penniman (Minn.) 18 Am. Rep. 375; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & McC. 272, 10 Am. Dec. 601; In re Olmsted's Estate (Cal.) 54 Pac. 745, 747; Thomas v. Thomas (Minn.) 79 N. W. 104, 77 Am. St. Rep. 639; Townshend v. Howard (Me.) 20 A. 1077; notes to Graham v. Burch, 28 Am. St. Rep. 345. Applying what has been said to the facts of the present case, the following result is reached: There was evidence from which the jury could have found that, when the testator canceled the old will, he intended to make a new one. The canceled paper itself bore evidence of such an intention. If this was his intention, and he did not intend for the cancellation to operate as a revocation unless the new will was made, then the finding ought to be in favor of the propounder. On the other hand, there was evidence from which a jury could find that the cancellation was intended to operate as a revocation, and, if this is the truth, the finding ought to be against the will, notwithstanding it may appear that the testator contemplated the making of another will. These are questions for the jury to decide. The matter finally turns upon the intention of the testator, and no mere presumption can be allowed to defeat this intention when it has been made to appear.

8. The evidence did not demand the verdict rendered. A witness for the caveator testified that he was present in the room during the last illness of the deceased, and that he said to his son, the caveator: "Willie, I have left a pencil memorandum of a will. It is not a will. I was not able to finish [or complete] it, but I call upon Willie to carry out the provisions of this pencil memorandum." The witness testified positively and unequivocally that this was the exact language of the deceased. Where the issue is revocavit vel non, the declarations of the testator are, in this state, admissible, "although made at any time between the making of the will and the death of the testator." Patterson v. Hickey, 32 Ga. 156. The reply made by the propounder to this evidence is that, while admissible, it is of slight evidentiary value, and counts for nothing when weighed against the other evidence that the testator did not intend a revocation, and that, properly construed, the declaration itself really shows that the testator regarded the paper as his will. We have been unable to take this view of the matter. The evidence is of an explicit declaration by the testator that the paper was not his will, but contained only memoranda for a will. The request to the son was to carry out the provisions of memoranda, and not of a will. If not his will, it must have been revoked, for it was once a will. The preponderance of the evidence may have been to the effect that the testator did not intend a revocation, but it cannot be said that there was no evidence to the contrary.

We send the case back, that it may be retried in accordance with the views herein expressed. The motion for a new trial contains several grounds, but most of them are covered in the foregoing discussion. One ground complains that the court allowed Mrs. McIntyre, widow of the deceased, and propounder of the will, to testify; the objection being that she was "interested in the result of the suit." Since the passage of the evidence act of 1866 and its amendments, interest does not disqualify a witness, but goes merely to his credit. Error is not assigned upon any portion of the testimony of Mrs. McIntyre, nor is it contended that she is disqualified as a witness under any of the provisions of the act of 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 85; Civ. Code 1895, § 5269); the sole objection being that she is interested. As to her competency to testify to transactions and communications between herself and the deceased, see Buchannan v. Buchannan, 103 Ga. 90, 20 S. E. 608 (1). The charge of the judge was, in the main, fair and accurate. The instruction on the subject of the burden of proof was, however, not altogether accurate.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 174)

FINCH v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS — ILLEGAL SALE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Evidence that a fluid sold by the accused was red in color, looked like liquor, burnt like liquor, and had an effect like cheap whisky or beer, is sufficient to authorize his conviction under an indictment charging him with having sold spirituous and malt liquors and intoxicating bitters without having registered as a dealer therein; it appearing that the accused had not so registered.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Statesboro; J. F. Brannen, Judge.

W. S. Finch was convicted of selling intoxicating liquors without having registered his name as a dealer, and brings error. Affirmed.

Tyler & Anderson and H. B. Strange, for plaintiff in error. Howell Cone, Sol., and B. T. Rawlings, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. The indictment charged the accused with having sold spirituous and malt liquors and intoxicating bitters without having registered his name as a dealer. His motion for a new trial was based upon the general grounds only, and, having been overruled, he excepted.

There was but one witness in the case, and his testimony was, in substance, as follows: "I bought something from Mr. Finch in the fall of 1901. It was a pint flask, with something red in it. I paid him forty cents for it. I don't know what it was. The bottle never had any label on it. I took three drinks of it. I can't say it was whisky. I don't know what it was. I called for something to drink, and he gave me the stuff I bought." On cross-examination the witness testified that, if what he bought was whisky, it was the poorest grade he ever drank; that it was not gin, nor rum, nor beer, and it was not bitter; that it was red, and had a burning effect like a cheap grade of whisky; that it had a similar effect to liquor, looked like whisky, and had an effect something like beer; that it was not as strong as good whisky; had an effect about like cheap whisky, rum, or gin; that it was stronger and burnt more than beer. While not sufficient to show what particular kind of liquor the accused sold, this evidence was, we think, sufficient to show that the witness bought from him some kind of liquor, probably whisky. The jury could read between the lines. They could see that the witness was making a palpable effort to dodge, and the testimony makes the same impression upon our minds that it did upon theirs—that the accused was guilty. It was not necessary to show what particular kind of liquor he sold, because, if he sold any liquor of the kind described in the indictment, he was guilty of the offense charged. The evidence was sufficient to show that the liquor was spirituous. It was red, looked like whisky, burnt like liquor, and had an effect like cheap whisky or beer. We think the jury were warranted in inferring from these circumstances that it was whisky, or some other spirituous liquor.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 180)

ADDIS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The charge complained of, when taken in connection with the general charge, was not erroneous. The evidence authorized the verdict, and there was no error in refusing to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Rabun County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

John Addis was convicted of hog stealing, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. R. Grant and Hubert Estes, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Charters, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. The accused was convicted of hog stealing. He assigns error upon the refusal of the court to grant him a new trial. Complaint is made of the following charge: "You take this case, gentlemen of the jury, and determine what the truth is. If the defendant is guilty, and you are satisfied of it to the extent I have charged you, it would be your duty to convict him. If so, just say, 'We, the jury, find the defendant guilty.'" The criticism upon the charge is that the court should never instruct the jury that it was their duty to render a given verdict, and that the last sentence, being a complete sentence in itself, was an expression of opinion by the court on the evidence, and was equivalent to instructing a verdict of guilty.

We do not think the charge subject to the criticism made upon it. The judge had fully charged the jury as to the law of reasonable doubt, and also the rules to be followed in determining cases of circumstantial evidence; and if the jury, from the evidence, were satisfied, to the extent that he had charged them—that is, beyond a reasonable doubt—that the accused was guilty, it was their duty under the law to convict him, and there was no error in instructing them to this effect. Properly construed, there was nothing in the charge complained of which contained an expression of opinion, or which constrained the jury to find any other way than according to the evidence as it appeared to them. The circumstances proved were of such a character as to authorize a finding that the accused stole the hog, and we see no reason for reversing the judgment refusing a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 50)

GOULD v. GLASS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—GIFT TO WIFE—PRESUMPTIONS—REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS—PLEADING—FRAUD—INJUNCTION AGAINST EXECUTOR—MISMANAGEMENT OF ESTATE—PETITION.

1. A husband conveyed land to a creditor of his wife to secure the payment of a debt. Upon the payment of the debt the creditor executed a deed to the land to the husband and wife as tenants in common, such deed being duly recorded. About six years after the record of the deed the husband and wife united in a deed as tenants in common, conveying a portion of the land, and, simultaneously with the execution of this deed, the purchaser executed to the husband and wife, jointly, a mortgage to secure the purchase money. Held, that a presumption arose that the husband intended to give to his wife a half interest in the mortgage.

2. The presumption of a gift, arising from the act of the husband in allowing title to property owned by him to be taken in the name of his wife, may be repelled by evidence showing that the husband thereafter exercised acts of dominion over the property of such a character as were inconsistent with ownership by the wife. Acts of the wife apparently recognizing ownership in the husband are proper matters for consideration in determining whether there has been an acceptance of the gift.

3. A petition praying for the equitable remedy of reformation upon the ground of mistake is insufficient if it contains only general allegations of mistake, and does not state how the mistake was made, whose mistake it was, or what brought it about.

4. Mere general allegations of fraud are not sufficient to authorize the granting of equitable relief.

5. As a general rule, equity will not decree the reformation of an instrument at the instance of one who is a mere volunteer, and who was not a party to the instrument.

6. A court of equity will not, as a general rule, require an executor to give bond for the faithful management of the estate, or, upon refusal to do so, grant an injunction against the executor to prevent him from administering the estate, in the absence of an unequivocal allegation that the executor is insolvent; and this is so though there may be general allegations of mismanagement.

7. A petition against an executor which alleges in general terms mismanagement and threats to misappropriate the funds of the estate, and does not allege any specific act of mismanagement, or show any indebtedness to the estate on account of such acts, and does not pray for discovery, should be dismissed on demurrer.

8. A judgment disallowing an amendment to a petition, which, if allowed, would not have cured fatal defects in the petition, objection to which had been raised by demurrer, will not be reversed, although the allowance of the amendment might not have been erroneous.

9. Whether the allegations of the original petition and those of the amendments which were allowed be considered alone, or in connection with the averments of the amendment which was disallowed, the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for, and the judgment dismissing the petition will not be reversed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

Action by Carrie L. Gould against Ellen Teynac, as executrix of the estate of John F. Teynac, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brought error, pending which defendant died, and her executors, Ralph H. Glass and another, were substituted as defendants in error. Affirmed.

On May 14, 1900, Carrie L. Gould filed a petition which alleged, in substance, as follows: On February 20, 1847, John F. Teynac acquired title to a certain described tract of land, containing 28 acres, in Chatham county, Ga. On August 12, 1878, John F. Teynac conveyed to Ellen Teynac, as trustee for Carrie L. Glass, the plaintiff (she having since intermarried with Gould), for life, with remainder to her children, a portion of this property. Plaintiff is the daughter of Ellen Teynac, who is the widow of John F. Teynac, and petitioner's first husband, John F. Glass, was a nephew of John F. Teynac. On February 24, 1865, John F. Teynac borrowed from the Working Men's Mutual Loan Association $1,000, and, to secure the payment of the same, executed a deed to the remainder of the property above referred to, which he then owned. This loan was afterwards paid, and the premises reconveyed to John F. Teynac. On August 31, 1877, John F. Teynac borrowed from the Railroad Mutual Loan Association $1,000. The note for this sum was signed by Ellen Teynac, and from the books of the association the loan appeared to have been made to her. The deed made to the association to secure this loan was signed both by John F. Teynac and Ellen Teynac, and upon this deed was a consent to the execution of the same by Ellen Teynac, as the wife of John F. Teynac. The association gave to Ellen Teynac a bond to reconvey the premises upon payment of the loan. At the time this transaction took place Ellen Teynac did not own the land conveyed to the association, or any part of it. It is averred that for this reason the bond to reconvey to her was of no force and effect. When the loan was made, on August 20, 1883, the association conveyed the land to John F. Teynac and Ellen Teynac. It is alleged that this "was a mistake of parties which operates as a gross injustice to the said John F. Teynac and to his estate, and gives an unconscientious advantage to said Ellen Teynac." Plaintiff did not know, until some time after the death of John F. Teynac, that Ellen Teynac claimed any interest in the land. On January 9, 1890, John F. Teynac sold to the Oglethorpe Real Estate Company all of the property above mentioned which he then owned, and three acres, known as the "Teynac Reservation," on which he lived and died. The purchaser of this property required the deed of conveyance to be signed both by John F. Teynac and Ellen Teynac, and also executed to both of them a mortgage on the property purchased, to secure an unpaid balance of the purchase money. This is alleged to have been a mistake of the same character as that above referred to. John F. Teynac died in 1892, leaving a will in which he gave all of his property to his wife for life, with remainder to plaintiff. Ellen Teynac qualified as executrix of the will, and took possession of the estate. She now claims that the land conveyed to the Railroad Association as security, and reconveyed by it to her and her husband, was owned by them jointly in his lifetime, and sets up a claim to a one-half interest in this property, adversely to her holding as executrix, and in contravention of her duties as such, notwithstanding that she knows full well that the entire title, interest, and ownership was vested in John F. Teynac up to the date of his death. On November 26, 1890, John F. Teynac gave a deed to part of the three acres known as the "Teynac Reservation" to secure a loan of $1,000 from the Excelsior Loan & Savings Company, which gave him a bond to reconvey upon payment of the debt. This debt was paid by Ellen Teynac, as executrix, after John F. Teynac's death, and the security deed canceled. On April 7, 1891, John F. Teynac borrowed $600, and secured its repayment by a deed to another part of the Teynac reservation. This loan was also repaid, and the deed canceled, after John F. Teynac's death. The status of the title to these three acres and to the other portion of the property is exactly the same, both being in John F. Teynac alone, and belonging to his estate, and Ellen Teynac is es-stopped from asserting title to any portion of it to be in herself as an individual. It is alleged that it is inequitable, unjust, and contrary to good conscience for the mistake resulting from the reconveyance by the Railroad Association to Ellen Teynac to have the effect of vesting her with title to any portion of the property, she having no interest in it at the time the reconveyance was made. John F. Teynac was a child so far as business matters were concerned, and allowed his wife to manage his business for him, and he knew nothing of the legal effect of the reconveyance by the Railroad Association or the subsequent joint deed and mortgage from the Oglethorpe Real Estate Company. These conveyances were a part of a scheme on the part of Ellen Teynac to defraud plaintiff out of her remainder interest in all of the property of John F. Teynac. Carrying out her scheme to defraud plaintiff out of her remainder interest, Ellen Teynac, through misrepresentations, induced plaintiff to sign a deed to all of her interest to Ellen Teynac in 1898, under the pretense of its being a reconveyance under a former agreement between plaintiff and Ellen Teynac, which deed was afterwards canceled. She took advantage of the confidence reposed in her by John F. Teynac to gain an unconscionable advantage over him as to the claim to be a joint owner of the land and its proceeds. She abused his confidence and betrayed the trust he reposed in her by concealing from him the fact that her name was inserted as grantee in the deeds. Ellen Teynac never asserted any claim to any of the property until after the death of John F. Teynac. Notwithstanding Ellen Teynac receipted the Oglethorpe Real Estate Company as executrix for $20,000, paid on the purchase price of the land sold it by John F. Teynac, she now contends that half of it belonged to her individually before the death of John F. Teynac. It is alleged that she is estopped to deny that this money belongs to the estate of her husband. It is alleged that, unless prevented, Ellen Teynac will squander and make use of one half of this $20,000, and will waste and misapply the other half. She has threatened plaintiff with the destruction of the entire estate, to prevent her from marrying her present husband. The plaintiff waives discovery, and prays as follows: That the deed of reconveyance from the Railroad Association to Ellen Teynac and John F. Teynac be reformed by striking the name of Ellen Teynac as grantee, and that all other papers which purport to give to or recognize in Ellen Teynac any interest in any of the property be likewise reformed; that by decree the estate of John F. Teynac be declared to be the owner of the land which is unsold, and of the proceeds of that which was sold, so that plaintiff as remainderman may come into and enjoy, at the death of Ellen Teynac, what she is lawfully entitled to under the will of John F. Teynac; that Ellen Teynac be required to give bond to preserve and protect the estate, and, on failure to give bond, be enjoined from disposing of any of the corpus of the estate during her lifetime, and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the property of the estate, and manage it, in order to prevent the waste and destruction which she has threatened; that plaintiff have a decree for the value of the property already wasted or misappropriated, if such should be found to have been done; for general relief and process.

¶ 5. See Reformation of Instruments, vol. 42, Cent. Dig. § 91.

By amendments to the petition the various papers referred to therein were attached as exhibits. Among the exhibits was a paper showing that Ellen Teynac transferred to the Railroad Association five shares of stock therein owned by her to secure the loan of $1,000 above referred to. General and special demurrers were filed by the defendant, and these were sustained. The plaintiff excepted to this judgment, and also to the refusal to allow an amendment to her petition, an abstract of which is as follows: The amendment reiterated the allegations of the original petition in reference to the Teynac reservation, and in reference to the time when Ellen Teynac first claimed to own an interest in the property during the lifetime of John F. Teynac. It then set forth: The will of John F. Teynac gave to Ellen Teynac all of his property, in trust for her use for life, with remainder to plaintiff, and empowered Ellen Teynac, as executrix, to sell the whole or any part of the estate, the proceeds to be reinvested and held under the trusts and uses mentioned. On March 7, 1892, Ellen Teynac qualified as executrix, and as such has assented to the legacy and devise to plaintiff. On March 15, 1894, the executrix received from the Oglethorpe Real Estate Company the sum of $1,000 as a part of the property of the estate, and likewise has collected from that company various other sums from 1894 to 1899, all aggregating between nineteen and twenty thousand dollars. These sums of money have not been invested by the executrix as required by the will. The executrix is wasting and mismanaging the estate, and has threatened to squander and waste the money, and to dispose of the Teynac reservation and squander the proceeds thereof. In 1892 the executrix returned the property of the estate for taxes at a valuation, $9,500 for land and $10,000 for personal property, and in 1900 the land was returned at only $5,000, no personal property being returned. This difference in value is caused by the waste and mismanagement of the executrix, and is part of an effort of the executrix to conceal from plaintiff the assets of the estate, so that they will not be forthcoming at her death. Unless Ellen Teynac be restrained from her waste and mismanagement, and from disposing of the estate, as she has threatened to do, the injury will be irreparable. Plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, and Ellen Teynac is not worth the value of the estate, to wit, about the sum of $30,000 at the time of the death of John F. Teynac. The prayers are that the sum of $20,000 possessed by John F. Teynac at the time of his death be declared to be a part of the estate; that the portion of the Teynac reservation remaining unsold be declared to be a part of the estate; that the executrix be required to state in full all the property of the estate, that the same may be ascertained and preserved; that the deed of reconveyance from the Railroad Association be declared to vest the title of the land therein described in John F. Teynac alone; that an accounting be had with Ellen Teynac as executrix and as trustee under the will.

Pending the case in this court Ellen Teynac died, and her executors were made parties defendant in error in her stead.

Jno. S. Schley, R. R. Richards, and Edward S. Elliott, for plaintiff in error. W. H. McLaws and Saussy & Saussy, for defendants in error.

CORB, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). 1. John F. Teynac had property, and married a widow, who had a daughter. The controversy is between mother and daughter over the property of the husband and stepfather, now deceased. Under his will the mother is entitled to a life estate in all of his property, and the daughter to an estate in remainder. The mother claims that a portion of the property passed to her during the lifetime of her husband, and that the daughter has no interest therein. The daughter denies this claim, and avers that the property is the property of the estate of her stepfather, and that she has an estate in remainder therein. The controversy had its origin in a transaction which took place on August 31, 1877, when Ellen Teynac and her husband, John F. Teynac, united in a deed to a loan association to a tract of land referred to in the statement of facts. The transaction was peculiar in more than one particular. The loan was made to Ellen Teynac. She signed the note, and transferred stock in the association, owned by her, as security for its payment. As additional security, land owned by John F. Teynac was conveyed to the association, the deed reciting that it was conveyed to secure a debt under the act of 1871 authorizing titles to be conveyed as security for debts. The deed was signed both by Ellen Teynac and John F. Teynac in the order named, and attached to the deed was a written consent by Ellen Teynac that her husband should make the deed. The law of force at that time required that a wife's consent should be obtained to a conveyance by her husband of his property to secure his debt, but there has never been any law which required a wife's consent to a conveyance by her husband of his property to secure her debt. While the transaction had these peculiarities about it, it was up to this point nothing more or less than the husband pledging his property to secure the wife's debt, which, of course, he had a right to do as against every one, even his own creditors, if he was solvent. The bond to reconvey which was given by the association was made to Ellen Teynac, wife of John F. Teynac, and provided that, upon payment of the debt by Ellen Teynac, the association would reconvey the property to her "or to whomsoever she may elect." When the debt was paid, the association executed a deed releasing, quitclaiming, and reconveying the property to Ellen Teynac and John F. Teynac. This deed was dated August 20, 1883, was filed for record February 19, 1884, and recorded February 26, 1884. The land described in this deed embraced both what is called the "Teynac Reservation" and the lots sold to the Oglethorpe Real Estate Company. The latter, for convenience, will be hereafter referred to as the Oglethorpe land. As the two pieces stand upon a somewhat different footing, we will first deal with the question as to the status of the Oglethorpe land. Prior to the transaction with the association, the legal title to all of the land was in John F. Teynac. Under his deed the legal title passed to the association, but he was still the owner of the equity of redemption, and, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, the law would revert in him the title to the property upon payment of the debt either by himself or by his wife. The express undertaking, however, of the association was to convey the property, upon payment of the debt, either to Ellen Teynac or to some one whom she should select. John F. Teynac would not be bound by this unless he consented to it, and a conveyance by the association to any one other than John F. Teynac of any interest in the property would be unauthorized, in the absence of a consent or direction on the part of John F. Teynac to that effect. It would seem, from the terms of the deed executed by the association, that Ellen Teynac had elected that the land should be conveyed to John F. Teynac and herself as tenants in common. This would be the legal effect of the paper, provided Ellen Teynac had a right to direct how the deed should be made. The deed was recorded within the time allowed under the existing law for the record of such a deed, and about six years thereafter John F. Teynac and Ellen Teynac united in a deed conveying the Oglethorpe land as tenants in common, and, simultaneously with the execution of the deed, the purchaser gave to John F. Teynac and Ellen Teynac a mortgage to secure the purchase money. These facts are sufficient to raise a presumption of a gift by the husband to the wife to an undivided one-half interest in the mortgage, even if the presumption as to a gift of a one-half interest in the land did not arise prior to the sale and the mortgage. The general rule is that when a husband conveys property to his wife, or directs or permits the title to be taken in the name of his wife to property purchased with his money, or to which he would have a right to demand that title be made to him, the law raises a presumption of a gift, and this presumption remains until it is shown affirmatively that there was no intention to give on the part of the husband. See Deming v. Williams, 26 Conn. 228, 68 Am. Dec. 386; Thorn. on Gifts, §§ 245, 246. There is absolutely no averment in the petition or its amendments, or even in the amendment which was disallowed, of any fact which would authorize a jury to find that the presumption of a gift arising from the facts above enumerated had been rebutted.

2. The status of the Teynac reservation is materially different from that of the Oglethorpe land. It does not appear that John F. Teynac ever did any express act, with reference to this property, like uniting in a conveyance recognizing that Ellen Teynac was interested therein. On the contrary, it is distinctly alleged that, after the conveyance of the Oglethorpe land, John F. Teynac conveyed on two occasions, by a deed signed by him alone, certain portions of the Teynac reservation to secure his debts. While, as stated above, the general rule is that, when a husband allows title to his property to vest in his wife, there is a presumption of a gift, still this is not a conclusive presumption, and the husband is permitted to repel it. See Thorn. on Gifts, § 245. See, also, in this connection, Roberts v. Griffith, 112 Ga. 146, 37 S. E. 179. Dealing with the property as his own, and ignoring the wife as a co-owner, would be a material circumstance to be considered in determining whether there was an intention on the part of the husband to make a gift; and the act of the wife in treating the property as that of the husband would also be proper to be considered in determining whether there had been by her an acceptance of the gift. The facts alleged were sufficient to raise a presumption of a gift as to a half interest in all the land embraced in the deed to the association. As stated above, there was nothing alleged to repel this presumption so far as the Oglethorpe land was concerned. The facts alleged in reference to the Teynac reservation were, however, sufficient to raise an issue of fact as to whether there was an intention on the part of the husband to include the whole tract in the gift, or that the same should be limited to the Oglethorpe land.

3. The averments of the petition are sufficient to make an issue for the jury as to whether the intention of the husband to give extended to the whole tract or was limited to the Oglethorpe land, and therefore it becomes necessary to determine whether, this being conceded as true, the allegations of the petition were such as to authorize in behalf of the plaintiff the relief prayed for by her. She prays that the different papers which are relied upon as raising the presumption of a gift may be reformed so as to eliminate therefrom the name of Ellen Teynac altogether, upon the ground that her name was placed therein as a result of a mistake. The allegations of the petition in reference to mistake are of the most general nature. It does not appear how the mistake was made, whose mistake it was, or what brought about the mistake. In other words, taking the allegations as a whole, they are nothing more nor less than a statement to the effect that, as John F. Teynac owned the land, he certainly could not have intended that anybody else should have any interest therein, and that therefore any paper which showed a contrary intention must be founded upon a mistake. Stripped of all its verbiage, this is the substance of the petition in reference to this matter. A court of equity will not reform a paper upon the ground of mistake on any such general allegations.

4. The allegations of fraud are also general in their nature, and for this reason are insufficient to authorize a decree in the plaintiff's behalf. In order to set aside a conveyance for fraud, the allegations attacking the instrument must be specific in their nature.

5. The plaintiff is a mere volunteer. She is not an heir of John F. Teynac, nor was she a party to any of the conveyances sought to be reformed. Under his will she took a remainder interest in all of his property, subject to the life estate of her mother; but this, of course, gave her no interest in any property the title to which had passed out of him, either by gift or otherwise, during his lifetime. If John F. Teynac at the date of his death was the owner of the property in controversy, of course, as remainderman under his will, the plaintiff would be interested in the property; but if, for any reason, title to the property had passed out of him during his lifetime, she would have no interest in it, and would not be heard to reform papers made by him which had the effect to pass the title, or which could be used as evidence of an intention to that effect.

6. There was no distinct, unequivocal allegation that Ellen Teynac was insolvent, nor was there any prayer for discovery; and hence there was no equity in the petition, so far as the prayers which ask that the executrix be placed under bond, or that a receiver be appointed, and injunction issue, were concerned. This is true though there were general allegations of mismanagement and waste. See Griffin v. Henderson, 116 Ga. 310, 42 S. E. 482.

7. The petition alleged in general terms mismanagement on the part of the executrix and threats to misappropriate the estate, but did not contain any specific allegation showing any act of misappropriation or mismanagement, nor were there any averments from which it could be ascertained that the executrix had incurred any liability to the estate in any given sum, nor was there a prayer for discovery. It is conceded that since the death of Ellen Teynac, even if the judgment should be reversed, there would be no equity in the petition so far as the application for a receiver and for injunction are concerned, but it is contended that the petition should remain in court for the purpose of an accounting. The allegations of the petition are entirely too general for this purpose. As stated above, there is no averment from which it could be shown that the estate of Ellen Teynac is liable to the estate of John F. Teynac for any given amount growing out of a misappropriation by her of the assets of that estate. The judgment, therefore, will not be reversed, in order that the case may be held in court for the purpose of an accounting. Even if the petition was amendable in this particular, the plaintiff in error should have availed herself of the opportunity to amend before the judgment was entered dismissing the case on demurrer.

8. There was no error in disallowing the amendment. It was in large part, if not entirely, an elaboration of the allegations of the original petition, making more specific certain averments and prayers as to the Teynac reservation. Taken as a whole, both that part which was practically a restatement of allegations in the original petition, as well as those portions which might be said to introduce new matter, there was nothing in the amendment which had the effect to relieve the petition from the infirmities under which it labored, and, even if allowed, would not have saved the case from the inevitable fate which the law had in store for it. It probably would not have been erroneous to allow the amendment, but, if it had been allowed, the petition would still have been demurrable.

9. After a careful consideration of the entire record and of the numerous points raised therein, we have reached the conclusion that the judgment complained of was the only proper judgment that could have been rendered under the facts as they appear in the record. Absolutely nothing appears in the petition or its amendments to rebut the presumption of a gift as to a one-half interest in the Oglethorpe land, and, under the facts alleged, a jury would be compelled to find that a gift was intended and was accepted. As to the Teynac reservation, the fact that John F. Teynac dealt with this property as his own, after he had treated his wife as a part owner of the Oglethorpe land, would be a strong circumstance that he did not intend the gift to extend to this portion of the property; and the fact that Ellen Teynac did act in her capacity as executrix which could be construed as treating the Teynac reservation, or, at least, a part of it, as still belonging to the estate of her husband, would be a circumstance which might be properly considered in determining whether there had been an acceptance by her of the gift, so far as the Teynac reservation was concerned. In other words, the intention to give and the intention to accept were present in reference to the Oglethorpe land. Whether there was an intention to give, and whether there had been an acceptance, was questionable in regard to the Teynac reservation. But even if the Teynac reservation is the property of the estate of John F. Teynac, the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief prayed for in the present case, for, upon the death of Ellen Teynac, she became the owner of the Teynac reservation, and, so far as the specific property is concerned, she has a complete remedy to recover the same by an appropriate action against the person in possession. She had no right to recover it during the lifetime of Ellen Teynac, and Ellen Teynac's death pending the litigation does not give the plaintiff the right to proceed against her legal representative in the present action.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 135)

JOHNSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—FLIGHT OF ACCUSED—REQUEST TO CHARGE—INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN.

1. On the trial of a criminal case, where evidence has been introduced showing that immediately after the commission of the crime the accused fled from the state, and that he was subsequently arrested in a distant city, it is permissible to show, as a circumstance connected with his flight, and tending to strengthen its probative value as evidence of guilt, that the accused denied his identity, and refused to return to this state until a requisition for him had been honored.

2. The requests to charge, so far as legal and pertinent, were covered by the charge as given; the evidence, while conflicting, was amply sufficient to warrant the conviction of the accused; and it was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

George Johnson was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. M. Harper, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was convicted of murder in Sumter superior court, and was recommended to the mercy of the court. He made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted.

1. The homicide was not denied, and it appeared that after the killing the accused fled from the state, and was arrested in the city of St. Louis. An officer from Americus went to St. Louis for the purpose of bringing the accused back to Georgia; and this officer was permitted to testify, over objection, that when he saw the accused in St. Louis the latter denied his identity, and refused to come back to Georgia until a requisition for him had been honored by the Missouri authorities. The admission of this evidence is assigned as error. It is, of course, well settled that in criminal cases evidence of the flight of the accused may be introduced, not as proof of guilt upon which alone a conviction may be based, but as a circumstance to be considered by the jury, in connection with the other evidence in the case, to throw light upon the conduct of the accused in regard to the offense with which he is charged. For the same purpose the events and circumstances connected with the flight of the accused are equally admissible. The accused may explain his flight, and show that it was entirely consistent with his innocence, and in like manner the state may introduce evidence of circumstances connected with the flight which will strengthen its probative value as tending to show the guilt of the accused. For this reason, we hold that the admission of the evidence objected to was not error.

2. Other than as set forth in the foregoing, the amendment to the motion for a new trial complains only of the refusal of the court to give in charge to the jury certain instructions requested by counsel for the accused. Some of these requests failed to state correct principles of law. Those which were legal and pertinent were fully covered by the general charge, which was a full and fair exposition of the law applicable to the case. None of these grounds of the motion furnish a sufficient ground for the grant of a new trial. The general grounds of the motion, that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, are equally without merit. Numerous witnesses were introduced on both sides, the majority being negroes who were present at the "entertainment" at which the trouble arose which resulted in the homicide for which the accused was tried. As is usual in such cases, there was a hopeless conflict in the evidence of the various witnesses. The jury found a verdict which was amply sustained by the evidence. That verdict was approved by the trial judge, and we will not interfere with it.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 177)

ROBERTS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

OBSCENE OR VULGAR LANGUAGE—USE IN PRESENCE OF FEMALE—INDICTMENT—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where an indictment charged the accused with using, on a named day and in the presence of a named female, "the following obscene, vulgar, and profane language, to wit: 'Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married? I can whip any damn Groover of the name'"—and, so far as appears from the indictment, the words quoted were used together as a continuous part of one conversation, it was not error to overrule a demurrer to the indictment which sought to separate the words quoted, and to object to them, for the purposes of the indictment, on the ground that they are neither profane, obscene, nor vulgar.

2. Where, however, it appeared from the evidence that the words, "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?" were used on a different occasion, and not in the same connection with the words, "I can whip any damn Groover of the name," and there was nothing in either the indictment or the evidence to indicate that the words first mentioned were intended to convey an obscene or vulgar meaning, it was error, requiring the grant of a new trial, to charge that the use of such words by the accused would be sufficient to sustain and warrant his conviction.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Dawson County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

J. M. Roberts was convicted of using obscene and vulgar language in the presence of a female, and brings error. Reversed.

W. F. Findley, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Charters, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was tried and convicted under an indictment charging that on a named day, in the presence of one Belle Groover, a female, he "did use the following obscene, vulgar, and profane language, to wit: 'Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married? I can whip any damn Groover of the name.' " He demurred to so much of the indictment as charged him with using the words: "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?"—on the ground that such words were neither obscene, vulgar, nor profane, and that they constituted no offense against the laws of the state. His demurrer was overruled, as was also his motion for a new trial filed after his conviction, and he excepted.

1. It was not error to overrule the demurrer to the indictment. As a general rule, words are profane, or not, according to the sense in which they are used; and it is necessary to show by other words coupled with them the sense in which they are used, to make a valid charge of using profane language. So far as appears from the indictment, the words quoted were used at one time as a consecutive sentence. In ruling upon the demurrer the court could look no further than the face of the indictment, and so it cannot be held that the ruling on the demurrer was erroneous.

2. The accused, however, did not deny having used the words, "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?" but it appeared from the uncontradicted evidence introduced on the trial that the other language charged in the indictment, if used at all, which was denied by the accused and the witnesses who testified for him, was used at a different time and place. It appeared that the accused, a physician, had called at the home of Groover, the husband of the woman in whose presence the language was alleged to have been used. While in the house, in the presence of Groover, ver, his wife, and several other parties, the accused said to Mrs. Groover: "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?" This question was repeated several times, when Groover took offense and ordered the accused from the house. None of the witnesses made it appear that in using this language the accused had an indecent meaning. The accused himself, as before stated, admitted having used this language, but claimed that he was jesting at the time, and that Mrs. Groover so understood. After having left the house, he threatened to whip Groover if he would come out in the road; and it was at this point that the state's witnesses testified he said in the presence of Mrs. Groover, "I can whip any damn Groover of the name." The court charged: "Now, as to the first words, 'Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?' That is the first proposition. It is charged in the bill of indictment that those words are vulgar and obscene. Words get their point and meaning almost entirely from the time, place, and circumstances under which they are used. It is for the jury to say from the evidence what were used—whether this whole phrase, or substantially that phrase, was used, and, if used, what were the circumstances under which they were used; the time, place, and circumstances, and the intent with which they were used. After considering it all, was that vulgar or obscene, as expressed in the language of the law? * * * Whatever words the evidence may satisfy you were used, were they vulgar and obscene? If so, the defendant is guilty if they were used without provocation; and, if there was any provocation at all, it would have to be something that occurred then and there at the time that called them forth. It would be for the jury to say whether it was sufficient to justify their use under the circumstances." This charge was error. As was remarked in the first division of this opinion, from aught that appears in the indictment, the words there charged to have been used by the accused formed one continuous sentence. It is not charged that the words, "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?" constituted an offense when used in the presence of a female. The words, in and of themselves, are neither profane, vulgar, nor obscene, and the indictment contains no intimation that by innuendo they conveyed an indecent meaning. It cannot be said that in their ordinary acceptance they imply an invitation to sexual intercourse, and there is no suggestion in the testimony of any of the witnesses that the accused sought to extend such an invitation by using the language quoted. This is quite a different case from that of Dillard v. State, 41 Ga. 278, where the language charged to have been used by the accused was an invitation to a married woman "to go to bed with him." There the words quoted plainly implied a proposal of sexual intercourse, and, as such, were held to be vulgar and obscene, within the meaning of the statute, though it is significant that Mr. Chief Justice Brown, while concurring in the judgment, dissented from the reasoning on which it was based by the majority. A case more nearly in point is Stamps v. State, 95 Ga. 475, 20 S. E. 241, where it was held: "The language, 'I want to stay here awhile,' addressed by a man to a woman, is not, per se, either obscene or vulgar; and, although the indictment charged that by the use of this language the former meant to ask the latter to have sexual intercourse with him, the evidence entirely failed to support this charge, and therefore the conviction of the accused of the offense of using obscene and vulgar language in the presence of a female was contrary to law and the evidence."

While, for the reasons stated in the first division of this opinion, the demurrer to the indictment was properly overruled, in the light of the evidence subsequently introduced it was erroneous to charge the jury on what the court terms the two distinct propositions embraced in the indictment; and as it is impossible to say whether the conviction of the accused was based on the use of the words, "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?" which was admitted, or of the words, "I can whip any damn Groover of the name," which was denied, a new trial must result.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 150)

ERWIN v. MAYOR, ETC., OF CITY OF CARTERSVILLE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—KEEPING FOR ILLEGAL PURPOSE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—TRIAL—REMARKS OF JUDGE.

1. The evidence, though raising a strong suspicion of guilt, was insufficient to warrant a finding that the accused was guilty.

2. When a case has been tried before a mayor and appealed to the mayor and aldermen, it is improper for the mayor to state, in his capacity of judge, during the progress of the latter trial, that there was a variance in the evidence of a witness who had testified in both trials.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Flite, Judge.

John Erwin was convicted of violating an ordinance making it an offense to have and keep intoxicating liquor for illegal purposes. From a judgment of the superior court overruling a certiorari to review the judgment of the mayor and board of aldermen of Cartersville, defendant brings error. Reversed.

James B. Conyers, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., and T. C. Milner, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. The defendant was tried before the mayor of Cartersville for violating an ordinance making it penal to have and keep intoxicating liquor for illegal purpose. He was convicted, and appealed his case to the mayor and aldermen of the city of Cartersville. On the appeal the city marshal, who was the sole witness for the prosecution, testified that he saw Payne, the alleged purchaser from the accused, give to the defendant at a wagon yard a dollar or a half dollar, but would not swear positively that defendant furnished or sold to Payne any whisky. He saw Payne drink from a bottle, and witness tasted its contents, and found the same to be rye whisky. When witness tasted it about one drink had been taken from the bottle. Witness notified Payne he must appear before the mayor to testify, and Payne asked to be let off, and said he would promise not "to get into anything like that again." Payne denied that the accused sold him any whisky on this occasion. Witness had some whisky in his wagon, and of this whisky accused and witness took several drinks together. Witness denied that he gave accused any money. Witness stated accused separated from him, and on his return did not give him anything, but that he and accused drank out of witness' bottle, and when thus engaged the marshal came up, and asked to taste what was in the bottle, and witness let him do so. The defendant said he had known Payne a long time, and that Payne asked him if he could get him some whisky, and he replied that he could, as he always kept a little about his house. He then went home, got the whisky, and gave it to Payne. The whisky was in a pint bottle, and he and Payne took a drink from the bottle. He denied he sold any whisky to Payne and that he received any money from him. This was substantially the case made before the mayor and aldermen on the appeal. The evidence is insufficient to show that defendant had or kept intoxicating liquor for illegal purpose. While the marshal's testimony might raise a suspicion of a sale, he refused to testify that defendant either furnished or sold any whisky to Payne. One way of showing that intoxicating liquor is kept for illegal purpose is by a sale where the sale is prohibited by law. The evidence failed to show any sale or other facts from which the defendant's guilt could be inferred.

2. The mayor was a member of the appellate tribunal, and it was improper for him to state, in his capacity of judge, that the evidence of a certain witness was quite different to what it was in the trial before him. This statement of the mayor was prejudicial to the accused, and its possible harmful effect cannot be remedied by the answer of the aldermen that such statement of the mayor in no wise biased or influenced their minds against the accused. He had a right to be tried under legal rules of evidence. The record shows that the appeal was to the mayor and aldermen, and not to the aldermen, of the city of Cartersville. We have examined the various acts relating to the city of Cartersville, and do not find any provision for an appeal from the mayor's judgment; but, as the point is not made in the record, we will assume the existence of the right of appeal to the mayor and aldermen. But, aside from any question as to the legality or illegality of the trial on this ground, it would be improper for a member of the court to inject in a trial matters harmful to the accused by a verbal statement that there was a variance in the testimony of a certain witness in the two trials. This mode of impeachment is not recognized by the law. Holliman v. City of Hawkinsville, 109 Ga. 107, 34 S. E. 214.

We think there should be another trial, and accordingly the judgment of the superior court overruling the certiorari is reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 205)

OWENS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — APPLICATION TO CASE — REQUEST TO CHARGE — EXCEPTIONS.

1. The law of voluntary manslaughter should not be given in charge to the jury in cases where this grade of homicide is not involved.

2. Where a charge comprehends only a brief summary of the abstract law pertaining to the case, an appropriate written request, submitted in due time, applying the law to the particular facts, should not be refused. But if the main charge fully and fairly submits to the jury the law applicable to the case, a refusal of a special written request to charge is not erroneous.

3. An exception to a charge containing a correct principle of abstract law cannot be considered unless the vice or error is specified.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Stewart County; W. B. Butt, Judge.

Milton Owens was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

G. Y. Harrell and B. F. Harrell, for plaintiff in error. F. A. Hooper, Sol., for the State.

EVANS, J. The plaintiff in error, Milton Owens, was tried in the superior court of Stewart county upon an indictment charging him with the murder of his father, Shew Owens. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the accused made a motion for a new trial, to the overruling of which he excepted.

The evidence upon which the state relied for a conviction was substantially as follows: The deceased was killed shortly before 11 o'clock at night, and early the next morning his body was found in his yard, some 15 or 20 steps from the back door of his house. There were signs of a considerable scuffle at the place where the body was found, and numerous tracks around it, made by several persons, apparently; the ground being wet and sticky, and some of the tracks being almost obliterated by others more dis-

¶ 1. See Homicide, vol. 28, Cent. Dig. § 652.

inct. Some twenty-eight cuts, inflicted with a knife or other sharp instrument, were upon the body; one of them being on the right side, near the heart, and two in the back. Four or five of them were of such a character as would likely produce death almost immediately. The skull of the deceased was crushed in several places; the wounds indicating that he had been struck on the back of the head with some blunt instrument, such as the head of an ax or hatchet. He had received 16 blows on the head, his throat was cut, and he was disemboweled. In his pocket was a pair of brass knucks, as well as a number of cartridges, but no knife or other weapon was found lying near his body. At the time of his death he was in the prime of his life, was an unusually large man, and was possessed of great physical strength and courage. There were no wounds on his body such as might have been produced by a pistol. "One hand was chewed all to pieces—his fingers and thumb." The accused, who admitted having done the killing, was apparently unhurt, save that he had one finger wrapped up in a rag. He voluntarily stated on the day following the night of the homicide that he was, at the time the difficulty began, sitting in one corner of the house; that "Shep Owens charged in the house, * * * and charged at him with a gun in one hand—a rifle in one hand and a knife in the other—and he [the accused] shot him down, and shot him again"; that his father then "got up and came at him again, and he began to cut him." The accused was asked as to how the wounds on the head of the deceased were inflicted, and replied he had inflicted them with the rifle "when he came out of doors; * * * that he ran back in the house and got the rifle; * * * that the cutting began in the house, but he hit him out there" in the yard. The accused subsequently said he did not return to the house and get the rifle "in the corner where his father first set it up when he first came in the house," but "got it on the ground out there where he dropped it." The person to whom the accused made this statement examined the rifle, but there was not a particle of blood upon it, nor any sign indicating that it had been used in inflicting the wounds made upon the head of the deceased. A witness who was introduced by the accused testified that he got from the accused a knife which had blood upon it and was broken, and that he had stated, upon being asked how he broke it, that he "broke it in the fight; * * * that was the knife he used in the fight." The witness further testified that another knife was found lying open on the floor in the main room of the house, but that he saw no blood on this knife. There was also evidence in behalf of the accused to the following effect: About 8 o'clock on the night of the killing, the accused, accompanied by his mother, his sister, and one of his brothers, went to a neighbor's house, and while there something was said as to how the deceased had been mistreating members of his family. The neighbor advised the mother of the accused to go home and "do the best" she could. After having stayed at this neighbor's house an hour or more, she and the other members of her family started home. Shortly after their departure, Shep Owens called and inquired if his family had been there. He spoke of having had some fuss with his wife, and said "he was going to whip [the accused] that night before he slept." He was armed with a rifle. After having some further conversation with his neighbor, he left, remarking: "Well, me or Milton—one—will go to hell to-night, or do something." It was then 10 o'clock. He did not say "what he was mad at Milton for," but did tell the cause of the trouble between himself and his wife. The accused made a statement to the jury, during the course of which he said: When he and his brother Reece returned from work on the evening of the homicide, his mother complained that her husband had abused and threatened to kill her, and asked the accused to go with her to the neighbor's house above referred to. They went, but, after staying there some time, decided to go back home. On their arrival, they found the deceased was absent. A brother of the accused informed him that his father had left home with his Winchester, saying he was going to kill the accused. The accused then went and got his pistol and sat down in the house. The deceased soon appeared and demanded admission, and the door was opened by a member of the family. As to what then took place, the accused stated: The deceased "came in, and come at me with his knife and cut my coat, and I shot at him, and he dropped his gun and grabbed me, and we got to scuffling, and I got my knife and cut him; and, when I found that my knife was broken, I didn't know how bad I had cut him, and he threatened to kill me, and I knew if I didn't work to kill him and save myself he would kill me, and I run back and got the Winchester off the floor and punched him in the head with it; and what I done I done in self-defense, and there didn't no one else have anything to do with it but me. I was the first one he started at; he didn't have a chance to start at the others; and I don't want my mother or my brothers—either one—punished for what I have done in self-defense." The accused further stated that he got his "finger hurt in the scuffle mighty bad"; that he also got "knocked" on his hand, and that it swelled up, and his wrist swelled up; that he had a swelled place on his knuckles, and a scar on the joint of his wrist; that it was some time after he went back in the house before he had his finger tied up; and that it bled profusely, and the blood dropped down on the floor.

1. Only the grades of homicide involved in the case on trial should be given in charge to the jury. If neither the evidence for the state, nor the statement of the defendant, taken separately or conjunctively, presents a case of voluntary manslaughter, the judge should not charge on this grade of homicide. The office of a charge is to illustrate and apply the legal principles applicable to the facts of the case. From the evidence submitted by the state, a robust man, at his own home, is killed by his son. The number, character, and location of the wounds, the strength of the deceased, the evidences of a fierce conflict, and the absence of wounds upon the slayer's person, would indicate that more than one person participated in the homicide. However, the defendant assumes the whole responsibility, exonerating his mother and brothers. There is no suggestion in the state's testimony of the intermediate grade of homicide. The crime of murder was proved. The defendant's statement made out a case of justifiable homicide. He admits that, when he was informed that his father left home with his rifle, threatening defendant's life, he armed himself with a pistol, and sat down to await the coming of his father; that, as soon as the father entered the house he attacked defendant with a knife, cutting his coat; then defendant fired his pistol, etc. If the defendant's account of the homicide was true, he was justifiable. He exhibited no display of passion, but calmly prepared himself for the threatened attack, and defended that attack upon himself. He does not, in his statement, hint at anything authorizing the inference that he was guilty of voluntary manslaughter; and it would have been manifestly unfair to him for the jury, if they believed his statement, to find that he was not justified in doing everything he admits he did. There being neither evidence nor anything in the defendant's statement suggesting his guilt of voluntary manslaughter, a written request to charge the law bearing on that grade of homicide was properly refused.

2. The other written requests were fully covered by the charge. The law of justifiable homicide was elaborately discussed by the judge, and the written requests would not have given the same any additional force. Where a charge comprehends only a brief summary of the abstract law pertaining to the case, an appropriate written request, submitted in due time, applying the law to the particular facts, should be given. Roberts v. State, 114 Ga. 450, 40 S. E. 297. Yet in cases where the law is fully covered by the main charge, and the presentation of the legal principles is adjusted to the facts, a new trial will not be granted solely on this ground. Simmons v. State, 79 Ga. 697, 4 S. E. 894 (4); McDuffie v. State, 90 Ga. 788, 17 S. E. 105.

3. Exception is taken to the charge of the court on the subjects of confession and justifiable homicide. Movant does not point out the defects in these charges. They contain correct abstract principles of law, and the duty is upon the movant to specify in such cases the specific vice of the charge. Anderson v. Southern Ry. Co., 107 Ga. 501, 33 S. E. 644. Failing to do this, such grounds of error cannot be considered. Binion v. Ry. Co., 118 Ga. 282, 284-287, 45 S. E. 276.

The evidence fully warranted the verdict, and, no reversible error appearing, the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 178)

BICKERS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—ERROR WAIVED IN APPELLATE COURT.

1. An assignment of error presented in a motion for a new trial, but not referred to in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, or argued before this court, is to be treated as having been abandoned.

2. The newly discovered evidence relied on by the accused was merely cumulative, and not of such character as to likely affect the result should another trial be had.

3. The verdict of the jury, having met with the approval of the presiding judge, and being amply supported by evidence, should be allowed to stand.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

John Bickers was convicted of burglary, and brings error. Affirmed.

Wilfred C. Lane and John R. Cooper, for plaintiff in error. Wm. Brunson, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. The accused was charged with having committed the offense of burglary, and was found guilty. The evidence upon which the state relied for a conviction was to the following effect: Nine razors were stolen from the barber shop mentioned in the indictment, the barber shop having been burglariously entered through a window after it had been closed for the night. Within a few days afterwards, the owner of the razors found one of them in the possession of a negro barber named J. T. Wood, and another in the possession of J. E. Denton. The accused procured a companion of his to help him dispose of these razors to Wood and Denton, the accused himself receiving the money paid for the same, though his companion conducted the negotiations in his presence and advised him to sell at the price offered. The accused approached another acquaintance of his and endeavored to get his aid in disposing of some razors, saying "he had a lot of razors at home," which he would go and get and "sell them or pawn them, and it would be quick money and all to the good if" his acquaintance "wanted to help him get rid of them." This conversation took place only a short time after the burglary was committed.

¶ 2. See Criminal Law, vol. 15, Cent. Dig. §§ 2724, 2823.

1. In addition to the general grounds of the motion for a new trial, the plaintiff in error made complaint that during the progress of the trial the presiding judge expressed an opinion as to what had been proven by a witness for the state; but counsel for the accused, neither in his argument before this court nor in his brief, insisted upon this ground of the motion. Accordingly, it is to be treated as having been abandoned. McKinnon v. Hope, 118 Ga. 462, 45 S. E. 413.

2. The newly discovered evidence relied on by the accused was merely cumulative, and would not likely affect the result should another trial be had. Where newly discovered evidence is of a cumulative nature, and especially when it does not bear directly on the main point at issue, but only upon collateral matters, it will be insufficient to authorize the granting of a new trial. Isham v. State, 112 Ga. 406, 37 S. E. 735; Clark v. State, 117 Ga. 255, 43 S. E. 853.

3. The evidence submitted by the state was of such strength as to establish the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. The verdict of the jury has met with the approval of the trial judge, and, no error of law having been committed, his judgment denying a new trial will be affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 162)

NIX v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

MURDER—INSTRUCTIONS—DEFENSE OF PROPERTY.

1. In a case where the testimony of all the eyewitnesses to the occurrence makes a clear case of murder, and the theory of the accused is that the killing was either in self-defense or under the fears of a reasonable man that his life was in danger, Pen. Code, § 72, is inapplicable, and a refusal to charge the law contained in that section is not cause for a new trial.

2. In making his statement to the jury as provided for by statute, the prisoner, not being sworn as a witness, nor subject to cross-examination, nor restricted by the rules of evidence, cannot lay the foundation for introducing in his favor evidence that would otherwise be inadmissible. Hence evidence of uncommunicated threats will not be received, nor, in a murder case, testimony as to the character of the deceased for violence, unless such evidence is relevant and competent unaided by the contents of the statement.

3. The failure of the judge in a murder case to charge the jury the provisions of Pen. Code, § 76, will not be reason for granting a new trial, when it clearly appears from the charge that the jury were informed that, if they found the contentions of the accused to be true, they must return a verdict of not guilty.

4. The evidence warranted the verdict, and no reason appears for a reversal of the judgment refusing a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Muscogee County; W. B. Butt, Judge.

One Nix was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Cameron & Pinkston and Hatcher & Carson, for plaintiff in error. McNeill & Levy, A. W. Cozart, John H. Lewis, S. P. Gilbert, Sol. Gen., and John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. Nix was convicted of murder, and complains that the court erred in refusing to grant him a new trial.

1. Complaint is made in the motion that the court erred in refusing to give numerous instructions as requested. After a careful reading of the charge, we have reached the conclusion that, so far as these requests contained propositions of law which were legal and pertinent, they were sufficiently covered by the general charge, which appears to be free from any error which was so prejudicial to the accused as to require a reversal of the judgment. The only requests which have given us any serious difficulty are those which contain the proposition that Pen. Code, § 72, is applicable in any case where there is a forcible attack upon property at a place other than the habitation of the possessor. The section referred to is in the following language: "If after persuasion, remonstrance, or other gentle measures used, a forcible attack and invasion on the property or habitation of another cannot be prevented, it shall be justifiable homicide to kill the person so forcibly attacking and invading the property or habitation of another; but it must appear that such killing was absolutely necessary to prevent such attack and invasion, and that serious injury was intended, or might accrue to the person, property, or family of the person killing." In Pound's Case, 43 Ga. 89 (5), it was held that the law contained in this section was applicable only in cases where an attack was made upon property at the domicile and within the protection of the habitation; Mr. Chief Justice Lochrane saying, on page 137, in reference to this law: "This applies to the right of defense growing out of an attack upon a man, or his property, or family, where they are at his home. The household gods, so to speak, are regarded with peculiar sanctity in the protection of the law." In Crawford's Case, 90 Ga. 710, 17 S. E. 623, 35 Am. St. Rep. 242, the present Chief Justice, in referring to the Pound Case, said that the law contained in the section referred to did not apply to every attack on or invasion of property, and that, whether the construction placed upon the law in Pound's Case was correct or not, it had no application unless there was a serious injury intended, or might accrue, to the property which was the subject of the attack, and especially would have no application in a case where the property was of insignificant value, such as a small portion of a side of meat, unless the circumstances were such as to show that the attack might culminate in the commission of a felony. It has never been held in terms that the words "serious injury" in this section were the equivalent of "felony." Neither has it ever been held that a mere trespass upon property would justify a killing. It may be that a case might arise where a trespass upon property would be of such a grave nature as to amount to a serious injury within the meaning of this section; in other words, that a trespass in its nature, gravity, and consequences would be such as the law might authorize the taking of human life to prevent its commission. But such a condition of affairs would be of rare occurrence in the transaction of human affairs, and certainly would not arise out of one of the ordinary and everyday quarrels about property rights. Manifestly, a case like the present does not disclose the serious injury to property which would authorize or justify the taking of human life. The father of the accused, and the deceased, were at issue in regard to the ownership of a strip of land containing about 15 acres. The deceased had planted a crop of oats upon the land, and was, with his son, proceeding to gather the oats. According to the testimony for the state, the accused went to the place where the deceased was at work with his son, and, without any provocation at the moment, deliberately fired upon the deceased while he was working with a cradle cutting the oats; at the time the fatal shot was fired the deceased holding the handle of the cradle with one hand, with the other stretched out to gather up the grain that had been cut. According to the statement of the accused, which must be considered in determining whether the request should have been given, he went out that morning to plant some watermelon seed, and carried his gun with him, as he claimed he usually did, to shoot crows. He planted some of the seed, and heard some one cutting oats on the land which was in dispute between his father and the deceased. Upon reaching that point he found the deceased cutting the oats, and said to him that he had come there to ask him not to cut the oats. Then followed a colloquy between the deceased and the accused in reference to the ownership of the oats and the land, during which the son of the deceased laid down his cradle, walked to a tree where a gun was standing, and approached his father. The colloquy continued, and the deceased became abusive, and said to the accused that he was going to cut the oats, and would either kill the accused or get killed; and as he said this reached back to his son, who was within three or four feet of him, to get the gun. At this time the accused fired the shot which killed the deceased. The son and the accused then exchanged shots at each other. Under this state of facts it is unnecessary to determine whether the construction placed upon the section in question in Pound's Case was correct, or whether, under any circumstances, what would amount only to a trespass or a misdemeanor—that is, anything short of a felony—is the serious injury to property contemplated by the section. The judge charged the jury fully on the subject of the law contained in Pen. Code, §§ 70, 71. There can be no serious complaint made of the charge so far as it related to the law of self-defense and attacks upon the person, or the doctrine of reasonable fears. Taking the statement of the accused as true, the killing of the deceased was not for the purpose of preventing a serious injury to the property of his father—that is, the oats growing in the field—but it was for the purpose of saving his own life; and, even if the section is applicable in any case where the attack upon the property is not at the habitation, it had no application whatever in the present case, and it is therefore immaterial whether the court correctly construed it or not. It is questionable whether a child has a right under any circumstances to kill in order to protect the property of his parent. While one is guaranteed under the law the right to protect his property, under some circumstances even to the extent of taking human life, and children are justified in defending the person and reputation of their parents, we would be hardly prepared to hold, even if the question were directly before us, that the law of Georgia would authorize a son to take the life of a human being, simply because the person killed was at the time cutting and preparing to take away from the land of his father a portion of a crop growing thereon, even if there could be no question that the title to the land was in the father.

2. A number of witnesses testified to declarations made by the deceased in reference to the land and oats which were in controversy between him and the father of the accused. None of these declarations appear to have been communicated to the accused prior to the killing. Upon motion of the Solicitor General, all of these declarations were ruled out, upon the ground that they were not in their nature threats, and, if so, they were not shown to have been communicated to the accused. Error is assigned upon this ruling, the contention being that the declarations were threats, and that, even if they were not communicated, they were admissible to throw light upon the conduct of the deceased at the time of the killing. Without reference to the question as to whether the declarations could be properly construed to be in the nature of threats, there was no error in ruling them out; for, being uncommunicated, they were inadmissible for any purpose, unless it appeared from the evidence that, at the time of the killing, the deceased was the assailant. And, to make the threats admissible, it is not sufficient that the fact that the accused was the assailant appeared from the prisoner's statement. It must have appeared from the sworn evidence. Vaughn v. The State, 88 Ga. 731, 16 S. E. 64. The principle of this decision also applies to that assignment of error which relates to the refusal of the court to admit evidence of the violent and turbulent character of the deceased.

3. Complaint is made that the court erred in failing to charge the jury the provisions of Pen. Code, § 76, which is as follows: "The homicide appearing to be justifiable, the person indicted shall, upon the trial, be fully acquitted and discharged." In Walker's Case, 102 Ga. 664, 28 S. E. 284, it was held to be error to fail to charge the provisions of this section, when the charge consisted merely of reading to the jury the preceding sections of the Penal Code. It clearly appears from the opinion of Mr. Justice Atkinson that, if the judge otherwise inform the jury that if they find the contentions of the accused to be true he would be entitled to an acquittal, the failure to read this section is not erroneous. In this case the judge distinctly instructed the jury that if they found the version of the accused to be the truth of the case they should acquit him.

4. The extracts from the charge upon which error is assigned, when taken in connection with the general charge, present no reason for ordering a new trial, even if they are erroneous at all. Under the evidence for the state the accused was guilty of murder; under his statement he was not guilty of any crime. In determining from the facts where the truth lay, it was utterly immaterial who was the owner of the land upon which the homicide was committed, and therefore there was no error in refusing to admit in evidence the deed showing title in the father of the accused, or the record showing the judgment in a suit between the father of the accused and the deceased in which the question of title was incidentally involved. There was no error in admitting evidence that the father of the accused, on Tuesday prior to the killing, which occurred on Saturday, carried his gun with him while working in the field, the father being introduced as a witness, and this evidence throwing some light upon the state of his feelings. The ground of the motion containing alleged newly discovered evidence furnishes no reason for reversing the judgment. Such a ground is addressed to the discretion of the trial judge, and it takes an extreme case for this court to control his discretion in such a matter. The alleged newly discovered evidence related to threats made by the deceased. As will appear from the foregoing, if this evidence had been offered at the trial, it would have been inadmissible in the then state of the evidence, and, as it appeared that all of the eye-witnesses had been examined at the trial, and no foundation was laid in the evidence for the admission of testimony of uncommunicated threats, the discretion of the trial judge in refusing to grant a new trial on account of the discovery of other uncommunicated threats than those which were excluded at the trial will not be interfered with. The evidence for the state not only authorized, but demanded, a verdict for murder. The jury having seen proper to disregard the version of the transaction as detailed in the prisoner's statement, the trial judge having approved their finding, we will not interfere.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 190)

GRANTHAM v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTIONS — NECESSITY FOR REQUEST — BURDEN OF PROOF — REASONABLE DOUBT.

1. The verdict of the jury was amply supported by evidence.

2. It was not, in the absence of a proper written request presented by the accused, incumbent on the judge to charge the jury more fully than he did as to what constituted a reasonable doubt of guilt.

3. The trial judge fully and fairly instructed the jury as to the burden resting on the state to show beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of the accused, and no error prejudicial to him was committed in charging upon this branch of the case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Vienna; D. L. Henderson, Judge.

Ben Grantham was convicted of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of law and brings error. Affirmed.

Watts Powell, for plaintiff in error. M. F. Strozler, Sol., for the State.

EVANS, J. The defendant was charged with the offense of a misdemeanor, in that on a certain day he did unlawfully, for a valuable consideration, sell whisky, wine, beer, and other intoxicating liquors and intoxicating bitters in the county of Dooly, it being then and there a county in which the sale of such liquors is prohibited by law. He was tried and convicted, and his motion for a new trial was overruled.

1. Two witnesses testified, in behalf of the state, to a sale by the defendant of two quarts of whisky, for which the purchaser paid 60 cents a quart. In his statement the defendant denied making the sale to which these witnesses testified. The jury were not bound to accept this statement as true, and their verdict of guilty was fully supported by the evidence.

2. Complaint is made that the judge, in charging the jury, failed to define "reasonable doubt," but merely told them that "a reasonable doubt means just what it says; it is a reasonable doubt." If the defendant desired an amplification of the definition which the judge gave, he should have presented a proper written request. Having failed to do so, the omission of the court to charge more fully upon the subject is not cause for a new trial.

3. Error is assigned upon the following charge of the court: "If you believe from all the facts in said case that the defendant did not commit the crime with which he is charged in this bill of indictment, either at the time mentioned in the indictment or at any time within two years prior to the finding of the bill of indictment, then you would be authorized to find the defendant not guilty." This charge is not technically accurate, for it tends to place the affirmative of the issue upon the defendant; but, when considered in connection with the context, it was not prejudicial to the defendant. Just previously to the giving of the charge complained of, the court distinctly instructed the jury that, if there should be a reasonable doubt in their minds as to the guilt of the defendant, they should "give the defendant the benefit of that doubt and acquit him." In addition to this instruction, the judge, at the beginning of his charge, informed the jury that there was a presumption of innocence in favor of the defendant, and that the burden was on the state to demonstrate his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. It is therefore clear that the charge excepted to was not calculated to mislead the jury.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 142)

HALL v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

LARCENY OF BALED COTTON—INDICTMENT—ISSUES AND PROOF—ALLEGATION AS TO LOCALITY—STATUTE—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY.

1. In criminal law an unnecessarily minute description of a necessary fact must be proved as charged, but an unnecessary description of an unnecessary fact need not be proved.

2. No locality except venue need be charged in prosecutions under Pen. Code 1895, § 186, which was intended to make the stealing of baled cotton a felony, regardless of value or of the place where the cotton was stored.

3. In view of the defendant's statement and some of the evidence offered in his behalf, it was error to refuse the written request to charge that, if he did not steal but bought the cotton from one who had stolen it, he could not be convicted under an indictment for stealing baled cotton.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Appling County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

P. F. Hall was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

Hall, with two others, was indicted for stealing a bale of cotton from "under the ginhouse of Johnson, the place where the same had been stored, the said bale of cotton having been placed and located near the press under said ginhouse." There was also a count for receiving stolen goods, which, however, was stricken on demurrer. There was ample evidence that the cotton had been taken from under the ginhouse of Johnson, though there was no proof that it had been taken from near the press. Possession of the property was traced directly to the defendant. In his statement he claimed that he had bought it from one Thomas, and there was some evidence to the same effect from witnesses for the defense. There was a motion for a new trial on the grounds that the verdict was contrary to law and to evidence, that there was no proof of the descriptive averment that the bale had been placed near the press, and because the court refused a written request to charge, "If you should find that another person stole the cotton, and afterwards the defendant bought or received it, then you would not be authorized to find the defendant guilty, but should acquit him."

W. W. Bennett and E. D. Graham, for plaintiff in error. John W. Bennett, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The intent of Pen. Code 1895, § 186, was to make the stealing of baled cotton a felony, regardless of its value, or of whether it was taken from a house or from within the curtilage, or whether the elements of burglary were present or not. It made the place where the cotton was located or stored immaterial. Moseley v. State, 74 Ga. 404. Venue of the crime was the only locality that had to be alleged and proved. Therefore the allegation that the cotton was under the ginhouse of Johnson and near the press under the ginhouse was mere surplusage, and not descriptive of any material element of the crime. The proof must identify the particular bale alleged to have been stolen, but it made no difference whether it was taken from one room or another, or from one end or the other of the open space under the building. There was ample evidence to show that the cotton described in the indictment was taken from under the ginhouse where it had been located, and it was unnecessary to prove that it had been placed near the press, even if, as a matter of law, nearness to the press was not involved in the proof that it was taken from the building containing the same. This case does not come within the rule that an immaterial description of a material fact must be proved, but, place being unimportant, it was rather an instance of an immaterial description of an immaterial fact. Besides what was contained in the statement of the defendant, there was some evidence that he bought the cotton, and he was therefore entitled to the charge requested, in writing, that, if instead of stealing he bought from one who had stolen, he could not be convicted under this indictment. Nor was the failure to give this charge cured by anything contained in the general charge, which was confined exclusively to a statement of the law applicable to the crime defined in Pen. Code 1895, § 186, and omitted any reference to defendant's theory.

¶ 1. See Indictment and Information, vol. 27, Cent. Dig. § 531.

This error requires the grant of a new trial, and the judgment is reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 187)

HARRIS v. STATE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—CONVICTION OF OFFENSE OF SHOOTING AT ANOTHER—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR—ALIBI.

1. On the trial of an indictment for assault with intent to murder, where there was evidence from which the jury might have found that the accused shot the prosecutor, and that the shooting was not justifiable, but that it was not done with the intention to kill the prosecutor, it was not error for the court to charge the law as to the statutory offense of shooting at another, nor will a conviction of that offense be set aside as contrary to law.

2. While it was error, in such a case, for the judge to charge the jury that the only thing for them to consider, in order to determine whether the accused was guilty of assault with intent to murder, was whether, if the prosecutor had died, the killing would have been murder, the fact that the jury did not find the accused guilty of assault with intent to murder shows that the error was harmless, and a new trial will not result on that account.

3. It is not error to charge, on the trial of a criminal case, that, in order for the accused to overcome evidence of his guilt by setting up an alibi, the evidence of the alibi must satisfy the jury that the accused "was at a place where it was impossible for him to have committed the crime."

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

Joe Harris, Jr., was convicted of shooting at another, and brings error. Affirmed.

Travis & Edwards, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was tried under an indictment charging him with assault with intent to murder, and was found guilty of the lesser offense of shooting at another. The evidence for the state was in direct conflict with that introduced by the accused. The prosecutor testified that on the occasion under investigation he had a difficulty with one Barney at the home of the accused; that shortly thereafter he left to go to his own home, some 200 or 250 yards distant from where the accused lived; that the accused followed him, pistol in hand, overtaking him within a short distance, and telling him "that he didn't allow any row on the place"; that the prosecutor explained that he had been talking to the father of the accused when Barney had come in and "commenced to fuss"; and that after this explanation he turned to go on home, when the accused, entirely without provocation, shot him, the ball taking effect in the arm. Only one other witness was introduced by the state, and, while his version of the affair was materially different from that given by the prosecutor, the two accounts corresponded, in that they both made out a case of an unprovoked assault upon the person of the prosecutor, and one upon which the jury would have been amply justified in basing a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to murder. On the other hand, the defense introduced numerous witnesses who testified most positively that, at the time the prosecutor claimed to have been shot, the accused was inside his yard; that he had no pistol, and consequently that he did not fire the shot which, it seems to have been admitted, struck the accused. From evidence which was not contradicted, it also appears that at the time of the shooting there was in progress in the immediate vicinity of the home of the accused what was known as a "hot supper"—a form of social diversion which this court has had frequent occasion to observe is a most fruitful source of homicide among the colored population—and that the festivities were punctuated by numerous pistol shots at and near what one of the witnesses felicitously calls "the shouting house." Indeed, there seems to have been "a sound of revelry by night," for still another witness says: "It looked like a young war, there was so much pistol firing." Two widely different theories of the shooting of the prosecutor are thus presented by the evidence—one, that he was, without provocation, assaulted by the accused; the other, that he was struck by a random bullet fired by one of the participants in the "hot supper," the accused having no connection whatever with the shooting.

1. Without giving in detail the grounds of the motion for a new trial, to the overruling of which the accused excepts, there are three general questions which it presents for our consideration. The first is, were the jury warranted in finding the accused guilty of the statutory offense of shooting at another? He contends that under the evidence there was no middle ground, and that he should have been either convicted of assault with intent to murder, or else acquitted, and that under the ruling of this court in the case of Kendrick v. State, 113 Ga. 759, 39 S. E. 286, a new trial should for that reason have been granted. While a casual reading of the evidence would seem to justify this contention, we are clear, after a more careful investigation of the record, that this case is easily distinguishable from the Kendrick Case, and that the verdict returned by the jury was not unwarranted. In a case of this sort the intention of the accused is always for the jury. A contrary rule prevails from that holding in homicide cases, and there is no presumption of an intent to kill from the unlawful use of a deadly weapon. Having this rule in view, we think the jury were authorized to infer, from the short distance which separated the prosecutor and the accused, and the fact that the former was shot only in the arm, that there was no intention on the part of the accused to commit a homicide. As before stated, there was ample warrant for a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to murder; but such a verdict was not demanded, nor was the acquittal of the accused the only alternative for the jury. The jury might well have had a reasonable doubt of the intention to kill, which is an essential element of the crime of assault with intent to murder, and yet have been satisfied that the shooting was not justifiable, and upon that hypothesis it was entirely proper for them to return a verdict of guilty of shooting at another. But even if this were not so, the accused would have no reasonable ground to complain of the verdict rendered, or of the charge of the court on this branch of the law, to which exception is taken, for it appears from the context of that charge that it was given in compliance with a request made by his counsel in the progress of the trial.

¶ 3. See Criminal Law, vol. 14, Cent. Dig. §§ 1834, 1836.

2. Error is also assigned on the following charges of the court: "In order to determine whether or not the defendant is guilty of assault with intent to murder, you just simply ask yourselves the simple question, would it have been a case of murder if Lanzy [the prosecutor] had died from the shot?" "If this assault had resulted in the death of Lanzy, and under the facts and circumstances disclosed by the testimony in this case and the statement of the defendant, that killing would have been without justification or excuse, in whole or in part—it would have been a malicious killing—and he [the defendant] would have been guilty of murder; and if that is true from the facts and circumstances as disclosed by the testimony of the witnesses and the defendant's statement in this case, and you believe it to be the truth of it, then he would be guilty of assault with intent to murder." We have no hesitancy in holding that both these charges were erroneous. The correct rule on this subject was laid down in the case of Gallery v. State, 92 Ga. 463, 17 S. E. 863, where the exact question now under consideration was decided, and where it was held: "Where death results from the unlawful use of a deadly weapon, the law, by presumption, imputes to the slayer an intention to kill; but, where death does not result, intention to kill is not matter of legal presumption, but matter for inference by the jury. Consequently it narrowed the functions of the jury too much to instruct that 'if, under this indictment, a killing had ensued, and if the crime would have been murder, then the defendant would be guilty of assault with intent to murder.'" In view of the fact, however, that the accused in the present case was not convicted of assault with intent to murder, but merely of the offense of shooting at another, we fail to see how he could have been injuriously affected by these charges, erroneous though they undoubtedly were. It is also to be noted that in a later portion of his charge the court, at the request of counsel for the accused, gave to the jury the correct rule of law as laid down in the Gallery Case, supra, and to that extent the error in the earlier charges will be considered as cured. At all events, error which the result of the trial conclusively shows was not harmful to the complaining party will not be held cause for a new trial.

3. Exception is also taken to the charge of the court to the effect that evidence of alibi, in order to overcome the presumption raised by the law, must be such as to satisfy the jury that the accused "was at a place where it was impossible for him to have committed the crime." It is contended that this charge lays down a stricter rule than that prescribed in the Penal Code of 1895, § 992, which is that alibi, as a defense, involves merely "the impossibility of the prisoner's presence at the scene of the offense at the time of its commission." It is further contended that this was particularly harmful to the accused, because, under the evidence in his behalf, he was not present at the scene of the offense, but was near enough thereto to make his guilt within the limit of possibility. A thoughtful consideration of the reason of the law of alibi as a defense must show that this contention is wholly unsound. Alibi is a physical circumstance, and derives its entire potency as a defense from the fact that it involves the physical impossibility of the guilt of the accused. An alibi which still leaves it possible for the accused to be the guilty man is no alibi at all, for, if he committed the offense, the scene of that offense is the place where he was at the time of its commission, and thus he is not within even the literal meaning of the words of the Code section. The matter of distance from the person assaulted or killed is of slight, if any, importance. It is conceivable that a man could be within a very few feet of another, and yet be so placed as to render his guilt of any crime in connection with him a physical impossibility. If this is proved on the trial, he has established an alibi. On the other hand, it is equally conceivable that a homicide or an assault could be committed, though a great distance intervened between the person assaulting and the one assaulted. The charge complained of accurately sets forth the true rule of law on this subject, and affords no ground for a new trial.

The foregoing practically disposes of every ground of the motion for a new trial which requires discussion here. While, as we have shown, the trial in the court below was not free from errors, taking the record in its entirety, we are constrained to hold that no sufficient cause has been shown for a reversal of the judgment refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 211)

MERCHANTS' & MINERS' TRANSP. CO. v. JACKSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—PERSONAL INJURIES—SAFE PLACE TO WORK—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The charges complained of, when read in connection with the context, could not have been understood by the jury as instructing them that the master was an insurer, or bound to furnish or keep an absolutely safe place in which the servant was to work. There was evidence sufficient to support the verdict for the plaintiff.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Abraham Jackson against the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Jackson sued the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company for damages for personal injuries, alleging that he had been employed to work in the hold of a vessel to move timber, which was lowered through an open hatchway; that it was the master's duty to furnish him a safe place in which to work; that in pursuance thereof a tender had been employed to stand at the hatch to inform those in the hold when any object was to be thrown or lowered therein, so as to give warning and an opportunity to get out of the way of falling objects; that the hatch tender had performed the duty imposed until about 7 o'clock a. m., when the vice principal of the company gave the signal which was customarily used for the purpose of calling all hands from their place of work; that when this whistle blew, and in obedience thereto, the hatch tender left the hatchway open and unguarded; that Jackson, who was in the hold, did not hear the whistle, and did not know of the fact that the hatch tender had been called away; that, in the exercise of ordinary care, and in the discharge of his duty, he remained at work under the opening, and while so engaged another employé threw a heavy object into the hatchway, inflicting serious injury on the plaintiff. The defendant insisted that the injury was occasioned by the negligence of a fellow servant; contended that the hatch tender was present; denied that there was any custom requiring the hatch tender to leave when the whistle was blown; and denied that any whistle was blown, or that the master's alter ego called the hatch tender from the position at which he had been stationed. The company also contended that, if the hatch tender had in fact left, it was in disobedience to the master's orders, which required him to remain at the place selected at the time and place when the injury happened. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant made a motion for a new trial upon the ground that the court charged that the master was bound to furnish a servant with a safe place at which to work, and was bound to keep it safe. In the general charge the court instructed the jury that "It is the duty of the master to provide for his servant a reasonably safe place in which to work, and, to that end, he is bound to make reasonable provision for the protection of the servant against injuries to which he might be exposed while engaged in the work he is employed to perform. If you should find that, in order to discharge the duty due the plaintiff, the defendant placed a hatch tender at the hatchway to give those working in the hold of the ship the necessary warning, and the trucks which fell upon the plaintiff were thrown down the hatchway while the hatch tender was absent in disobedience of the company's instructions, or without its knowledge, and some other co-employé of the plaintiff threw the trucks in the hold, and thereby injured the plaintiff, then the company would not be liable. * * * If the company's hatch tender was actually present and failed to give the plaintiff warning, the company would not be liable, because the injury would then be attributable to the negligence of a fellow servant. * * * Should you find that the hatch tender had absented himself with the knowledge of the company, or because of instructions of the company, then the company would be liable. * * * There is no allegation in this case or proof submitted to show that the company placed a man known to be incompetent at the hatchway as hatch tender, or whom the company ought to have known, in the exercise of ordinary care, to be incompetent. So that, in order for the defendant to make out a complete defense, it is only necessary for it to show that the hatch tender was actually present, or, if not present, that he did not leave the hatch with the knowledge or by the order of the defendant." For a former report of this case, see 118 Ga. 651, 45 S. E. 254.

O'Connor, O'Byrne & Hartridge, for plaintiff in error. Shelby Myrick and B. L. Calding, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. From an examination of the charge as a whole, it is evident that the jury could not possibly have understood the court to instruct them that the master was an insurer, or bound to furnish and keep an absolutely safe place in which the servant was to work. On the contrary, he clearly, explicitly, and pointedly charged that the plaintiff could not recover if the hatch tender was present when the heavy object was thrown into the hold; nor if the hatch tender had negligently or voluntarily abandoned his post of duty, so as not to be in a position to warn the plaintiff when the trucks were thrown into the opening. Taken in its context, the instruction as to the duty of the master to keep the place safe meant that it could not appoint a hatch tender, and then order him away. As a whole, the charge was an admirable presentation of the law contained in Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2611, 2612, in its application to the facts under investigation. There was no error in the charge, and the evidence being sufficient to sustain the verdict, the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 145)

TUCKER v. MAYOR, ETC., OF GRAYSVILLE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CERTIORARI—SERVICE OF WRIT—OMISSION OF CLERK OF COURT—DISMISSAL OF WRIT.

1. The statute requires the clerk to issue the writ of certiorari and enter the same on the docket, but does not make it his duty to hand the writ to the sheriff for service.

2. The statute makes it incumbent upon the plaintiff in certiorari to have the writ served upon the officer whose judgment is sought to be reviewed.

3. If the clerk, at the request of the petitioner, undertakes to perform any act in connection with the service of the writ of certiorari, he does so, not as the agent of the law, but of the petitioner, and the failure or omission of the clerk is to be treated as the failure of his principal.

4. Where, through the mistake of such clerk, the writ is not served within the time required by law, and the officer for this reason fails to answer, the petition must be dismissed by the judge of the superior court.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Catoosa County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

J. S. Tucker was convicted before the mayor, etc., of Graysville of violating an ordinance. A certiorari to review the judgment was dismissed by the superior court, and petitioner brings error. Affirmed.

On July 16, 1903, Tucker was found guilty of violating the ordinance of Graysville requiring its citizens to work on the streets. His petition for certiorari was sanctioned on August 5, 1903. On August 18, 1903, the clerk of Catoosa superior court issued the writ of certiorari, making the same returnable to the next term of the court to be held on February 4, 1904. This was served on the mayor January 25, 1904, less than 15 days before the court met. On this ground the attorney for the town of Graysville moved to dismiss the certiorari, whereupon counsel for petitioner proved by the clerk that two months before court the attorney for Tucker inquired of him whether the certiorari had been served, and, finding that it had not been attended to, "he directed me to have it served at once. I then asked him why he did not serve the papers himself, to which he replied, 'Let the sheriff serve them and get his fee therefor.' I then handed the paper which I thought was the certiorari to the sheriff, and directed him to serve it. He took the paper, which was not the one I intended to give him, but another. Looking through my office about a week before this term of court, I found the certiorari, and at once gave it to the sheriff to serve on the mayor, which he did immediately. Neither the plaintiff in certiorari nor his counsel ever applied for the papers to serve them himself." From the testimony of the sheriff it appeared that the first paper supposed to be the writ of certiorari had been served six or eight weeks before court, and that the real writ had been served only about a week before court convened. On this showing the judge dismissed the certiorari, to which ruling Tucker excepted.

R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiff in error.
W. E. Mann, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. Certioraries and bills of exception intended to review judgments are not treated by our statute as writs or processes which must be served by an officer. Compare Civ. Code, §§ 5547, 4643. The law makes it incumbent upon the complaining party to give notice to his adversary of the sanction of the writ of certiorari and of the time and place of the hearing. Civ. Code 1895, § 4644. The statute requires the clerk of the superior court to issue the writ, and place the same on the docket, but requires nothing further from him. If thereafter he acts at the instance of the plaintiff in certiorari, he does so as agent of the latter, and not as agent of the law. If he gives to the sheriff the wrong paper, it is not a case of misprision of a ministerial officer (Civ. Code 1895, § 5125), but the mistake of the plaintiff's agent, and what he does through his agent is to be treated as though it had been done by himself, and with the same legal consequences as if Tucker by mistake had handed the wrong paper to the sheriff. Civ. Code 1895, § 4643, contemplates that the writ of certiorari shall be delivered to the judge of the lower court by the party applying for the same, his agent or attorney, and this is the usual practice. There may be cases, however, in which the plaintiff might not desire to make this service, and therefore the statute permits it to be done through a sheriff, deputy sheriff, or constable. But this is not a duty incumbent upon the officer until after he has been furnished with the writ by some one acting for the plaintiff. It is not made the duty of the clerk as clerk to hand the papers to the sheriff for service. The case is controlled by Zachery v. State, 106 Ga. 124, 32 S. E. 22, where it was said: "After the writ has been issued, the duty is placed upon the party applying for the certiorari to see that the same is served upon the judge whose decision is sought to be reviewed." The failure to have this done fifteen days before the session of the court to which it was made returnable was not the fault of the officers of the law as such, but the misfortune of the plaintiff in certiorari through the omission of one acting as his agent.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 199)

GRANT v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — MALICIOUSLY DESTROYING BRIDGE — INDICTMENT — PROOF — VARIANCE.

1. An indictment charging the accused with willfully and maliciously cutting and destroying a bridge alleged to be the private property of four persons is not supported by proof showing that only one of the parties named had any interest in the bridge, and that he claimed only an easement therein.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Isaac Grant was convicted of destroying a bridge, and brings error. Reversed.

W. B. Sloan, F. M. Johnson, and H. H. Dean, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Charters, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The indictment charged that the accused did, on a named day, "willfully and maliciously injure and destroy a certain bridge on a private road leading from Bolding's Bridge and Bark Camp to the Rocky Ford Road; said bridge being the property of D. M. McKinney, William Grant, W. R. Smith, and J. T. McKinney." On the trial it appeared from the evidence that the bridge had been built at the place named by the parties who were alleged in the indictment as its owners, but that at the time of its destruction the road was used by D. M. McKinney, T. L. Robinson, Wm. A. Latham, and Dr. McKinney; that it was used for a mill road, and as a nearer way by which the parties named could go to church; that this private road had been located approximately where it was at the time of the trial for more than 20 years; and that it had been maintained at that place for about 5 years prior to the time the indictment was returned. The land upon which the bridge was built did not belong to the parties who built it and who were alleged to be its owners, but the owner of the land did not object to the building of the bridge. The bridge was cut down in August, 1902, having been built about two years prior to that time. It was shown that the accused admitted cutting down the bridge, but claimed at the time that he owned the land on which it was built, that it was built without his permission, and that it was ruining his land. D. M. McKinney, one of the parties who assisted in building the bridge, testified that none of those who were alleged to be its owners or who built it claimed to own the land on which it was built; that he only claimed "an easement in it for the purpose of this road." The accused was found guilty, whereupon he made a motion for a new trial. In addition to the general grounds, the motion complained that the following charge of the court was error: "If the people mentioned in the bill of indictment, or any one of them, owned the property, that would be sufficient. It would not be necessary for the state to show that every one of them owned it. If they all had a qualified interest in the property, or if any of them had a qualified interest in the property—that is, the bridge—that would be sufficient, so far as ownership is concerned."

The indictment was based on Pen. Code, § 729, which provides: "All other acts of willful and malicious mischief, in the injuring or destroying any other public or private property not herein enumerated, shall be misdemeanors." As has been seen, it was alleged that the bridge in question was "the property of D. M. McKinney, William Grant, W. R. Smith, and J. T. McKinney." The evidence showed that the bridge was built by these parties, but that it was used by a community of persons other than those named as owners. From the evidence as a whole, it appears that the road was a way used by certain persons in the community as a convenience for going to church and to mill. The bridge which the accused was charged with having destroyed was built on the land of another, who had nothing to do with its erection. It was in no sense the private property of its builders. They were not in possession of it. Under the laws governing private ways, they may have had the right to travel on the road and to cross the bridge, but neither could be said to be their property. The state having alleged private ownership of the bridge in the four parties named in the indictment, it was necessary, before the accused could be legally convicted, to prove that they owned it; and it is needless to say that this is not done by proving that one of the parties named had an easement in the bridge.

This case is clearly distinguishable from that of Castleberry v. State, 62 Ga. 442. There the accused was indicted for cutting down a dam which let water into a ditch, through which it was conveyed for mining purposes. The indictment alleged that the property was that of one John A. Parker. The evidence on the trial showed that the title was in a corporation, all the stock of which belonged to Parker, and he was in actual possession of the property. The fact of his possession would of itself have supported the allegation of ownership in the indictment, regardless of whether he owned the property or not. The case under consideration is totally different as to its facts, and is not in any sense in conflict with the case cited. See Harris v. State, 73 Ga. 41; 2 Whart. Cr. L. (7th Ed.) § 2012. For the reasons stated, we conclude that the charge quoted was error, and that the case should go back for another hearing.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 17)

MILLER v. GEORGIA R. BANK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

JURY TRIAL—DEMAND—PLEADING—SERVICE OF AMENDMENTS—REVIEW—REMISSION OF EXCESS RECOVERY—AFFIRMANCE.

1. In the absence of a demand for a jury trial, all cases filed in the city court of Richmond county are triable by the judge without a jury; and in a case in that court where no such demand was made it is not a ground to reverse a judgment in favor of the plaintiff that the suit "was not founded on such an unconditional contract in writing as would make it legal for the court to render judgment without the verdict of a jury."

2. There is no provision of law for the service upon the defendant of amendments filed to the plaintiff's petition.

3. Where, in a suit brought against him, the defendant files no plea and makes no appearance, and when the case is called for trial the plaintiff amends by making allegations which are necessary to support the prayers of his original petition, these allegations will not be taken as true because not answered, but must be supported by proof.

4. In a case in which no plea is filed by the defendant, where judgment is rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the principal of the debt sued for, together with interest, costs, and attorney's fees, and the judgment is without objection except as to attorney's fees, if the amount of such fees is written off by the plaintiff the judgment will not be reversed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by the Georgia Railroad Bank against M. F. Miller to recover on a note. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Fleming, for plaintiff in error.
Jos. B. & Bryan Cumming, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. This was a suit in the city court of Richmond county on a promissory note for $10,000 principal, dated January 17, 1903, and providing for the collection of 10 per cent. attorney's fees in the event the amount of the note was not paid when due. The original petition alleged that prior to the execution of the note the defendant had procured to be conveyed to the plaintiff as security for all existing and future indebtedness due by her to it a described tract of land, and prayed for a judgment for the principal and interest of the note and for attorney's fees. It contained no allegation, however, that 10 days' written notice had been given the defendant of the plaintiff's intention to sue, as provided by the act approved December 12, 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 53; Van Epps' Code Supp. § 6185). The defendant did not file a plea, and did not appear in court when the case was called. At the trial the plaintiff was permitted to amend its petition by alleging that simultaneously with the execution of the security deed to the plaintiff it had executed and delivered to the defendant a bond to reconvey the premises on payment of the debt; and, further, "that the defendant had ten days' written notice of plaintiff's intention to bring suit upon the note described in the petition." The plaintiff introduced in evidence the original note sued on "and the original agreement as to waiver, filing," etc., and the court, without further evidence, rendered judgment in its favor for the principal, interest, and costs, and also for $500 attorney's fees; the judgment providing for a special lien on the property described in the deed referred to in the petition. The defendant brought the case to this court by bill of exceptions, complaining (1) that the suit was not founded on such an unconditional contract in writing as would justify the rendition of a judgment without the verdict of a jury, for the reason that the petition prayed for attorney's fees, and there was no proof that notice had been given the defendant as required by the act of 1900, and for the further reason that the petition also prayed for a special lien against specific property; (2) that the amendments allowed by the judge were never served on the defendant, were never consented to by her or any one representing her, and were allowed without notice of any kind to her; (3) that no evidence was submitted identifying the property against which a special lien was given in the judgment; (4) that no evidence was submitted showing that written notice was served upon the defendant as required by the act of 1900; and (5) that the judgment rendered was for a greater amount of costs than had legally accrued. The last assignment of error was, however, abandoned in this court.

There is nothing in the contention that the judgment complained of could not be lawfully rendered without the verdict of a jury, for by the act establishing the city court of Richmond county (Acts 1880-81, p. 579, § 23) it is expressly provided that all cases shall be tried by the judge without a jury, unless a demand for a jury is made by one of the parties; and no such demand appears to have been made in the present case. The point that the amendments which were allowed by the court were not served upon the defendant is equally without merit, for there is no provision in our law for the service of amendments to pleadings. Service of the original petition is supposed to bring the defendant into court and put him on notice of the nature of the complaint against him, and there is no need to further notify him of any matter which can properly be made the subject of an amendment, except to place it on the records of the court to which he has been summoned. The real question in the present case is whether the court was justified, in the absence of proof that 10 days' notice of the plaintiff's intention to sue had been given to the defendant, in rendering judgment for attorney's fees. Had the original petition alleged that such notice was given, it is clear that the defendant's failure to appear and plead would have dispensed with the necessity for proof on the subject. But the provision of the law that allegations of a plaintiff which are not answered by the defendant will be taken as prima facie true has been expressly held by this court to be not applicable to amendments to the petition. Hudson v. Hudson, 119 Ga. 637, 46 S. E. 874. Since the passage of the act of 1900, attorney's fees cannot be recovered unless the ten-days notice of intention to sue therein required is given. This is a vital element of the suit for attorney's fees, and should be alleged in the petition. It would seem clear, therefore, that although the defendant, by reason of her failure to answer the plaintiff's petition within the time required by law, was cut off from making a defense to the suit, a judgment for attorney's fees could not be had without proof to support the allegation of the amendment that the necessary ten days' notice had been given. Since, however, the defendant filed no plea, and does not contest the validity of the judgment against her for principal, interest, and costs, opportunity will be given the plaintiff to retain so much of the judgment in its favor as is clearly warranted and legal. If, within 10 days after the filing of the remittitur from this court in the court below, the plaintiff will write off from its judgment the sum of $500, recovered as attorney's fees, the judgment is affirmed, otherwise it is reversed.

Judgment affirmed on condition. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 62)

KAVANAUGH & CO. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

CARRIERS—TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS—CONNECTING LINES—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE—LIABILITY OF CARRIER—WAIVER.

1. Civ. Code 1895, § 2298, providing, when there are several connecting railroads under different companies, and goods are intended to be transported over more than one railroad, each company shall be responsible only to its own terminus, and until delivery to its connecting road; that the last company which has received the goods as "in good order" shall be responsible to the consignee for any damage, open or concealed, done to the goods; and that such companies shall settle among themselves the question of ultimate liability—is not, as applied to shipments from beyond the state, repugnant to the clause of the Constitution of the United States conferring on Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states of the Union.

2. The statutory remedy afforded by this section can be waived by special contract between the consignor and the initial railroad, and, when so waived, the consignee's remedy is upon the common-law liability of the carriers over whose lines the shipment is made.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Kavanaugh & Co. against the Southern Railway Company to recover damages for injuries to a shipment of goods. From the judgment, plaintiffs bring a bill of exceptions, and defendant a cross-bill. Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed, and cross-bill of exceptions dismissed.

O'Connor, O'Byrne & Hatridge, for plaintiffs. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant.

EVANS, J. Kavanaugh & Co., sued the Southern Railway Company in the city court of Savannah to recover for damage alleged to have been done to certain apples shipped from County Line, N. Y., to Savannah, Ga. The cause of action was based on the statutory liability of the defendant under Civ. Code 1895, § 2298, as the last connecting carrier receiving the apples "as in good order." The defendant pleaded a special contract with the consignor as waiving this statutory liability, and also set up the defense that the statute was repugnant to the clause of the Constitution of the United States conferring upon Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states. The plaintiff proved the damage to the apples, and that the defendant was the last connecting carrier receiving them "as in good order." The defendant proved the special contract discussed in the opinion. The court directed a verdict for the defendant, and the case is now here upon a bill of exceptions sued out by the plaintiff, and a cross-bill sued out by the defendant.

1. The section of the Code above cited reads as follows: "When there are several connecting railroads under different companies, and the goods are intended to be transported over more than one railroad, each company shall be responsible only to its own terminus and until delivery to the connecting road; the last company which has received the goods as 'in good order' shall be responsible to the consignee for any damage, open or concealed, done to the goods, and such companies shall settle among themselves the question of ultimate liability." The shipment of apples was delivered to the Southern Railway Company, the last connecting carrier, at Alexandria, in the state of Virginia. Its receipt for the apples as in "apparent good order" was equivalent to a receipt for the consignment as in "good order." Forrester v. Georgia Railroad, 92 Ga. 699, 19 S. E. 811. In the case just cited it was held that this section meant that "each of several connecting railroads shall be responsible only to its own terminus and until delivery to the next connecting carrier; but if any company, either actually or constructively, receives a consignment of freight 'as in good order,' it will become responsible even though the goods, before delivery to it, were damaged through the negligence of some other carrier, and it must look to the company actually at fault for reimbursement." Page 703, 92 Ga., page 812, 19 S. E. This was a case of intrastate shipment, and no point was made that the statute attempted to regulate commerce between the states. The power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is plenary and exclusive. No fixed rule can be prescribed, defining what will amount to a regulation of commerce. "Legislation, in a great variety of ways, may affect commerce and persons engaged in it without constituting a regulation of it, within the meaning of the Constitution." Sherlock v. Ailing, 98 U. S. 103, 23 L. Ed. 819. In the case of Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 488, 24 L. Ed. 547, Chief Justice Waite said: "The line which separates the powers of the states from this exclusive power of Congress is not always distinctly marked, and oftentimes it is not easy to determine on which side a particular case belongs. Judges not unfrequently differ in their reasons for a decision in which they concur. Under such circumstances it would be a useless task to undertake to fix an arbitrary rule by which the line must in all cases be located. It is far better to leave a matter of such delicacy to be settled in each case upon a view of the particular rights involved." If the statutes of a state are for the purpose of facilitating the safe transportation of goods, without undertaking to regulate commerce or to interfere in any manner with the right of the parties to fix their liability by contract, they will be upheld, notwithstanding they may have an indirect or remote effect upon commerce. "A statute is in no just sense a regulation of commerce which does not undertake to impose any tax upon the company, or to restrict the persons or things to be carried, or to regulate the rate of tolls, fares, or freight. A state may enact a statute, the object and effect of which are to make it more sure that railroad companies shall perform the duty resting upon them, by virtue of their employment as public carriers, to use the utmost care and diligence in the transportation of passengers and goods." C., M. & St. P. Ry. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 18 Sup. Ct. 289, 42 L. Ed. 688. The above-quoted section of our Code imposes no burden on the carrier. It does not require the carrier to accept goods upon specific terms. It contains no restriction upon the parties to contract. No right or duty of the carrier which may properly arise from contract with the shipper is modified or abridged. There is no alteration of the rule of liability of railroad companies as common carriers as the same existed in this state at the time of the adoption of this section of the Code. The "only change which this statute makes is to give the consignee a remedy against the last road receiving the goods 'as in good order' which he might not have had before the adoption of this section of the Code. This is a cumulative remedy existing and established in addition to those remedies which he had already." Falvey v. Georgia R. R., 76 Ga. 600, 2 Am. St. Rep. 58. This additional remedy is afforded through the medium of a rule of evidence prescribing the probative value of a voluntary admission.

If the goods are in good order when received by the last connecting carrier, and are negligently damaged by it, the liability would exist independently of the statute. The delivering carrier, under such circumstances, would be liable to the consignee, although the act of negligence causing the damage may have occurred in another state. The last connecting carrier is not bound to accept as in good order freight which is already damaged. If the goods are damaged, he may so specify in his receipt, and be protected. He has full control over the matter, and, if he knowingly accepts goods which are damaged, receipting therefor "as in good order," acceptance on such terms might be construed as an assumption of the previous carrier's liability. Conduct like this would at least lead to confusion in the endeavor to fix the responsibility for damage. The consignee would be put to great disadvantage in ascertaining which of a large number of connecting carriers might be responsible for damage to freight. The carriers ought to know in the first instance where to fix responsibility for damage resulting from the negligent handling of freight. If the last carrier issues its token that no damage to the goods occurred before they were received by it, can it be said that a legislative enactment ordaining the conclusiveness of such an admission is in any wise a measure regulating commerce? The Legislature may provide the nature and extent of the legal presumption to be deduced from a given state of facts. Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 17 Sup. Ct. 282, 41 L. Ed. 677. Section 2298 affords a remedy to the consignee based upon an admission of the last carrier. It does not create any new liability. At common law the carrier could only excuse nondelivery by showing it was prevented from compliance with its obligation to deliver by the act of God or the public enemy. If the goods are received in good order, the duty is to deliver in good order. Under this statute the carrier may defend by showing the goods, though apparently in good order, were in fact damaged before their receipt by the initial carrier. Central R. R. v. Rogers' Sons, 57 Ga. 336. Or the carrier may excuse itself by showing the damage resulted from inherent defects, such as decay, unmixed with negligence on the part of the carrier. Forrester v. Georgia R. R., 92 Ga. 699, 19 S. E. 811. This last defense is likened to the act of God. In the absence of the statute under review, the carrier could dispute the truth of the statement in the receipt that the goods were in good order when received by it. The statute declares, however, that the carrier making the admission shall be bound by it; the evident purpose being, not to fix a new liability, but to give a remedy to the consignee to recover on an admission that the goods were in good order, irrespective of their actual condition when received. The carrier is not hurt. If its admission is true, its liability would exist at common law. If the admission is not true, the ultimate liability can be settled among the connecting railroads. We are constrained to hold that this section is not such a regulation of commerce as to be void because of its opposition to the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution.

2. A common carrier is not bound to issue a bill of lading for transportation of freight beyond its own terminus; and, if it does so, it may stipulate as a condition to the undertaking that its liability shall extend only to injuries occurring on its own lines. Central R. R. v. Avant, 80 Ga. 195, 5 S. E. 78; R. & D. R. Co. v. Shomo, 90 Ga. 498, 500, 16 S. E. 220. A limitation of its legal liability as a common carrier cannot be accomplished by any entry on the receipt given, but must be the subject-matter of a special contract. Civ. Code 1895, § 2276. And if the contract had been executed in Georgia, it would not be binding unless signed by the shipper. But the contract was executed and partly performed in the state of New York, and the record discloses that by the law of the state of New York the mere acceptance by the shipper of a bill of lading containing a limitation makes a valid contract. Under the New York law, in the absence of fraud, concealment, or improper practice, the party receiving a bill of lading is presumed to have assented to all its stipulations, not unusual and unreasonable, limiting its common-law liability as carrier. Kirkland v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 171, 20 Am. Rep. 475; Belger v. Ex. Co., 51 N. Y. 166. The bill of lading embraced the following stipulations: "1st. No carrier or party in possession of all or any of the property herein described shall be liable for any loss thereof, or any damage thereto by leakage, breakage, chafing, loss in weight, changes in weather, heat, frost, wet or decay. 2nd. No carrier is bound to carry said property by any particular train or vessel, or in time for any particular market, or otherwise than with as reasonable dispatch as its general business will permit. 3rd. No carrier shall be liable for loss or damage not occurring on its own road or its portion of the through route, nor after said property is ready for delivery to the next carrier, or to consignee." This bill of lading having been executed and partly performed in the state of New York, these stipulations were binding on the shipper to the same extent as if he had expressly assented to the same by a special contract. Being a valid contract under the law of the state where executed and partly performed, it is enforceable in this state. This contract is inconsistent with the liability imposed on the last connecting carrier by section 2298 of the Civil Code of 1895, and the defendant pleaded the same to the statutory liability fixed in this section of the Code. The consignee's remedy in such a case is to sue the carrier causing the injury. His right to sue the last connecting carrier receiving the goods "as in good order," irrespective of causing the damage, has been waived by the special contract of his consignor. An action framed under section 2298 of the Civil Code of 1895 cannot be converted into a suit upon the common-law liability for negligence. The liability in the first instance is statutory, and in the other it exists at common law. Exposition Cotton Mills v. W. & A. R. R. Co., 83 Ga. 441, 10 S. E. 113; Columbus & Western Ry. Co. v. Tillman, 79 Ga. 607, 5 S. E. 135. The evidence showing a special contract in effect waiving the liability fixed by the statute, the court properly directed a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed. Cross-bill of exceptions dismissed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 38)

RUSSELL v. BRUNSWICK GROCERY CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

GARNISHMENT—CLAIMANT'S BOND—INSTRUCTIONS—DELIBERATIONS OF JURY—TAKING PAPERS TO JURY ROOM—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. A husband and wife had the same initials. The husband, L. M. R., was sued, and summons of garnishment served on an insurance company. The garnishee answered, admitting liability on a policy of insurance, but setting up that the policy was issued to L. M. R., the wife, and that it had paid the money due thereon to L. M. R., the wife, upon her giving a bond to dissolve the garnishment, and that it was not, and never had been, indebted to L. M. R., the husband. The plaintiff in the suit traversed the answer of the insurance company, averring that the answer was untrue, in that the policy was not issued to L. M. R., the wife, but was issued to L. M. R., the husband, and that the liability of the insurance company was a liability to the husband, and not to the wife, and the allegation in the answer that the insurance company was indebted to the wife, instead of the husband, was and is untrue. Held: (1) That the traverse submitted an issue of fact, and the court did not err in refusing to strike the same because the traverse formed no issue; (2) that the terms of the bond given by the wife to dissolve the garnishment conformed to Civ. Code 1895, § 4720, providing for dissolution of garnishment by claimants, and the court properly treated the wife as a claimant, and not as a defendant.

2. There was no substantial error in the charges complained of. Any verbal inaccuracies were fully cured by the charge as a whole, which fairly submitted the issues to the jury.

8. It is not cause for a new trial that a verdict rendered in a former trial and indorsed on the pleadings was taken to the jury room—especially so when there was no request to detach, erase, or in some other way conceal the former verdict.

4. The evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Brunswick; J. D. Sparks, Judge.

Action by the Brunswick Grocery Company against L. M. Russell, defendant, and the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company, garnishee. Judgment for plaintiff, and Mrs. L. M. Russell, claimant of the property, brings error. Affirmed.

The Brunswick Grocery Company sued L. M. Russell, and, in aid of the suit, filed its affidavit and bond for process of garnishment. Summons of garnishment issued, and was served on the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company. The insurance company answered that it did not owe the defendant anything, except that the defendant, L. M. Russell, held a policy of insurance for $500 at the date of the service of the garnishment, and that subsequently the garnishee paid this sum to the defendant upon the filing of a bond to dissolve the garnishment. This answer was afterwards amended by the garnishee as follows: The "use of the word 'defendant' in connection with L. M. Russell, the owner of the policy of insurance mentioned in the said answer, and the use of the third personal pronoun in the masculine gender (as 'him') in describing the person to whom said company paid the loss accruing under said policy, was inadvertently overlooked by this deponent in signing the said answer; it, the said answer, having been prepared by * * * the plaintiff's attorney, and this deponent supposing the same to have been drawn in accord with the actual facts of the case, which are as follows: The garnishee did not treat or settle with L. M. Russell, the male, as the creditor of this company or the owner of said policy of insurance, and did not pay him anything at all, and at no time since the service of the said summons of garnishment has it owed or paid him anything, or has it in its possession any money, property, or effects belonging to him; but, on the contrary, this garnishee treated and settled with L. M. Russell, the female, that is, Mrs. L. M. Russell, as the creditor of this garnishee, and the owner of the said policy, and it was to her that this garnishee paid the said sum of money due under the said policy—the five hundred dollars mentioned in the said answer." Whereupon the plaintiff in the case below filed its traverse to the amended answer, averring that "said answer is untrue, in that the policy of insurance referred to in said answer was not issued to L. M. Russell, the female, but was issued to L. M. Russell, the male, and husband of L. M. Russell, the female. The liability of said insurance company was a liability to the husband, and not a liability to the wife, and said answer, wherein said answer avers that it was indebted to the wife, instead of the husband, was and is untrue." Mrs. Russell filed a written motion to dismiss the garnishment proceedings, alleging that she was originally a defendant, and while she was a party defendant executed her bond, as defendant, to dissolve the garnishment, and that afterwards the plaintiff dismissed its case as to her, which action of the plaintiff discharged her and her security from liability on the bond. The bond given by Mrs. Russell recited that the Brunswick Grocery Company had instituted its action in the city court of Brunswick against L. M. Russell, and had sued out summons of garnishment, directed to the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company, and was conditioned as follows: "Now if the said Mrs. L. M. Russell shall pay to the said Brunswick Grocery Company the sum that may be found due to said defendant, upon the trial of any issue that may be formed upon the answer of said garnishee, or that may be admitted to be due in said answer, if untraversed, then this bond to be void." Upon the hearing of this motion, the court held that Mrs. Russell executed her bond as claimant of the fund, and not as a defendant in the suit instituted by plaintiff, and refused to dismiss the garnishment proceedings. Exception pendente lite was taken to this ruling. Mrs. L. M. Russell moved to strike the traverse to the answer because the traverse did not form any issue of fact, and did not allege that there were any assets of the defendant in the hands of the garnishee at the time of the service of the summons of garnishment. The court overruled the motion to strike, and exception pendente lite to the overruling of the motion to strike the traverse was signed by the court.

On the trial of the case, the plaintiff introduced a policy of fire insurance which purported to have been issued on March 20, 1897, in the name of L. M. Russell, as the insured, on a stock of groceries and store fixtures. The agent who issued this policy testified that "Mr. Russell ran a grocery store" located in the building described in the policy, and that "the policy was issued to L. M. Russell." The agent further testified in this connection as follows: "Subsequent to the issuance of the policy, Mr. Russell wanted an indorsement of removal placed on the policy, and wanted it transferred to his wife. I think that was January 15, 1898." He came to my office and said "he wanted it transferred from the corner of Monk and Oglethorpe to the corner of B and H streets, and that he wanted it put in his wife's name, as he owed her some money. I put the removal indorsement on the policy, and was ready to put the other indorsement on it, and asked Mr. Russell what his wife's name was. He said, 'L. M. Russell.' I said: 'Mr. Russell, it is now in the name of L.

M. Russell, and I don't think it is necessary to make any indorsement on it." "It is not my recollection that when he came there to get the removal indorsement he stated the policy should read, 'Mrs. L. M. Russell.' He stated he wanted the policy to secure his wife; that he owed his wife money, and he wanted the indorsement made in her name. And I was prepared to make the indorsement, when he told me his wife's name was L. M. Russell, and I told him that I didn't think it was necessary to make the indorsement. * * * I certainly granted Mrs. Russell the right to remove the goods, and I would not have hesitated a moment to make the indorsement to her if she had had any other initials, but it was my understanding that the policy was in her name from that date." The witness testified further along the same line; adhering to his statement that he issued the policy to Mr. Russell in the first instance, and that the latter recognized such to be the fact when he subsequently asked that it be transferred to his wife as security for a debt he owed her. Witness also stated he did not remember who paid the premium on the policy, but thought that Mr. Russell did, and that the policy was delivered to him, he not disclosing that he was "acting for his wife." The president of the plaintiff company testified: Mr. Russell never disclosed, when buying goods from the company, that his wife had any interest in the stock of groceries. After the fire occurred, on Friday or Saturday, the witness asked Mr. Russell "how the matter of the insurance stood, and he said it was about to be settled." Witness asked that the proceeds of the policy be turned over to him, and Russell replied he would see witness about it the next day. Russell subsequently said, "if he did not get the matter adjusted, that he would get the money from somewhere out West and pay" witness, and did not inform him that Mrs. Russell was the holder of the policy.

Evidence was introduced in behalf of Mrs. Russell which tended to support her claim that the policy of insurance was originally issued to her, she furnishing the money to pay the premium, and that she was the owner of the policy at the time the fire occurred. The jury, however, returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff company. Mrs. Russell filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and she thereupon caused a writ of error to be sued out to this court.

Alvan D. Gale, for plaintiff in error.
Krauss & Shepard, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. 1. A very sharp issue of fact was made by the traverse to the garnishee's answer. It was admitted that the insurance company, being indebted to L. M. Russell on a policy of insurance, had paid over to Mrs. L. M. Russell, on her giving a bond to dissolve the garnishment, the amount due thereon. The husband's name was L. M. Russell. The wife's name was L. M. Russell. The answer of the garnishee alleged that the policy was issued to the wife, and the money was due to her. The traverse denied the policy was issued to the wife, but averred that it was issued to the husband, and the money was due to him. The traverse was drawn to meet the answer, and presented the issue which the judge submitted to the jury. The condition of the bond given by Mrs. Russell to dissolve the garnishment is in the exact language of section 4720 of the Civil Code of 1895, providing for the condition of bonds given by claimants to dissolve garnishments. The court properly held that she had dissolved the garnishment as claimant of the fund, and not as defendant in the original suit.

2. The court fairly submitted the real and only issue in the case to the jury. That issue was whether the policy of insurance had been issued to the husband and was his property, or had been issued to the wife and was her property. Throughout the entire charge this issue was made clearly to appear. While the charge of the court may contain an irrelevant and immaterial rule of evidence, and a few verbal inaccuracies, such as using the word "testimony" where the word "evidence" would be more technically accurate, yet, taken as a whole, the issue was fairly submitted to the jury, and these verbal inaccuracies, construed in the light of the whole charge, were not calculated to mislead or confuse the jury.

3. The verdict of the jury in the first trial was indorsed upon the traverse, and was not concealed or erased when the papers were given to the jury. The judge certifies that no request was made to detach or conceal the former verdict. If a request had been made, the judge would have probably complied with it. The omission to conceal from the jury the verdict previously returned in the case seems to have been a clear inadvertence. Each juror made affidavit that he was not influenced by the former verdict, but that his verdict was based solely on the evidence given on the trial now under review. The inadvertent sending to the jury room pleadings containing a verdict formerly rendered in the same case by a prior jury will not be sufficient ground for vacating a verdict, unless some harmful result is shown. Southern Ry. Co. v. Coursey, 115 Ga. 602 (1), 41 S. E. 1013; Shuman v. Smith, 100 Ga. 415, 28 S. E. 448; Ga. Pacific Ry. Co. v. Dooley, 86 Ga. 300, 12 S. E. 923, 12 L. R. A. 342.

4. The evidence was conflicting. The plaintiff company sold its goods to the husband, and very probably some of these very goods were covered by the policy of insurance; the storehouse was rented to the husband; and the testimony of the insurance agent who issued the policy very strongly suggests conviction that he was dealing with the husband when he wrote the policy of insurance. This is the second verdict for the plaintiff; the trial judge approved it; and, no material error of law having been committed, this court will not disturb the judgment of the trial court.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 183)

HALE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

FORGERY—MISSPELLING NAME OF OSTENSIBLE SIGNER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. The essence of forgery is the making of a false writing with the intent that it shall be received as the act of another than the party signing it, and the misspelling of the name of the ostensible signer will not prevent the act from being a forgery.

2. The evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

A. C. Hale was convicted of forgery, and brings error. Affirmed.

S. O. Crane, for plaintiff in error. O. D. Hill, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. 1. The alleged forged check purports to have been signed by J. A. Grier. The witness offered by the state to show the falsity of the check was J. A. Greer, who spelled his name "Greer." There was testimony that the defendant stated the alleged maker was a commissionman, and J. A. Greer, the witness, did a commission business in the locality where defendant uttered the check as true. Objection was made to receiving the check in evidence because it was signed "J. A. Grier," as maker, and the state's witness to prove the alleged forgery was named J. A. Greer, and there was no proof that J. A. Grier had not made and signed the check. The court admitted the check in evidence. The false making of the writing, the intent to defraud, and the tendency and capacity of the writing to prejudice the right of another person, are the essential ingredients in the crime of forgery. Whether spelled "Greer" or "Grier," the pronunciation of the name is the same, and the evident tendency of the writing is to prejudice the right of another. In cases of counterfeiting, the similitude of the false writing to the genuine should appear, but in forgery the essence of the wrongful act is the execution of the writing with intent that it shall be taken as the act of some other than the person signing. It is not at all necessary there should be a resemblance between the forged and genuine signatures. If the name affixed to the forged instrument be such as to indicate a given individual's name is intended, it is immaterial that the true name is misspelled. Thus it was held in North Carolina that a forged order signed "J. M. Hawwood" was such a false writing that from its nature and the course of business it might deceive another as having been executed by "J. M. Haywood." State v. Covington, 94 N. C. 913, 55 Am. Rep. 650. A duebill signed "Mr. Daniel Threet," if forged or uttered with intent to deceive in the neighborhood in which one "Daniel Thweatt" lives, will support an indictment for forgery. Gooden v. State, 55 Ala. 178. These and other authorities are to the effect that the misspelling of the name of the ostensible signer will not prevent the act being a forgery.

2. Forgery and falsely uttering as true a forged instrument may be charged in the same count. Thomas v. State, 59 Ga. 784. It is essential to a conviction for uttering a forged paper that it must be published as true, when the party knew it to be fraudulent, and with intent to injure some one. These elemental constituents of the offense were proved in the present case. Carpenter, the person named in the indictment as the party to whom the check was uttered as true, was actually defrauded in the sale of his groceries, and paying the cash difference between the purchases made by the accused and the face value of the check. The accused represented to Carpenter that the check was given to him for work done for Greer. The accused sought to establish an alibi, but relied on no other defense. If, as the jury was warranted in finding, he was really the person who uttered the check, his knowledge of the forgery might well have been inferred from his simulating the name of Johnson, when he claimed to be the holder of it; his presentation of the check after banking hours; his false statement that he had worked for Greer, a commissionman, who had given him the check too late for him to get the money on it, and that it was Saturday night, and he was obliged to get the check cashed in order to buy some groceries for immediate use. The verdict of the jury has the sanction of the trial judge, and, as no error of law was committed, the verdict will not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 9)

McELMURRAY v. BLODGETT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

MORTGAGES—SALE WITH RIGHT TO REPURCHASE—PRACTICE—DEMURRER—RES ADJUDICATA.

1. Upon its merits, this case is controlled by the decision in Felton v. Grier, 35 S. E. 175, 109 Ga. 320, which is conclusive.

2. Even if there was any error in allowing the answer to the amendment to the petition, on the ground that it was not filed within a reasonable time after the amendment was allowed, the error was harmless, for the reason that there was no evidence offered to prove the allegations of the amendment, and the failure to answer the same would not have the effect of admitting the truth of the averments therein contained.

3. The decision on the demurrer to the amendment did not necessarily involve the construction of the paper which was the foundation of the controversy.

4. There was no error in granting a nonsuit. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; W. T. Gary, Judge.

Action by F. L. McElmurray, as administrator, against C. S. Blodgett. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

On March 8, 1900, Elvira Marshall presented to Hon. E. L. Brinson, then judge of Richmond superior court, her petition, which sets out that on July 9, 1888, she conveyed a certain lot of land to a loan company to secure a loan, repayable in 120 months, in monthly installments of $4.50, the entire amount called for being $540, and the company gave her bond to reconvey on repayment; that up to July, 1895, she had repaid $340, but was $33 in arrears, learning which, one Blodgett, her grandson, proposed to her to pay off the arrears, and lend her $10, if she would transfer the bond to him to secure him for these amounts and anything further he might pay out for her on the loan, she to have the right to redeem the bond at any time within five years by repaying him any amounts so paid out by him, and 8 per cent. interest; that she agreed to this, and on July 3, 1895, to effectuate the same, transferred the bond to him, and executed with him an agreement which recites that he "has purchased from" her, for $10, the bond, and that if, at any time within five years from date of the agreement, she "desires to purchase back from him his interest under said bond for titles or to the property itself," and shall repay the $10 and all paid by him on the loan or property, with 8 per cent. interest, then he "gives her the option to purchase back"; that the bond was transferred by a transfer indorsed thereon, and absolute on its face, and the contemporaneous agreement was separately drawn; that his conduct in having the papers separately drawn, so that on the face of the bond he seemed absolute owner thereof and could thereby obtain title to the property, was a fraud upon her, for reasons stated; that under the agreement he advanced her $200, balance due on the loan, and on its repayment obtained on July 10, 1898, a deed to the property from the company, which saw only the absolute transfer of the bond when presented by him, and knew nothing of the contemporaneous agreement; that for some time after obtaining the deed he did not disturb her possession, but finally claimed the property as absolutely his thereunder, and on March 5, 1900, swore out a dispossessory warrant against her, whereunder a constable was about to eject her; that he was seeking to sell or make other disposition of the property, which, under his recorded deed, he could do to some innocent purchaser, to her irreparable injury, he being a mere day laborer and wholly insolvent; that she was not due him more than $300 under their agreement, whereas the property was well worth $800; and that she had no adequate legal remedy in the premises. Wherefore she prayed that the warrant be enjoined, and that Blodgett be enjoined from making any disposition of the property or interfering with her possession or enjoyment thereof, and be decreed to convey it to her on payment of what might be justly due him under their agreement, and for general relief. The court sanctioned the petition, and restrained him and the constable as prayed.

On March 24, 1900, Blodgett filed his answer, which admits the transfer and agreement, and says "that she transferred to him said bond for titles, and signed said written agreement, marked 'Exhibit A,' attached to her petition, as security for all amounts that this defendant should have to pay on her account to said investment company, and for the purpose of redeeming the land"; admits that the company had made him a deed, but sets up that he had advanced her more than $200, and alleges that she "is indebted to him in the sum of $462.97, with 8 per cent. interest from March 19, 1900, an itemized statement of said account being attached," which account is in the shape of a bill, "Elvira Marshall to Charles Blodgett, Dr.," and contains divers items of debit, and a credit of "Amts. received from Elvira Marshall," and shows a balance of "Total amt. due up to March 19, '00—$462.97"; denies insolvency or fraud, or that he is her grandson or is contemplating any disposition of the property, or that it is worth $800, averring its value to be about $450; and admits swearing out the warrant, but avers it was done because she had failed "to reimburse him" and was injuring the property; and prays judgment against her for the $462.97.

On April 17, 1901, defendant filed an amendment to his answer, which strikes from this allegation thereof: "That she transferred to him said bond for titles, and signed said written agreement marked 'Exhibit A,' attached to her petition, as security for all amounts that this defendant should have to pay on her account to said investment company, and for the purpose of redeeming the land."

On June 1, 1900, Elvira Marshall died, and on April 17, 1901, A. S. Ulm, then her administrator, filed an amendment to his intestate's petition. This amendment alleges: (1) That at the time of the agreement of July 3, 1895, Blodgett was well aware that, by the terms of her contract with the loan company, Elvira was entitled to the possession of the land. (2) That the agreement of July 3, 1895, was not an absolute sale of the bond for title, but simply a hypothecation thereof to secure Blodgett for what he might pay out for Elvira thereunder, and the right of possession of the land was still to remain in Elvira. (3) That if Blodgett had, under said agreement, any right to obtain a deed to himself, the deed was simply a security, as the bond had been. (4) That from date of the agreement up to February, 1900, Elvira was in continuous, undisturbed possession of the property, living and keeping store in one house thereon, and renting out another, but about latter date, by reason of the infirmities of age and approaching blindness, became unable to conduct her store, and removed to a daughter's, intending to rent the store out; that immediately thereafter Blodgett set up a claim that the property was his absolutely, and by such claim prevented her from renting out the store, and intimidated her tenants in the other house from paying her rent, whereby, her daughter being only a poor washer-woman, and only able to afford her shelter, she was in a distressed and destitute condition; and, while in this state, Blodgett swore out the dispossessionary warrant against her, and, to obtain means of subsistence and legal aid to defend herself, she was compelled to sell two $40 shares in the loan company, all the property she then had; and that said warrant was sworn out maliciously and without probable cause, Blodgett then well knowing that Elvira was not his tenant, and did not owe him $250, or any part thereof, as rent arrear, as he deposed. (5) That at the hearing on the rule nisi, Blodgett did not attempt to sustain the warrant, but dismissed the same, whereupon Elvira, on April 9, 1900, rented out the store at $5 per month till October 1, 1900, to a tenant, whom she put in possession, and from whom she received the rent for April. (6) That on learning of such renting, on April 10, 1900, Blodgett, by his claim that he owned the property absolutely, and by threats of eviction, intimidated her tenant in the store and her other tenants into attorning and paying rent to him, thereby totally depriving Elvira of any income from the property. (7) That being thus harassed, and deprived of all her property and means of subsistence, Elvira succumbed to grief and privation, died on June 1, 1900, in utter indigence, and was buried at the public expense. (8) That continuously since May 1, 1900, Blodgett has tortiously held possession of the property, and received its rents, of the value of $120 per year. (9) That by his tortious dispossession and usurpation of rents during Elvira's lifetime, defendant profited, whereby a right of action to recover damages therefor in this action accrued to her, and has survived to her administrator. (10) That, by like retention and usurpation since Elvira's death, a like right has accrued to her administrator. (11) That the said damages to Elvira are $200 actual and $200 punitive damages. (12) That said damages to her administrator are $200 actual and $200 punitive damages. (13) That Blodgett has acted in the premises in bad faith, and has been stubbornly litigious, and put Elvira and her administrator to unnecessary trouble and expense, to wit, counsel fee of $60. (14) That plaintiff amends the prayer by praying damages actual, punitive, and expenses of litigation, as above stated, and that the property be decreed property of Elvira's estate, and, if debt be found against, and no damages for, plaintiff, the property be sold, the debt paid, and the residue turned over to plaintiff.

On April 18, 1901, defendant filed his demurrer to the petition as amended on the grounds: (1) No cause for action. (2) Amendment sets forth new and distinct cause of action. (3) Joinder of causes ex contractu and ex delicto. (4) No tender. (5) No compliance with agreement of July 3, 1895, alleged. (6) Said agreement "shows on its face that it was an option to purchase land, and that the time limit therein specified, to wit, July 3, 1900, has expired," without Elvira or her administrator exercising the same. (7) That "said contract or option was a personal one, and was limited to Elvira Marshall only, and was not to be assigned or devised, and her administrator cannot exercise the right therein given." (8) That "said bond for title and said agreement show upon their faces that they were not given as security for a debt—that Marshall owed no debt to Blodgett—but said exhibits show a bargain and sale, with a contemporaneous agreement to repurchase in Marshall." (9) "Defendant specially demurs to paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 of said amendment, upon the ground that these counts sound in tort and ask for punitive damages, and that said items of damage are not recoverable in this action, the same being founded on a contract."

On February 21, 1902, the court rendered judgment on the demurrer: "Said grounds of demurrer numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 are hereby overruled. The grounds of demurrer numbered 2 [3?] and 9 are hereby sustained, and all claims for punitive damages alleged in plaintiff's petition are hereby dismissed and stricken." Neither party excepted to this judgment.

On April 23, 1903, defendant filed an answer to the above-stated amendment of April 17, 1901, which answer is: "(1) That he is not prepared to admit the truth of the allegations as contained in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of plaintiff's amended petition, and respectfully prays that he be required to prove each and every one of the same. (2) That paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 of said petition having been stricken on demurrer, defendant does not feel called upon to answer the same." On the next day, April 29, 1903, the cause came on for trial before Hon. Wm. T. Gary, then judge, and, before the introduction of any testimony, defendant moved to amend his above-stated answer of April 23, 1903, by striking therefrom paragraph 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(1) That for lack of sufficient information, he is not prepared to admit or deny the truth of the allegations contained in paragraph 1 of the amended pe-tion. (1a) That he denies the truth of the allegations contained in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the amended petition." Plaintiff moved to strike above-stated answer of April 28, 1903, on the grounds (a) that the same was not a legal answer, inasmuch as it did not admit or deny the allegations of the amendment of April 17, 1901, to the petition, or state that defendant could neither admit nor deny those allegations, for want of sufficient information; and (b) that said answer was not filed until April 28, 1903. Plaintiff at the same time objected to the amendment offered on April 29, 1903, objecting generally to said amendment, as a whole, on the grounds (a) that there was nothing to amend by, inasmuch as the answer of April 28, 1903, sought to be amended, was not a legal answer, as it did not admit or deny the allegations of the amendment of April 17, 1901, to the petition, nor state that, for lack of sufficient information, defendant could neither admit nor deny the same, and was not filed till April 28, 1903; and (b) that it was not duly verified—and objected specially to paragraph 1 of said proposed amendment on the ground that it failed to give any reason for, or explanation of, defendant's ignorance of the matters therein referred to. Defendant then verified said proposed amendment "that he did not omit the facts set out in the above amendment to the answer for the purpose of delay, and that the answer is not now filed for delay." The court overruled said motion to strike the answer filed April 28, 1903; and overruled said objections to said proposed amendment to said answer, and allowed said amendment. These rulings were excepted to, and error is assigned thereon.

Salem Dutcher, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Barrett, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. 1. The case, upon its merits, turned upon the construction of a paper. The plaintiff contended that the agreement contained therein was simply one whereby one of the parties agreed to transfer to the other an interest in property to secure the payment of a debt. The defendant contended that the paper contained an absolute transfer of the title, with the right reserved to repurchase the property within a given time upon the payment of certain amounts. At the date of the trial the time specified in the contract had expired. Such being true, the case is brought within the principles laid down in the case of Felton v. Grier, 109 Ga. 320, 35 S. E. 175, which is directly controlling. The judge therefore did not err in granting a nonsuit, provided the case was in such condition that he could pass upon the merits at the time the motion was made. Whether the case was in such condition depends upon the determination of other questions raised in the record, which will be now decided.

2. It was contended that the court erred in allowing an answer to be filed to an amendment to the petition; such answer not having been filed, as it was claimed, within a reasonable time. It is unnecessary to determine whether the court erred in allowing the answer to be filed, for the reason that, as the amendment to the petition was offered after the appearance term had passed, the allegations of the amendment would have to be proven, even though the defendant had failed entirely to answer it. See Hudson v. Hudson, 119 Ga. 637, 46 S. E. 874. Even if it could be properly held that the court abused its discretion in allowing the answer to be filed, the error was harmless, for the reason that there was no evidence offered to substantiate the allegations of the amendment.

3. It was contended that the nonsuit was erroneous, for the reason that the court, in passing upon the demurrer to the petition, had, in effect, held that the paper over which the controversy arose was an agreement to secure a debt, and not a sale with an option to repurchase. It is well settled that if the court, upon demurrer, holds that the petition sets forth a cause of action, this decision, so long as it stands unreversed, is res adjudicata in the subsequent stages of the case. Kimbro v. Railway Co., 56 Ga. 187 (1); Turner v. Cates, 90 Ga. 742, 16 S. E. 971 (2); Ellis v. Almand, 115 Ga. 336, 41 S. E. 642 (2); Ga. Northern Ry. Co. v. Hutchins, 119 Ga. 505, 46 S. E. 659. It has also been held that a judgment on demurrer, until reversed, concludes the parties on all questions necessarily involved in the decision. Ga. Northern Ry. Co. v. Hutchins, supra. It would seem to follow from this that it would not conclude upon any question not necessarily involved in the decision on the demurrer. When the petition, the amendment, the demurrer, and the judgment on the demurrer are all considered together, it sufficiently appears that the question as to the proper construction of the paper was not necessarily involved in the decision rendered on the demurrer. The demurrer set up, as a reason why the petition should be dismissed, that the paper exhibited thereto contained a contract of absolute sale, with an option to repurchase. The court overruled this ground of the demurrer. As there were allegations of fraud in the petition, which, if true, would have authorized a recovery even if the defendant's construction of the contract was correct, the court, in overruling the demurrer, which was simply holding that the petition set forth a cause of action, did not necessarily pass upon the character of the paper in question.

4. It was contended that the nonsuit was error, for the reason that the defendant had admitted in his answer that the paper which was the foundation of the controversy merely created a security for a debt. If this admission had remained in the answer, it may be that the plaintiff would have been entitled to take advantage of it, either as in the nature of a waiver of the defendant's strict rights under the paper, or as a consent by him that the case might be determined upon that theory, without reference to what was the correct interpretation of the paper. But this portion of the answer was stricken by amendment, and therefore it stood simply as an admission by the defendant as to what was the true interpretation of the paper. Admissions of fact in a pleading can always be taken advantage of by the opposite party, even though the pleading should be stricken or withdrawn. Lydia Pinkham Med. Co. v. Gibbs, 108 Ga. 140, 141, 33 S. E. 945; Cooley v. Abbey, 111 Ga. 443, 36 S. E. 786; Ala. Mid. Ry. Co. v. Guilford, 119 Ga. 523, 46 S. E. 655; Civ. Code 1895, § 5066. This rule, however, has no application where the admission is simply an opinion on the part of the party making it as to the legal effect of a paper. See, in this connection, Baldwin Fertilizer Co. v. Carmichael, 116 Ga. 765, 42 S. E. 1002, and cases cited. If the paper containing the contract is ambiguous or doubtful in meaning, the interpretation placed upon it by one of the parties may, under certain circumstances, be of some importance. But where, as in the present case, the paper is free from ambiguity, and there can be no doubt about its legal meaning, it is immaterial what may have been said by one of the parties, either in court or out of court, as to what the paper meant, when such statement has not been acted upon by the other to his prejudice.

After a careful consideration of the record, we see no reason for reversing the judgment. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 181)

BRADY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

WITNESSES — ATTENDANCE — SUBPENA — CRIMINAL LAW — ABSENCE OF WITNESS — CONTINUANCE.

1. A witness once duly served with a subpoena is required to attend from term to term until the case is tried.

2. Where the court offers to issue an attachment to compel the attendance of a witness who has been summoned for the defendant, and his counsel declines to take the same, but, instead thereof, relies upon the service of a second subpoena, which latter the witness likewise disobeys, there is no abuse of discretion in refusing a continuance on account of the absence of the witness, particularly where it appears that there has already been a continuance on the ground of his absence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Americus; G. R. Crisp, Judge.

Tom Brady was convicted of larceny from a house, and brings error. Affirmed.

Brady was charged with larceny from the house. On the call of the case he made a perfect showing for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness, John Fletcher. From the note by the trial judge it appears that at the August term, 1903, the case was continued on account of the absence of Fletcher, a witness, Lizzie Osborne, being then and there in the courtroom. At the November term, 1903, the case was continued on account of the absence of Lizzie Osborne, the witness Fletcher being present in the courtroom. The court continued the case until the next term, and set it for hearing on Monday of the January term, 1904. It was called as the first case, and counsel for the defendant requested that it be passed until the next day, and later counsel notified the court that John Fletcher was not present, and requested that the case be passed until Wednesday, which was done. The court notified defendant's counsel that he would give him an attachment for Fletcher, "but he didn't take it." It appears from the motion that Fletcher, who had previously been subpoenaed, was served with another subpoena after the case had been assigned to be heard on Wednesday, and that Fletcher had promised that he would be in attendance at that time. The motion also alleged that Fletcher was the only witness by whom the defendant could prove that he was at the house of Lizzie Osborne at the time of the alleged larceny from the ginhouse of the prosecutor, several miles distant. The court overruled the motion to continue, and this, with the general grounds, was assigned as a reason for the grant of a new trial.

Blalock & Cobb, for plaintiff in error. F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., and J. A. Ansley, Jr., Sol., for the State.

LAMAR, J. There had already been one continuance because of the absence of the witness Fletcher. He had been subpoenaed prior to the August term, 1903, and this was sufficient to require his attendance from term to term. When, therefore, he failed to appear on the call of the case at the January term, 1904, he was prima facie in contempt, and subject to an attachment. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5260, 5263. Continuances are only allowed to the diligent (Civ. Code 1895, § 5135), and to those who avail themselves of the means provided by law for compelling the attendance of those by whom facts material to the cause are to be proved. When, therefore, the court of its own motion offered to issue an attachment, and the defendant declined to accept the same, he was lacking in legal diligence. With knowledge that the witness had disobeyed one subpoena, he chose to rely on another, which was no better than that already served. There was no abuse of discretion in refusing the continuance and ordering the case to trial. McRae v. State, 52 Ga. 290; Anderson v. State, 72 Ga. 98; Runnals v. Aycock, 78 Ga. 554, 3 S. E. 657 (3a).

¶ 2. See Continuance, vol. 10, Cent. Dig. § 31.

The testimony for the state showed that the defendant was caught in the very act of stealing seed cotton from the ginhouse of the prosecutor, the evidence was ample to sustain the verdict, and the judgment refusing the new trial must be affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 990)

COMMERCIAL BANK OF AUGUSTA v. WARTHEN et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

CORPORATIONS—MISMANAGEMENT BY OFFICERS—INSOLVENCY—LIABILITY ON SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK—PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE—PARTIES—BANKRUPTCY.

1. One extending credit to a corporation cannot complain of acts of mismanagement on the part of officers and agents of the corporation prior to the time when the credit was extended.

2. While unpaid stock subscriptions are assets of an insolvent corporation for the benefit of its creditors, of which a court of equity will, by proper proceeding in personam, compel payment when the corporation fails or refuses to call for or collect the same, the corporation is a necessary party to such a proceeding.

3. The right of action in a corporation against a defaulting stock subscriber for unpaid subscriptions is a right of action arising upon contract, and on the adjudication of the corporation as a bankrupt passes to the trustee, under section 70, subd. 6, Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3451]. The foregoing is true although the subscriber claims that the subscription has been paid in full and the corporation is contesting that issue with him.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; W. T. Gary, Judge.

Action by the Commercial Bank of Augusta against Thomas Warthen and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Fleming, for plaintiff in error. R. H. Callaway, for defendants in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. On October 1, 1901, the Commercial Bank of Augusta brought suit against W. B. Lamkin and Thomas Warthen, alleging in its petition substantially as follows: In September, 1898, defendants formed a partnership under the name of W. B. Lamkin & Co. for the conduct of the retail grocery business. The capital stock was $5,000, which was furnished by Warthen. After conducting business for a short time as a partnership, Lamkin and Warthen applied for a charter to carry on the business as a corporation under the name of the W. B. Lamkin Company, which charter was granted on November 22, 1898. The capital stock was to be $5,000, of which 10 per cent. was alleged to have been paid in. At the time of the granting of the charter the stock and other assets of the firm were not worth $5, 000, having been diminished by sales at least $2,500; the proceeds having been used in payment of goods bought by the firm. Ten per cent. of the capital stock had not been paid in, as alleged in the petition for incorporation, nor was it thereafter paid in. After the charter was granted, defendants held no meeting and opened no books of subscription; no subscriptions were made by either of the defendants; the charter was never accepted; no rules, regulations, or by-laws were adopted; no subscriptions to capital stock were made, and nothing was paid on account of capital stock. It was agreed between Lamkin and Warthen that Lamkin was to have 1 share of stock and Warthen 49, and that Lamkin was to be president and manager and Warthen vice president. Various acts of mismanagement are alleged, some of which occurred before the plaintiff became a creditor of the corporation, as hereinafter stated; it not appearing when the others took place. In June, 1899, the store and merchandise of the company were destroyed by fire, and after the collection of the insurance money there was in hand about $8,250 in cash. It is alleged that a portion of this sum was misappropriated by the joint action of the defendants. After the fire the business was continued in the same negligent manner as before. On May 16, 1901, the corporation was adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. The trustee, upon taking possession of the effects of the corporation, found it wholly insolvent. The debts were placed at $4,786.55 and assets at $7,500, but were actually sold for only $1,686.83. It is alleged that the losses, insolvency, and bankruptcy were due to the misconduct of the defendants, and their negligent management of the business, and their failure to perform the duties which were required of them by law.

It is alleged that defendants are jointly liable for the sum of $2,000 unlawfully diverted from the assets of the corporation, and for $3,600 drawn out as salary without any vote or corporate action authorizing the same. Defendants were in reality directors of the corporation and trustees for the creditors, and liable for the sums lost through their misconduct and mismanagement. In April, 1901, when the corporation was actually insolvent, and when its assets were worth less than $2,000, petitioner loaned to it the sum of $1,400, though petitioner was not aware of its condition until after the bankruptcy proceedings, nor until that time did it know of the acts of misconduct and mismanagement above referred to. The loan was made on the faith of statements that Lamkin was solvent, and owned property worth $5,000. The money loaned was used by the corporation in its business. Petitioner has proved its claim for $1,400 in the bankrupt court. The prayers are: (1) That defendants be made to account for all sums due by them by reason of the facts alleged; (2) that they be required to replace and make good the $2,000 in cash withdrawn from the assets of the corporation; (3) that they be required to make good all loss and waste occasioned by their negligence, misconduct, and failure to comply with their duty as officers and directors of the corporation; (4) for a judgment for $1,400, besides interest; (5) for general relief and process. The application for a charter by the defendants and the order granting the same were exhibited with the petition. Amendments were allowed containing allegations with reference to misconduct and mismanagement on the part of the defendants, averring that no part of the capital stock of $5,000 was ever subscribed, that the net worth of the partnership stock, which was used as a basis of operation for the corporation was only $1,500, and praying for a judgment against the defendants for the whole of the capital stock, to wit, $5,000, or for a judgment for the difference between that amount and the true value of the assets of the partnership which went into the business of the corporation. Warthen filed a demurrer setting up that the petition alleges no cause of action, that there is no equity in the petition, there is a misjoinder of causes of action and of parties defendant, as well as nonjoinder of defendants, and that plaintiff, having proved its debt in bankruptcy, has no right under the bankrupt act to maintain a separate suit for the collection of its indebtedness. There were other grounds of demurrer, which need not be set forth. The court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the petition. The plaintiff excepted.

1. So far as the petition alleges mismanagement on the part of the defendants in their alleged capacity as officers and directors of the corporation and the withdrawal of assets, it sets forth no cause of action in behalf of the plaintiff. It distinctly appears that the $2,000 alleged to have been withdrawn was so withdrawn before the plaintiff extended credit; and, while there is no distinct allegation that the $3,600 was withdrawn before that time, or that the other acts of mismanagement alleged took place before, it appears inferentially that such is the case, for the petition avers that in April, 1901, when the loan was made, the assets were worth less than $2,000. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the mismanagement of which it complains was at a time when it would result in injury to it. While one extending credit to a corporation may properly complain of fraudulent statements made in reference to the affairs and condition of the corporation at the time the credit is extended, he cannot complain of mismanagement on the part of the officers of the corporation that took place prior to the time that the credit was extended. See, in this connection, Thomp. Lab. Off. & Agts. Corp. p. 460.

2. It is claimed that the petition is maintainable under the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 1856, which declares that "persons who organize a company and transact business in its name before the minimum capital stock has been subscribed for, are liable to creditors to make good the minimum capital stock, with interest." But, even treating the averments of the petition as being sufficient to set forth a liability under this section, is the suit maintainable unless the corporation is a party? This does not seem to be an open question in this court. See King v. Sullivan, 98 Ga. 621, 20 S. E. 76. It is to be noted that in the case of Burns v. Beck, 83 Ga. 471, 10 S. E. 121, from which section 1856 was codified, while no question of parties was raised, the corporation was made a party to the case. See, also, in this connection, Wilkinson v. Bertock, 111 Ga. 193, 36 S. E. 623; Morgan v. Gibian, 115 Ga. 145, 41 S. E. 495; Tichenor v. Williams Pavement Co., 116 Ga. 307, 42 S. E. 505. In Moore v. Ripley, 106 Ga. 556, 32 S. E. 647, the suit was by the receiver of a corporation, which was in law a suit by the corporation. In a proceeding against the corporation a receiver had been appointed, and this receiver, under an order of the court, was proceeding to sue the stockholders for their unpaid subscriptions.

3. There is, however, an additional reason why the judgment sustaining the demurrer was right. Upon the adjudication in bankruptcy the right to bring a suit of the character under consideration vested in the trustee, and this alone was a sufficient reason for sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition. Under the bankrupt act of 1898 the trustee is vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt as of the date he was adjudged a bankrupt, and with all "rights of action arising upon contracts, or from the unlawful taking or detention of or injury to his property." See Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70, subd. 6, 30 Stat. 566 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3451]. There are a number of cases decided under the bankrupt act of 1867 which hold that the right to collect unpaid stock subscriptions passed to the assignee in bankruptcy. See Payson v. Stoeber, Fed. Cas. No. 10,863; Michener v. Payson, Fed. Cas. No. 9,524; Myers v. Seeley, Fed. Cas. No. 9,994; Lane v. Nickerson, 99 Ill. 234. See, also, Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 610, 21 L. Ed. 731; Scovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143, 26 L. Ed. 968. The case of Dutcher v. Marine Bank, Fed. Cas. No. 4,203, 12 Blatchf. 435, is not in conflict with these decisions. It was simply held there that the right to enforce a constitutional or statutory liability on the part of stockholders for debts of the corporation to the amount of the stock held by them did not pass to the assignee in bankruptcy, and it was expressly stated in the opinion that the rule would be different as to unpaid subscriptions to stock, which were assets of the corporation and passed to the assignee. The same distinction is to be noted as to the case of Pfohl v. Simpson, 50 How. Prac. 341. The provisions of the act of 1867 were, however, somewhat broader in their terms than those of the act of 1898. Our attention has been called to but one case under that act which appears to be at all in point—that of In re Crystal Springs Bottling Company, 3 Am. Bankr. R. 194, 96 Fed. 945, a decision by District Judge Wheeler of Vermont. In that case it was held that corporate stock subscriptions are a primary fund for the payment of corporate debts, but a call is necessary before such subscriptions can be collected, and that, where the corporation has gone into bankruptcy, the trustee is the proper one to make the call. It was further held that the court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to order the call and to entertain a suit to enforce the payment. The liability of a stockholder upon his stock subscription depends upon the contract of subscription. There would seem to be no room for question that the right of the corporation to enforce the payment of subscriptions is one arising upon contract. Nor would it make any difference that the stockholder claims to have paid the subscription. The right of action remains the same, and the defense set up raises merely an issue of fact, which can be tried in the suit by the trustee on the contract as well as if the suit had been brought by the corporation. Even if the petition set forth a cause of action at all, it was subject to the objections that the corporation was not a party, and that the suit should have been brought by the trustee in bankruptcy.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except LAMAR and EVANS, JJ., disqualified.

(120 Ga. 45)

WATKINS v. COUNTRY CLUB.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

PRIVATE WAY—OBSTRUCTIONS—PETITION FOR REMOVAL—ADVERSE USER.

1. Where, in a petition to have obstructions removed from an alleged private way, the petitioner based his alleged right to the relief for which he prayed upon seven years' continuous and uninterrupted use of the way, and failed to allege that the land over which the way was claimed was improved land, a demurrer predicated upon such failure was properly sustained. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; W. F. Eue, Judge.

Action by R. S. Watkins against the Country Club. A judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition was affirmed on certiorari to the superior court, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

F. W. Capers, for plaintiff in error. Jas. C. O. Black, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. This was a proceeding before the ordinary of Richmond county to have certain obstructions removed from an alleged private way. The original petition made a case, in behalf of the petitioner, of title by prescription to the way, by reason of 20 years' continuous and uninterrupted user thereof. The respondent to the rule nisi demurred to the petition upon various grounds, two of which have been argued here, viz., because it was not alleged that the way was ever laid out by the petitioner, and because it was not alleged that the owners of the land over which the right of way was claimed ever had knowledge that the way was laid out, used, and enjoyed. Pending this demurrer, the petitioner amended the paragraphs of the petition in reference to the user of the way, "so that said paragraphs when amended [should] read as follows"; that is, that the described way had been used in the manner alleged "for more than seven years," and "for said term of seven years" had been kept open and in repair by the petitioner. The petition as amended was then demurred to upon all the grounds of the original demurrer, and upon this additional ground that the petition, as amended, did not allege that the land over which the right of way was claimed was improved land. The ordinary sustained the demurrer and dismissed the petition. The petitioner carried the case by certiorari to the superior court, where the judgment of the ordinary was sustained. The bill of exceptions before us alleges error in this judgment of the superior court.

Was the petition defective in not alleging that the land over which the way was claimed was improved land? The ground of the demurrer raising the question was not good against the original petition, but, in our opinion, it pointed out a fatal defect in the petition as it stood after it was amended. It will be observed that the amendment, instead of simply adding additional paragraphs to the petition, amended certain paragraphs thereof so as to sweep therefrom the allegations in reference to 20 years' user of the way, and substitute in lieu thereof the allegations of more than 7 years' user. As the amended petition was not sufficient to withstand this ground of the demurrer, we do not deem it necessary to expressly rule upon any of the other grounds taken by the demurrer. But as the two other grounds above indicated have been ably discussed by counsel for the respective parties, and as we have devoted considerable time to the investigation and consideration of the questions raised by them, we will say, in passing, that it seems section 672 of the Political Code, upon which these grounds are based, is intended to apply only to private ways laid out under statutory proceedings. It is apparently intended as a statute of limitation upon the right of the owner of land over which a private way is laid out to have his damages for the subjection of his land to the servitude of the way assessed and paid. That the "six months' knowledge" of the owner of the land, in this section, refers to knowledge of the laying out of a way under the statutory proceedings, seems apparent, when this section is considered in connection with the section which immediately precedes it, which provides that, if a private way is "established" over the wild lands of a person who has no notice of "the proceeding," he may proceed within six months after he receives such notice, and not thereafter, to have his damages assessed. Apparently the word "established," in section 671, and the words "laid out," in section 672, have the same meaning; that is, the laying out of a way under the order of the ordinary. The words "without moving for damages," used in section 672, are certainly not applicable to a private way claimed independently of any proceeding under the statute, and are clearly applicable to a way which has been laid out under the statute. The statute, in reference to the granting of private ways by the ordinary, provides that "if the person * * * over whose land the pass-way is, conceives that he will be damaged thereby, he may proceed to have the damages assessed in the same manner that damages are assessed in case of public roads, and the applicant therefor stands in the place of the county and road commissioners." Section 665. This, in the opinion of the writer, is the "moving for damages" to which section 672 refers. I am not unmindful of the fact that in several cases this court has seemed to construe the provisions of section 672 and of section 678 for the removal of obstructions from private ways together, and to read into the latter, from the former, the provision in reference to "six months' knowledge" on the part of the owner of the land over which the way is located. But after a careful consideration of these cases, I find nothing in either of them which required this construction of the law to be made in order for the court to reach the particular decision announced. In each case the decision was really based upon other grounds. But for the existence of these cases the writer would feel no hesitancy in ruling upon the two grounds mentioned of the original demurrer, in accordance with the views above expressed. But as we have said, in the present case we do not deem it necessary to rule upon any ground of the demurrer except the one which raised the question whether the petition, as amended, was sufficient to show a right of way by prescription, in the absence of an allegation that the land over which the way was claimed was improved land. In our opinion, a private way cannot be acquired over unimproved land by prescription alone, unless the way has been used uninterruptedly for 20 years. It is true that section 678 of the Political Code provides, "Whenever a private way has been in constant and uninterrupted use for seven years or more, and no legal steps have been taken to abolish the same, it shall not be lawful for any one to interfere with such private way." Hence, if this section stood alone, the time of user necessary to acquire a private way over wild or unimproved lands, and the length of user necessary to acquire such a way over improved lands, would be the same, as this particular statute makes no distinction in this respect, but, upon its face, apparently applies to lands of either character. But section 3065 of the Civil Code of 1895, which is the general section in reference to the modes of acquiring the right of private way over the lands of another, provides that it "may arise from express grant; or from prescription by seven years' uninterrupted use through improved lands, or twenty years' use over wild lands; or by implication of law when such right is necessary to the enjoyment of lands granted by the same owner; or by compulsory purchase and sale through the ordinary, in the manner prescribed in this Code." Here the different modes by which a private way may be acquired are specified, and it is expressly provided that 20 years' uninterrupted use is necessary to acquire such a way over wild lands; and the descriptive words "wild lands" are evidently used in contradistinction to the descriptive words "improved lands." Seven years' uninterrupted use will acquire the right of way over improved lands, but 20 years of such use is necessary to establish such right over wild or unimproved lands. Section 678 cannot be construed to mean that 7 years' uninterrupted use of a way over wild or unimproved land will give title to the way by prescription, without bringing it into plain and irreconcilable conflict with section 3065. The provisions of these two sections can stand together by construing the 7 years in the first section to refer to improved lands. They cannot do so if these words are construed to apply also to the user of a way over unimproved lands. As the amended petition based the claim of the petitioner to have the obstructions removed upon 7 years' continuous and uninterrupted user of the way, without alleging that the land over which the way was so used was improved land, the demurrer was well taken, and properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except LAMAR, J., disqualified.

(120 Ga. 23)

MAYOR, ETC., OF CHIPLEY v. LAYFIELD et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—SPECIAL TAXES—IMPROVEMENT OF SCHOOL PROPERTY—SUBMISSION OF QUESTION TO VOTE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. The act approved August 1, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 489), purporting to amend the charter of the town of Chipley, in so far as it authorized the levy of an annual special tax "for the improvement of the school property of the town of Chipley" without submitting to the qualified voters of the municipality the question whether such a tax should be levied for the purpose mentioned, is contrary to Const. Ga. art. 8, § 4, par. 1 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5909), and is therefore void.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Harris County; W. B. Butt, Judge.

Action by U. H. Layfield and others against the mayor and council of Chipley to enjoin the collection of a tax. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants bring error. Affirmed.

W. R. Jones and McLaughlin & Jones, for plaintiffs in error. J. D. Kilpatrick, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. Layfield and others, as citizens and taxpayers, filed a petition against the mayor and council of Chipley, an incorporated town in Harris county, to enjoin the collection of a tax which had been levied by the defendant. At the hearing an injunction was granted as prayed, and the defendant excepted.

It appears that the town of Chipley was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly approved December 9, 1882 (Acts 1882-83, p. 285), and that the charter was amended by an act approved October 6, 1885 (Acts 1884-85, p. 387). In neither the original charter nor the amendment was any authority given for the establishment or maintenance of a public school system. In 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 489), the General Assembly passed an act the title of which was as follows: "An act to amend the charter of the town of Chipley, in Harris county, so as to allow the mayor and council to levy a special tax for school purposes, not to exceed one half of one per cent. per annum, the amount to be raised not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars, and for other purposes." The body of the act purports to amend section 10 of the original charter, defining the powers of the mayor and council, so as to make that section read as follows: "Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that said mayor and council shall have full power and authority to levy and collect a tax upon all and every species of property, real and personal, within the limits of said town (except school and church property), upon banking and insurance capital employed in said town; provided, nevertheless, said tax so levied shall not exceed the state tax on the same species of property or business, except that said mayor and council shall have power and authority, in addition thereto, to levy a special tax of not more than one half of one per cent. per annum upon all taxable property in said town, and all funds arising from said special tax shall be expended under the direction of said mayor and council for the improvement of the school property of the town of Chipley, but the total amount of money raised by said special tax shall not exceed twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500.00), and when this amount shall have been raised, then the tax levied by said mayor and council shall not exceed the rate levied by the state on the same kind of property, and shall cover the total expenses of the town, both for running expenses and for school purposes." It was to enjoin the collection of a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. levied under the provisions of this amendatory act that the present petition was brought.

The Constitution of 1877, art. 8, § 4, par. 1 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5909), provides that authority may be granted to counties upon the recommendation of two grand juries, and to municipal corporations upon the recommendation of the corporate authority, to establish and maintain public schools in their respective limits by local taxation; "but no such laws shall take effect until the same shall have been submitted to a vote of the qualified voters in each county or municipal corporation, and approved by a two-thirds vote of persons qualified to vote at such election." It would seem that this language is so clear that there should be no trouble whatever in ascertaining its meaning; but, as was said by Mr. Justice Crawford in the case of Mayor, etc., of Rome v. McWilliams, 67 Ga. 119, "it is very doubtful whether human legislation can be so framed as to defy the ingenuity of man in reaching, by construction and implication, the right to collect and disburse the public revenues illegally." The title of this act provides for an amendment to the charter of the town of Chipley so as to allow the levy of a tax for school purposes. The body of the act authorizes the levy of this tax every year. Taking the caption of the act and its body, and considering the allegations of the petition and the averments of the answer, we think the court below was justified in finding, as a matter of fact, that this was an attempt on the part of the mayor and council to levy a tax for the support of a school without first submitting to the voters of the town the question whether or not they desired to establish such a school. All that is decided in this case is that there was no authority to levy the tax in question under the terms of an act authorizing such a levy every year. The purpose of the act was clearly to give to the mayor and council authority to raise $2,500 per year for the purpose of supporting a school. The town having attempted to exercise the authority thus given it without the approval of two-thirds of the qualified voters of the municipality, the collection of the tax was unauthorized, for the act could not take effect until approved by the voters, in accordance with the plain provisions of the Constitution.

Nothing embodied in Pol. Code 1895, § 719 et seq., will authorize the levy of such a tax as is proposed in the present case, nor do the decisions of this court in the cases of Mayor, etc., of Rome v. McWilliams, 67 Ga. 106, Fleishel v. Hightower, 62 Ga. 324, and Mayor, etc., of Cartersville v. Baker, 73 Ga. 686, constitute any authority therefor. In their petition, which was under oath, the plaintiffs alleged that the scheme of the defendants was to establish a public school. The an-answer averred that the school sought to be created was a private school. This question of fact was determined by the court in favor of the plaintiffs, and, that being so, there is nothing in any of the cases cited that would authorize a reversal of the judgment enjoining the collection of the tax. In the Cartersville Case it appeared that the charter of the city of Cartersville was amended in 1872, so as to authorize the levy of taxes to aid in building up of schools as the authorities might think proper. The Constitution of 1877 expressly excepted from its provisions all local school systems in existence at the time of its adoption. By that Constitution the right of the city of Cartersville to aid schools was recognized and guaranteed, such right having been granted previously to its adoption. Furthermore, the tax in that case had already been levied and collected. The money was in the treasury, and the purpose of the appropriation was to erect a school building. The case of Rome v. McWilliams, supra, was decided by a divided bench, and hence is not binding as authority on this court; but, even if that were not the case, the purpose of the tax there involved was to carry out the objects for which the city was incorporated—to provide offices for the mayor and councilmen, to build fire-engine houses, and to construct other improvements of a similar character. The case of Fleishel v. Hightower, supra, involved a question similar to that which was decided in Cartersville v. Baker, and for like reasons is to be distinguished from the case at bar. Neither section 719 nor section 720 of the Political Code of 1895 authorizes the levy of any such tax as the one attempted in this case. On the other hand, it would seem that these sections contain a limitation on the right to tax. But even if it could be held that they confer any such power, they are but a codification of the act of 1874, and, so far as they contravene the constitutional provision to which we have referred, they are, of course, of no effect. See, in this connection, Bowen v. Greensboro, 79 Ga. 710, 4 S. E. 159; Mayor, etc., of Madison v. Wade, 88 Ga. 699, 16 S. E. 21; Howell v. Athens, 91 Ga. 139, 16 S. E. 968; Mayor, etc., of Decatur v. Wilson, 96 Ga. 251, 23 S. E. 240; Albany Bottling Co. v. Watson, 103 Ga. 508, 30 S. E. 270; City Council of Dawson v. Dawson Waterworks Co., 106 Ga. 696, 32 S. E. 907.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(119 Ga. 996)

CHARLESTON & W. C. RY. CO. v. FLEMING.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

EASEMENTS—WAYS OF NECESSITY—INJUNCTION—PLEADING—NECESSARY ALLEGATIONS—LAW OF THE CASE.

1. This court reversed the granting of an interlocutory injunction in this case. 45 S. E. 664, 118 Ga. 699. It was there held that the defendant in error had neither a grant nor prescriptive right to use the way threatened to be obstructed. That decision is conclusive as to the law of the case upon these matters.

2. Before one can assert a way of necessity over the land of another, every essential requisite to such a right must affirmatively appear. Not only the necessity of ingress to and egress from his own land must exist, but it must further be alleged that there is no other suitable outlet, and a compliance with the constitutional provision as to adequate compensation first having been paid or tendered to the owner of the land sought to be subjected to the burden of such easement.

3. The petition failing to contain these necessary averments, a demurrer specifically making the objections should have been sustained.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; W. T. Gary, Judge.

Action by J. L. Fleming to enjoin the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company from obstructing a private way. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. K. Miller, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Fleming, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. 1. James L. Fleming sought to enjoin the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company from obstructing a certain private way traversing its tracks. On the hearing of the interlocutory injunction, the court granted the same, and the railway company appealed said judgment to this court. A full synopsis of the pleadings and the evidence appears in the reported case. 118 Ga. 699, 45 S. E. 664. It was there decided that the plaintiff did not have a grant to the private way described in his petition; neither did he have a prescriptive right to use said private way. The legal principles therein announced must necessarily control in the present case, and only one question raised by the demurrer is left for determination, and that is, does the petition allege such facts as would entitle the plaintiff to the use of the private way as one of necessity?

2. The right of exclusive possession is one of the attributes of title to realty. This exclusiveness cannot be restricted except in those instances authorized by law. One exception to the general rule of exclusive possession is where the owner of land, having no means of ingress to or egress from his own premises except by going over the land of another, will be permitted to cross the abutting land of a third person under certain circumstances. To acquire such a right, the necessity must be shown not only to cross the land of the adjoining proprietor, but also that the selected place of crossing is the most suitable and accessible means of outlet, determined relatively to the servient as well as the dominant tenement. The owner of the servient tenement may assign a way reasonably convenient to both parties; and, if he fails to do so, the person entitled to the way may select it. The adjacent proprietor may not be responsible for the isolation and Inconvenience resulting from ownership of land off a thoroughfare. Therefore the convenience of the owner of the abutting land should at least be equal, if not superior, to the convenience of his landlocked neighbor; and as one of the precedent conditions to a way of necessity at a particular place it should appear that the abutting landowner would at least suffer no more injury from its location at the designated place than at some other place. The assertion of the right of way from necessity is near akin to the assertion of the right of eminent domain. The Constitution of this state expressly recognizes the right of way from necessity, but with the limitation that adequate compensation shall first be made. If the parties cannot agree either as to the location or compensation, resort may be had to condemnation proceedings. Surely, no man has a right to impose a servitude upon his neighbor's land without just compensation.

3. In the case before us the defendant in error seeks to retain a private way over the land of the plaintiff in error. He has neither grant nor prescription to the particular crossing, but seeks to enjoin the railway company from closing up its own property because he would be hemmed in and cut off from any highway. He does not allege, however, that this is the most suitable way of ingress and egress, having due regard to the rights of the railway company. Neither does he allege a tender of adequate compensation or any attempt to condemn the land to this servitude. The petition lacking these essential allegations, the demurrer should have been sustained.

Accordingly, the judgment of the court overruling the demurrer is reversed. All the Justices concurring, except LAMAR, J., disqualified.

(120 Ga. 48)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. EMPIRE PRINTING & BOX CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

DISMISSAL OF ACTION—REINSTATEMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

1. Applications to reinstate cases that have been dismissed on motion of the opposite party are, even when made in due time, addressed to the sound discretion of the court.

2. Whether the case be considered upon the evidence admitted, or in the light of that evidence and the evidence rejected, no reason appears for reversing the judgment refusing to reinstate.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by the Empire Printing & Box Company against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

P. H. Brewster, Jr., for plaintiff in error.
J. E. & L. F. McClelland, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. The Empire Printing & Box Company sued the Southern Railway Company in a justice's court. The railway company entered an appeal to the superior court. When the case was called in that court the appeal was dismissed, on motion of the plaintiff's counsel, upon the ground that it did not affirmatively appear from the record that the appeal was entered within four days from the rendition of the judgment; the order of dismissal reciting that the bond given by the appellant was dated September 24, 1902, when the appeal appeared to have been entered on September 4th, and the record did not disclose the date of the judgment appealed from. During the term the railway company filed a motion to reinstate the case. At the hearing of this motion the railway company, besides introducing evidence tending to show that it had a meritorious defense, introduced a certified copy of the judgment in the justice's court, from which it appeared that the judgment was rendered on August 30, 1902, and there was an entry upon the justice's docket of "appealed to superior court and costs paid this September 4, 1902." The justice further certified that the appeal was entered within four days after the judgment, Sunday being excluded. The appeal bond was also introduced in evidence, dated September 24, 1902. On the back of this paper appeared the words: "Appeal filed September 4, 1902. Edgar H. Orr, J. P. All costs accrued paid. September 4, 1902. Edgar H. Orr, J. P." At the bottom of the paper was an entry of filing in the superior court, showing that it was filed on September 5, 1902. No other evidence being introduced, the court granted an order refusing to reinstate the case. The railway company assigns error upon this judgment, and upon the refusal of the court to admit in evidence an affidavit of counsel for the railway company to the effect that the bond was, as a matter of fact, dated September 4, 1902; that the date "24" was a clerical error; and that he filed the bond on the 4th day of September. In a note in the bill of exceptions, the judge certifies that this affidavit was not offered until the evidence had closed and the court was announcing its judgment, and, further, that no reason was given why evidence of the facts stated in the affidavit was not offered when the motion to dismiss was made.

It is clear from the facts recited that the appeal was properly dismissed. The record did not disclose the date of the judgment, nor did it appear that the appeal was entered within four days from the time the judgment was rendered. The recital in the appeal bond that it was tendered within the time prescribed by law for entering an appeal did not prevent the dismissal. HUSSE

v. Clark, 102 Ga. 579, 27 S. E. 677. See, also, Norrell v. Morrison, 99 Ga. 317, 25 S. E. 700. Even if it had appeared that September 4th was within four days after the rendition of the judgment, the bond purported to have been executed on September 24th, and an appeal not made in forma pauperis is not complete until a proper bond is filed.

The entry of filing by the clerk of the superior court showed prima facie that the bond was executed either on or prior to the date of filing. Chapple v. Tucker, 110 Ga. 468, 35 S. E. 643. But it did not show that the appeal was entered within four days from the date of the judgment, because, when the motion to dismiss was made, there was nothing to show when the judgment was rendered. The motion to reinstate was addressed to the discretion of the court. Harrison v. Tate, 100 Ga. 317, 27 S. E. 179; Bird v. Burgsteiner, 113 Ga. 1012, 39 S. E. 425. It was discretionary with the judge whether he would receive the affidavit of defendant's counsel at the time the same was offered, and whether, if received, he would regard the laches of counsel, in failing to offer the evidence when the motion to dismiss was made, a sufficient reason for refusing to reinstate.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 145)

BROWN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — CONTINUANCE — GROUNDS — DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

1. While motions for continuance and postponement are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, that discretion should be exercised in a reasonable manner. Where, on the trial of a criminal case, it appeared that the accused had been arrested in another county, brought to the county where the accusation was sued out against him, and there lodged in jail on the night before his case was called for trial; that, on account of his inability to employ an attorney, counsel was appointed to defend him at the time when the case was so called; that the witnesses desired by him lived in another county, and no opportunity had been afforded him to have them subpoenaed; that the law under which he was accused was of recent enactment; and that the attorney appointed to represent the accused had had neither the time nor the opportunity to prepare for his defense or familiarize himself with the statute—a motion to postpone the hearing of the case for one day should have been granted.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Douglas; Levi Osteen, Judge.

S. L. Brown was convicted of cheating and swindling, and brings error. Reversed.

Lawson Keeley, C. A. Ward, and W. P. Ward, for plaintiff in error. M. D. Dickerson, Sol., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was tried under an indictment for cheating and swindling, and was convicted. His motion for a new trial was overruled, and he excepted. In the view that we take of the case, there is but one question made by the record which need be discussed here. From the motion for a new trial, it appears that the accused was arrested in Pierce county and brought to Coffee county, where he was confined in jail. He arrived in Coffee county at night, and on the following morning was brought into court for trial. He was unable, from poverty, to employ counsel, and the judge appointed an attorney of the Douglas bar to represent him. The attorney, after a consultation with the accused of not more than five minutes, reported to the court and stated in his place that the accused was not ready to go to trial; that counsel had had no opportunity to have witnesses subpoenaed, nor to examine the law under which the accusation was brought against the prisoner; and that no preparation whatever had been made for the defense. He further stated that if the court would pass the case until the following morning, in order that he might send for witnesses and prepare the defense, the accused would consent to go to trial before the court without a jury. The court then examined the accused under oath, and it is recited in the order passed on the motion "that the defendant stated under oath that he desired that the case be not tried then, but that it be continued, because he had witnesses absent; that said witnesses were nonresidents of the county of Coffee. Said defendant further stated what he expected to prove by the absent witnesses, if he could obtain them, which facts appeared to the court to be of no value in establishing the defense of the defendant." The motion to postpone the case until the following day was therefore denied and the accused was placed on trial, with the result already stated.

In passing upon motions to continue or postpone, the trial judge is necessarily vested with a large discretion, but a careful review of the facts of this case convinces us that the failure to at least postpone for one day was error. The particular acts of cheating and swindling with which the accused was charged have only very recently been made penal by the General Assembly; the act having been approved August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90). Neither the bar nor the courts have as yet had an opportunity to become familiar with its provisions in actual practice. No opportunity was given the accused to subpoena his witnesses, or to confer with his counsel sufficiently to acquaint him with the real character of any defense that he might have been able to make; and, in the nature of things, an attorney cannot be expected to do justice either to himself or his client when he is forced to trial in a case of which he probably never heard more than five minutes before, when the law under which his client is accused is one of recent enactment, with which he is unfamiliar, and when he has had no opportunity to talk with the witnesses he might introduce, and acquaint himself with the details of the case. The Constitution of this state provides that every person accused of crime shall have the privilege and benefit of counsel, and shall have compulsory process to compel the attendance of his own witnesses; but it is useless to appoint counsel to represent one so accused unless the attorney so appointed is given at least a reasonable opportunity to prepare the case entrusted to him. This case is essentially different from the case of Hardy v. State, 117 Ga. 40, 43 S. E. 718, and what we now hold is in no sense in conflict with what is there laid down. In the Hardy Case it appeared that, when the motion to continue was made, "the court announced to counsel that he would be furnished with bailiffs to get all witnesses whose names and addresses were known, and bring them into court, before the case would go on; that, as to one of the witnesses, his presence was waived; and that, as to the other witness, the witness was brought into court before the case was finally forced to a hearing." A very different state of facts is disclosed by the present record. While, as has been repeatedly ruled by this court, trial judges are invested with a broad discretion in the matter of continuances, that discretion is not arbitrary, but must be exercised in a reasonable manner. In this case we are of the opinion that the accused has not had the opportunities allowed by law for his defense, and for that reason the case is remanded for another hearing.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 175)

MCSEIN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

BIGAMY—EVIDENCE OF PRIOR MARRIAGE—ADMISSIONS OF ACCUSED—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL.

1. On a trial for bigamy the fact of the first marriage may be established by the admissions of the defendant.

2. In view of the law applicable to the case, the verdict was demanded by the evidence; the jury having evidently disregarded the statement of the defendant.

3. There was no charge or ruling of the court requiring the grant of a new trial, and the judgment is affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

T. O. McSein was convicted of bigamy, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. F. Slater and Wm. D. Morgan, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The defendant was tried for bigamy. The second marriage was proved by the testimony of eyewitnesses, and the first by the oral and written admissions of the defendant. While there is some conflict on the subject, the great weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that the defendant's uncorroborated admissions are sufficient to establish the first marriage (Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 304, 26 L. Ed. 481); and such is the rule heretofore recognized in this state (Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 54, 56 Am. Dec. 410; Arnold v. State, 53 Ga. 574). It is evident that the jury believed the admissions, and disbelieved the statement. The evidence for the state demanded the verdict. There is no proper assignment of any error in admitting testimony, nor was there any error in the charge as to confessions and admissions requiring a new trial; and the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 128)

CULPEPPER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. No error of law was committed, and the evidence warranted the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Worth County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Charlie Culpepper was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Park & Payton, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 970)

TOLBIRT v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

HOMICIDE — VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

1. The theory of the state was that the accused was guilty of murder. His defense was that the homicide was justifiable. After a close study of the evidence, we find nothing tending to show, or from which the jury could legitimately infer, that the homicide was voluntary manslaughter. The record shows that the accused either was guilty of murder or else was justifiable. It was therefore error to give in charge the law relating to voluntary manslaughter, and a verdict finding the accused guilty of that offense was without evidence to support it, and a new trial should have been granted upon these grounds.

2. Other than as above noted, there was no material error in any of the rulings of which complaint was made.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

A. G. Tolbirt was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Reversed.

J. M. & H. J. McBride, S. L. Craven, and W. R. Hutcheson, for plaintiff in error. W. K. Fielder, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except EVANS, J., who did not preside.

(120 Ga. 200)

OWENS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—SECOND STATEMENT BY ACCUSED—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—NECESSITY OF SPECIFIC ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Whether a prisoner shall be allowed to make a second statement rests in the discretion of the trial judge.

2. Grounds of a motion for a new trial, which allege generally that extracts from a charge are erroneous, will be considered merely as alleging that the extracts do not set forth sound propositions of law, and, if they do, no inquiry will be made as to whether they are adjusted to the facts of the case, in the absence of a specific assignment of error setting forth that they are not.

3. While counsel should not be permitted in argument to state facts which are not in evidence, it is permissible to draw deductions from the evidence, and the fact that the deductions may be illogical, unreasonable, or even absurd, is matter for reply by adverse counsel, and not for rebuke by the court.

4. The evidence authorized the verdict, and no sufficient reason has been shown for reversing the judgment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Stewart County; W. B. Butt, Judge.

Ryce Owens was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

G. Y. Harrell and B. F. Harrell, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. Ryce Owens was convicted of the murder of his father, and complains that the judge refused to grant him a new trial. Besides the general grounds, the motion contains eight special grounds. The rulings in the first three headnotes dispose of the points raised in six of these grounds. In another ground complaint is made that the court erred in admitting evidence which was irrelevant. The evidence was clearly relevant, and whether what the witness said was so unreasonable that it ought not to have been believed was a question for the jury. Another ground complains that while a witness was upon the stand testifying as to the reputation of the deceased for peace or violence, having said that the worst thing the witness knew about the deceased was that he "could never be seen without that old Winchester rifle," the judge remarked, "That don't amount to anything; that is one of the constitutional rights of the state and of the United States—to bear arms." The assignment of error upon this language is that it was an expression of an opinion by the court as to the weight to be given the evidence. One's character for peace or violence is established by general reputation, and a witness will not be permitted on direct examination to go further than state what was the general reputation of the person in question for peace or violence. The person calling such witness will not be permitted to inquire into specific acts of violence or particular habits which might throw light upon this question. On cross-examination, however, the witness may be sifted, and inquiry may be made into the conduct of the person on different occasions, or as to his different habits. It does not appear from the motion for a new trial that the answer of the witness in the present case was on cross-examination. If it was not, the evidence should have been excluded, and the remark of the court may be treated as an effectual, though irregular, way of withdrawing from the consideration of the jury evidence which was not properly before them. The evidence authorized the verdict, and we see no reason for reversing the judgment refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 194)

LEE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

SWINDLING—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. The accused being charged with the offense of cheating and swindling, in that he procured credit by making false representations as to his ownership of certain property, and the evidence relied on by the state not showing that the representations made by the accused were in point of fact untrue, his conviction was unwarranted, and should have been set aside.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Washington; W. H. Toombs, Judge.

Frank Lee was convicted of cheating, and brings error. Reversed.

W. A. Slaton, for plaintiff in error. R. G. Norman, Sol., for the State.

EVANS, J. The accused was charged with the offense of cheating and swindling, and was tried by the judge without a jury. The false representation alleged in the accusation was that the accused was the owner of two cows, therein described; and it was charged that, upon his assertion of ownership of the cattle, he obtained from "J. L. Hill a credit in one brown mare, of the value of one hundred and ten dollars, to the injury and damage of said J. L. Hill." The only testimony on the subject of ownership of the cattle was that of the prosecutor, who testified: "About February 28, 1903, I sold [the accused] a horse. He represented to me that he was the owner of the stock described in this mortgage—two cows. I afterwards found out that he did not own them. I got the horse back. * * * I didn't know until just before I got the horse back that Frank Lee didn't own this stock. Mr. Ray went out for me to look after my securities, and told me he didn't have this stock, and the boy told me he didn't have it." From this testimony it is apparent that the prosecutor had no personal knowledge as to the ownership of the cattle, and based his assertion that he found out that the accused was not the owner of the cows upon what Ray told him, and the statement of the accused that he did not have the stock. It does not appear when this statement was made, nor whether the accused referred to his possession at the time of making the statement or at the time he got the credit. His bare statement that he "didn't have" the stock could not properly be treated as a confession that he did not own the property at the time he got the credit. It was incumbent on the state to show this fact beyond a reasonable doubt. Other than the testimony above quoted, there was no evidence relating to the ownership of the cattle by the defendant at the time he secured the credit or at any other time. In view of the failure on the part of the state to prove that the representations as to ownership made by the accused were false, his conviction was unauthorized by the evidence.

¶ 1. See Criminal Law, vol. 14, Cent. Dig. § 1538.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

[120 Ga. 223]

PREY et al. v. OEMLER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

INJUNCTION — PETITION — SUFFICIENCY—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—INDEFINITENESS.

1. The petition was not subject to any of the objections raised in the demurrer which were insisted on in this court.

2. An assignment of error that an act of the General Assembly "is too vague and indefinite to be enforced, and also is contrary to natural law, and violative of natural rights to fish in the sea, and arms thereof," is itself too vague and indefinite to raise any question for decision.

3. The charge was full and fair. The extracts therefrom upon which error was assigned, even if erroneous at all, were not so for any reason assigned. The requests to charge were, so far as legal and pertinent, covered by the general charge. The evidence authorized the verdict, and no reason has been shown for reversing the judgment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Pope Barrow, Judge.

Action by Augustus Oemler against Emanuel Prey and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Beckett and N. J. Norman, for plaintiffs in error. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. This was an action by Oemler to restrain Prey and others from committing a trespass. The defendants filed a demurrer, which was overruled, and at the final hearing the jury found that the plaintiff was entitled to a permanent injunction. The defendants bring their case here; assigning error upon the judgment overruling the demurrer, and upon the refusal of the judge to grant them a new trial.

1. The original demurrer contained eight grounds. The bill of exceptions pendente lite mentions only six of these grounds, and counsel for the plaintiffs in error, in their brief, insist upon only five of the grounds. The grounds thus insisted upon simply raise the question as to whether the allegations of the petition were of such a nature as to show that the plaintiff had such an interest in the land upon which the trespass was alleged to have been committed as to authorize him to bring an action to restrain a trespass about to be committed thereon. In other words, the contention of the defendants, so far as these grounds of the demurrer are concerned, is that the acts which it is claimed would be acts of trespass upon private property of the plaintiff were simply acts which they had, a right to do as members of the public; the locus in quo not being the private property of the plaintiff, but being a public water, in which the defendants had a public right of fishery. We do not think the demurrer was well taken. The plaintiff alleged that George Parsons was the owner of Warsaw Island; that this island embraced Rhodes or Sandy Bottom creek, which was not a navigable stream; and that the defendants had combined to take oysters from such stream without warrant or authority from the plaintiff, who held the right to take oysters in such stream under a lease from Parsons, the owner. It will thus be seen that the petition alleges that the trespass was about to be committed in a stream which was not navigable, and under the law the owner of the adjacent land was the owner of the land under the stream; and if the allegations of the petition that Parsons was the owner of the adjacent land on both sides of the stream, and Oemler was the lessee under him for a term of years, were true, then Oemler had certainly a right to apply to a court of equity to restrain a trespass, as the owner of the land covered by the stream, and would be entitled to an injunction, if the other allegations of the petition were sufficient to authorize this character of relief. The other objections raised by the demurrer are not insisted on, and we have little difficulty in holding that the petition was not subject to the objections which are insisted on.

2. The court, in charging the jury, followed the provisions of the act of 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 108) as to what was a navigable stream, and the assignment of error upon these charges is that the act "is too vague and indefinite to be enforced, and also is contrary to natural law, and violative of natural rights to fish in the sea, and arms thereof." This assignment of error is too vague and indefinite to raise any question for decision. One ground alleges that the verdict and decree "is violative of the vested constitutional rights of the defendants" to the use and enjoyment of the property in dispute under leases from the state. This assignment of error is also too general to raise any question. Even if the other grounds of the motion which seek to raise constitutional questions are sufficient for this purpose, they are not insisted on in the brief of counsel, and will be treated as having been abandoned. We do not intend anything now said to be construed as holding that the act of 1902 is constitutional, or that it is unconstitutional, for any reason. We simply decline to pass on any constitutional question on the present record.

3. The motion for a new trial and its amendments contain numerous grounds, but, after a careful examination of the entire record, we have reached the conclusion that there was no error of law which required the granting of a new trial. The charge of the judge submitted the issues to the jury clearly, fully, and fairly, and no portions of the charge upon which error was assigned appear to be erroneous at all, and certainly they are not for any reason which was assigned in the motion. The requests to charge were, so far as legal and pertinent, covered by the general charge. The evidence was conflicting on some of the vital issues, but there was evidence authorizing the verdict, and the judgment refusing a new trial will not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 145)

WHITE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

LARCENY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—PROOF OF VALUE—NEW TRIAL.

1. The accused having been charged with the larceny of two articles, and the evidence being insufficient to make out the offense as to one, and there being no proof of the value of the other, a new trial should have been granted.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of La Grange; F. M. Longley, Judge.

Jim White was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

E. T. Moon, for plaintiff in error. Henry Reeves, for the State.

COBB, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 138)

HALE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

FORGERY—CHECK—LEGAL EFFICACY.

1. A check drawn payable to "the order of cash" is payable to bearer. If such a check be forged, it is not so imperfect as that no one could be defrauded by it. See 1 Rand. Com. Paper, § 161.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

A. C. Hale was convicted of forgery, and brings error. Affirmed.

S. C. Crane, for plaintiff in error. C. D. Hill, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 197)

HARMON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

GAMING—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Evidence that the defendant and three others were lying on the ground in a secluded spot with money before them, that each had cards in his hand, and that on being discovered all attempted to escape, was sufficient to sustain a verdict that the defendant was guilty of playing and betting at a game played with cards for money. Pacetti v. State, 7 S. E. 867, 82 Ga. 297; Arnold v. State, 45 S. E. 59, 117 Ga. 706.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Griffin; E. W. Hammond, Judge.

Joe Harmon was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

T. E. Patterson, for plaintiff in error. Jos. D. Boyd, Sol., for the State.

LAMAR, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 176)

HICKS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—ERROR WAIVED IN APPELLATE COURT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. This case was argued by brief. Assignments of error set forth in an amendment to a motion for a new trial, but not insisted on in the brief filed by counsel for the plaintiff in error, will be treated as having been abandoned. Moss v. Bohanon, 36 S. E. 954, 111 Ga. 871.

2. There was ample evidence to warrant the verdict, and, no error of law appearing, and the finding of the jury having received the approval of the trial judge, the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Hall County; G. H. Prior, Judge.

Jess Hicks was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. K. Looper and Parks & Gaillard, for plaintiff in error. F. M. Johnson, Sol., for the State.

EVANS, J. Affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 49)

McDONALD v. SAVANNAH ELECTRIC CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

CARRIERS—INJURY TO PASSENGER—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

1. The plaintiff testified that the conductor knew of his position, and that he did not know that the conductor intended to let the guard rail down. The case was proved as laid, and it was error to grant a nonsuit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by A. F. McDonald, by next friend, against the Savannah Electric Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

D. Edward McCuen and W. P. La Roche, for plaintiff in error. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. The plaintiff was a passenger on a street car, and, owing to a breakdown, was invited to get upon another car; and, that being crowded, he was forced to sit between two seats, with his feet on the left-hand running board. He claims that the conductor knew that he was in that position, and that, when the car reached a point where there was a double track, the conductor, with such knowledge, dropped upon plaintiff's hand the heavy guard rail intended to prevent passengers from getting on or off the left-hand side, so as to avoid the danger of injury from cars on the parallel track. The defendant insisted that the plaintiff saw the conductor on the running board, knew that he was there for the purpose of lowering the rail, and, with such knowledge, remained where he was, with his hands between the standard and the brass rod forming the slot in which the rail worked up and down; that, if plaintiff was not negligent, the injury was an accident, or one that plaintiff could easily have avoided. These defenses must be passed on by a jury, and should not have been settled by an order of nonsuit. We have carefully examined the testimony, and find that, while the plaintiff testified that he knew the conductor was on the left-hand side, he also says that he did not know whether he was there for the purpose of collecting fares or not; that he had "no idea as to what his purpose was." He swears positively that he was not leaning forward, but was looking out, and did not know that the conductor was going to let down the rail. The plaintiff proved his case as laid, and it was therefore error to grant a nonsuit.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 136)

MAY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — REQUEST TO CHARGE — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. The request to charge, so far as legal and pertinent, was fully covered by the general charge.

2. Inasmuch as the accused was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, the charge on the subject of malice was harmless, even if erroneous.

3. The evidence warranted the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

¶ 2. See Homicide, vol. 26, Cent. Dig. § 720.

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Garfield May was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. R. Williams, for plaintiff in error. F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 157)

KEMP v. STATE (two cases).

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE—INDICTMENT—LOCAL LAW.

1. The special act for Screven county, approved March 2, 1874 (Acts 1874, p. 403), regulating the grant of licenses to sell liquor, does not contain two subjects, is supplementary to the general law, and does not abrogate the provisions as to registration or taking the oath required of those who obtain licenses.

2. The fact that there may be a local act regulating the grant of licenses in Screven county does not prevent an indictment for a sale of liquor therein, if in violation of the provisions of the general law contained in Pen. Code 1895, §§ 430-434.

3. An indictment for the sale of spirituous, vinous, and mixed liquors is not double, but charges a single offense, which may be sustained by proof of the sale of any one of the liquors named.

4. An indictment charging the sale of spirituous and vinous liquors is good, without alleging that the wine is not domestic wine.

5. A sale of intoxicating liquors to an agent may be alleged as a sale to the principal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sylvania; J. W. Overstreet, Judge.

Henry Kemp was convicted of illegally selling liquor, and brings error. Affirmed.

There were two cases against Kemp. In the first, the unlawful sale of liquor was alleged to have been made to Hub Bazemore, and the evidence showed that Braboy had acted as agent for him in making the purchase from the defendant. In the second case it appeared that Woodberry acted as agent in buying the liquor from Kemp for Hub Bazemore and R. H. Bazemore, to whom the indictment charged the sale had been made. The indictments in both cases were substantially the same, and similar demurrers were interposed to each. The motions for new trial raised the same legal questions, and both may properly be treated in one opinion. The facts hereinafter set out were those of the first case.

H. S. White, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Boykin, Sol., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The act of 1874 (Acts 1874, p. 403) did not contain two subjects, but provided a new method for obtaining licenses to sell any sort of liquor in Screven county, and expressly repealed the prior and inconsistent act of 1873 (Acts 1873, p. 288), regulating the sale of spirituous liquors only. But whether one or the other of these two acts, or that approved August 11, 1881 (Acts 1880-81, p. 593), was of force, was immaterial, and afforded no support to the defendant's contention that he could not be indicted under the general law (Pen. Code 1895, § 431) if there was in existence a special law on the subject of licenses in Screven county. Such local act supplemented, but did not repeal, the general law as a whole. It did not prohibit the sale of liquor, nor prevent the grant of licenses, nor set aside the general requirements as to registration and taking the oath required of all liquor sellers. If one violated the provisions of the special act, he might be indicted therefor, or he might be indicted under the broader and more comprehensive provisions of the general law. Wells v. State (Ga.) 45 S. E. 443; Blake v. State, 118 Ga. 333, 45 S. E. 249.

¶ 3. See Indictment and Information, vol. 27, Cent. Dig. § 390.

The defendant was not charged with a violation of Pen. Code 1895, § 450, relating to the sale of domestic wines, but with selling brandy, whisky, gin, mixed drinks, and wine, "to wit, one pint of gin." The charge followed the language of Pen. Code 1895, § 431, and was not double. Proof of the sale of any of the liquors described would have been sufficient to sustain the indictment. Nor was it necessary to allege that the wine was not "domestic," that being matter for defense. Hancock v. State, 114 Ga. 439, 40 S. E. 317 (3, 4); Wells v. State, supra.

The indictment charged that Kemp sold the liquor to Bazemore. The testimony for the state tended to show that Braboy had acted as the agent of Bazemore in making the purchase, and the defendant contends that the evidence showing a delivery to Braboy did not sustain the charge of the sale to Bazemore, even if Braboy acted as agent of the latter. This contention seems to be answered by the ruling in Hall v. State, 87 Ga. 233, 13 S. E. 634, where it was said that an indictment charging a sale to A. will be supported by evidence that it was made to him through his servant or messenger, and the latter need not be mentioned by name or otherwise in the indictment. In Com. v. McGuire, 11 Gray, 460, it was held that a sale of intoxicating liquor to the agent of an undisclosed principal may be alleged as a sale to the principal; the court saying that, if the goods were sold on credit under similar circumstances, it would be optional with the vendor to treat the sale as having been made to the agent or principal, as he might elect, and that the state, in an indictment describing such sale, might allege it as a sale to the agent or to the afterwards disclosed principal. Compare Civ. Code 1895, § 3032. In Hall v. State, 87 Ga. 234, 13 S. E. 634 (2), there is a suggestion which appears to be opposed to the views expressed above, but it was a mere suggestion, and not an authoritative ruling.

Judgment in each case affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 1)

FRANCIS JONES & CO. v. VENABLE et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR PRIVATE RAILROAD—WAY OF NECESSITY.

1. A person or corporation actually engaged in the business of quarrying granite or other stone, who, for the successful prosecution of such business, needs a right of way for a private railroad across the lands of others, is, under the Constitution and laws of this state, in a case of necessity, authorized to obtain the same under condemnation proceedings.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, De Kalb County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Action by W. H. and S. H. Venable to enjoin Francis Jones & Co., a partnership, from proceedings to condemn certain property. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Rucker & Rucker, for plaintiffs in error. J. D. Kilpatrick and J. W. Moore, for defendants in error.

FISH, P. J. Francis Jones & Co., a partnership, had served upon W. H. and S. H. Venable, of De Kalb county, a notice under Civ. Code 1895, § 4657 et seq., in which notice they stated that they had leased Rock Chapel Mountain, in that county, from its owners, for the term of five years, and were engaged in quarrying granite from said property, and desired to condemn for the period of five years, under the provisions of the Code, a right of way 15 feet in width for a railroad across a described strip of land owned by the Venables; the railroad to run from Rock Chapel Mountain, where the quarry was located, to a point on the Georgia Railroad at or near Lithonia, Ga. The notice designated the point at which and the manner in which the proposed railroad would cross the strip of land in question, named the person selected by the applicants to assess the damages for the right of way, and requested the Venables to select an assessor for such purpose. The Venables then brought a petition to enjoin the applicants from proceeding further in their efforts to condemn the property for the purpose described in the notice, and from entering upon or otherwise interfering with the property of the petitioners. The petition for injunction alleged that the condemnation sought to be made was contrary to law, for the following reasons: "(1) The enterprise of quarrying granite and marketing the same is purely private, and is one in which the public has no interest. (2) The road sought to be built is not a private way within the meaning of the Constitution of this state. (3) It is not within the power of the General Assembly to enact a valid statute authorizing the condemnation of private property to the use of another for purely private purposes. Such an act would be null and void, would deny the owner the equal protection of the law, and would deprive him of his property without due process of law. (4) The General Assembly of Georgia has made no provisions for compensating the owner for the land condemned." The petition further alleged that the defendants threatened to enter, with their assessor, upon the land of the petitioners upon a given date, and, if no assessor should be appointed by the petitioners, to then apply to the ordinary of the county to appoint an assessor to act for the Venables, and to build the railroad in question over the land of the petitioners against their will. Upon this petition a temporary restraining order was granted, and at the interlocutory hearing the court granted the injunction prayed for, to which judgment the defendants excepted.

The question involved in the case is whether a person or corporation actually engaged in the business of quarrying granite or other stone, who needs, for the successful prosecution of such business, a right of way for a private railroad across the lands of others, may, in a case of necessity, acquire such right of way under condemnation proceedings. The Political Code, § 650, provides that a person or corporation actually engaged in such business, who may need, for the successful prosecution of the same, such a right of way, may obtain it "in the same manner that the right to convey water across the lands of others may be acquired by the owners of mines, as provided in the Code"; and that manner, as we shall see later, is by condemnation. The court below held that if, in the statute embodied in this section of the Political Code, "it was the intention of the General Assembly to grant to private persons the right to condemn the land of another for the purpose of building a private railroad for the hauling of granite from a private quarry," the act was unconstitutional, and so granted the injunction prayed for. After a careful consideration of the matter, we have reached the conclusion that our learned brother of the trial bench erred in this ruling. We grant the contention of the defendants in error that "the enterprise of quarrying stone and marketing the same is purely private, and one in which the public has no interest." This being granted, the statute in question, as applied to this case, cannot be held to be constitutional upon the idea that property condemned under its provisions will be condemned for a public use. Can property, under the Political Code, § 650 et seq., be condemned for a private use? The Constitution of this state provides: "In cases of necessity, private ways may be granted upon just compensation being first paid by the applicant." Civ. Code 1895, § 5729. If, then, the rights of way provided for in these sections of the Political Code are private ways, the power of the Legislature to authorize their establishment under condemnation proceedings in cases of necessity cannot be questioned. The Constitution does not undertake to define private ways, or to limit the purposes for which they may be granted. The only limitation upon the power of the Legislature to provide for the granting of private ways is that they can only be granted in cases of necessity. The defendants in error; however, contend that the rights of way provided for in the Political Code, § 650, are not private ways. Their position seems to be this: that the rights of way dealt with in this section are neither public nor private ways. It is necessary for them to take and maintain this position in order to sustain their contention; for, if the ways provided for are either public or private ways, then the power of the Legislature to provide for their establishment, in cases of necessity, under condemnation proceedings, is clear under the Constitution. If they are neither public nor private ways, what sort of ways are they? Ways they are, and they must be the one or the other; for, according to our understanding, all ways are either public or private. 1 Cooley's Blackstone (4th Ed.) 458, note 2; 12 Enc. Laws of Eng. 571; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. 80. There are different kinds of public ways and different kinds of private ways, but all ways are included in the one or the other general classification, though some may partake of the nature of both, being maintained and operated for private gain and for use by the public. The common-law writers divided private ways into several classes, according to the purpose or purposes for which the right of way could be used. Thus Lord Coke, adopting the civil law, divided them into three kinds: A footway, called "iter"; a footway and horseway, called "actus"; and a cartway, which embraced the other two, called "via"; to which was added a driftway—a road over which cattle could be driven. Dyson v. Ballard, 1 Taunt. 279. Woolrych, in his work on the subject, also makes these four classes of ways: Footways; footways and horseways; foot, horse, and carriage ways; and driftways. Woolrych, Ways, 1. But these old classifications of private ways are not exhaustive of the subject, for, as a private way for any particular purpose could always be created by a grant, and in theory always rested upon a grant, actual or implied, it is evident that when one person granted to another a right of way extending from the land of the grantee over the land of the grantor, for the private use of the grantee, in any manner, and for any particular purpose, a private way was created. "These rights are in their ex-rent susceptible of almost infinite variety. They may be limited both as to the intervals at which they may be used (as a way to church), and the actual extent of the user authorized (as a footway, horseway, or carriageway)." Gale & Whatley on Easements, *200. Thus, in Senhouse v. Christian, 1 T. R. 560—a case decided in 1787—it was held that under the grant of a way, in gross, for carrying coal and other articles, described as "a free and convenient way, as well an horseway as a footway, as also for carts, wagons, wains, and other carriages whatsoever," the grantee had the right to lay a "framed wagon-way." In a note to the case it is said: "Mr. Law [who appeared for the plaintiff] explained a framed wagon-way to be formed by laying pieces of wood along the road at some depth in the ground on each side, at the distance of the wheels of the carriage, which were joined and kept fast together by bars at equal distances, the interstices being filled up with sand and gravel, so as to render the surface flat. They are now used for carrying the coals from most of the collieries in the north of England." That was clearly a private way, and yet the method of its use was different from that of any of the classes of ways given by the common-law writers. Because the improved physical way used, and which the court held was authorized by the grant, was a kind of tramway, did not render the way any the less a private way. In Dand v. Kingscote, 6 Mees. & W. 174, a grant of land had been made, reserving the mines within it, with sufficient "wayleave" and "stayleave," with liberty of sinking and digging pits. Parka, B., said: "There is no doubt that the object of the reservation is to get the coals beneficially to the owner of them, and therefore it should seem that there passes by it to such a description of wayleave, and in such direction, as will be reasonably sufficient to enable the coal owner to get, from time to time, all the seams of coal to a reasonable profit; and therefore the owner is not confined to such description of way as is in use at the time of the grant, and in such direction as is then convenient." In that case the reservation of wayleave was contained in a deed executed in 1630, and the mine owner had constructed a railroad for the transportation of the coal from the mine across the lands of the plaintiff and others. Washburn, in his work on Easements and Servitudes, in discussing this case, says: "If, therefore, in the progress of improvement, better or more feasible ways are devised and applied to use than those known and used at the time when the grant was first made, the mine owner, under a reservation of this general form, might adopt the improved way; as, for instance, he might substitute a railway for a wagonway, by which to transport the coal from the pit across the granted premises, although the construction of such new way would subject the landowner to the inconvenience of having it laid down in the place at the former one." Wash. Easim. & Serv. 291. Certainly the way reserved by the grant in that case was a private way, and it is equally clear that it did not cease to be such when the character of the physical way was changed to conform to the improved methods of transporting coal from the mines which had been devised long after the deed was executed. In 12 Encyclopædia of Laws of England, 575, it is said: "The term 'wayleave' means a right of way. * * * In considering the extent to which a wayleave may be used, the very object of the grant or reservation to which it is ancillary must be borne in mind, and this may involve a user of a different kind from that which was actually in contemplation at the time of the grant or reservation. Thus, in a grant of land, excepting the mines, etc., and reserving to the grantor a 'sufficient wayleave' or 'necessary wayleave' to them, the mine owner is not restricted to the precise description of way in use at the time of the grant, but may from time to time avail himself of new appliances in order to the more fully carry out and enjoy the object for which the wayleave was granted, e. g., the getting of the minerals. He may make wagon roads or tram roads on the site over which the wayleave extends, although such form of wayleave was unknown at the time when the reservation was made. See Dand v. Kingscote, 9 L. J. Ex. 279. The same principle would, it is submitted, apply to a wayleave for any particular purpose."

We have adduced and quoted from these authorities for the purpose of showing that even under the common law the contention, so earnestly pressed by the able counsel for the defendants in error, that such a right of way as the one involved in this case cannot be a private way, is not sustainable. But this court has already recognized that the term "private ways," as used in our state Constitution, is broad enough to include a way of this character. The decision in Normandale Lumber Co. v. Knight, 89 Ga. 111, 14 S. E. 882, treats and recognizes a tramway to be constructed by a lumber company for the transportation of its lumber, naval stores, and timber, and to run from its own land, across the lands of others, to the line of a railway, as a private way. In that case the ordinary of Dodge county granted an application of the lumber company for the construction of a tramway over certain lands belonging to other parties, over the objection of Knight, who claimed to be the owner of a lot of land over which the tramway was to run. On certiorari the judgment of the ordinary was reversed, and upon a review of the judgment of the superior court this court held: "Under the Constitution of this state, land can be taken for private ways only in 'cases of necessity.' The evidence failing to show that the present case is one of necessity, the superior court did not err in sustaining the certiorari and reversing the judgment of the ordinary." If the court had been of opinion that the right of way applied for and granted by the ordinary in that case was not a private way within the meaning of the Constitution, it would not have put its decision upon the ground that a case of necessity for the way was not shown.

Counsel for the defendants in error contends that "the case of Garbutt Lumber Co. v. Georgia & Alabama R., 111 Ga. 714 et seq., 36 S. E. 942, settles the issue in favor of the defendants in error." The decision in that case in no way conflicts with the conclusion which we have reached in this. It is true that it was there held that "section 4657 et seq. of the Civil Code provide a method to be followed when private property is taken or damaged for public purposes, and the procedure therein prescribed cannot be adopted when private property is sought to be taken for a purely private purpose." This ruling, as applied to the case then under consideration, was strictly correct, but, considered as a general rule, it is subject to exception. The procedure prescribed in these sections of the Civil Code could not be adopted in that case for the simple reason that it is one which, in terms, is only applicable when property is to be condemned for public purposes, and had not been made by the Legislature applicable to the taking or damaging of private property for such a private purpose as the one involved in the case then before the court. The method which the law has provided for the taking or damaging of private property for public purposes cannot be adopted when such property is sought to be taken or damaged for a purely private purpose, unless the statute authorizing the taking or damaging for the particular private use has specially provided that the condemnation procedure shall be the same as that to be followed when the property is to be taken or damaged for public use. As the general method prescribed in sections 4657 et seq. of the Civil Code in terms applies only to cases in which the condemnation sought is for public purposes, when these sections alone are relied on as furnishing the condemnation procedure, it must appear that the condemnation is to be for a public purpose. But the Legislature has made the provisions of these sections applicable in certain cases where the condemnation sought is for purely private purposes, and of course in such cases the method of condemnation provided therein can be lawfully resorted to. In the case upon which counsel relies it was sought to condemn private property for a purely private purpose, when the Legislature had neither provided a special condemnation procedure applicable to such a case, nor made the general method for condemning private property for public purposes applicable thereto. Hence it was rightly held that, irrespective of the question whether the Legislature could lawfully authorize private property to be taken or damaged for the particular purpose for which it was proposed to condemn such property in that case, there could be no condemnation of such property, for the very sufficient reason that there was no law of force in this state which provided a method of condemnation applicable to such a case; and that, until the Legislature provided a procedure for ascertaining and securing the payment of compensation for the taking or damaging of the property, the act under which the authority to condemn was claimed was inoperative. In the present case the statute authorizing the condemnation is not inoperative for the want of a method of condemnation. As we have seen, the Political Code, § 650, declares that the rights of way there provided for "may be obtained in the same manner that the right to convey water across the lands of others may be acquired by the owners of mines, as provided in the Code." Section 656, which provides how the owner of a mine may obtain the right to convey water across the lands of others, declares that he "shall make his application under and according to the provisions and requirements specified in this Code, and all the proceedings in relation thereto shall be had, and the damages shall be assessed and paid, according to the method of condemning land in this Code provided, all of which are extended to the owners of mines desiring to drain their mines and to carry off the water and tailings from their mines and mining operations through or over the lands of others." "The method of condemning land in this Code provided" is the general method for condemning land for public purposes embraced in the Civil Code, § 4657 et seq. As all the provisions of these sections are extended to the case of a mine owner who seeks to obtain the right to convey water across the lands of others, and the railroad rights of way provided for in section 650 of the Political Code may be obtained in the same manner that a mine owner may obtain a right of way for conveying water, it is perfectly clear that the condemnation procedure to be adopted in a case of this character has been provided by the Legislature. The notice served by the applicants for the right of way upon the owners of the land which they sought to condemn showed that they were proceeding under section 4657 et seq. of the Civil Code, and this they had the right to do. In the petition for injunction the question whether the right of way applied for was necessary was not made, nor was it passed upon by the trial judge, and hence this question is not before us. We may say, however, that the answer of the defendants seems to show a case of necessity.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except COBB, J., disqualified, and EVANS, J., not presiding.

(119 Ga. 961)

DETWILER v. BAINBRIDGE GROCERY CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

BILLS AND NOTES—WRONGFUL TRANSFER—DAMAGES—INJUNCTION—ADEQUATE LEGAL REMEDY.

1. The wrongful transfer of a negotiable note to a bona fide purchaser, thereby cutting off the maker's valid defense, gives rise to a cause of action for the damages resulting therefrom.

2. There being no allegation that the payee of the notes was insolvent, and no other ground for interlocutory relief being alleged, the petitioner had an adequate remedy at law; and the chancellor did not err in refusing the injunction against the transfer of the notes not due, or the maintenance of its action on the notes then in suit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by A. Detwiler against the Bainbridge Grocery Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Mrs. Detwiler brought her equitable petition against the Bainbridge Grocery Company, alleging that her husband, who was insolvent, was indebted to the defendant in an amount which he was unable to pay; that he and the company entered into an agreement by which he was to sell his stock of goods to the company for the amount of his indebtedness, and that the company should at once sell the property to her for the same amount, and take her notes therefor, secured by real estate belonging to her; that this was a colorable scheme and device to make her assume the debt of her husband, and to secure the same with her own property; that after the papers had been signed the husband remained in possession of the merchandise; that two of the purchase-money notes were paid by her husband; that four others were past due, and four more in the company's hands, not yet due; that an attachment has been issued by the company against her on the ground that she is a fraudulent debtor, and is threatening to convey the stock for the purpose of hindering and delaying her creditors, the truth of which she denies; that the company has caused the attachment to be levied upon the stock of goods, and also claims that she is indebted to it on the eight unpaid notes. There is no allegation that the company was insolvent. She prays that the alleged sale of merchandise to her be rescinded and declared null and void, and that the company be enjoined from negotiating her unpaid notes, and be required to surrender all of the notes for cancellation. At the hearing the material allegations in the petition were supported by affidavits of the plaintiff and her husband. The company answered, and, by affidavits of its representative, denied that there was any fraudulent scheme or device, or any intent to have Mrs. Detwiler assume the debt of her husband, but averred, on the contrary, that she was anxious to purchase the stock, and requested the company to sell to her the merchandise formerly owned by her husband. The judge denied the injunction, and Mrs. Detwiler excepted.

Harrell & Hartsfield, for plaintiff in error. W. D. Sheffield and M. E. O'Neal, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. Where one has a perfect defense to a negotiable note, he does not owe the sum represented thereby. In spite of the written promise, it is the mere equivalent of a piece of blank paper. If it is fraudulently or improperly transferred to one who, because of a right granted to bona fide holders, may force the maker to pay what he does not owe, there is wrong followed by damage, which gives rise to a right of action. Compare Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3909, 3813, 4929. It has therefore been repeatedly recognized that if one wrongfully transfers a negotiable note, under circumstances which cut off the maker from his defense, the latter would have a cause of action, the form of which would vary according to the circumstances of each case. Jones v. Crawford, 107 Ga. 318, 33 S. E. 51, 45 L. R. A. 105. See note to 27 L. R. A. 523; Wilcox v. Ryals, 110 Ga. 287, 34 S. E. 575; Zeigler v. Beasley, 44 Ga. 56. If, therefore, the petitioner is correct in her statement of the facts, she has an adequate remedy at law against a solvent defendant. There is no allegation entitling her to the interposition of equity, and no facts charged or relief prayed based on the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 195)

McARTHUR v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—DYING DECLARATIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. In charging the jury in a criminal case upon the subject of dying declarations, it is not error to give the reasons why such declarations are admissible, to wit, that the theory of the law is "that a man would be just as sure to make a truthful statement when he is in the article of death, and when he knows he is soon to leave this world and enter upon the next world, as if he were under the sanctity of an oath." Nor was this, when considered in connection with the whole charge, an expression of opinion as to the weight and sufficiency of the testimony.

2. The evidence, though by no means clear, was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Jim McArthur was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

¶ 1. See Bills and Notes, vol. 7, Cent. Dig. §§ 643, 644.

W. D. Sheffield, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 202)

SINDY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—AMENDMENT OF MOTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

1. Though the amendment to the motion for a new trial was "allowed," it does not appear that the trial judge approved or certified its grounds as true. The assignments of error therein cannot be considered.

2. A verdict approved by the trial judge will not be disturbed, notwithstanding it is only supported by the testimony of a single witness, who was confessedly guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude, and there is evidence tending to show the witness had made a contradictory statement, and that his general character was bad. The jury had the right to believe the witness in spite of the attack made on his credibility.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Floyd County; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

John Sindy was convicted of playing and betting for money at a game played with dice, and brings error. Affirmed.

H. F. Sharp and W. J. Neel, for plaintiff in error. Moses Wright, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. 1. John Sindy was tried and convicted in the city court of Floyd county of the offense of playing and betting for money at a game played with dice. He filed a motion for a new trial on the general grounds, which motion was amended at the hearing and overruled. There is nothing in the bill of exceptions or the record to show any approval of the grounds in the amended motion. The indorsement on the amendment to the motion is: "Amended motion allowed. Mch. 22nd, 1904," signed by the judge. The bill of exceptions recites that the amendment was allowed, but is absolutely silent as to any approval of the recitals of fact therein contained. Unless the grounds are approved or certified as true, this court is without jurisdiction to consider them. Jackson v. State, 116 Ga. 834, 48 S. E. 255, and cases cited.

2. Only the grounds of the original motion, that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence, can be considered. The indictment was against the defendant and three others. One witness testified positively that defendant played and bet for money at a game played with dice. He admitted on the cross-examination that he was serving a sentence in the chain gang for gaming and carrying a concealed pistol, that he was 27 years old, and had lived in Floyd county 7 years, and was serving his sixth sentence in the chain gang, one of which was for stealing chickens. He denied having said that he prosecuted the defendant, and others named in the indictment, in order to get a light sentence for himself. Four witnesses testified that they never saw defendant play and bet at a dice game, and one of the codefendants denied any knowledge of gaming as charged in the indictment, and testified that the state's witness told him, while both were in the chain gang serving sentences for gaming, that he prosecuted the defendant and others to get off lighter. Three witnesses testified to the bad character of the state's witness, and that they would not believe him on oath. Defendant denied his guilt. Under this evidence the jury convicted the defendant, and the trial judge approved their finding. Our system of judicial procedure vests the jury with exclusive power to decide the facts. They are of the vicinage, observe the witnesses while testifying, and have the best opportunity for applying the legal tests as to the credibility of a witness. They believed the sole witness for the state, as they had a right to do, and their verdict, approved by the judge, will not be disturbed. Davis v. State, 94 Ga. 399, 19 S. E. 243.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 22)

REPPARD, SNEDEKER & CO. v. MORRISON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

BUILDING CONTRACT—LIEN FOR MATERIALS FURNISHED—CONSENT OF OWNER—CONTRACT WITH TENANT.

1. The title of the true owner of land cannot be subjected to a lien for material, unless he expressly or impliedly consents to the contract under which the improvements are made.

2. Where the owner did not consent to the alteration or improvement of the building, the land could not be subjected to a lien for material furnished under a contract made by the tenant with the contractor.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Reppard, Snedeker & Co. against D. J. Morrison to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Reppard, Snedeker & Co. brought an action against Brackett & Campbell, contractors, and Morrison, as owner of a house and lot in Savannah, for the foreclosure of a lien for material furnished by the plaintiff on the order of the contractors, and alleged to have been used in improving the real estate then owned by Daniels, but sold to Morrison after the lien was recorded. The contractors made no defense, but Morrison alleged that the improvements had been placed thereon at the instance of a tenant in possession of the property, without the knowledge or consent of Daniels, the then owner, and that neither before nor since the furnishing of the material had the owner ratified the action of the tenant in having the improvements made. The evidence was conflicting as to whether Daniels had notice of the fact that the contract had been made, or that the work was being done, until after the improvements had been completed. The tenant testified that the owner came to the place while the work was being done, knew that it was going on, and made no objection. Daniels testified that the first he knew of the work was when he received notice from plaintiff's attorney of the claim for a lien; that he went at once and examined the place, and returned and notified plaintiff's counsel that he had nothing to do with it; that the tenant was fixing the place for his own accommodation in extending a partition through the building; that the tenant showed him a receipt and said the work was all done; that the improvements were of no value to the property, and would have to be torn down; that two windows had been torn out, and it would cost about $300 to put the building back as it was when the tenant had gone into it; that he told the tenant that he expected him to do that; that there was no necessity to repair the store, from the standpoint of repairing; that the tenant divided the storeroom so as to make two stores, and thereby enable him to subrent one of them. Other witnesses testified that the work done had not increased the value of the property, but was rather an expense, as the partition would have to be torn down, and it would be expensive to replace the show window which was destroyed in carrying out the alterations made by the tenant. The judge charged the jury that, if the owner did not actually or impliedly consent to the making of the improvements, the plaintiff would be entitled to a judgment against the contractors, but not to a judgment establishing a lien on the property good as against the owner. The jury found a verdict in accordance with this instruction, and against the lien, and the plaintiff assigns error on the court's refusal to grant a new trial.

¶ 2. See Mechanics' Liens, vol. 34, Cent. Dig. § 71.

W. B. Stubbs, for plaintiff in error. W. P. La Roche, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. The verdict settles the conflict in the evidence, and, under the charge of the court, is to be construed as a finding that the owner did not expressly or impliedly consent to the tenant's making the contract under which the material was furnished by the plaintiff for the improvement of the real estate. Under the Code of 1868 (section 1959), a mechanic under such circumstances might have been entitled to a lien, not against the real estate, but against the improvement itself, "without regard to the title." Gaskill v. Davis, 63 Ga. 645; Cooper v. Jack- son, 107 Ga. 256, 33 S. E. 60. But that provision was omitted from the lien act of 1873 (Civ. Code 1895, § 2801); and, while one having an interest in land may subject such interest to a lien for improvements placed thereon at his request, there is nothing in our statute which modifies the general principle that the title of the true owner cannot be incumbered by a lien without some act on his part signifying his assent. Harman v. Allen, 11 Ga. 45; Callaway v. Freeman, 29 Ga. 408; Walker v. Burt, 57 Ga. 21 (2); Powers v. Armstrong, 19 Ga. 427; Rice v. Warren, 91 Ga. 759, 17 S. E. 1032 (2). This case illustrates the inherent justice of such a rule. Repairs or additions might be made at the direction of a disseisor, trespasser, or tenant, but, while costly, instead of being improvements, they might, as here, positively detract from the value of the estate. Or they might even be improvements and add to the value of the property, and yet might not be of a character which the owner desired placed on his land. If the real estate could be subjected to a lien under such circumstances, he might be called upon to pay for that which the next week he would cause to be torn down and removed. It frequently happens that the lot and the new house sell for less than the cost of the building, and it is unfortunately true that one is often improved out of his estate. But, before this can be done, he must at least consent to the making of the disastrous improvement. In view of the finding of the jury, we are not called upon to decide how far knowledge of the making of the contract before the work began, or knowledge acquired during the progress of the work, could amount to that consent authorizing the foreclosure of a lien against the true owner.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 304)

YOTHER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

INCEST—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY OF FEMALE—CORROBORATION.

1. A man accused of incestuous adultery cannot be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of the woman with whom he is alleged to have committed the offense.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Murray County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Jeff Yother was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

H. A. Longston, Jesse S. Glenn, and Geo. G. Glenn, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. The accused was charged with having committed acts of incestuous adultery with his own daughter. She swore positively to his guilt. There was absolutely nothing to corroborate her testimony. "A woman who knowingly and willfully consents to an act of sexual intercourse which is incestuous is an accomplice of the man, and her uncorroborated testimony is not sufficient to sustain a verdict convicting him of incestuous adultery." Solomon v. State, 113 Ga. 192, 38 S. E. 332. It was argued that in this case the woman did not knowingly and willfully consent, and was therefore not an accomplice. Under the rulings in Raiford v. State, 68 Ga. 672, and Taylor v. State, 110 Ga. 151, 35 S. E. 161 (6), we think her evidence showed that the offense was incestuous adultery, though her consent may have been reluctantly given, and that she was an accomplice, whose testimony was insufficient to convict without corroboration. If this is not true, then the accused was guilty of rape, and the verdict finding him guilty of incestuous adultery was illegal. Thus, in either view of the case, the verdict should have been set aside, and a new trial ordered.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 25)

YOUNG v. CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

CARRIERS—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—MUTILATED TICKET.

1. To "mutilate" a railroad ticket, within the reasonable meaning of a stipulation on its face that it shall not be good for passage if mutilated in any way, it must be deprived of some essential or material part; and such a ticket is valid, although torn in two pieces, when both pieces are presented to the conductor at the same time, and it is apparent that they are parts of the same ticket, that together they form the entire ticket, and that no fraud has been perpetrated upon the railroad company.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Mamie Young against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Travis & Edwards, for plaintiff in error. Lawton & Cunningham, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. This was an action for damages for the alleged tortious eviction of the plaintiff from the defendant's train. The jury found for the defendant, and the plaintiff excepts to the overruling of her motion for a new trial.

It appears that the plaintiff purchased in Augusta, at a greatly reduced price, a ticket, over the defendant's line of railroad, from Augusta to Savannah and return. This ticket contained a printed stipulation to the effect that if it should become mutilated in any way it should not be good for passage. On the return trip, when the plaintiff tendered the ticket to the conductor, it was torn into two parts. The evidence for the plaintiff was to the effect that she presented both pieces of the ticket, and that they corresponded in such a way, as to the numbering and other physical characteristics of each, that there could be no doubt that they were parts of the same ticket, and that together they formed the entire return ticket. Witnesses for the defendant, on the other hand, testified that the plaintiff tendered the conductor only a part of the torn ticket. Be that as it may, the conductor demanded the payment of fare by the plaintiff, which was refused, and she was evicted from the train. The court charged the jury as a matter of law that the ticket was mutilated and by its terms invalid, and restricted their consideration of the case to the question whether the plaintiff was evicted from the train at a proper place.

This was error. Only by the most narrow and literal construction of the word "mutilated," as contained in the stipulations on the face of the ticket, could the charge be justified. The writer has never favored laxity in the enforcement of agreements between railroad companies and those to whom special rates or gratuities are granted (Central R. Co. v. Glascock, 117 Ga. 938, 43 S. E. 981; Gilleland v. Louisville R. Co., 119 Ga. 789, 47 S. E. 336; Holly v. Southern R. Co., 119 Ga. 767, 47 S. E. 188), but he is equally opposed to a construction so strict as to do violence to the obvious intention of the agreement and work a hardship on the party sought to be bound. The definition given by the Standard Dictionary of the word "mutilate" is as follows: "To cut off or deprive of a limb or essential part of, as an animal body; maim; cut or break off, or otherwise remove any part of, as a statue; disfigure. To retrench, remove, expunge, or delete an essential or material part of, so as to render incomplete or imperfect, as a literary composition; as, to mutilate a speech." The main idea of this definition is the removal of an essential part, so that the whole is rendered imperfect. It is plain that if a ticket has been torn in two, and the two parts, preserved, fit exactly together in such a way as to make it indisputable that they are parts of the same ticket and together form the entire ticket, there has been no mutilation, except in a purely physical sense. Nothing essential to a valid ticket has been removed; only its physical symmetry has been marred. The only reasonable object to be accomplished by a regulation like the one now under consideration is to prevent fraud. It would, of course, be grossly unfair to the railroad company to require it to honor only a part of a ticket, for in that case two or more persons, only one of whom had paid any consideration to the company, might be enabled to ride on the same ticket. But if the plaintiff's evidence is to be believed, she furnished to the conductor of the train conclusive evidence that a fraud had not, and could not have been, perpetrated by her. As to this point there was, as stated before, a conflict in the evidence; but the jury should have been allowed to pass upon the contested issue, and to say whether the plaintiff presented to the conductor in good faith an entire ticket which had, as she claimed, been accidentally torn in two, or only a part of a mutilated ticket.

In the case of Wightman v. Chicago R. Co. (Wis.) 40 N. W. 689, 2 L. R. A. 185, 9 Am. St. Rep. 778, it was held: "A round-trip ticket having the words 'Not good for passage' on the going part of the ticket, and the words 'if detached' on the returning part, is valid when both parts are presented together at the same time to the same conductor on the going trip, although the parts have become separated by inadvertence." It is contended, however, by counsel for the defendant in error that this case turned on a special statute, and is therefore not applicable to the case at bar. While it is true that in the opinion reference is had to a Wisconsin statute, and it is held that the company is not authorized, "under the guise of regulations, to abridge or impair a passenger's statutory or legal rights," it does not appear that the statute in question related in any way to the question of the mutilation or detachment or tearing of tickets or parts of tickets. On the contrary, it affirmatively appears in the opinion of Casoday, J., that the statute referred to "required the defendant, upon application 'at its ticket station,' * * * and payment of the price, to sell to the plaintiff 'round trip tickets, good for first class passengers'" between certain points mentioned. There is certainly nothing in such a statute that would alter the general rule involved, or render any the less applicable to the case now under consideration the principles announced in the case cited. Under the rule laid down by the court in the case of Georgia R. Co. v. Clarke, 97 Ga. 706, 25 S. E. 368, a stipulation in a special contract embodied in a railroad ticket should, in a case of uncertainty, be construed most strongly against the railroad company. In the present case the court gave the most rigid construction possible in the company's favor. The case, we think, was tried on the wrong theory, and we are therefore constrained to send it back for another hearing.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 173)

TOMPKINS v. CITY OF NEWNAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CERTIORARI—REFUSAL—PETITION—INCORPORATING IN BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

1. Where a judge of the superior court refuses to sanction a petition for certiorari, such petition is no part of the records of the court, although the order refusing to sanction it be entered upon it in writing. Such petition cannot be sent up by the clerk as part of the record, but must, in order for this court to review the refusal to sanction, be incorporated in the bill of exceptions or otherwise verified by the judge. Wood v. County of Tattnall, 42 S. E. 408, 115 Ga. 1000.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Coweta County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Petition by Lee Tompkins against the city of Newnan for certiorari to review a judgment. Petition denied, and petitioner brings error. Dismissed.

W. L. Stallings, for plaintiff in error. A. H. Freeman, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 192)

ROGERS v. CITY OF SANDERSVILLE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—POSTING BILLS WITHOUT A LICENSE—AGENT—LIABILITY.

1. One is "engaged in the business of posting bills and distributing advertisements" who performs these services for others and for hire.

2. But one who has been employed as a salesman cannot be said to be engaged in the "business" of posting bills and distributing advertisements, who does so solely as an incident to the selling for which he has been employed, and only for the purpose of advertising the wares of his principal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Washington County; B. D. Evans, Judge.

R. E. Rogers was convicted of violating an ordinance. A writ of certiorari to review the judgment was overruled, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Rogers was the agent of the Church & Dwight Company, of New York, and represented them in selling their cooking soda. He sold to merchants throughout the different states, and the goods were shipped from the New York house. In connection with selling soda, he distributed the advertising matter of the Church & Dwight Company, and posted their signs, but he did not distribute advertising matter for any other person. He was a resident of Virginia. He had no place of business in Sandersville. The marshal of that city testified that he first saw Rogers on January 2, 1904, and found him engaged in the business of tacking up signs. He was then posting bills and distributing advertisements for Church & Dwight's sodas, but not distributing any other advertising of any other firm. He failed to show the license required by the ordinances, and was thereupon arrested. The city clerk testified that no license had ever been issued to Rogers. He was charged with the offense of "engaging in the business of bill-poster and distributor of bills and advertisements without first obtaining license and registering his name and business" as required by the charter and ordinances of Sandersville. The defendant was found guilty by the mayor, and, by certiorari, assigned as error that the judgment was contrary to law and contrary to evidence; that the conviction was further erroneous, in that, if in the transaction complained of he was "engaged in the business of posting bills," it was interstate business, so as to relieve him from the operation of the ordinance; that the ordinance was also void, in that it attempted to impose a tax and require a license of traveling salesmen, contrary to the act approved December 4, 1896 (Acts 1896, p. 86). The judge of the superior court overruled the certiorari and sustained the conviction, whereupon Rogers excepted.

W. E. Armistead, for plaintiff in error. James K. Hines and J. E. Heyman, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. It is well known that in many cities there are persons who are engaged in the business of posting bills and distributing other advertising matter. They hold themselves out as ready to perform this service for the public generally. They engage in it for profit. It is their occupation. By it they undertake to advertise the wares of others. They receive pay for their work in giving publicity to what others wish made known. To those thus engaged in Sandersville the tax ordinance will apply. But one may post bills and distribute advertisements without engaging in it as a business. It may be only casually or occasionally that he does so. He may do this gratuitously, and to give notice of meetings, public events, or matters in which there is no element of trade or gain. Again, he may post or distribute bills, not as a business in itself, but only as an incident to his real business of selling his own goods. If a merchant should post bills in his store window or on his neighbor's fence, or should distribute circulars to advertise his own wares, it could not be claimed that in doing so he had engaged in this as a business. Nor would the legal character of the transaction be changed if he sent out one of his regular employes to do the same work. In both cases the advertisement of his goods would be an incident to the real business of selling merchandise, rather than an engagement in the new and independent business of posting bills and distributing advertising matter. A man may have more than one business, and be taxed for each; but, where he has only one, he cannot be said to engage in others merely because transactions incidental to his business were of a character which could be so conducted as to amount to an independent occupation. In the case at bar the defendant was a traveling salesman. He did not undertake to post bills for the public, or to advertise the goods sold by others. What he did was for the purpose of making or increasing sales, and the various steps leading to that end were part and parcel of the business of selling. There was nothing in the evidence to show that he had engaged in the business of posting bills and distributing advertisements in the sense prohibited by the ordinance. Gunn v. Macon, 84 Ga. 365, 10 S. E. 972; Mayor of Savannah v. Dehoney, 55 Ga. 33. Compare Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 354, 46 Am. Dec. 393.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except EVANS, J., disqualified.

(120 Ga. 128)

BALDWIN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INSTRUCTIONS—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR.

1. In a case of assault with intent to murder, the intention of the accused is always a matter for determination by the jury; and where the evidence is such as to authorize a finding that the accused, while not entirely justifiable, was not guilty as charged in the indictment, it is not error for the judge to give in charge to the jury the law as to the statutory offense of shooting at another.

2. A juror is not disqualified by reason of the fact that his wife is a second cousin of the wife of one of the parties at interest.

3. On the trial of an indictment for assault with intent to murder, where it appears that at a certain stage of the difficulty between the accused and the prosecutor the accused lowered his gun from his shoulder, and rested it on his hip, it is not permissible, to prove that he intended to shoot from the latter position, to show by a witness that "a lot of good shots shoot their guns from their hips. I shoot doves and quail myself, and know a lot of good shots shoot that way." The admission of such evidence is error requiring the grant of a new trial.

4. In such a case it is error to unduly stress the contentions of the state, at the same time ignoring the contentions of the accused.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Randolph County; H. C. Sheffield, Judge.

M. A. Baldwin was convicted of shooting at another, and brings error. Reversed.

Rosser & Brandon, A. M. Raines, and M. J. Yeomans, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Laing, Sol. Gen., and R. R. Arnold, for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was tried under an indictment for assault with intent to murder, and was found guilty of shooting at another. In the bill of exceptions he complains of the overruling of his motion for a new trial. There was some conflict in the evidence as to the events immediately preceding the occurrence under investigation. It seems, however, that a state of bad feeling existed between the accused, Baldwin, and the prosecutor, Blackburn, and that a difficulty between them was not unexpected. About all that is certain from the evidence is that on the day when the difficulty took place Blackburn was standing at a designated point on the public square in the town of Cuthbert, when Baldwin drove by him in a buggy, carrying a double-barreled shotgun loaded with buckshot; that, after passing Blackburn, Baldwin drove a short distance, and got out of his buggy; and that almost immediately both Baldwin and Blackburn began firing at each other. The witnesses for the state make it appear that Baldwin was the aggressor, and fired first; while those for the accused testified that the accused endeavored to avoid a difficulty, that he was pursued by Blackburn, and that he fired only after Blackburn had opened fire on him.

1. It is contended by counsel for the accused that the court erred in giving to the jury a charge which would authorize them to find a verdict of guilty of shooting at another, as, under no view of the evidence, was such a finding warranted. This contention is without merit. The several eyewitnesses to the affair who were introduced gave accounts which varied in many essential details. In a case of this sort the intent of the accused is always of primary importance, and is a question for the jury under the evidence. The jury in the present case had ample evidence before them upon which to base a finding that the accused, while not wholly justifiable in firing at the prosecutor, was not guilty to the full extent charged in the indictment. The charges on this subject were therefore not erroneous.

2. The motion for a new trial also seeks to set up the disqualification of one of the jurors before whom the case was tried on the ground of relationship to the prosecutor. 'It appears, however, from the affidavits in support of this ground, that the relationship relied on consisted in the fact that the prosecutor and the juror had married second cousins. Each would have been disqualified to act as juror in a case in which the other's wife was interested, but as to each other there was no disqualification whatever. An easy way out of difficulties of this sort may be had by reference to the rule laid down in rhyme by Mr. Chief Justice Bleckley in Central R. & Banking Co. v. Roberts, 91 Ga. 517, 18 S. E. 315:

The groom and bride each comes within
The circle of the other's kin;
But kin and kin are still no more
Related than they were before.

It is apparent, therefore, that in the present case there was no disqualification, and that the ground of the motion referred to presented no reason for the grant of a new trial.

3. A witness for the accused, who saw the shooting, testified that before Baldwin fired at Blackburn he raised the gun to his shoulder, and then lowered it to his hip, afterwards raising it to his shoulder again, when he shot. On cross-examination he was allowed, over the objection of counsel for the accused, to testify: "A lot of good shots shoot their guns from their hips. I shoot doves and quail myself, and know a lot of good shots shoot that way." There can be no doubt that the admission of this evidence was error. The defense of the accused was that he fired at the prosecutor in self-defense, or under the fears of a reasonable man that his life was in danger. The testimony of the witness on direct examination tended to show that he was acting in self-defense; that, after raising his gun the first time, he came to the conclusion that it would not be necessary for him to shoot, and lowered it to his hip. It was, of course, permissible for the state to rebut this evidence by showing that the accused was in the habit of firing from the hip; but, clearly, this could not be done by showing that "a lot of good shots" are in the habit of firing in that manner.

4. The following charge of the court is assigned as error on the ground that it was unfair and argumentative: "For instance, you can see if Baldwin was mad with Blackburn; for, if he was not, he would not be likely to shoot at him. See if Dr. Baldwin had a gun. Was he carrying it in his buggy? If so, what for? Was he accustomed to carrying it? What effect does that have on your minds in settling the matter? If he had a gun then, and it was not his custom to carry it about with him in his buggy, why did he have it that particular day? Was it loaded? And if it was loaded, what was it loaded with? Was it loaded with buckshot, or with something else? If it was loaded with buckshot, why, and what for? Was it to shoot some person, or to shoot something else? Was he driving through the square, and did he come in contact with Blackburn? Did he see him? Did he have any business up there on the square? Was it business that caused him to stop upon the square? What did he stop for? Did he get out of his buggy? If so, what for? Did he turn towards where Blackburn was? If so, why? Did he take his gun from the buggy when he got out? If so, what for? Did he raise it, and, if so, what for? And in what direction was it pointed? Did he lower it after raising it, and then raise it again? If so, for what purpose? And did it fire off when he raised it the second time, if he raised it the second time? If so, in what direction? Was the firing off of the gun accidental or intentional?" While we are satisfied that the able and learned trial judge had no intention to do other than the most exact and impartial justice between the state and the accused, we are constrained to hold that the charge quoted is fairly open to the criticism made against it. As before stated, Baldwin's defense was that he shot at the prosecutor in self-defense, and there was evidence before the jury in support of that theory. It could not, therefore, have been otherwise than extremely prejudicial to the accused to instruct the jury that, if he was not mad with Blackburn at the time of the difficulty, he would not have been likely to shoot at him. The charge also goes into minute detail as to conduct of the accused, which he did not deny, and its tendency was to lead the jury to believe that, if these admitted details of the difficulty were true, the accused was guilty as charged. It is also noteworthy that nowhere in his charge did the judge go with like minuteness into the conduct of the prosecutor as contended by the accused. The result was that, as to the circumstances immediately connected with the difficulty, the contentions of the state were given undue stress, while those of the accused were almost entirely ignored. The decision on this point is clearly governed by the ruling of this court in Brantley v. State, 115 Ga. 230 (3), 41 S. E. 695, where it was held error for the court in a criminal case to unduly impress upon the jury circumstances tending to implicate the accused, with no corresponding statement of the points insisted upon in his defense. See, also, Thomas v. State, 95 Ga. 485, 22 S. E. 315; Moody v. State, 114 Ga. 449, 40 S. E. 242. On account of this error, and of the erroneous admission of evidence before referred to, the case should go back for another trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(119 Ga. 981)

CAMP v. YOUNG.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

BANKRUPTCY—EFFECT OF DISCHARGE—MORTGAGE LIEN—JUDGMENT LIEN—EXEMPTIONS OF BANKRUPT—ACTION ON NOTE—SUFFICIENCY OF ANSWER.

1. A discharge in bankruptcy is no defense to the foreclosure of a mortgage executed more than four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, when the debt secured by the mortgage has not been proved in the bankrupt court. Evans v. Rounsaville, 42 S. E. 100, 115 Ga. 684.

2. The lien of a judgment rendered more than four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is not affected by a discharge in bankruptcy, when the holder of such judgment has not proved his debt in the bankrupt court. Dozier v. McWhorter, 39 S. E. 108, 113 Ga. 584; Smith v. Zachry, 42 S. E. 102, 115 Ga. 722.

3. An exemption in bankruptcy is not good against a mortgage or judgment for the purchase money of the property set aside as exempt, when the holder of such mortgage or judgment has not proved his debt in the bankrupt court. See McKenney v. Cheney, 45 S. E. 433, 118 Ga. 387, and citations.

4. The general allegations, in an answer, that the copy note attached to the petition is not an exact copy of the note defendant gave the plaintiff, and that defendant denies he is indebted to the plaintiff, present no valid defense to the note sued upon.

5. The answer in this case was properly stricken.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Putnam County; B. D. Evans, Judge.

Action by Robert Young against Mrs. S. J. Camp. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. T. Davidson, for plaintiff in error. W. F. Jenkins & Son and Z. D. Harrison, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except EVANS, J., disqualified.

(120 Ga. 205)

COURSEY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL.

1. No attack was made upon the legal sufficiency of the accusation, nor upon the accuracy or correctness of the charge of the court. The motion for a new trial was based only on the general grounds that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence. There was sufficient evidence to sustain the charge contained in the accusation. The trial judge approved the verdict finding the accused guilty, and this court will not set it aside.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Wrightsville; Wm. Faircloth, Judge.

Perry Coursey was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. L. Kent, for plaintiff in error. B. B. Blount, for the State.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 198)

REESE v. CITY OF NEWNAN.

COOK v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—KEEPING FOR ILLEGAL SALE—EVIDENCE.

1. Under the "general welfare clause" in its charter, a municipal corporation has authority to make penal the keeping of intoxicating liquors for the purpose of illegal sale. Paulk v. Sycamore, 30 S. E. 417, 104 Ga. 728, 41 L. R. A. 772, 69 Am. St. Rep. 128.

2. One who receives money, and delivers whisky in exchange therefor, may be treated as the seller, when no other person is shown to have filled that capacity. Mack v. State, 42 S. E. 776, 116 Ga. 546. Proof, on the trial of one accused of keeping liquor for illegal sale, that the accused made an illegal sale of liquor, is sufficient to show that the liquor sold was kept on the particular occasion for the purpose of illegal sale. Rooney v. Augusta, 45 S. E. 72, 117 Ga. 709.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Coweta County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Fed Reese and Ruic Cook were convicted of violating the liquor laws, and bring error. Affirmed.

W. L. Stallings, for plaintiffs in error. A. H. Freeman, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment in each case affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 126)

JONES v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

KEEPING GAMING HOUSE—PLACE OF BET.

1. J. kept a house for the daily congregation of a large number of people to make bets on horse races run in other states. The system was that the person desiring to bet made application for a bet on a certain horse at the posted odds, handing his application and the money to be bet to J. or his agent. This application was then telegraphed to R. in a foreign state for acceptance or rejection. If the bet was lost, the money was deposited by J. to the credit of R.; while, if it was won, J. paid the winnings (less 10 cents commission) to the bettor out of funds kept with him for that purpose by R. Held, (1) that J. was guilty, under Pen. Code 1895, § 398, of keeping and maintaining a gaming house; and (2) that, even if the bets were accepted and consummated in another state, the money was hazarded in the house kept by J.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Charles Jones was convicted of keeping and maintaining a gaming house, and brings error. Affirmed.

Arnold & Arnold and Rucker & Rucker, for plaintiff in error. C. D. Hill, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Under the facts, we are clearly of the opinion that the court below committed no error in holding the accused guilty. The first proposition announced in the syllabus is fully sustained by the reasoning in the case of Thrower v. State, 117 Ga. 753, 45 S. E. 126. The opinion in that case shows what a gaming house is, and what is necessary to constitute the offense of keeping and maintaining one. Learned counsel for the plaintiff in error did not combat the soundness of the decision in Thrower's Case, but undertook to show that it did not control the present case, because the indictment in the present case alleged that the money was hazarded in the house, while the evidence showed that, inasmuch as the offer to bet had to be telegraphed to New Orleans and accepted there before it became a bet, there was no hazarding of money in this state, but the hazarding, if any, was in New Orleans. While the authorities generally hold that, if an offer to bet is made in one state to a person residing in another state, the bet is consummated in the state where accepted and not in the state in which the offer is made, we think that this rule is not applicable under the statute under which this indictment was found. The decisions cited by counsel for the plaintiff in error are upon statutes which forbid betting, and under which it is held that an offer to bet made in one state and acceptance by a person in another state is not a violation of the betting laws of the state in which the offer is made. The accused in the present case was not indicted for betting or for keeping a place in which bets were made, but for keeping and maintaining a gaming house. The distinction between betting and keeping a gaming house is pointed out in the able opinion of Lamar, J., in Thrower's Case, supra. The offense of keeping a gaming house may be committed where a person keeps a house in which people congregate for the purpose of betting, even if the betting done is not itself a violation of law. In this state it is not a penal offense to bet on a horse race; but if a man keeps a house in which persons congregate for this purpose, he is guilty of maintaining a gaming house.

Coming to the facts of this particular case as to the hazarding of money, while we think it was unnecessary to make this allegation in the indictment, still, in our opinion, the facts fully sustain it. When a man desired to make a bet, he filled out an application to be telegraphed to Roots in New Orleans, and at the same time handed in the amount of money he wished to risk on the horse selected. This money was received by Jones or one of his agents. So far as appears from the record, the applicant never received any notice, before the race was run, as to whether his bet was accepted or rejected. After the race was over, the result of the race was announced, and another agent of Jones, in the same house, paid the winnings to those who had won. Where the bet was lost, the money which had accompanied the application was deposited by Jones to the credit of Roots. Under this state of facts we think that the money was hazarded in the house in question. The bettor deposited it there, and lost it if he failed to win, or regained it if he did win. The whole transaction as to the money took place in this house. This was the very object for which the house was kept. It was of itself an invitation to the people to go to that place and make their offers to bet, depositing their money with the proprietor of the house. While there is no law in this state to punish the bettors, there is a law for the punishment of the proprietor of such a house in which people can meet daily to bet on horse races and hazard their money thereon. The money was not sent to New Orleans. It was placed in the keeping of this accused, and he kept it if the bettor lost, or repaid it, together with the winnings, if the bettor won. It is clear to our minds that the money was hazarded in the house kept by Jones. The fact that Roots had the right to reject or accept an offer to bet makes no difference. The proof shows that he did accept bets from several of the witnesses, or, at least, that they were paid, or not, according to the result of the race. It seems to us that the whole system was a mere device or sham to evade the criminal law upon this subject, an effort to evade based upon a technical definition of the word "betting," and an artificial distinction as to where the bet was consummated. As was once said by Judge Bleckley: "It is something easier for an offender to baffle the dictionary than the Penal Code; for the former is perplexed with verbal niceties and shades of meaning, while the latter grasps in a broad, practical way at the substantial transactions of men."

¶ 1. See Gaming, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. § 122.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 127)

COOK v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

APPEAL AND ERROR—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—TIME FOR FILING—STATUTES—AMENDMENT—DISMISSAL OF WRIT OF ERROR.

1. A bill of exceptions must be filed within 15 days from the date of the certificate of the judge in the clerk's office of the court whose judgment is sought to be reviewed. Section 1075 of the Penal Code, providing for fast bill of exceptions in criminal cases, while making no reference to the filing, does not alter or amend the general law (Civ. Code 1895, § 5554) as to the filing and time of filing of the bill of exceptions. It appearing that the bill of exceptions in this case was not filed within 15 days from the date of the certificate of the judge, a motion to dismiss the writ of error on this ground must be granted. Greer v. Prator, 59 Ga. 881; Vickers v. Sanders, 32 S. E. 102, 106 Ga. 265; Miller v. Blitch, 74 Ga. 361.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Dude Cook was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Writ dismissed.

C. L. Redman, for plaintiff in error. O. H. B. Bloodworth, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 198)

BURDEN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUOR—ILLEGAL SALE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

1. The special assignment of error that the evidence showed that the accused merely acted as the agent of the buyer in getting the whisky he was charged with unlawfully selling, and did not make a sale thereof or have any interest whatever in it, is embraced in the general grounds of the motion for a new trial, wherein complaint is made that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction.

2. The conviction cannot be held to be contrary to the evidence, it appearing that a witness for the state testified that he gave to the accused a certain sum of money, and a short while thereafter the accused delivered to him a quart of whisky, and it further appearing from the testimony of another witness that the accused, when asked "what he sold that liquor for," replied that he was drinking too much of it himself, and let the person to whom he was charged with selling it "have it to get rid of it." Though the accused, in his statement, undertook to explain that he acted merely as the agent of the purchaser, and bought the whisky from a named person who had the reputation of running a "blind tiger," the judge who tried the case was warranted in reaching the conclusion that the explanation offered by the accused was a mere subterfuge to cover up an illegal sale really made by himself. Mack v. State, 42 S. E. 776, 116 Ga. 548.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Elberton; P. P. Proffitt, Judge.

Lem Burden was convicted of unlawfully selling liquor, and brings error. Affirmed.

H. J. Brewer, for plaintiff in error. T. J. Brown, Sol., for the State.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 176)

RAMFOS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—FURNISHING CIGARETTES TO MINORS—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY OF REQUEST TO CHARGE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. The charge of the court of which complaint is made stated accurately the law contained in section 497 of the Penal Code, prohibiting the furnishing of cigarettes to minors, with which offense the accused was charged. It does not appear that a request was made to charge on any special defense of the accused. The charge complained of was therefore not open to the objection that it eliminated the defense of the accused that the cigarettes were sold to the minor in his absence by one of his employees, against his positive instructions that no cigarettes should be sold to minors.

2. There was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict finding the accused guilty, which was approved by the trial judge, and this court will not interfere with the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Oatham County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

John Ramfos was convicted of furnishing cigarettes to minors, and brings error. Affirmed.

R. L. Colding, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 161)

SMITH v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—READING PORTIONS OF BOOK TO JURY—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. This court cannot say that it was error to refuse to allow counsel to read certain portions of a named book to the jury as part of his argument, when the assignment of error does not show, literally or in substance, what counsel desired to read. Cook v. Coffey, 30 S. E. 27, 103 Ga. 388.

2. Taken in connection with the entire charge, there was no error in any of the charges of which complaint was made. The verdict, if not demanded, was certainly authorized by the evidence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Carroll County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Robert Smith was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. D. Hamrick, S. J. Boykin, James Beall, R. D. Jackson, and W. F. Brown, for plaintiff in error. John C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and H. A. Hall, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 181)

POWELL v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

1. The motion for a new trial does not complain that the court committed any error of law on the trial before the jury. There was a decided conflict in the evidence. The jury believed the testimony of a single witness offered by the state in preference to the statement of the accused and the evidence of two witnesses introduced in his behalf. This was their privilege under the law. The verdict was approved by the trial judge, and no legal reason appears why this court should set it aside.

2. If the witness for the state was to be believed, the profane language testified to have been used in her presence was entirely without provocation.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Americus; O. R. Crisp, Judge.

Tom Powell was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Blalock & Cobb, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Ansley, Jr., Sol., and F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(119 Ga. 973)

HATHCOCK v. McGOUIRK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

QUO WARRANTO—TRIAL OF RIGHT TO OFFICE—APPLICATION—TRIAL—CONTINUANCE—SELECTION OF JURORS—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE—NECESSITY OF BRIEFING EVIDENCE.

1. It was not error to refuse a continuance because of the absence of a nonresident witness; nor because of the illness of the respondent's brother, the court assuring the respondent that, should he receive information that his brother's condition demanded his presence, the trial of the case would be suspended.

2. An application for leave to file a quo warranto, reciting that at an election for sheriff of a named county, held on a given day, the applicant received a majority of the votes cast, which fact was duly certified by the proper authorities; that, notwithstanding, his opponent was given a commission by the Governor of the state, under which he took possession of the office, and was exercising the privileges and receiving the emoluments thereof, without lawful authority and in utter disregard of the rights of the applicant; and that the term of office for which applicant was elected has not expired, etc.—is not demurrable on the ground that the application does not set forth a cause of action, or on the ground that the superior court of that county is without jurisdiction to entertain the same, or on the ground that the applicant's remedy was to have contested the election, and the commission issued by the Governor to the respondent was conclusive as to his right to hold the office.

(a) The motion to dismiss the proceeding and the motion to vacate the order directing the writ to issue embraced substantially the same matters set up by way of demurrer, and were properly overruled by the court.

3. The jury provided for in section 4880 of the Civil Code of 1895 may be selected by drawing a panel of 36 jurors from the box, purging the panel, and reducing it to 24, and selecting the jury therefrom in the usual way; each party being allowed 6 peremptory challenges.

4. This court will not review the evidence in a case when it is apparent that there has been no bona fide effort to brief the evidence as required by law; nor will it undertake to pass upon assignments of error requiring a consideration of the evidence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

Application by C. W. McGouirk for writ of quo warranto against M. L. Hathcock to try title to the office of sheriff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

B. G. Griggs and J. S. James, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Hall, J. H. McLarty, W. A. James, and W. K. Fielder, Sol. Gen., for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. C. W. McGouirk presented to the superior court of Douglas county an application for a writ of quo warranto to inquire into the right of M. L. Hathcock to the office of sheriff of that county, to which office the applicant claimed he had been duly elected on the first Wednesday in October, 1902. The court passed an order calling on Hathcock to show cause on the 11th day of April, 1903, why the writ should not issue, and service was perfected on Hathcock on April 6, 1903. On April 11, 1903, he appeared and filed both a demurrer and an answer. On the same day the applicant offered an amendment to his application, which was allowed over the defendant's objection. The hearing was then postponed until May 4, 1903, when the case was taken up in connection with other cases of like character, in one of which (that of Harding against Sayer) the court directed that an order be taken granting leave to file an information, "and also announced that similar judgment would be signed in this case." The order in the case of Harding against Sayer was accordingly prepared and signed, but no order in this case was signed until December 5, 1903, the court "anticipating the Sayer case would settle all the questions of law in this case," and nothing further was done until the day last named. On that day a hearing was had on the defendant's demurrer and answer, and the court passed an order overruling the demurrer on all the grounds therein contained, and adjudging and directing that the applicant "have leave to file said information in the nature of the writ of quo warranto to inquire into the right and title of the said M. L. Hathcock to the office of sheriff of Douglas county for the term of two years from the 1st day of January, 1903." The court further adjudged that a question of fact was made by the pleadings, and directed that a jury be drawn as provided by law for the trial of said issue of fact, and that the clerk of the superior court of Douglas county, upon the filing of the information, issue a writ of quo warranto, to be directed to the respondent, requiring him to appear at a special court to be held on the 21st day of December, 1903, and file his answer to said information, and to try the issues of fact as provided by law. The order of the court further directed that Hathcock be served with a copy of the writ of quo warranto and information 10 days before the time set for the hearing. On December 21, 1903, he appeared and filed a motion to vacate and set aside the order passed on December 5th, and also filed a demurrer and answer to the information brought in pursuance of that order, as well as a motion to dismiss the proceeding. The hearing was, by order of the court, continued until January 14, 1904, when the motion to vacate, the demurrer, and the motion to dismiss were heard and overruled. On January 15th, when the case was called for trial, the defendant moved for a continuance, which was refused, and the case proceeded to a trial on its merits. The jury returned a verdict in favor of McGouirk. The defendant, Hathcock, thereupon made a motion for a new trial, to which an amendment was subsequently offered and allowed. This motion came on to be heard on January 25, 1904, and on that day the court passed an order overruling the same. On the last-named day Hathcock presented his bill of exceptions, which was duly signed by the judge, and therein assigned error on all the rulings above referred to which were adverse to him. The questions presented by his demurrers and the several motions made by him, including the motion for a new trial, will appear from the discussion of the case which follows, and it is needless to set forth at length the various grounds of these demurrers and motions. The issues raised by the pleadings of the plaintiff and the answers of the defendant will be likewise made to sufficiently appear.

1. Complaint is made by the plaintiff in error that the trial judge improperly refused to grant a continuance because of the absence of a witness. It appears from the record that the absent witness did not reside in the county. So there is no merit in this complaint. A continuance was also asked because of the illness of the respondent's brother. The court assured respondent that, should he receive information that his brother's condition demanded his presence, he would suspend the case. The court did not abuse his discretion in refusing to grant a continuance on this ground.

2. It was insisted by the defendant below that the application for leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto set forth facts disclosing that the court was without jurisdiction in the premises, inasmuch as the action of the Governor in issuing a commission to Hathcock was conclusive, and could not be inquired into by the courts; that the statutory remedy of contest was exclusive; and that the facts alleged were insufficient to authorize the granting of the applicant's prayer that a writ of quo warranto issue. In brief, the application alleged that at an election for the office of sheriff held in the county of Douglas on the first Wednesday in October, 1902, applicant received 862 votes, and M. L. Hathcock received 755 votes; that after the election the votes were consolidated by the managers thereof, in accordance with the statutes made and provided in such cases, and it appeared from the consolidated returns made by the managers who held the election at the various voting precincts in the county that the applicant had received the votes of 862 legally qualified voters of the county, whereas the said Hathcock had received the votes of only 755 voters of the county; that, from the consolidated returns made by the managers of the election in the manner prescribed by law, the applicant had a majority of 107 votes of the legal voters of said county, and was duly elected sheriff of the county for a term of two years from the 1st day of January, 1903, but notwithstanding his opponent, Hathcock, failed to receive a majority of the votes cast at the election, he was, without legal warrant or authority, commissioned as sheriff of said county for a term of two years from the 1st day of January, 1903, and the said Hathcock now holds the commission issued to him, and is in possession of the office of sheriff, discharging the duties thereof, and enjoying all the emoluments, profits, and honors of that office, despite the fact that applicant was legally elected to said office in the manner provided for by the laws of this state, and has a full and complete title thereto; that he has been illegally and wrongfully ejected from said office by the said Hathcock, who illegally and fraudulently obtained the commission thereto which authorizes him to discharge the duties of the same, and to receive the profits, emoluments, and honors thereof; that the said Hathcock is usurping, by virtue of said commission, the said office, together with all of its privileges, honors, and profits; that said office is one of profit, and the term for which applicant was elected thereto has not yet expired; that he has a property right therein, and is being deprived of his property right in said office by the illegal acts and usurpations of the said Hathcock, as aforesaid. Attached to this application was a copy of the consolidated returns of the election, showing the number of votes cast, respectively, for the applicant and his defeated opponent. The application closed with a prayer that a rule nisi be directed to M. L. Hathcock, requiring him to show cause, at such time and place as the court might fix, why an information should not be filed against him, and the state's writ of quo warranto issue to determine what right and title he has to the office of sheriff, as aforesaid, and by what authority he is exercising the rights of said office. In an amendment to his application, which was allowed, the applicant alleged that notwithstanding the fact that he received the majority of the votes of the lawful voters cast at said election, and notwithstanding the returns of said election, regularly made as required by law by the duly constituted officers to hold the election, on their face showed that he had received a majority of the votes of the duly qualified voters which had been cast at said election, and notwithstanding a true copy of said returns had been, previously to the issuing of said commission to Hathcock, filed with the Governor of the state, the said Governor, contrary to law and in utter disregard of the rights of applicant, illegally and wrongfully issued to Hathcock the commission of sheriff of said county of Douglas.

Substantially the same objections raised by the demurrers were asserted in the motion to dismiss and the motion to vacate the order overruling the first demurrer. Both the application for leave to file and the information distinctly allege that applicant received a majority of the legal votes cast in the election, and no hint from the pleadings of applicant would suggest the slightest color of authority for respondent to hold the office. In all of the reported cases in this state the defeated candidate was attempting by quo warranto to either declare the office vacant, or sustain his right to the same because of certain alleged matters debors the certificate of the consolidating board declaring the election of his opponent. The case at bar, on the pleadings of applicant, is that of a successful candidate receiving a majority of the votes cast in the election; his election legally declared by the board of consolidation, and duly certified to the Governor; and the issuance of a commission to his defeated adversary by the Governor without authority of law, and in utter disregard of his right to the office. It needs no argument to sustain the contention that in such a case the appropriate remedy is by quo warranto proceedings. Civ. Code 1895, § 4878; High's Ex. L. Rem. § 639a. The issuance by the Governor of a commission, since the act of 1893, providing that in contested election cases the issues shall be adjudicated by the judge of the superior court, is a ministerial act. His duty is to issue the commission to the person whose election is certified by the proper authorities, in cases where there is no contest, and, where there has been a contest, to the person adjudged by the special tribunal to determine the result by contest proceedings as entitled to the commission. Even when the Governor was the official to pass on the issues made in a proceeding of contest, it was held that a commission was not conclusive as to matters not passed upon by the Governor. Corbitt v. McDaniel, 77 Ga. 544, 2 S. E. 692. But where every right to the commission was in the applicant, and respondent was a usurper, according to the pleadings of applicant, it cannot be said that the illegal issuance of the commission would deprive applicant from appealing to the court to prevent a usurpation of office. It may be that the Governor was fully justified in issuing the commission to Hathcock, but this could be urged as matter of defense. The demurrer admits all facts well pleaded, and the allegations of both the application and the information clearly show the election of McGouirk, and the improper issuance of commission to Hathcock. It is only in cases where the election board, or the tribunal to try contest proceedings, certifies that a named person has received a majority of the votes cast at an election, and the Governor issues a commission on such certificate, that it has been held that a commission thus regularly issued is final.

Another objection urged in the demurrer was that the exclusive remedy of applicant was to have contested the election. It would seem absurd to say to a successful candidate for office, who has received a majority of the votes, and who has been declared entitled to the office by the board of managers consolidating the election returns, that before he is entitled to the office he must file contest proceedings against his defeated adversary. The successful candidate is never the contestant. The certificate of the board of consolidation gives him a prima facie right to the office. But the defeated candidate may contest, and the result of such a proceeding is conclusive as to the person elected and entitled to the office. However, this is not the case raised in the pleadings by demurrer.

Where the purpose is to declare the office vacant, any citizen and taxpayer may file a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto. If the relator happens to be the defeated candidate, his right to file the information is in his capacity as an interested citizen, and not in his capacity of a defeated candidate. In the character of defeated candidate, he can claim no more than the right to have the opportunity to institute quo warranto proceedings against his opponent, who was illegally installed in office, for the purpose of ousting him. Howell v. Pate, 119 Ga. 537, 46 S. E. 667; Davis v. City Council, 90 Ga. 824, 17 S. E. 110.

When a defeated candidate wishes to assert his claim that he received a majority of the legal votes cast at an election, he must avail himself of his statutory remedy of contest. His right to the office must appear from the judgment or order of the proper tribunal vested by law with the authority of going behind the return of the election managers, and declaring the true result of the election to be that he had received a majority of the legal votes cast. Until the defeated candidate has in this way established his right to the office, he cannot by quo warranto seek the ouster of his opponent and his own induction into office. From what has been said, we conclude that the court was right in overruling the various demurrers and motions.

3. When the judge determined that the answer to the information raised an issue of fact, he passed an order for a special term of court to try the same, and in this order directed that a jury be drawn as provided by law. Pursuant thereto, 36 jurors were drawn from the box, from which number a panel of 24 was made up, and the jury was selected from this panel in the usual way. Plaintiff in error contends that the judge did not have the authority to draw more than 12 names from the box, under Civ. Code 1895, § 4880, and the drawing of a larger number denied him the right of a trial by the jury provided for by the statute. Prior to the act of 1868, which is codified in section 4880, the practice in mandamus, prohibition, and quo warranto was uniform, and all issues of fact were tried in term time. The act of 1868 made an exception of quo warranto, and provided for a more speedy trial at a special term of court, to be called not less than 10 nor longer than 30 days after the judge had determined that the information and answer made an issue of fact. The evident purpose of the Legislature was to provide a more speedy trial in this kind of cases, and the machinery devised was to effectuate such purpose. To some extent there was a variance from the general procedure—notably in the provision for trial at a special term, and the abolition of all distinction between appearance and trial terms. W. & A. R. R. v. State, 69 Ga. 531. Except as otherwise provided, the general law of practice and procedure was applicable. It will be observed that no provision was made for supplying this panel to the number of 12 in case of its depletion from any cause, nor was either party given the right of peremptory challenge. The act of 1878, codified in Pen. Code 1895, § 854, broadly gives to each litigant in every civil case the right to demand a full panel of 24 competent and impartial jurors from which to strike a jury. While the section just cited says that each party may demand a full panel of 24, the act from which the section is codified distinctly states that in all civil cases any party shall have the right to demand a full panel of 24 competent and impartial jurors from which to strike a jury. This section is applicable to all civil cases, and embraces in its broad provisions the practice in the trial of quo warranto proceedings. Therefore, construing these sections together, as well as all other kindred sections, we hold that the judge is not limited to the drawing of 12 men by Civ. Code 1895, § 4880, but, in his discretion, may draw 36, so as to allow the selection of a jury as in ordinary cases. This construction gives effect to the wise policy of uniformity of procedure, accords to each party six peremptory challenges, and does not withdraw any right or privilege from the litigants.

4. None of the other assignments of error can be intelligently passed on without reference to the evidence adduced on the hearing below. No bona fide effort to comply with the statute as to making a brief of the evidence appears to have been made in this case. "This court will not review the evidence in a case when it is apparent that there has been no bona fide effort to brief the evidence as required by law, and when the document purporting to be a brief of the evidence is extensively interspersed with objections to testimony, statements and arguments of counsel, and evidence to which objections were sustained, and also with colloquies between counsel and court, none of which should properly find place in a brief of evidence." Culver v. Silver, 113 Ga. 1142, 39 S. E. 472. Nor, in such a case as the present, can this court undertake to "pass upon assignments of error requiring a consideration of evidence." Carmichael v. State, 111 Ga. 653, 36 S. E. 872.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(129 Ga. 132)

THOMPSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

PERJURY—FALSE SCHOOL REPORT—CRIMINAL TRIAL—PAROL EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—NEW TRIAL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. In an indictment for false swearing it is not necessary to allege expressly that the oath was taken not in a judicial proceeding, when the facts set out in the indictment show this unequivocally.

2. Where, on the trial of one accused of false swearing, it appears that he had sworn to a report of several pages, one of such pages is not inadmissible in evidence because the accused had previously sworn to it before another attesting officer. The first oath did not affect the falsity of the second, nor render the page inadmissible. Nor was it error to admit parol evidence to the effect that the oath of the accused, subscribed to the report, was to the entire report, including the page just referred to.

3. One indicted for false swearing may be convicted although it appear that the officer who administered the oath knew at the time that it was false, and made to obtain funds to which the affiant was not entitled, and such officer administered the oath for the purpose of instituting criminal proceedings.

4. Where a school-teacher is indicted for swearing to a false school report, and such report is lost, upon the trial of the teacher under another indictment for the same offense the first indictment is admissible in evidence to show the contents of the lost report, when there is evidence that certain names in the report and in the first indictment were identical.

5. A new trial will not be ordered because of the failure of the trial judge to instruct the jury as to the form of their verdict, when it appears that in concluding his charge he stated that, in the event the jury entertained a reasonable doubt as to any material issue in the case, they should return a verdict of acquittal; but that, if they had no such doubt, they should find the accused guilty.

6. There was no error in the rulings of which complaint was made, and the evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Lowndes County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

B. W. Thompson was convicted of false swearing, and brings error. Affirmed.

S. M. Varnadoe and Wilcox & Johnson, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Thomas, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 188)

LITTLE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—DISCRETION OF COURT.

1. There was no error of law complained of. The evidence was sufficient to warrant the verdict, and the discretion of the trial judge in refusing to grant a new trial will not be controlled.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

John Little was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

S. C. Crane, for plaintiff in error. C. D. Hill, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 190)

THOMPKINS v. CITY OF NEWMAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

1. The evidence authorized the judgment, and there was no error in overruling the certiorari. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Coweta County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Lee Thompkins brings certiorari to review a judgment convicting him of an offense, and on overruling of the certiorari brings error. Affirmed.

A. H. Freeman, for plaintiff in error. W. M. Glass, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 964)

MORGAN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER JEOPARDY—CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPON—NATURE OF OFFENSE—INDICTMENT.

1. Where two indictments were found against the accused at the same term of the court, one charging him with carrying a concealed pistol on a given date in the presence of A., and the other charging him with carrying a concealed pistol on a different date in the presence of B., prima facie each indictment charged a separate and distinct offense from the one charged in the other.

2. Therefore a conviction under the one charging the offense to have been committed in the presence of A. was no bar to a prosecution under the one charging such an offense to have been committed in the presence of B., unless it appeared from the evidence that the charges referred to the same transaction, or that A. was present during the same carrying of the pistol concealed which occurred in the presence of B.

3. A person may commit but one offense of carrying a weapon concealed upon his person, although he carries it thus concealed from place to place in the presence of different people at the different places; but, whenever the continuity of the act constituting the offense is broken, that particular offense is at an end, and another like offense is committed when the weapon is again concealed by him upon his person.

4. The evidence submitted failed to sustain the plea of former conviction, and there was therefore no error in finding against such plea.

Simmons, C. J., and Candler, J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Whitfield County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

W. M. F. Morgan was convicted of carrying a concealed weapon, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. E. Mann and R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., for the State.

FISH, P. J. At the April term, 1902, of the superior court of Whitfield county, two indictments were returned against W. M. F. Morgan. In one he was charged with having and carrying about his person a concealed pistol, in said county, on December 25, 1901, "in the presence of Deering Hughes." The other indictment charged that on December 26, 1901, he carried about his person a concealed pistol "in the presence of T. L. Ballinger, Louis Roy, E. E. Whittle, Charlie Roberts, and Bob King." At the October term, 1902, the accused was tried and convicted under the last-mentioned indictment. On the call of the case based on the first-mentioned indictment, at the October term, 1903, the accused filed a plea of former conviction, with the usual allegations, and having attached thereto a copy of the record in the case in which he had been convicted. By consent the issue made by this plea was submitted to the court for trial upon the following agreed statement of facts: "The defendant had a pistol concealed in his pocket on the day charged in the indictment in the presence of the person named in the present bill of indictment, when the pistol fell out of his pocket, and he picked it up and put it back in his pocket. A short while thereafter he left and went to his home in the little town of Cohutta, where he is charged in both indictments with carrying a pistol. On the trial of the case pleaded in bar, it was shown that defendant, after coming into his house, took the pistol out of his pocket after he arrived at home, and laid it up on the mantel in the presence of other witnesses, sat by the fire and talked with those present, including the state's witnesses, put the pistol in his pocket, and went out with it. All of this was done in the same day, and within an hour or two of the same time." It was further agreed that, should the plea be sustained by the court, the case then on trial should be dismissed, and, if the judgment of the court should be against the plea, then the accused might take the case to the Supreme Court. The court found against the plea, and the accused excepted.

1. An indictment for carrying a concealed pistol may charge the commission of the offense in general terms, and be good. In such a case the state may prove the commission of the offense at any time within two years next preceding the finding of the indictment, but the accused will be protected from any other prosecution for having carried a pistol concealed about his person within that period. McWilliams v. State, 110 Ga. 290, 34 S. E. 1016, and cases cited. If, however, in an indictment for carrying a concealed pistol, the descriptive averments are so specific as to charge a distinct carrying of a concealed pistol on a particular occasion, then the state is confined to proof of the specific offense therein charged, and in such a case the accused would not be put in jeopardy of being convicted for having carried a pistol concealed, at another time and under different circumstances, within two years prior to the finding of the indictment. The main question in this case is whether the descriptive averments in each of these indictments were sufficiently specific to charge a separate and distinct offense from that charged in the other. We think they were. It has been several times held by this court that an indictment for the unlawful sale of spirituous liquor need not allege the name of the person to whom the liquor is charged to have been sold. Newman v. State, 101 Ga. 534, 28 S. E. 1005, and cases cited. Where one is tried on an indictment "not charging any particular person to whom such sale was made, or specifying any particular occasion on which it took place," the accused is thereby placed in jeopardy for unlawfully selling such liquor to any person within the period of the statute of limitation. Craig v. State, 108 Ga. 776, 33 S. E. 653. Even where an indictment for such an offense charges the sale to have been made to a named person on a given day, the state may prove a sale to such person at any time within the period of limitation. Reyn- olds v. State, 114 Ga. 265, 40 S. E. 234. There is a clear intimation in the last two cases cited that, if an indictment for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors charged that the sale was made to a named person, the state would be limited to proof of a sale to such person. So, where the place where the offense is alleged to have been committed is stated in the indictment as matter of local description, or, as Blackstone puts it, "part of the description of the fact" (4 Bl. Com. 306), and not as venue, it is necessary to prove it as laid, though such averment might not have been necessary. See Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 753, 30 S. E. 980. We are of opinion that, by analogy, an averment in an indictment for carrying a concealed weapon that the offense was committed in the presence of a named person or named persons is a part of the description of the act charged, and is sufficiently specific to charge a particular and distinct offense.

2-4. Although each of the indictments charged a separate and distinct offense from the one charged in the other, yet, if the accused, under his plea of former conviction, had shown that the same transaction was referred to in both indictments, or that the persons in whose presence the indictment under which he had been convicted alleged that the pistol was carried concealed were present on both occasions, his plea should have been sustained. Did the agreed statement of facts show either that the transactions alleged in the two indictments were the same, or that the persons alleged in the indictment under which he was convicted to have been present when the offense was committed were present during the commission of the offense committed in the presence of Hughes? We are clearly of opinion that it did not. From this statement of facts, it appears that the accused at one place had a pistol concealed on his person in the presence of Deering Hughes, "when the pistol fell out of his pocket, and he picked it up and put it back in his pocket." From so much of this agreed statement, we think it is evident that the accused, in the presence of Hughes, committed two offenses of carrying a pistol concealed, the first of which terminated when the pistol fell from the pocket of the accused, and was exposed to view elsewhere than on his person. The second offense was committed when the accused picked the pistol up from the place where it had fallen and put it back in his pocket. A person may commit but one offense of carrying a weapon concealed upon his person, although he carries it thus concealed for many hours, because the nature of the offense is such that it may be continuously committed; but, whenever the continuity of the act constituting the offense is broken, that particular offense is at an end, and another like offense is committed when the weapon is again concealed by him on his person. So, from the agreed facts, it appears that the accused, at another place—his home—in the presence of Ballinger and the other person mentioned in the indictment under which he was convicted, committed two separate and distinct offenses of carrying a pistol concealed upon his person. He committed one offense in the presence of these persons when he came into his house, and into their presence, with the pistol concealed upon his person, and this offense was terminated when he took the pistol from his pocket and placed it upon the mantel. He committed another like offense in their presence when he subsequently took the pistol from the mantel, and again concealed it upon his person and went out of the house. Carrying a concealed weapon is not only an offense which may be continuously committed, but it is also transitory in its nature, so that the same act of carrying the weapon unlawfully may be continuously performed from place to place and in the presence of different people at the different places. It does not, however, appear from the agreed statement of facts that Ballinger and the other persons mentioned as being present at the commission of the offense charged in the indictment upon which the conviction was had were present on the occasion when, in the presence of Hughes, the pistol fell out of the pocket of the accused, and he picked it up and put it back therein. Nor does it appear that the second act of carrying the pistol concealed, committed by the accused in the presence of Hughes, was continued or prolonged until it was terminated in the presence of Ballinger and others. It may be that Hughes witnessed the beginning, and these other persons the termination, of one of the offenses of carrying a concealed pistol, committed by the accused. If this is true, then the accused, under the agreed facts, when tried under the indictment describing the offense to have been committed in the presence of Ballinger and others, was placed in jeopardy of being convicted of an offense described in the other indictment. But we think, in order for the accused to establish that he was placed in such jeopardy, it was incumbent on him to show that from the time he, in the presence of Hughes, picked the pistol up and put it back into his pocket, he continuously carried it concealed on his person, until he took it out of his pocket in the presence of Ballinger and others; and the agreed statement of facts does not show this. Even if the agreed statement of facts did show that the last offense committed in the presence of Hughes and the first offense committed in the presence of Ballinger and others were the same, still the state would not be prevented from prosecuting the accused for the first offense committed in the presence of Hughes, for that offense was clearly terminated before the accused went to his home and there took the pistol from his pocket in the presence of Ballinger and the other persons mentioned in the indictment under which the conviction was had; but, in such event the state would be confined to evidence showing this first offense committed in the presence of Hughes. Under the evidence submitted, the court did not err in finding against the plea of former conviction.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., and CANDLER, J., dissenting, and EVANS, J., not presiding.

CANDLER, J. An indictment which charges the accused with having and carrying about his person, not in an open manner and fully exposed to view, a certain pistol, in the presence of a named person, is in effect a general indictment for carrying concealed weapons on the day set out. The presence of a witness to the offense is in no sense necessary to the commission of the crime, and an allegation that a named witness was present does not serve to fix the time, place, or circumstances of the transaction. Such an allegation in an indictment should therefore be treated as surplusage. 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 530. And where the indictment contains nothing further to fix with particularity the offense charged, it is, as before stated, general in its nature, and a conviction under it will bar a subsequent conviction under another indictment for carrying concealed weapons; it appearing from the agreed statement of facts on the second trial that the offense therein charged was committed on the same day as the one of which the accused had formerly been convicted. Bryant v. State, 97 Ga. 105, 25 S. E. 450; McWilliams v. State, 110 Ga. 290, 34 S. E. 1016.

SIMMONS, C. J. I agree with the views as expressed above by Mr. Justice CANDLER.

(120 Ga. 228)

SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. v. BLUE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

CERTIORARI—REVIEW OF JUDGMENT.

1. "When the only error alleged in a petition for certiorari is that the verdict therein complained of is contrary to law and to the evidence, and it appears that the evidence demanded a verdict for the plaintiff in certiorari, the superior court should, of course, sustain the certiorari; but it would be erroneous in such a case, though there be no conflict in the evidence, to render a final judgment in his favor. This is so for the reason that in such a case the error complained of is not 'an error in law which must finally govern the case,' and, further, because it could not be known with certainty that the evidence on another trial would be the same." Holmes v. Pye & Co., 33 S. E. 816, 107 Ga. 784. See, also, Ala. Great Southern R. R. Co. v. Austin, 37 S. E. 91, 112 Ga. 61; Williams v. Bradfield, 43 S. E. 57, 116 Ga. 705. The court below properly declined to render a final judgment in the present case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Liberty County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

Action between the Seaboard Air Line Railway and Phyllis Blue. A writ of certiorari was sustained by the superior court, and the railway company brings error. Affirmed.

J. Randolph Anderson, for plaintiff in error. A. S. Way, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 25)

RAY v. RAY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

DIVORCE—TEMPORARY ALIMONY—ATTORNEY'S FEES—DISCRETION OF COURT.

1. While there was strong circumstantial evidence to the effect that subsequently to the separation of the parties the wife had been guilty of adultery, there was also evidence to contradict this contention; and it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in awarding the plaintiff temporary alimony and attorney's fees.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; W. T. Gary, Judge.

Action by Wilhelmina Ray against J. H. Ray. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Sam F. Garlington, for plaintiff in error. Johnson & Young and C. E. Dunbar, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 225)

SIMMONS v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

CARRIERS—INJURY TO PASSENGER—ALIGHTING FROM MOVING TRAIN—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

1. If, with a clear chance to avoid the consequences of defendant's negligence or breach of duty, the plaintiff voluntarily assumes the risk occasioned thereby, such conduct on his part is not merely contributory negligence, lessening the amount of damages, but a failure to avoid danger, defeating the right to recover.

2. The fact that in stepping from a moving train the plaintiff may not have been guilty of negligence defeating his right to recover, does not entitle him to a verdict, unless it also appears that the carrier was at the time guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.

3. The court below did not err in sustaining the demurrer, it appearing from the allegations in the petition that the plaintiff was not injured as the result of any negligence or breach of duty on the part of the carrier, but with full opportunity to escape the consequences of any prior acts complained of, and with a clear chance to avoid the danger, he voluntarily assumed the risk attendant upon leaving a moving car at night beyond the station, at a point where there was no implied invitation to alight.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Effingham County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

Action by W. S. Simmons against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

The plaintiff sued for injuries received while alighting from a moving train. He alleges that he notified the conductor of his desire to get off at Meldrim; that he reached there at night; that the conductor, contrary to his duty and the custom of the company, failed to announce the station; that, after the train had stopped at Meldrim, it started, and moved slowly forward, when petitioner, happening to look out of the widow of the coach, discovered that the train was moving from the station, when he immediately proceeded to the platform and down the steps, and while in the act of stepping off discovered baggage and other obstructions; that the conductor, who was a few feet away, with a lantern in his hand, "in clear view of petitioner," signaled the train to go forward, which it did; that as soon as the step cleared the obstruction petitioner proceeded to step to the ground, and while so doing the engine jerked the train forward, throwing petitioner on the rocks beneath, inflicting the injuries sued for. The court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff excepted.

R. W. Sheppard and D. H. Clark, for plaintiff in error. J. Randolph Anderson, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. In numerous cases cited by the plaintiff it has been held by this and other courts that it is ordinarily a question for the jury to determine whether it is negligence, barring a recovery, for a passenger to step from a moving train. In several instances such conduct was held not to prevent a recovery where the passenger was injured as the result of a sudden or negligent jerk given the train while he was in the act of alighting. Atlanta Railway Co. v. Randall, 117 Ga. 166, 43 S. E. 412; Central Railroad v. Whitehead, 74 Ga. 453; Walters v. Collins Park R. Co., 95 Ga. 519, 20 S. E. 497; Poole v. Georgia R. Co., 89 Ga. 320, 15 S. E. 321; Central R. Co. v. McKinney, 118 Ga. 537, 45 S. E. 430; Suber v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co., 96 Ga. 43, 23 S. E. 387; Augusta Sou. Ry. Co. v. Snider, 118 Ga. 146, 44 S. E. 1005. But in all these cases it will be seen that the mere fact that the passenger may not have been guilty of negligence was not the basis of his right to recover. Even if he was free from fault in stepping from the moving train, that did not make the company liable. It had also to appear that the carrier was guilty of negligence, and that negligence must have been shown to be the cause—the proximate cause—of the injury. Hardwick v. Georgia R. Co., 85 Ga. 509, 11 S. E. 832. Here the company was bound to announce the station. Its failure so to do might have given rise to a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff for the loss of time, inconvenience, labor of traveling back, expenses, and all proximate damages consequent on his being carried past his destination. Watson v. Georgia Pacific Ry. Co., 81 Ga. 476, 7 S. E. 854. If the petition is construed most favorably for the pleader, and to mean, not that the plaintiff saw the conductor, but that the conductor saw the passenger attempting to alight from the moving train, it was an act of negligence to signal the engineer forward. The conductor had no right to add to the danger, or to increase the peril of one leaving a train under the circumstances alleged in the petition. And if the plaintiff had been injured as a result of a jerk so caused, and the plaintiff then or thereafter had no opportunity to avoid the consequences of the alleged negligent signaling, the company would have been liable, in view of the other facts stated.

But the petition claims no damages and sets out no cause of action by reason of the failure to announce the station, nor on account of the signal to go forward. Neither of these acts caused any personal injury to the plaintiff. After he saw the signal given, he remained unharmed on the lower step, waiting for the car to pass the obstruction on the station platform. If it was negligence for the train to proceed, the plaintiff had full notice that there was no intention to stop. He was bound to know that, in ordinary course, the speed would increase, and that the jars and jolts incident to railroad transportation might be expected. With such knowledge he chose to remain on the bottom step until the car passed the obstruction on the platform, and reached a point where, because of the rocks, there was evidently no implied invitation to alight. He was beyond the station, attempting to get off, when the jerk, not alleged to be negligent, and to be expected as usual, precipitated him upon the ground to his injury. Howsoever negligent the defendant may have been in failing to announce the station, in failing to stop the train, in failing to afford the plaintiff a reasonable opportunity to alight, or in signaling the engineer forward, such conduct was not the proximate cause of plaintiff's hurt. The plaintiff had a full opportunity to escape the consequences of all the prior acts of negligence alleged. He had a "clear chance" to return to the car after he knew that the train had been signaled not to stop. He had a "clear chance" to avoid the danger of remaining on the lower steps of a train in motion, the speed of which he knew would increase with the consequent jars and jolts incident to travel by rail. With such clear chance, he chose not to avoid, but to risk, the danger. See note to 55 L. R. A. 418; 1 Shear. & Redf. Neg. § 99, p. 154. This was not contributory negligence lessening the damages, but the failure to avoid a known danger, which defeats his right to recover. Civ. Code 1895, § 3830; Mansfield v. Richardson, 118 Ga. 251, 45 S. E. 269. He stepped in the dark from a moving train, when there was no urgent necessity. The carrier did not cause the injury, and is therefore not liable in damages. Jarrett v. Atlanta & West Point R. Co., 83 Ga. 247, 9 S. E. 681; Western & A. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 105 Ga. 237, 31 S. E. 157. The judge of the superior court did not err in sustaining the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

GAINES v. STATE.

(120 Ga. 172)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED ON TRIAL.

1. The alleged newly discovered evidence related to facts which were necessarily within the knowledge of the accused at the time of the trial. Besides, there was a want of the showing required by Civ. Code 1895, § 5481.

2. At the time of its introduction the defendant made no objection to the evidence alleged in the motion for a new trial to have been illegally admitted. Such an issue cannot be first raised on review.

3. The evidence as to the age of the defendant and his capacity to commit the crime charged was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

4. The trial judge approved the finding of the jury, the evidence being sufficient to warrant the verdict of guilty, and, there being no assignment of error as to the charge or any ruling of the court, the judgment is affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Dock Gaines was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. R. Logan, for plaintiff in error. John O. Hart, Atty. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. Affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

COLLIER v. STATE.

(120 Ga. 127)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—CORPUS DELICTI—EVIDENCE—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL—DISCRETION OF COURT—REVIEW.

1. There was no complaint of any ruling or charge. The corpus delicti was established. The evidence, while conflicting, was sufficient to warrant the verdict; and, the same having been approved by the trial judge, this court will not interfere with his discretion in refusing a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Americus; C. R. Crisp, Judge.

London Collier was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. M. Harper and J. A. Hixon, for plaintiff in error. F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., and J. A. Ansley, Jr., Sol., for the State.

LAMAR, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 139)

LEPS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

LICENSE TAX—AGENT OF PACKING HOUSE—FAILURE TO PAY TAX—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW —CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—INDICTMENT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

1. An indictment which charges that the accused conducted the business of agent of "the Armour Packing Company, a packing house," without having registered with the ordinary and paid the tax required by the statute, is not defective in failing to allege that the Armour Packing Company is a corporation.

2. On the trial of such an indictment it is not error to admit in evidence waybills of cars loaded with packing house products consigned to the packing company, the effect of this evidence, in connection with other evidence introduced by the state, being to show that the accused paid the freight on the goods loaded in the cars, had them stored in a warehouse of the packing company, and otherwise acted as its agent.

3. The evidence fully warranted the verdict, and the constitutionality of the law under which the accused was tried is conclusively settled by the decision of this court in the case of Kehrer v. Stewart, 44 S. E. 854, 117 Ga. 969.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fannin County; Geo. F. Gober, Judge.

J. E. Leps was convicted for failure to pay a special tax, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. S. J. Hall and Felder & Rountree, for plaintiff in error. B. F. Simpson, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. Leps was indicted, as the agent of a packing house, for failing to register with the ordinary and pay the special tax of $200 required by the general tax act of 1900, § 2, par. 19 (Acts 1900, pp. 25, 26). He demurred to the indictment, his demurrer was overruled, and he excepted pendente lite. At the term at which his demurrer was filed he was tried and found guilty. He made a motion for a new trial, which was granted, and at the fall term, 1903, of Fannin superior court, he was again tried and again convicted. His second motion for a new trial was overruled, and this, as well as the overruling of his demurrer to the indictment, is assigned as error in the bill of exceptions brought to this court.

1. In passing upon the points raised by the demurrer, it will not be necessary to set out either the charge made by the indictment nor all the grounds of the demurrer. At the time the demurrer was filed this court had not decided the case of Kehrer v. Stewart, 117 Ga. 969, 44 S. E. 854, which is controlling of the principal questions thereby made, and on the argument in this court those questions were abandoned. The indictment alleges that the accused was "the individual agent of the Armour Packing Company, a packing house," and one ground of the demurrer attacks the indictment as being defective, in that it contained no allegation that the Armour Packing Company was a corporation. This question is settled adversely to the contentions of the accused by the decision of this court in Mattox v. State, 115 Ga. 219, 41 S. E. 709. There the accused was charged with simple larceny, the indictment alleging that the property stolen was "the personal goods of the Acme Brewing Company." A demurrer to the indictment was filed, on the ground that "it did not set forth the ownership of the property alleged to have been stolen, that the term 'Acme Brewing Company' was not the name of an individual, and that it did not import either a partnership or a corporation." This court held that the demurrer was without merit, and in the opinion Mr. Justice Cobb said: "The indictment does not show by allegation whether [the Acme Brewing Company] is a corporation or partnership. The name is of a character which is more appropriate to a corporation than a partnership, though partnerships are sometimes formed under names which would be appropriate to corporations. The name being one more peculiarly suited to a corporation than a partnership, the presumption would be that it was the name of a corporation. The name itself imports a business corporation. When the name of a party to a suit is such as to import that the party is a corporation, there is a presumption to this effect, and this presumption prevails until the contrary is made to appear." See, also, the authorities cited to sustain the decision there made. Following this case, we hold that the ground of the demurrer noted presented no valid objection to the legal sufficiency of the indictment.

We are equally clear that there is no merit in the other grounds of the demurrer, which set up in a general way that the allegations of the indictment are insufficient in law and do not charge any offense against the laws of Georgia. The act of the General Assembly on which the indictment was based makes it a misdemeanor for any person acting as the agent of a packing house doing business in this state to fail to register with the ordinary, or, having registered, to fail to pay the tax therein prescribed. The indictment charges that the accused, on the 15th day of January, 1902, "did unlawfully, then and there being the * * * agent of the Armour Packing Company, a packing house, open up, carry on, and do business as such agent for said Armour Packing Company * * * by receiving shipments of meats and lard from said packing house," etc., "without first going before the ordinary of said county and registering his name as such agent, and without registering the business in which he proposed to engage, and without registering the place where such business was to be conducted, * * * and without paying to the tax collector of said county the taxes required by law of him * * * as such agent, said taxes being due for the year 1902." The charge was clear and ex-plait, and gave the accused all the information to which he was entitled to enable him to make his defense or to protect him in the exercise of his rights under the law.

2. The motion for a new trial contained the general grounds that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, and also complained that the court erred in admitting in evidence certain waybills offered by the state, which were identified by the agent of the railroad company at Blue Ridge, in Fannin county, as waybills upon which cars loaded with packing house products had been delivered to the accused. The motion sets forth at considerable length the objections made to this evidence, including an argument made to the court giving reasons why it should have been rejected. At first glance it would appear that there was some force in this argument, but taking this evidence in connection with the other evidence offered by the state, we think it was admissible. These waybills showed that the cars for which they were issued were consigned to the Armour Packing Company at Blue Ridge, Ga., and that they contained packing house products. According to the testimony of the agent of the railroad company, the contents of these cars were delivered at a warehouse in Blue Ridge of the Armour Packing Company. When the goods contained in the cars were delivered at the warehouse mentioned, the accused paid the freight charges thereon and received the goods. These waybills, with the entries thereon, were admissible for the purpose of explaining and throwing light on the act of the accused in receiving the goods, and to establish the contention that in so doing he was acting as the agent of the Armour Packing Company. It was in the nature of evidence of an admission of a fact which tended to show the agency of the accused. The fact that the paper was made out by the agent of the railroad company, and that it contained some immaterial statements, was no reason for excluding it in its entirety. The recital in the waybill as to the lines of railroad over which the goods came could not, of course, bind the accused; but the fact that cars loaded with packing house products and consigned to the Armour Packing Company were received by him, that he paid the freight thereon, unloaded the cars, and placed their contents in a warehouse of the Armour Packing Company, were inculpatory circumstances, which were properly submitted to the consideration of the jury. To the same effect evidence was admitted, without objection, showing that attached to a tub of lard bought from Leps was a tag containing the words: "From Armour Packing Company, Kansas City. Dressed beef, sausage," etc. A number of bills for packing house products made out to various persons and presented by Leps were also introduced, without objection, and the recitals in these bills also tended to show that Leps was the agent of the Armour Packing Company. We are clear that the railroad waybills were admissible for the same purpose.

3. It will have been gathered from the foregoing that there was before the jury ample evidence to sustain their finding that in the performance of the acts disclosed by the evidence the accused was merely discharging his duties as the agent of the Armour Packing Company. That he failed to register with the ordinary and to pay the tax required by the statute was admitted. For an exhaustive discussion as to the constitutionality of that statute, see the able opinion of Chief Justice Simmons in Kehrer v. Stewart, supra.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 196.)

HARRIS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — NEW TRIAL — GROUNDS — APPROVAL BY TRIAL COURT — NECESSITY.

1. What are commonly called the "general grounds" of a motion for a new trial—that is, those complaining that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, without evidence to support it, etc.—contain no recital of fact which requires a verification by the trial judge in order to authorize such grounds to be entertained. It therefore follows that it is error to dismiss a motion for a new trial based upon such grounds solely for the reason that they have not been approved by the trial judge.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Albany; R. Hobbs, Judge.

E. E. Harris was convicted of pointing a weapon at another, and brings error. Reversed.

S. J. Jones, for plaintiff in error. John D. Pope, Sol., for the State.

COBB, J. The accused was convicted in the city court of Albany of the offense of pointing a weapon at another. He filed a motion for a new trial in due time during the term at which the verdict was rendered. The motion contained three grounds, as follows: (1) Because the verdict is contrary to evidence and without evidence to support it; (2) because the verdict is decidedly and strongly against the weight of evidence; (3) because the verdict is contrary to law and the principles of justice and equity. The motion was not heard during the term, but by order was set down for a hearing in vacation on a given day, and at the time fixed for the hearing, the court, upon motion of counsel for the state, dismissed the motion for a new trial upon the sole ground that it had not been approved by the court during the term at which the motion was filed. This ruling is assigned as error.

A ground of a motion for a new trial which contains a statement of fact should not be considered unless that statement is shown to be true by a certificate of the trial judge. Hence the general rule is that, before grounds of a motion for a new trial can be considered, they must be approved by the trial judge. But this rule does not apply to any ground which does not contain an affirmative statement of fact which is material to the determination of the error assigned in the ground. None of the grounds above set forth contain any statement of fact at all. They merely set forth reasons addressed to the discretion of the trial judge why the verdict should be set aside. There is nothing in any of these grounds which requires the approval of the trial judge. Therefore such approval was not necessary, and it was error to dismiss the motion because it did not appear that the judge had approved the grounds.

In reference to the third ground, it is not considered inopportune to state that the first part, which alleges that the verdict is contrary to law, does not contain any assignment of error which can be properly considered (Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 896, 43 S. E. 280, and cases cited); and the second part—that the verdict is contrary to the principles of justice and equity—has no appropriate place in a motion for a new trial in a criminal case.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 201)

BRYAN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

KEEPING GAMING HOUSE—CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. An indictment for keeping and maintaining a gaming house is sustained by evidence that the defendant was guilty of either of the prohibited acts. Thomas v. State, 45 S. E. 622, 118 Ga. 774.

2. There was no error in charging that: "The law does not say that he must keep or maintain the gaming house for a year or a week or a month. If it appears that he kept and maintained it at any time within the statute of limitations, he would be guilty."

3. Nor was there error in charging that: "If the work of keeping and maintaining was subdivided into many duties in order to carry on such a place, each person participating therein would be guilty of the offense."

4. Nor was it error to charge that: "It would make no difference if the defendant rented out the house, and, as the proprietor of a game played therein, afterwards carried on the business of gambling therein, he would, for the time being, have possession of the house, and would be guilty of keeping it. Scott v. State, 29 Ga. 265; Stevenson v. State, 83 Ga. 575, 10 S. E. 234.

5. The verdict was demanded by the evidence. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

J. D. Bryan was convicted of keeping and maintaining a gaming house, and brings error. Affirmed.

Bryan was indicted for keeping and maintaining a gaming house. From the evidence offered by the state it appeared that Bryan had a saloon and restaurant. Upstairs there was a room in which was a faro bank, roulette wheel, and crap table. Bryan's name was on the door and place of business as proprietor of the bar and restaurant. There was evidence that Bryan had charge of the room upstairs, and several witnesses played at games therein; Bryan dealing and otherwise managing the game. The defendant, in his statement, claimed to have rented "the upstairs of my place to a party for a very good rental. While I did deal faro bank on this occasion, I did so to accommodate the man who rented the place—the party that rented the place from me." The defendant was found guilty, and made a motion for a new trial, assigning error on the charge of the court as to reasonable doubt, on instructions which he claimed warranted the jury in finding him guilty if he kept or maintained under an indictment alleging that he kept and maintained, on instructions that it was not necessary to show numerous transactions, and also that he might be convicted if he was in charge of the room which had been previously rented to another.

David C. Barrow and Edward H. Abrahams, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The words "keep" and "maintain" are frequently used as synonymous, but if, under Pen. Code, § 898, the offense may be committed by keeping or maintaining or by keeping and maintaining, proof that he had been guilty of either of the prohibited acts would sustain a charge that he had kept and maintained. Thomas v. State, 118 Ga. 774, 45 S. E. 622. The other points are sufficiently dealt with in the headnotes. The verdict was demanded by the evidence, and the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 144)

MONTS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

1. The evidence authorized the verdict. It was not made to appear that the alleged newly discovered evidence could not, by the exercise of proper diligence, have been obtained before the trial, and such evidence was, moreover, merely impeaching in its character.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Americus; C. R. Crisp, Judge.

George Monts was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. R. Logan, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Ansley, Jr., Sol., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

¶ 2. See Gaming, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. § 201.

¶ 1. See Criminal Law, vol. 15, Cent. Dig. § 2231.

(120 Ga. 213)

CONNOLLY v. ATLANTIC CONTRACTING CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

ATTACHMENT—DISMISSAL AS TO PART OF DEFENDANTS—AMENDMENT OF LEVY—PRESUMPTIONS—REGULARITY OF OFFICIAL ACTS—RETURN ON ATTACHMENT.

1. Where an attachment was sued out against four defendants, and the return of the levying officer showed that the property seized was levied on as the property of only one of them, the levy was properly dismissed as to the other three.

2. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that an officer did his duty, and did not exceed his authority; and, when the return of an officer on the levy of an attachment fails to show in what county the levy was made, but the levy is in other respects legal and regular, the failure to set out where the levy was made is no ground for dismissal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by M. A. Connolly against the Atlantic Contracting Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

David C. Barrow, for plaintiff in error.
Walter G. Charlton, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. On August 24, 1900, Connolly sued out an attachment in Chatham county against the Atlantic Contracting Company, a West Virginia corporation, and B. D. Greene, J. F. Gaynor, and E. F. Gaynor; the grounds of attachment being the nonresidence of the defendants. The return of the officer on this attachment was as follows: "I have this day levied the within attachment upon one tugboat Wm. O. Turner, one tugboat Harold, both steamers, three wooden barges not named, one large yawlboat, one small yawlboat, one boiler and pumps, one wheel of iron, the said tugs and barges now lying in the river in Savannah harbor opposite East Broad, except the yawls, which with the boiler and pumps and wheel are in the storehouse on the island across the river. Levied on as the property of the Atlantic Contracting Company. Levied on this Aug. 24, at 5:45 p. m., 1900. [Signed] M. L. Lilienthal, C. C. Co., Ga." On September 8, 1900, counsel for the plaintiff filed an application for a speedy sale of the property levied on, upon the ground that to keep the same pending the litigation would be expensive and burdensome. Service of notice of the applicant's intention to apply for the order to sell was acknowledged by Walter G. Charlton, Esq., as attorney for the defendants. On the hearing of the application the property in question was by the court ordered to be sold. The declaration in attachment, which was made returnable to the November term, 1900, of the city court of Savannah, was served upon the firm of Charlton & Charlton, as attorneys for the Atlantic Contracting Company, by serving R. M. Charlton, a member of said firm. The return of service was traversed, and it being made to appear that the defendants were represented by Walter G. Charlton, and not by the firm of Charlton & Charlton, the return was stricken and the traverse sustained. The answer of the defendants denied all the material allegations of the declaration. At the trial the levy was dismissed, as to Greene and the Gaynors, on the ground that the property seized was not levied on as their property; and, as to the Atlantic Contracting Company, it was dismissed because the levy did not show where the property was seized. Before the levy was dismissed as to the Atlantic Contracting Company, counsel for the plaintiff asked the court to consider the papers of record in the case, and to permit the introduction of oral evidence in aid of the levy, to show that the locality named therein at which the property was seized was in Chatham county. This motion the court overruled. It was further moved that, in view of the fact that the officer who made the levy was dead, the court, after hearing evidence on the subject, should amend the return by adding the words "Georgia, Chatham county," but this motion was likewise refused. To the judgment dismissing the levy as to the four defendants, and refusing to consider the record or hear allunde evidence as to the locality of the property at the time of the levy, the plaintiff excepted. The record contains a brief of the evidence introduced on the trial, but, inasmuch as the questions set out in the foregoing statement are the only ones for decision by this court, a more detailed statement of the evidence is unnecessary.

1. There was no error in dismissing the levy and attachment as to Greene and the two Gaynors. The property seized was levied upon as the property alone of the Atlantic Contracting Company, and this is distinctly shown by the levy itself. In Tuells v. Torras, 113 Ga. 691, 39 S. E. 455, it was held that, "it is essential to the validity of the levy of an attachment issued against a non-resident that the entry of levy should show that the property was levied on as that of the defendant in attachment, and this is so whether the property be realty or personalty." In the opinion of Mr. Justice Cobb in that case the question now under consideration was fully discussed, and further discussion of it now would be useless. See, also, New England Mortgage Co. v. Watson, 99 Ga. 735, 27 S. E. 160. In order for the levy to have been good as against all four of the defendants, it must have appeared in the return that there was a valid seizure of property belonging to each and all of them; and, the levy failing to show that any of the property levied on belonged to Greene or the Gaynors, it was properly dismissed as to them.

2. The court erred in dismissing the levy and attachment as to the Atlantic Contracting Company, and in refusing to consider the papers of record, and other evidence in aid of the levy. All the property levied on was personalty, and was accurately described in the levy. It was seized as the property of the Atlantic Contracting Company, and the levy complied fully with all the requirements of the Code. Attachments returnable to the superior, city, or county courts are, under section 4519 of the Civil Code, directed to "all and singular the sheriffs and constables of this state"; and under section 4580 it is provided that "it shall be the duty of any one of the officers to whom an attachment may be directed, to levy the same upon the property of the defendant that may be found in the county of which he is sheriff, or constable, and when any attachment shall come into the hands of any officer of the county in which such attachment is returnable, and the defendant shall have removed his property beyond the limits of said county before such an attachment is executed, it shall be the duty of the officer having such attachment to follow such property into any county in the state and levy the same, and bring the property back into the county where the attachment is returnable." It is a well-settled principle of law that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, courts will always presume that an officer has done his duty. It will not be assumed that he has exceeded his authority or violated the law. In this case the officer was authorized to levy the attachment on any property of either of the four defendants to be found anywhere in Chatham county, or to follow such property beyond the limits of the county if it should have been removed therefrom before the attachment was executed. In the absence of any evidence on the subject, it must be taken for granted that he complied with the statute. The return shows that certain personalty was attached. Presumably, absolute dominion was taken over it by the officer making the levy. It appears from his return that at the time of the seizure it was in part lying in the river in Savannah harbor, and in part was in a storehouse on an island "across the river." The answer of the defendants admitted that the officer was a lawful constable of Chatham county, and that he made the levy as shown by his return. In Cohen v. Broughton, 54 Ga. 296, it was held that where personal property is claimed by a third person, and the claim affidavit and bond recite that it has been levied on, the claimant is estopped to deny the completeness of the levy. To the same effect, see Scolly v. Butler, 59 Ga. 850. In the case at bar the Atlantic Contracting Company, together with the other defendants, admitted the levy, and in its answer made no question as to the authority of the officer to make it. In view of the presumption before alluded to in favor of the validity of the acts of an officer, the burden of showing that he acted without authority, or that his act was otherwise illegal, would certainly seem to be on the party attacking the levy. The court would have been justified in admitting evidence to show where the levy was made, or in looking to the record, with the entries thereon, to ascertain the truth in regard to the matter. We know of no statute or decision in this state which requires that the return of a levying officer shall show where the levy is made. The officer could not legally make the levy outside the state of Georgia, nor, unless the property had been removed therefrom, outside of Chatham county; but, in the absence of proof on the subject, it will not be presumed that he did do so. The law only requires that the officer making the levy shall enter the same on the process by virtue of which the levy is made, and that the levy shall plainly describe the property levied on, and state the amount of the interest of the defendant therein. Here the levy accurately described the property, and stated that it was the property of the Atlantic Contracting Company. In the case of Hiles Co. v. King, 109 Ga. 180, 34 S. E. 353, it was held that, when a sheriff's entry upon an attachment recites that he levied it upon a certain tract of land, prima facie there was a lawful seizure, and consequently, where an execution issued upon a judgment rendered in an attachment case was subsequently levied on the same land, and met by a claim, it was error to dismiss the latter levy on the ground that the entry upon the attachment did not recite that the sheriff had actually seized the property, or had given written notice to the tenant in possession. The attachment in the present case, with the entry of levy by the officer thereon, was, as to the Atlantic Contracting Company, prima facie regular and valid. The defendant had the right, if it could do so, to show that such was not the case. Having neither alleged nor proven that the property was illegally seized, we think the court erred in dismissing the levy as to it. See, in this connection, Greer v. Ferguson, 104 Ga. 555, 30 S. E. 943; Griffin v. Wise, 115 Ga. 610, 41 S. E. 1003.

It is, of course, necessary that the officer making the levy should sign the return, yet it has been held that the omission of such signature is a defect which may be cured by amendment. Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825; Childs v. Barrows, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 413. It has also been held that, where the return clearly shows that certain property was attached, the performance by the officer of certain acts in connection therewith may be shown by parol evidence, or by facts appearing elsewhere in the proceeding. 4 Cyc. 615. In the case of Boyd v. King, 36 N. J. Law, 134, it was held that to render the return of the attachment fatally defective, when there has been, in substance, an execution of the process, it must be made to appear affirmatively that an essential act has been omitted, and that when there is no clear exhibition of such omission it cannot be inferred.

In view of what is here held, we deem it unnecessary to pass upon the point raised by counsel for the plaintiffs in error to the effect that the court erred in refusing to hear evidence upon which to base an amendment of the levy by adding thereto the words "Georgia, Chatham County."

In the argument in this court it was insisted that, in view of the evidence brought up in the record, the plaintiff's case was not entitled to any consideration in a court of justice, and that this court should of its own motion order it dismissed. It does not appear, however, that the court below has ever passed upon this question; and we will, of course, not undertake to pass upon it now for the first time.

From what has been said, it is apparent that the judgment as to Greene and the two Gaynors must stand, while as to the Atlantic Contracting Company the case must be heard again.

Judgment affirmed in part, and in part reversed. All the Justices concur.

(119 Ga. 960)

TUGGLE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—REQUESTS TO CHARGE—INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. On the trial of one accused of murder, a charge that, "in a case of homicide, whenever the state submits to you evidence of the killing, and that it was done by the defendant in the manner charged in the indictment (that is, by a pistol), then the presumption of innocence no longer rests with him in the case, and the burden of proof is shifted to the defendant to establish his defense, to show to the jury that the killing was * * * justifiable homicide, and not murder or any other grade of homicide," while not accurate, will not cause a reversal of the judgment when it appears that there was nothing in the evidence of the state which would mitigate the killing, or reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter.

2. There was enough in the statement of the accused to authorize a charge upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter.

3. The requests to charge were fully covered by the general charge, and the charges complained of in the motion for new trial were not erroneous for any of the reasons assigned.

4. Even if the portions of the argument for the state of which complaint was made were not within the legitimate scope of such argument, it does not appear that any ruling of the trial judge was invoked thereon.

5. The verdict was authorized by the evidence and the statement of the accused, and was as favorable to the accused as he had any right to expect.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Lee Tuggle was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

F. Jordan & Son, W. B. Wingfield, W. S. Florence, and B. F. Leverett, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., F. C. Foster, Greene F. Johnson, and A. S. Thurman, for the State.

SIMMONS, O. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except EVANS, J., who did not preside.

O'DELL v. STATE.

(120 Ga. 152)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 10, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—IMPEACHMENT—LEADING QUESTIONS.

1. A charge that a reasonable doubt is one that is based "upon some ground in the testimony or the want of testimony," and that, if the jury have not "a doubt of that gravity," they should convict, is not erroneous.

2. While the charges on the subject of impeachment may have been in some respects inaccurate, they furnish no reason for reversing the judgment refusing a new trial.

3. The allowance of leading questions is within the discretion of the court.

4. The public is interested in having all trials conducted in an orderly and proper manner, and the presiding judge, as the representative of the public and the exponent of the law, has conferred upon him the high privilege to act of his own motion at any time it may be necessary to preserve the dignity of the court and the rights of the parties.

5. The failure of the court to interpose of its own motion in case of impropriety in its presence will not generally be a sufficient reason to set aside a verdict at the instance of a party, when no objection to the impropriety was made pending the trial, and no ruling in reference thereto was invoked from the court.

6. A new trial will not be granted because of improper remarks made by counsel when it does not distinctly appear from the record that the remarks were heard by the court, and when no objection was made by the opposite party, and no action of the court invoked in reference to the remarks.

7. The evidence warranted the verdict, and no reason appears for reversing the judgment refusing a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

O. J. O'Dell was convicted of operating a public lottery, and brings error. Affirmed.

Garrard & Meldrim and R. L. Colding, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. The accused was convicted of operating what is known as a "policy lottery." His motion for a new trial was overruled, and he excepted.

1. Exception is taken to the following charge: "A reasonable doubt is not any doubt which may visit the mind of a juror during the investigation of a case, and in making up his verdict. A mere passing hesitation of the mind, if it is not of such gravity [as] to amount to a reasonable doubt, will not justify a juror in finding the defendant not guilty. If the testimony satisfies him of the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, he should [find] the defendant guilty. A reasonable doubt is one that is based upon some ground in the testimony or the want of testimony in the case. When a juror has that sort of a doubt, he ought to acquit. But if he has not a doubt of that gravity, he ought to convict, if the testimony satisfies him of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt." The complaint is that the judge restricted the source from which a reasonable doubt may arise to "some ground in the testimony or the want of testimony," and error is also assigned upon the use of the words "a doubt of that gravity." Charges that reasonable doubt should arise from the testimony or from the lack of testimony have been often approved. Long v. State, 38 Ga. 492 (8); Butler v. State, 92 Ga. 601, 19 S. E. 51 (2); O'Dell v. State, 95 Ga. 335, 22 S. E. 548 (4). It is not even necessary to state that a reasonable doubt may arise from the prisoner's statement, when the jury are instructed generally as to the weight to be given to that statement. Walker v. State, 118 Ga. 34, 44 S. E. 850 (1). The expression "doubt of that gravity," when construed in connection with the other portion of the charge, evidently means the kind of a doubt previously defined; that is, a reasonable doubt growing out of the testimony or want of testimony. The weakness, uncertainty, and general unreliability of the evidence, and the manner, appearance, demeanor, and interest of a witness, may engender a doubt as to whether he ought to be believed; but, if the jury determine that he is worthy of credit, they should convict, if satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, from such evidence as has been introduced before them, that the prisoner is guilty. Taking the charge as a whole, we see no error in it.

2. Complaint is also made of charges on the subject of impeachment. The judge charged that, if a witness had been shown to have made before the grand jury statements which were "inconsistent with and contradictory to" the statements made on the trial, it would be for the jury to say whether or not his credibility had been destroyed. The assignment of error is upon the use of the words "inconsistent with." As these words were connected with the words "contradictory to" by the conjunction "and," it is evident that the judge used them in the sense of "opposed to" or "contradictory to," and did not intend to say that mere inconsistency would be a sufficient reason for rejecting the testimony. Another charge on this subject, after giving the different modes of impeachment, was that, if a witness "has not been impeached when attacked in either one of those modes or more, his testimony ought not to be disregarded capriciously." It is contended that this charge gave the jury too much latitude, and that there was no evidence to warrant a charge on the subject of impeachment in modes other than the three statutory methods which had been previously adverted to by the judge. It is so apparent that what the judge intended to say was, in one or more of those modes, that it is hard to conceive how an intelligent juror could have been misled by the transposition of the words. Error is further assigned upon a charge to the effect that the jury should not impute perjury to an unimpeached witness; the complaint being that this was, in effect, an instruction that the jury should impute perjury to an impeached witness. This, of course, is not true, because, as counsel state, a witness may be absolutely impeached by proof of general bad character, and yet his testimony be entirely true. If, however, this court should reverse the judgments of trial judges not only for what they say, but also on account of every negative pregnant involved in their statements, scarcely any judgment could be affirmed. It is sufficient to say that this assignment of error is wholly without merit.

3. One ground of the motion complains of the allowance of certain leading questions. This was in the discretion of the court. Cochran v. State, 118 Ga. 737, 39 S. E. 337 (9); Ga. R. Co. v. Churchill, 113 Ga. 14, 33 S. E. 336 (2), and citations; Rusk v. Hill, 117 Ga. 723, 45 S. E. 42 (7).

4-6. Complaint is made that the Solicitor General made the following remarks to the jury: "As he does not deny it, I will submit the case to you without argument." The reference was to the fact that the prisoner had made no statement. The Solicitor General, in his argument here candidly admitted that this remark was improper and should not have been made. See Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585 (7); Robinson v. State, 82 Ga. 535, 9 S. E. 528 (9). It is, however, due to the Solicitor General to state, although it does not appear in the record, that he stated in his argument here that he intended the first portion of the remark to be addressed to counsel for the accused, who was immediately behind him, and did not intend the jury to hear it. It does not appear from the record that the judge heard the remark, nor does it appear that any objection was made by counsel for the accused, or that any ruling or action by the court in reference to the remark was invoked. Under such circumstances, the remark does not constitute sufficient reason for reversing the judgment refusing to grant a new trial. The public interest demands that all trials shall be conducted with absolute freedom from impropriety and disorder on the part of those engaged therein, as well as those who may be present merely as spectators. Nothing is more conducive to respect for the law and its administration than orderly and proper conduct of court and counsel during the progress of a trial. The judge, as the representative of the public and the exponent of the law, has conferred upon him the high privilege to interpose at any time to preserve the dignity of the court over which he is presiding, or to protect the rights of parties whose interests may be imperiled by any occurrence in his presence; and he is not bound to, and should not, await the action of party, counsel, or any one else, when an act of disorder or impropriety occurs. See Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 238, 43 S. E. 533. How far the mere failure of the judge to interpose of his own motion can be taken advantage of by parties as a reason for setting aside a verdict or reversing a judgment is, however, an entirely different question. The rule in reference to the duty of the court in regard to improper statements by counsel is contained in Civ. Code 1895, § 4419, which is as follows: "Where counsel in the hearing of the jury make statements of prejudicial matters which are not in evidence, it is the duty of the court to interpose and prevent the same; and, on objection made, he shall also rebuke the same, and by all needful and proper instructions to the jury endeavor to remove the improper impression from their minds; or, in his discretion he may order a mistrial if plaintiff's attorney is the offender." It is to be noted that this section is a codification of rulings contained in four cases—two criminal cases and two civil cases. See Augusta R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 298, 11 S. E. 706 (6); Croom v. State, 90 Ga. 430, 17 S. E. 1008 (4); Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Johnson, 90 Ga. 501, 18 S. E. 49 (6); Farmer v. State, 91 Ga. 720, 18 S. E. 987 (2). In the two criminal cases and in one of the civil cases it was distinctly ruled that improper remarks by counsel would not be sufficient reason for reversing a judgment refusing a new trial, when no objection was made to the same, and no ruling from the court invoked; while in the other case (Augusta R. Co. v. Randall) the judgment was reversed, although it does not appear that any ruling was invoked in reference to the improper remarks. The facts of this case are, however, unusual, and it, like the Woolfolk Case, 81 Ga. 551, 8 S. E. 724, and some few others, must be allowed to stand upon its own peculiar facts. The general rule is undoubtedly the one laid down in the three cases above referred to. A number of the more recent decisions dealing with this subject will be found collected in Bowens v. State, 106 Ga. 764, 32 S. E. 666. See, also, Turner v. State, 70 Ga. 778, and citations; Ivey v. State, 113 Ga. 1062, 39 S. E. 423, 54 L. R. A. 959, and citations; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Cox, 115 Ga. 720, 42 S. E. 74; Tuggle v. State (decided May 10, 1904) 47 S. E. 577; and cases cited in 1 Enc. Dig. Ga. Reps. 516, 519, et seq.

The jurisdiction of this court is limited to the correction of errors of the superior courts and city courts of a given class, and the errors which can be made the subject-matter of complaint are those which arise out of the decisions, orders, decrees, and rulings of the trial courts, or out of the omission or failure on the part of those courts to discharge some duty incumbent upon them under the law, which, in the opinion of this court, is of such a character, under the particular circumstances, as to constitute an error of law, and require a reversal of the judgment. The rule that generally this court will not reverse a judgment for a failure on the part of the trial judge to rebuke disorder when no objection is made thereto, and no ruling invoked, is not, as is supposed by some, a rule of recent origin. It has been applied more often in recent years, but the rule is almost as old as this court. As early as 1852, in Mitchum's Case, 11 Ga. 616 (7), it was laid down that it was error in the court, when requested to prevent it, to permit counsel to comment on facts not in evidence. In the opinion, Judge Nisbet says: "It is the duty of the court to prevent such comments, and, in all cases where this is not done, provided the court is requested to prevent them, we shall hold, as we rule in this case, that it is good ground for a new trial." Page 629. See Van Epps' Annotations on this case in the footnotes, beginning on page 617. This is the first authoritative ruling by this court on the subject, and it will thus be seen that the rule now in force was recognized even at that early date. In Berry's Case, 10 Ga. 522, while the practice of counsel commenting upon facts not in evidence was severely condemned, the judgment was affirmed notwithstanding the alleged improper remarks, as it appeared that the argument escaped the attention of the judge, and that in his general charge to the jury he expressly directed them to disregard all statements of counsel not supported by the evidence. In Grady's Case, 11 Ga. 253, it was held that it was not only the privilege of the judge, but his solemn duty, to interrupt counsel when misstating the testimony to the jury, and that therefore it was not error for the judge to exercise this privilege and restrain counsel, who were engaged in such improper conduct. A similar ruling was made in Doster v. Brown, 25 Ga. 24, 71 Am. Dec. 153. In Long's Case, 12 Ga. 381, Judge Nisbet says: "We have held it error for counsel, when objected to, to be allowed to comment upon facts not proven;" citing Mitchum's Case, 11 Ga. 616. In Bullock v. Smith, 15 Ga. 396 (5), while it is stated that the judge should interfere and prevent counsel from arguing upon facts not in evidence, it does not appear whether any objection was made, but it distinctly appears that the judgment of reversal was not put upon this ground. See page 399. The same is true as to Archer's Case, 35 Ga. 7. We have called attention to some of the earlier cases simply for the reason that the able counsel for the plaintiff in error so earnestly argued before us that the rules invoked against him were not only of recent origin, but were in conflict with the former rulings of the court. We have been unable to find any ruling which appears to us to be in conflict with the rule we now apply. On the contrary, the impression received by us from an investigation of the earlier rulings is that they are in thorough accord with the modern cases.

7. The state sought to impeach one of its own witnesses without first showing to the court that it had been entrapped by the witness. But as it appears that the accused made no objection, the grounds of the motion for a new trial complaining of this furnish no reason for a reversal. The evidence warranted the verdict, and no sufficient reason appears for reversing the judgment.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 30)

BARBER et al. v. ALEXANDER et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

SCHOOL DISTRICTS — UNIFORMITY — EXTENT — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. The Constitution preserves local school systems as they existed in 1877, and permits municipal corporations and counties to establish and maintain public schools in their respective limits. Civ. Code 1895, § 5910.

2. These provisions form necessary exceptions to the uniformity otherwise required by the Constitution (Civ. Code 1895, § 5906), but do not apply to schools in rural districts.

3. Whatever may be the right of towns and counties to establish and maintain public schools, the Constitution requires that in other respects the public school system shall be as nearly uniform as practicable. Civ. Code 1895, § 5906.

4. The general law declares that each county shall compose one school district. The act incorporating the Olive Springs school district, approved August 18, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 273), creates a district within a district, destroys territorial uniformity, and sets apart one locality in the state in which an existing general law is not longer to be of force. Civ. Code 1895, § 5782; Pol. Code 1895, § 1353.

5. This special act interferes with the general school law contained in Pol. Code 1895, §§ 1338-1408, and is violative of that provision of the Constitution (Civ. Code 1895, § 5782) which provides that "laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation throughout the state, and no special law shall be enacted in any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law."

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; Jeo. F. Gober, Judge.

Suit for injunction by T. T. Alexander and others against J. W. Barber and others. There was a decree for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

By a special act approved August 18, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 273), the General Assembly incorporated the Olive Springs school district in Cobb county, providing that the schools therein should not be under the control of the county board of education, but "shall be controlled by the trustees of said district, who shall report direct to the state school commissioner." These trustees were to be elected by the voters of the district, and were to have control of the schools therein, employ teachers, fix their compensation and duties, cause a school census to be taken, and to receive their pro rata of the school fund direct from the state. Alexander and others, alleging themselves to be taxpayers, freeholders, and patrons of Douglas Chapel School, filed an equitable petition against the Olive Springs trustees, alleging that Douglas Chapel Academy was in the new district; that the trustees proposed to abandon it, and establish another school far less convenient for the attendance of petitioners' children. They prayed for an injunction restraining the new trustees from enforcing the provisions of the new act, and also for a decree declaring the Olive Springs act unconstitutional and void, as being a special law, enacted in a case for which provision has been made by an existing general law (Civ. Code 1895, § 5732); and, further, because it was in violation of the uniformity in the public school system required by the Constitution (Civ. Code 1895, § 5906). The chancellor granted the injunction, and the defendants excepted.

N. A. Morris and Z. D. Harrison, for plaintiffs in error. W. E. Tally, for defendants in error.

LAMAR, J. The general law contained in Pol. Code 1895, § 1353, provides that each county in the state shall compose one school district. The special act approved August 18, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 273), creates a district within a district, destroys territorial uniformity, and sets apart one locality of the state in which the general law is not longer to be of force. If there can be one such independent school district in Cobb county, there may be a dozen. If one or more in Cobb, then so likewise in every county in the state. Each special act might differ in its terms, with the result of variety, where the Constitution requires uniformity. Civ. Code 1895, § 5906. The Olive Springs school act not only creates a district different from all others existing under the general law, but it abrogates all of the provisions of the act regulating public schools, codified in Pol. Code 1895, §§ 1354-1408. It takes from the present county board of education control of the schools in existence in the newly created district, and allows them to be managed by local trustees, under new terms, and without the supervision to which all other public schools in the state are subject, contrary to the prohibition contained in the Constitution against special legislation. Civ. Code 1895, § 5782. Nor is the act saved by the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 5910. Smith v. Bohler, 72 Ga. 548. The Constitution preserved the local systems as they existed in 1877. It also permitted municipal corporations and counties to establish and maintain public schools in their respective limits. Civ. Code 1895, § 5909; Pol. Code 1895, § 1394; Irvin v. Gregory, 86 Ga. 605, 18 S. E. 120; Brand v. Lawrenceville, 104 Ga. 498, 30 S. E.

954. These provisions form necessary exceptions to the uniform system of public schools otherwise required by the Constitution. Civ. Code 1895, § 5606. And, whatever may be the right of a county, city, or town to establish special or local systems, the Constitution (Civ. Code 1895, § 5910) grants no power to the General Assembly to authorize the establishment and maintenance of a special or local school system in a rural district. On that subject the Constitution is not silent. It declares that "there shall be a thorough system of common schools for the education of children in the elementary branches of an English education only, as nearly uniform as practicable, the expenses of which shall be provided by taxation or otherwise." Civ. Code 1895, § 5906. This uniformity has been provided for in the act of 1887. Pol. Code 1895, § 1354 et seq. The Constitution prohibits the destruction of this uniformity, and the chancellor properly held that the Olive Springs school act was void.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except CANDLER, J., disqualified.

(120 Ga. 74)

ROWLAND v. TOWNS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

PROCESS—NEW PROCESS—POWER OF CLERK TO ISSUE—AUTHORITY OF JUDGE—DISMISSAL—WANT OF SERVICE.

1. "There being but one suit, one petition, one defendant, the clerk has no power, without some direct and express order of the court, to issue more than one process." Peck v. LaRoche, 12 S. E. 638, 86 Ga. 314 (1).

2. It is within the power of the judge at the appearance term, or at a subsequent term where due diligence is shown, to grant an order authorizing a new process to issue. Allen v. Mutual Loan Co., 12 S. E. 235, 86 Ga. 74; Lassiter v. Carroll, 13 S. E. 825, 87 Ga. 731.

3. But where no service of the petition was made on the defendant, and at the appearance term an order was granted directing "that service be perfected, and that said case stand for announcement at the October term, 1902, of said court," which order was not served on the defendant, nor any new process attached to the petition, the judge properly sustained the motion of defendant made at the April term, 1903, to dismiss the case because of such lack of service. The service of the petition by the sheriff, where neither the order of the judge authorizing the service nor a new process was attached to the same, was a mere nullity.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Telfair County; D. M. Roberts, Judge.

Action by J. T. R. Rowland against D. R. Towns. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

F. H. Saffold and A. C. Saffold, for plaintiff in error. Eschol Graham and E. D. Graham, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

¶ 1. See Process, vol. 40, Cent. Dig. § 42.

(120 Ga. 230)

SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. v. PIERCE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

INJURY TO SERVANT—RAILROADS—DERAILMENT OF ENGINE—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION—GENERAL AND SPECIAL DEMURRERS.

1. A petition in a suit against a railroad company, alleging that the plaintiff's husband was an engineer of the company, and was killed by the derailment of the engine which he was running on the defendant's road, without fault on his part, and averring that such killing was "negligent, wrongful, and inexcusable," was not open to general demurrer.

2. But a petition containing only such general allegations of negligence was not sufficient to withstand a special demurrer setting up that it failed to set forth any specific acts of negligence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Mary Pierce against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. Randolph Anderson, for plaintiff in error. Twiggs & Oliver, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Mary Pierce sued the Seaboard Air Line Railway for damages for the homicide of her husband. The allegations of her petition material to the questions made by the record now before us were, in brief, that her husband, while in the employment of the defendant as a locomotive engineer, was on a given date running an engine of a passenger train over the defendant's road at the rapid rate of speed demanded by the schedule of such train; that the engine, when it reached a switch at a designated place on the road, became derailed and was overturned, and petitioner's husband was pinned beneath the cab of the engine and his skull crushed, from which injuries he died two days thereafter; that he was entirely free from fault at the time; and that, "By reason of the negligent, wrongful, and inexcusable killing of * * * petitioner's * * * husband as aforesaid, * * * petitioner" was entitled to recover a designated sum as damages for his homicide. The defendant duly filed a demurrer to the petition on the grounds that it failed to allege any act of negligence on the part of the defendant showing a cause of action, and failed "to apprise * * * defendant of the specific grounds by reason of which it [was] contended that * * * defendant [could] be held liable in the * * * suit, so as to enable [the] defendant to make proper or intelligent answer, * * * and to prepare for trial in said case." The demurrer went over until the trial term, and on the day it was passed on the defendant made a motion to dismiss the case on the ground that the petition did not set out a cause of action. The court overruled the demurrer and the motion on the same day, and on that day the defendant excepted to both of said rulings.

¶ 2. See Master and Servant, vol. 34, Cent. Dig. § 312.

1. Was the petition sufficient to withstand the motion, in the nature of a general demurrer, to dismiss it? This depended on whether the defendant could have admitted all the allegations of the petition and escaped liability. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Martin, 92 Ga. 161-164, 18 S. E. 364; Georgia Railroad Co. v. Rayford, 115 Ga. 937, 42 S. E. 234. From the allegations of the petition, it appeared that petitioner's husband was an employé of the defendant; that, while in the discharge of his duty as such, he was killed by the running of defendant's locomotive; and that he was at the time wholly without fault; and it was averred that such killing was "negligent, wrongful, and inexcusable." The defendant could not admit these allegations and escape liability. As the petition was, in substance, sufficient, the overruling of the motion to dismiss it was not erroneous. See Georgia Railroad Co. v. Rayford, supra, and citations.

2. Under the rulings made in Blackstone v. Central Railway Co., 105 Ga. 380, 31 S. E. 90, and Russell v. Central Railway Co., 119 Ga. 705, 46 S. E. 838, the ground of special demurrer to the effect that the petition failed to allege any specific act of negligence on the part of the defendant company was meritorious, and the court erred in not dismissing the petition on this ground. In Russell's Case, supra, it was held: "A count in a petition against a railway company, claiming damages for negligence, which alleges in general terms that the defendant was guilty of negligence, should be stricken on special demurrer setting up that the petition fails to set forth the particulars in which the defendant was negligent, unless the defect in the petition is cured by amendment." See, also, Louisville R. Co. v. Cody, 119 Ga. 789, 46 S. E. 429; Palmer Brick Co. v. Chenall, 119 Ga. 837, 47 S. E. 329.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(119 Ga. 982)

WAYCROSS AIR-LINE R. CO. v. OFFERMAN & WESTERN R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

AUDITOR'S REPORT—EXCEPTIONS OF LAW—VERIFICATION—APPEAL—SUPREDEAS BOND—DAMAGES.

1. In passing upon exceptions of law to rulings alleged to have been made by an auditor, the court cannot look to the exceptions alone to ascertain what those rulings were. The grounds upon which the exceptions are based must be verified by reference to the auditor's report; and, if the report affords no means of verification, the exceptions cannot be considered, unless otherwise certified by the auditor.

2. The damages found by the auditor were such as were within the contemplation of the parties to the bond sued on at the time it was executed, and were covered by such bond.

3. In a suit upon a supersedeas bond, the question as to what damages were within the contemplation of the parties at the time the bond was executed is one of law, to be determined by the court from the bond itself and the circumstances under which it was given. The testimony of persons who signed the bond as sureties, as to the nature of the damages which they understood the bond would cover, is irrelevant, and, even though admitted, cannot legally affect the construction to be given to the contract by the court.

4. The evidence demanded a finding by the auditor in favor of the plaintiff, and upon the trial in the superior court the judge did not err in directing the jury to find against exceptions of fact which alleged that the evidence was not sufficient to support such a finding.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Ware County: T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by the Offerman & Western Railroad Company against the Waycross Air-Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. L. Sweat and Leon A. Wilson, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Kay and Jno. C. McDonald, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. The Waycross Air-Line Railroad Company brought a petition for injunction against the Offerman & Western Railroad Company to prevent the defendant company from constructing its road across the right of way and tracks of the petitioner near Nicholls, Ga., under condemnation proceedings or otherwise, for the purpose of reaching a depot site at or near Nicholls. The injunction prayed for was, at an interlocutory hearing, refused, and the petitioner sued out a writ of error to this court, and, to obtain a restraining order preserving the status until the judgment refusing the injunction could be reviewed, gave a supersedeas bond, with sureties, conditioned to pay, in the event the judgment should be affirmed by the Supreme Court, the Offerman & Western Railroad Company all damages resulting from the supersedeas of the judgment and the delay occasioned by bringing the case to this court. The judgment of the lower court was affirmed by this court. Waycross R. Co. v. Offerman R. Co., 109 Ga. 827, 35 S. E. 275. Subsequently the Offerman & Western Railroad Company brought suit upon this bond against the principal and sureties thereon for damages which it alleged it had sustained in consequence of the supersedeas and the delay occasioned by suing out the writ of error from the Supreme Court. The defendants demurred to the petition in the damage suit, the demurrer was overruled, and the judgment overruling the demurrer, upon a review thereof, was affirmed by the Supreme Court. Waycross R. Co. v. Offerman R. Co., 114 Ga. 727, 40 S. E. 738. The case was referred to an auditor in the superior court, who found in favor of the plaintiff for a designated amount. The defendants filed certain exceptions of law and certain exceptions of fact to the auditor's report. The case came on for trial in the superior court upon the report of the auditor and these exceptions. A jury was impaneled to try the issues of fact, and, after the evidence was all in and both sides had announced closed, the judge passed an order overruling the exceptions of law. "Counsel for defendants thereupon stated to the court, in open court, that no objection was urged to the correctness of the amount found by the auditor, in the event the plaintiff was entitled to recover at all; and thereupon the court directed the jury to find verdicts in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants upon their five grounds of exception of fact, and a verdict for the plaintiff and against the defendants [for the amount found by the auditor] with interest and costs;" and when this was done judgment in accordance therewith was rendered by the court. The defendants excepted pendente lite to the overruling of the exceptions of law and to the direction of the verdicts upon the exceptions of fact, and subsequently made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and they excepted.

1. Some of the exceptions of law alleged that the auditor erred in overruling designated objections of the defendants to certain portions of the testimony of a witness named Stillwell; another that he erred in overruling an objection to the testimony of a witness named Gray; and another that he erred in sustaining the objections of the plaintiff to the testimony of a witness named Bonnyman. While it does not seem to us that either of these exceptions was meritorious, we cannot rule upon either of the questions raised by them, because, as the record comes before us, there is no way of ascertaining by the report of the auditor whether he made the rulings complained of or not. In the report the auditor says: "I overrule the objections pages 2, 3, 4, 5, 10, and 11 of the brief of evidence by defendant's counsel, to the testimony of the witness W. B. Stillwell, upon all the grounds of objections thereto." He also states: "I overrule the objection offered by defendant's counsel to the testimony of J. F. Gray, on page 12 of the brief of evidence," and "I sustain the objection upon the grounds therein stated of counsel for plaintiff to the testimony of Alex. Bonnyman, on pages 31 and 38, brief of evidence in this case." In the brief of evidence contained in the record there is not a single objection stated or noted to any portion of the testimony of either of these witnesses, nor the slightest indication that any objection was made, nor is this brief of evidence itself verified by the auditor as the evidence which was introduced before him. Presuming that this is the brief of evidence to which the auditor refers in the above quotations from his report, there is nothing in it, or accompanying it, which shows to this court what any objection to the testimony of either of these witnesses which he overruled or sustained was. It is manifest that neither the superior court nor this court, in passing upon exceptions to alleged rulings made by an auditor, can look to the exceptions themselves to ascertain what those rulings were. The grounds upon which the exceptions are based must be verified by reference to the auditor's report, and, if the report affords no means of verification, the exceptions cannot be considered. If a party excepts to alleged rulings made by an auditor, and the report fails to show whether such rulings were made, the excepting party, if he desires to save his exceptions, should take steps to have them certified as provided in Civ. Code 1895, § 4590 et seq. As these exceptions of law come before us, they are like a motion for a new trial, none of the grounds of which are verified by the trial judge; and it is well settled that an unverified ground cannot be considered by a reviewing court.

2. One of the exceptions of law was: "The auditor erred as a matter of law in finding that the defendants who executed the bond sued upon had in contemplation, at the time of its execution and delivery, damages of a nature claimed and set up by the plaintiff in its petition and allowed by the auditor in his finding." The auditor found "that it is reasonable to suppose that the parties to this bond sued on contemplated damages of the nature sued upon consequent upon its breach." The damages claimed in the suit and found by the auditor were damages sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the loss of freights which it, under a contract with the Southern Pine Company, would have received during the period covered by the supersedeas bond, if it had been allowed to complete its road to the point where such freights would have been delivered to it. The obligors in the bond bound themselves to pay to the obligee "all damages which the Offerman & Western Railroad Company should suffer by reason of its being restrained from condemning a right of way across the Waycross Air-Line Railroad at Nicholls, from the time when said crossing could have been condemned up to the time when said crossing should be actually put in and the road put in operation, provided the judgment refusing the injunction should be affirmed by the Supreme Court." We see no error in the finding of the auditor complained of. We agree with him "that it is reasonable to suppose that the parties to this bond sued on contemplated damages of the nature" of those sued for in this case. It seems to us that this would be a natural supposition in any case in which a railroad company, engaged in constructing a railroad for the purpose of hauling freight as a common carrier, was prevented from constructing its road to a given point where it would receive freights, and bond was given to indemnify it for damages which it should sustain by reason of being prevented from constructing its road to such point, unless the circumstances at the time the bond was given were such as to preclude such a supposition. The circumstances at the time this bond was given, as shown by the evidence, were such as to render this supposition not only natural, but inevitable. The railroad of the plaintiff was being constructed for the purpose of hauling freight, and especially for the purpose of hauling lumber, etc., from the plant of the Southern Pine Company at Nicholls; and this the obligors in this bond, as the record shows, knew perfectly well; and when they bound themselves to pay all damages which the railroad company should sustain by reason of being prevented, for a designated period, from extending its road to a point where such freights would be received by it, they certainly obligated themselves to pay damages arising from the loss of the profits which would have been made by the hauling of such freights. When this case was before this court on a previous occasion upon a bill of exceptions sued out by the defendants, complaining of the overruling of a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition, Mr. Justice Cobb, speaking for the court, said: "A further contention of the plaintiff in error was that the demurrer should have been sustained for the reason that the damages claimed were too remote to be the basis of a legal recovery. We do not think that under the allegations of the petition this objection is well founded. When all the allegations of the petition are taken together, it is clearly shown that the very damages which are now sought to be recovered were those which were in the actual contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into, and in cases of this character it is well settled that such damages, even though to some extent contingent and remote, may be recovered." Waycross R. Co. v. Offerman R. Co., 114 Ga. 731 (3), 40 S. E. 738. It is sufficient now to say that the evidence on the trial before the auditor fully sustained the allegations of the plaintiff's petition. The pleadings in the injunction case in which this bond was given were introduced by the plaintiff. One has but to read them to see that damages from the loss of freight were in contemplation of the parties when this bond was executed. Those pleadings clearly show that the litigation between the two railroad companies was, at bottom, a contest over freights, and mainly over the large volume of freight traffic to be obtained from the Southern Pine Company at Nicholls; and that the petitioner knew that the relations between the Offerman & Western Railroad Company and the Southern Pine Company were so close and intimate that, other things being equal, this railroad company, if allowed to complete its line to the mill of the Pine Company, would secure practically all of this freight.

The petitioner itself charged that the stock in this railroad company was owned and controlled by the Pine Company or its stockholders, and that the connection between the two companies was such as to make the two corporations practically and in effect the same. In our opinion, there can be no reasonable doubt, from the bond and the evidence as to the circumstances under which it was executed, that it contemplated and covered all provable damages occasioned by the loss of freights the hauling of which the obligee in the bond would have obtained but for the interposition of the supersedeas.

3. The question as to what damages were contemplated by the parties when this bond was executed was one of law, to be determined from the written contract and the circumstances under which it was executed; and the testimony of persons, who, as sureties, signed the bond, as to what they privately understood among themselves when they signed in reference to the nature of the damages which it would cover, was irrelevant, and, although admitted by the auditor, could not legally affect the construction to be given to the contract by the auditor or the court.

4. It was admitted by the defendants that, if the plaintiff was entitled to recover anything at all, it was entitled to recover the amount found by the auditor. But certain exceptions to the report presented the question whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding for the plaintiff for any amount at all. These exceptions were based upon two contentions, one of which was that the evidence showed that the plaintiff did not own the Offerman Railroad, without which it had no outlet for freight from Nicholls, during the time the damages were alleged to have accrued—that is, from December 23, 1899, to March 10, 1900, the period of time covered by the bond; and the other was that during this time it had no agreement with the Southern Pine Company to move the output of its mill, and therefore, whether it would have received such freights and, if so, to what extent, was purely a matter of speculation. It is true that the evidence shows that the contract between the Southern Pine Company and the Offerman & Western Railroad Company was not executed in writing until December 5, 1900; but it is also true that the written instrument executed on that date was simply in pursuance of a contract between them which was in existence during the whole of the period covered by the bond sued on in this case. Under that contract the pine company, in consideration of $30,000 and certain covenants on the part of the railroad company, sold and conveyed to the latter the Offerman road, and for the same consideration agreed to ship the output of its mills over the Offerman & Western Railroad, provided the rate of freight was no higher than by any other route. The purchase price had been paid by the railroad company to the pine company, and possession of the railroad, rolling stock, etc., delivered by the latter to the former, prior to the execution of this supersedeas bond. So the Offerman & Western Railroad Company not only controlled, but owned, a line of road over which to transport freight from the Southern Pine Company's plant at Nicholls, and had a contract with the pine company for the carrying of this freight, during the period of time covered by this bond. Both parties to the contract evidenced by the written agreement of December 5, 1900, were as much bound by its terms before it took formal and final shape in that instrument as they were afterwards. The contract had been entered into on November 6, 1899, possession of the property had been delivered to the purchaser a few days thereafter, and the purchase price had been paid early in December, 1899. This gave the Offerman & Western Railroad Company a perfect title, as against the Southern Pine Company, to the railroad, rolling stock, etc., and nothing more was needed to make the contract obligatory upon each of the parties thereto.

As the evidence demanded a verdict against each of these exceptions of fact, there was no error in directing the jury to so find. The exceptions of law and fact which were properly before the court having been legally disposed of as above indicated, the evidence demanding a finding in favor of the plaintiff, and the amount found by the auditor not being in dispute, the judgment making the report of the auditor the judgment of the court naturally and legally followed.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 78)

BLACKSTONE v. KRITZER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

EXEMPTIONS—SETTING ASIDE—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION—SCHEDULE—APPROVAL.

1. The petition for homestead must "state out of what property the exemption is claimed."

2. Whether the applicant owns more or less in value than $1,600, and whether all or only a part of his estate is to be exempt, the schedule must contain a list of all the property owned by him.

3. The approval of the schedule does not operate to set aside as exempt, property described therein, but omitted from that part of the petition stating out of what property the exemption is claimed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action between J. D. Blackstone and A. D. Kritzer. Petition by Blackstone to set aside certain property under the homestead laws. The petition was denied, and petitioner brings error. Affirmed.

On November 8, 1893, J. D. Blackstone filed a petition with the ordinary of Richmond county, reciting that he was the head of a family consisting of his wife and four children. "Petitioner prays that the following described property belonging to him, to wit, one bay horse-mule named 'Rock,' value $125 [and cows, hogs, harness, wagons, tools, furniture described], be set aside under the homestead laws of said state for the use and benefit of your petitioner and his said family, and that the same be made exempt from levy and sale by the creditors of petitioner, who attaches hereto a correct schedule of all property owned by him," etc. This petition was signed, and under the signature appears the following: "Complete schedule of property owned by J. B. Blackstone. One bay horse-mule, Rock, $125; one sorrel mare-mule, Beck, $125"—with a list of the other property described in the petition. There also appeared the order of publication, several orders of continuance, and, later, affidavits to show service upon the creditors, and, apparently upon a separate paper, the following: "Georgia, Richmond County. In the matter of the application of J. B. Blackstone for exemption of personalty and setting apart and valuation of homestead under the constitution. It appearing to the court that notice has been given," etc., "it is ordered that said homestead be granted, and that the petition and schedule be approved, and handed to the clerk of the superior court, to be by him recorded. Jan. 28, 1894." Signed by the ordinary. A mortgage fi. fa. dated December 4, 1902, was levied on the mule Beck, and Blackstone, as head of a family filed a claim. The case was submitted to the judge of the city court without a jury, who found the property subject, and ordered the levy to proceed; whereupon the claimant, as head of the homestead estate, made a motion for a new trial, and excepts to the court's refusal to grant the same.

F. W. Capers, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Barrett, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. The petition for homestead must "state out of what property the exemption is claimed." Attached to the petition must be a schedule containing a minute description of all the property belonging to the applicant. But it does not always follow that everything mentioned therein is to be set aside. The applicant's assets may exceed in value $1,600. In such a case, of course, all cannot be exempt; yet the schedule must contain a list of everything he owns, even though a part may remain subject to levy and sale. If the applicant owns less than $1,600, the rule is not changed. He may desire to retain a part for immediate sale, and may prefer not to include some of his property in the homestead exemption. He is not required to have all set apart as a homestead. Still the statute requires in such case also the same form of schedule. Whether the property is worth more or less than $1,600, and whether all or only a part thereof is to be set aside as a homestead, the schedule must be full and complete. It not only defines what is exempt, but may also be useful to creditors and levying officers in describing what is not exempt. Civ. Code 1895, § 2828, para. 1, 2. It may be that the approved schedule is prima facie evidence that the property therein described is exempt if less than $1,600; but as to any included therein which was not named in the petition as part of the intended homestead the presumption would yield. In such cases the petition and schedule must be construed together. Compare Larey v. Baker, 85 Ga. 687, 11 S. E. 800; Paschal v. Turner, 116 Ga. 736, 42 S. E. 1010; McDonald v. Williams, 94 Ga. 515, 19 S. E. 830. Blackstone owned two mules. He named both animals in the schedule, but the petition only prayed that one should be set apart as exempt. That the mule levied on was omitted from the petition, but described in the schedule, and that the petition and schedule were both approved, did not have the effect of exempting what the petitioner had not asked should be exempt. The judge properly disallowed the claim, and ordered the execution to proceed against the mule which was not referred to in the petition.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 229)

WACHSTEIN v. GERMANIA BANK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

PLEADING—EXHIBITS—ADMISSIONS.

1. Where one paragraph in a petition contains the allegations that "a copy of said protested check is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' to which reference is prayed," the admission in the answer that the paragraph is true is to be treated as an admission that the exhibit is a true copy of the original check, with all entries thereon.

2. The exhibit attached to the petition showed that the check had been properly indorsed for payment when presented.

3. The plaintiff proved his case as laid, and it was error to grant a nonsuit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by S. Wachstein against the Germania Bank. Plaintiff was nonsuited, and brings error. Reversed.

Alexander & Hitch, for plaintiff in error. Geo. W. Owens, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Wachstein sued the Germania Bank for damage to his credit as a merchant, resulting from their protesting a check on the ground that there were not sufficient funds on hand, when in fact there was money to his credit sufficient to meet the check. After the protest the check was again presented, and again payment was refused on the ground of want of funds. The check was attached to the petition as an exhibit. Appearing thereon was the indorsement of the payee, and of the bank to whom he in turn had indorsed it. The bank admitted these facts, but claimed that the failure to pay had been caused by an oversight occasioned by its depositing Wachstein's money to another account. It further pleaded that it had offered him $50 as compensation for the damages inflicted, and by its plea made a continuing tender of that sum. The plaintiff offered evidence proving his financial condition and good standing as a merchant, and also to show that, without knowledge of the protest above referred to, he subsequently drew another check to the same payee in payment of a bill of goods, but that the payee declined to receive the same, and returned it, presumably on the ground that, as one check had been protested, he would not take another in payment of a bill of goods. At the conclusion of the evidence the court granted a nonsuit, on the ground, as stated in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, that the petition did not allege that the check for protest of which the suit was brought had been properly indorsed; that it was an essential part of the plaintiff's case to allege and prove that the paper, when presented, contained all of the necessary indorsements in order to make the bank liable for failure to pay. The plaintiff excepted to the grant of a nonsuit.

If the petition was defective because there was no express allegation that the check was properly indorsed when presented for payment, advantage thereof should have been taken by special demurrer, and not by motion for a nonsuit. As a fact, however, the check attached as an exhibit showed that it had been properly indorsed. The answer admitted this fact when it admitted the truth of the paragraph in which the check was referred to as an exhibit. It was therefore unnecessary for the plaintiff to offer it in evidence, or incur the record by proving what was thus admitted to be true. The defendant, in its answer, admitted most of the material allegations in the petition, claimed that it had offered the plaintiff a sum in satisfaction of the damage done, and made a continuing tender of that amount. The plaintiff proved his case as laid, and it was error to grant a nonsuit.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 231)

CARTLEDGE v. PIERPONT MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 12, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—DUTY TO WARN SERVANT—OBVIOUS DANGERS.

1. It not appearing that the machinery or appliances furnished to the plaintiff were in any way defective, or that the dangers against which it was alleged that the defendant negligently failed to warn him were such that the plaintiff had not equal means with the defendant of knowing of them, the grant of a nonsuit was not erroneous.

§ 1. See Master and Servant, vol. 34, Cent. Dig. § 314.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by F. B. Cartledge against the Pierpont Manufacturing Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Chas. V. Hohenstéin and P. W. Meldrim, for plaintiff in error. J. Randolph Anderson and O'Connor, O'Byrne & Hartridge, for defendant in error.

SIMMONS, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(120 Ga. 97)

TABB v. MALLETTTE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

GARNISHMENT—EXEMPTIONS—WAGES OF MUNICIPAL OFFICERS—LABORER'S WAGES—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

1. A watchman employed by a private corporation to police its own property, who is paid by the employing company, and who is subject to discharge by his employer, is not a municipal officer whose wages are exempt from garnishment, notwithstanding such watchman is clothed with the power to make arrests, and is subject to the supervision and control of the police department of the city government.

2. A person under a contract of employment contemplating services mainly of work requiring mental skill or business capacity, and involving the exercise of his intellectual faculties, rather than work the doing of which properly would depend upon a mere physical power to perform ordinary manual labor, is not a laborer whose wages are exempt from process of garnishment.

3. There being no conflict in the evidence, the court properly directed a verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Pope Barrow, Judge.

Garnishment proceedings in justice court by Mrs. A. R. Mallette against E. C. Tabb, defendant, and the Central of Georgia Railway Company, garnishee. On appeal to the Superior Court, a verdict was directed for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

P. J. O'Connor and John E. Schwarz, for plaintiff in error. D. H. Clark, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Mrs. A. R. Mallette sued E. C. Tabb in a justice's court, and, upon filing her affidavit and bond, caused a summons of garnishment to be issued and served on the Central of Georgia Railway Company. The garnishee answered that it was indebted to the defendant in a named sum, which was due to him for his monthly wages as a laborer, and that such wages were exempt from the process and liabilities of garnishment. The defendant also filed his answer, claiming that all money owing him by the garnishee had been earned by him as a day laborer while in its employment. The issues formed on the answers were tried in the justice's court, and an appeal was taken to the superior court. On the trial of the appeal the evidence was as follows:

The paymaster of the garnishee company testified: The defendant, E. C. Tabb, "was employed by the Central Railway Company as a policeman. He is paid at the rate of $60 per month. It is part of his duties to check off the number of bales of cotton or boxes of merchandise as they pass over the railroad bridge on the trucks, and to see that the number of bales and boxes correspond to the amount called for on the ticket held by the driver. In any case where there is a dispute, he turns the truck back. Tabb has nothing to do with the marks of the shipper on the cotton and boxes. He only counts the number of packages on the trucks, and sees that they correspond to the number on the ticket. In case of a question arising, I think the sergeant would settle the dispute. Tabb receives all orders from the sergeant, such as the limits of his beat and the length of his tours of duty. He is not allowed to sit down at any time while on duty, but must walk his beat continually. If he loses a day and has no good excuse, he is docked for same. I don't know of any mental work he does, except checking packages. Tabb is general custodian of the company's property. He is hired, paid, and discharged by the company."

Another witness—the superintendent of police for the city of Savannah—testified: "The Ocean Steamship force is, to a certain extent, under my control. When a man joins the police force, he is given a copy of the rules by which he is to be governed, and is supposed to acquaint himself with them as soon as possible. The men are never examined, so far as I know, as to their knowledge of the rules. When one of the rules is violated, the mayor has charge of the matter. Tabb is subject to the same rules as govern city policemen, and subject to the commands of the officers of the city police. All policemen are required to read and write English understandingly. Tabb is really not employed by the city, although subject to the same rules that govern the city police. He is employed, paid, and discharged by the Central of Georgia Railway Company."

The defendant, Tabb, as a witness in his own behalf, testified: "I am a policeman on the Ocean Steamship Company's wharf, and have been for four years. Before joining the police force I had to pass a physical examination. My tour of duty run from seven to ten hours—seven in the day and ten at night. During my tours of duty I am continually walking; am not allowed to sit down or rest, and am exposed to all kinds and conditions of weather. I am not allowed to hold conversation with any one, except in the discharge of my duties. I receive all instructions from the sergeant. In any case of dispute, the matter is always left to the sergeant for settlement. In the absence of the regular bridgeman, I check the number of packages on the trucks or drays that pass over the bridge. I only count the number of packages. I also catch the line from incoming ships, and, in case of bad weather, I help move the boxes of merchandise on the wharf to places of safety. I am paid at the rate of $60 per month, and am docked for loss of time. I was not required to pass mental examination. No rulebook was ever given me. * * * I make no written reports whatever. I have nothing whatever to do with the marks on cotton. * * * The limits of my beat are not always the same. We are changed about. The sergeant directs us what to do. If I am in doubt about my right to arrest a person, I send for the sergeant. If it is a plain case, I send the person to the barracks. There is a regular man to check packages at the bridge and to catch the lines from the ships, but, in case of his absence, I am required to do his work. It is a part of my duty. It is also part of my duty to move packages to places of safety during rain. I am in uniform during my tour of duty, and carry a pistol and club. During the absence of the sergeant I make the arrest if it becomes necessary to make an arrest. I send for the sergeant, and, if he cannot be found, I determine myself whether or not to arrest the party. I only help to remove freight to places of safety during rain. There are men employed for such purposes as this, but it is a part of my duty to help them in case of rain."

The plaintiff introduced in evidence certain provisions of the code of Savannah declaring that the watchmen employed by the railway company should be under the supervision of the officers of the police department, and under a duty to observe the rules therein set forth, by which the policemen of the city were governed.

Upon the conclusion of the evidence the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff, finding the fund in the hands of the garnishee subject to process of garnishment. Error is assigned on the direction of the verdict.

1. There can be no question about the salary of an officer of a municipality being exempt from the process of garnishment. McLellan v. Young, 54 Ga. 399, 21 Am. Rep. 276; Holt v. Experience, 26 Ga. 113; Leake v. Lacey, 95 Ga. 747, 22 S. E. 655, 51 Am. St. Rep. 112. The reason for this exemption is founded on principles of sound public policy. In the case reported in 54 Ga. 399, 21 Am. Rep. 276, Judge McCay said: "The exemption is not for the benefit of the officer, but because the public is not to be harassed and inconvenienced by petty suits in the shape of garnishments, and the efficiency of its servants interfered with by any uncertainty whether, when the salary is due, it will be paid." Where a private corporation employs, pays, and discharges its own employé, the fact that the city clothes such employé with the power to arrest violators of municipal ordinances, and places him under the superintendence of its police department, will not make him an employé of the city. The city owes him nothing for his service. His compensation is paid by the employing corporation, and his wages are in no sense payable out of the city's funds. Unless his wages are otherwise exempt, they can be reached by garnishment of the employer.

2. There is usually more or less difficulty in applying an abstract principle of law to a given statement of facts. This is illustrated in the present case, where attorneys for both plaintiff and defendant in error cite the same case (Oliver v. Macon Hardware Co., 98 Ga. 249, 25 S. E. 403, 58 Am. St. Rep. 300) in support of their respective contentions as to the definition of the word "laborer," as used in our garnishment statute. The character of the service rendered by the plaintiff in error is undisputed. He contends that the evidence shows that his service was mainly work of a physical nature. And the defendant in error insists that the only reasonable deduction from the evidence is that the service rendered under the contract of employment contemplated mainly work requiring mental skill and business capacity. The test of determining whether a particular individual performing certain services is a laborer is very carefully and accurately given by Judge Lumpkin in the case of Oliver v. Macon Hardware Co., 98 Ga. 249, 25 S. E. 403, 58 Am. St. Rep. 300, and I have taken the liberty of using an extract from it in formulating the syllabus for this opinion. Applying this test to the present case, the plaintiff in error was not a laborer in the sense in which this word is used in section 4732 of the Civil Code of 1895. His employment called upon him to decide when a municipal ordinance had been infringed, and what course to pursue with regard to arresting the offender; what to do with him when arrested. Whenever the emergency arose, he was to preserve order, and at all times he supervised the safety and security of his employer's property. To discharge these functions would require the exercise of the intellectual faculties. Very little manual labor was performed by him, but most of his work was of a supervisory nature, demanding the exercise of mental skill and business capacity.

3. There being no conflict in the evidence, and all reasonable deductions or inferences therefrom demanding the verdict, the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 74)

COMMERCIAL BANK v. J. K. ARMSBY CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

BROKERS — CONVERSION OF PROPERTY — BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

1. Where a merchant ships goods to his broker without conveying title to him, but purely for the purpose of distribution to others, and sends to the broker a bill of lading indorsed in blank for the goods, the possession of which, by the general custom of trade, is regarded as evidence of the right to dispose of the property for which it is issued, he cannot, in an action of trover, recover the goods from a bank which has, in good faith, and without notice of the owner's title, taken the bill of lading as security for a loan of money to the broker on his individual account, and converted the property upon default in the payment of its debt.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by the J. K. Armsby Company against the Commercial Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Wm. H. Fleming, for plaintiff in error.
Jos. B. & Bryan Cumming, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. The J. K. Armsby Company, an Illinois corporation, shipped to Walton & Carr, their brokers in Augusta, a quantity of salmon for distribution to different parties to whom the goods had been sold. Walton & Carr were merely agents of the Armsby Company, and had no right or title to the salmon. The goods were shipped from a point in Oregon, by parties from whom they had been ordered by the Armsby Company, on a through bill of lading to Augusta, and were consigned to the order of the consignor, with directions to notify Walton & Carr. The Armsby Company sent Walton & Carr a check for the amount of the freight, which was paid, and it also mailed them the original bill of lading, which was indorsed blank. Carr, a member of the firm of Walton & Carr, took the bill of lading to the Commercial Bank of Augusta, and hypothecated it for a loan of money. Shortly thereafter Walton & Carr failed, and the bank converted the salmon for the payment of its debt, whereupon the Armsby Company brought against it the present suit, which was an action of trover. The case was tried before the judge of the city court of Richmond county, without a jury. The bank showed that it was the general custom of trade in Augusta that bills of lading "to order notify" were attached to drafts for the purchase price of the goods represented by them, that possession of the bill of lading could only be obtained by payment of the draft, that possession of such a bill of lading was considered prima facie evidence of ownership of the property for which it was issued, and that they were treated by banks as negotiable paper. It was also shown that the J. K. Armsby Company had done business in Augusta for a number of years, and that, while Walton & Carr were merchandise brokers, they also bought and sold goods on their own account. It was admitted that neither the bank nor any of its officials knew or had reason to suspect that Carr had no right to convey the salmon, and that, in the event the bank should be held liable, the proper amount to be recovered was $700. The judge found in favor of the plaintiff, and rendered judgment in its favor for the amount mentioned. The defendant excepted.

"Where an owner has given to another such evidence of the right of selling his goods, as, according to the custom of trade or the common understanding of the world, usually accompanies the authority of disposal, or has given the external indicia of the right of disposing of his property, a sale to an innocent purchaser divests the true owner's title." Civ. Code, § 3539. The sole question for our determination, then, is, does a bill of lading of the character of the one involved in this suit constitute such an external indicium of the right of disposing of the property for which it was issued as to bring the case within the operation of the rule laid down in the Code section cited? As a general rule, the transferee of a bill of lading can obtain no better title to the goods which it covers than that which was in the person by whom it was transferred. Indeed, it is a self-evident proposition that no man can convey that which he does not possess. But the true owner of property may, by placing it in the power of another to defraud innocent purchasers by an apparently valid transfer of the property, cut himself off from claiming it, and thereby divest the title from himself. In 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 551, it is said that an important exception to the general rule which has already been stated "arises in the case of the transfer of a bill of lading to a bona fide purchaser for value by a consignee to whom the goods are by the terms of the instrument made deliverable, or to whom the consignor and original owner of the goods has indorsed and delivered the bill. It seems to be established that in this case the transfer defeats the vendor's right of stoppage in transitu, and passes the title to the goods to the bona fide transferee." See, also, 6 Cyc. 424; 1 Mechem, Sales, § 166; Pollard v. Reardan, 65 Fed. 848, 13 C. C. A. 171. While a bill of lading is not in the full sense a negotiable instrument, it is treated by universal commercial usage as a symbol of the goods for which it is issued, and consequently it is in a measure negotiable. In Georgia it may be pledged as security for debt (Civ. Code 1895, § 2956), and a bona fide assignee for value is protected in his title against the owner's right of stoppage in transitu (Civ. Code 1895, § 3553). In American Nat. Bank v. Georgia R. Co., 96 Ga. 665, 23 S. E. 898, 51

Am. St. Rep. 155, the status of bills of lading under our law is discussed with considerable fullness; and, while the decision in that case is not directly in point on the question involved in the case at bar, the reasoning of Mr. Chief Justice Simmons has an important bearing thereon. The following language from the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller in the case of McNeal v. Hill, 96, Fed. Cas. No. 8,914, is there quoted with approval: "As civilization has advanced and commerce extended, new and artificial modes of doing business have superseded the exchanges by barter and otherwise which prevail while society is in its earlier and simpler stages. The invention of the bill of exchange is a familiar illustration of this fact. A more modern, but still not recent, invention of like character, for the transfer, without the cumbersome and often impossible operations of actual delivery, of articles of personal property, is the indorsement or assignment of bills of lading and warehouse receipts. Instruments of this kind are sui generis. From long use and trade they have come to have among commercial men a well-understood meaning, and the indorsement or assignment of them as absolutely transfers the general property of the goods and chattels therein named as would a bill of sale."

In this case there was no dispute as to the general custom of trade in regard to bills of lading of the character of the one negotiated by Carr with the Commercial Bank. It was the daily practice of banks in Augusta and elsewhere to advance money on such security, for possession of the bill of lading was regarded as prima facie evidence of the title of the holder to the goods of which the bill was the symbol. Ordinarily bills of lading of this kind are attached to drafts for the purchase price of the goods, and can only be obtained by payment of the drafts. Carr's possession of the bill of lading was therefore prima facie evidence that he had paid a draft drawn by the consignor, and was entitled to the property. The departure of the Armsby Company from this custom placed it in the power of Carr to commit a fraud on the bank, an opportunity of which he seems to have promptly availed himself. Applying the well-known rule that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer from the wrong of another, the burden should be borne by him who placed it in the power of the wrongdoer to perpetrate the fraud, we fail to see how it can be held that the plaintiff can recover.

The Georgia cases cited by counsel for the defendant in error do not, in our opinion, conflict with what is here laid down. The case of Tison v. Howard, 57 Ga. 410, which is more nearly in point than any of the other cases cited, is easily distinguishable from the case at bar. There the owner of the goods received from the transportation company duplicate bills of lading, both of which he indorsed in blank; sending the original to his factor, and depositing the duplicate in a bank for safe-keeping, and for no other purpose. The bailee bank indorsed the duplicate bill of lading, and secured from the factor an amount of money in excess of the value of the goods. The court held, in effect, that a bill of lading is not, in the full sense, a negotiable instrument, and that, the deposit of the bill with the bank being purely a bailment for safe-keeping, the virtual theft of it by the banker did not deprive the true owner of the goods of his title. In the case now under consideration no such state of facts is made to appear. The Armsby Company forwarded to Walton & Carr a bill of lading, the possession of which, under the universal custom of business, gave a prima facie right to the disposal of the goods for which it was issued. The purpose for which the instrument was confided to Walton & Carr does not definitely appear from the record, but there is nothing to indicate that it was merely intrusted to them for safe-keeping. There was nothing to put the bank on notice that title to the property was in any one other than the holder of the bill of lading. A fraud was committed by Carr, by means of which he obtained from the bank a large sum of money. To say nothing of the provisions of section 8539 of the Civil Code of 1895, the plainest principles of equity require that the Armsby Company, which made the commission of the fraud possible, and not the bank, should bear the loss.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except LAMAR, J., disqualified.

(120 Ga. 20)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. McCLIFFORD.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 18, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO RAILROAD EMPLOYE—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES—CASE REQUIRED OF EMPLOYE—ACTION FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS—EXPERT TESTIMONY—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW—RECORD—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. When, in the trial of a suit by an employe against a railroad company for damages for personal injuries, the judge charges the jury in clear and unequivocal terms, but in a general way, the law requiring the plaintiff, as a condition precedent to a recovery, to show that he was without fault, the failure to apply this principle in a hypothetical way to the particular facts, calling attention to what is claimed by the defendant to be negligence on the part of the plaintiff, will not be a sufficient reason for reversing the judgment refusing a new trial to the defendant, when there is no appropriate written request, presented in due time, asking for such an instruction.

2. A master is not relieved from liability to his servant who is injured by a defective instrumentality by the mere fact that the instrumentality is owned by a third person.

3. If the master constantly uses the instrumentality in his business, and so deals with it as to practically adopt it as his own, he becomes, relatively to a servant injured thereby, the owner, and is under the same duty to the servant as an owner would be.

4. Though the railroad company in this case did not own the fence and gate here involved, they were built across its track with its permission; the gate was constantly used by it in its business; had on it a lock put there by the company, keys to which were furnished to its employees; and was under its control to such an extent as to make it its duty, relatively to its employees using the gate, to see that it was in a suitable condition for use, and to give its employees warning in the event it was not.

5. The law requires of an employé the exercise of only ordinary diligence to prevent injury to himself.

6. An expert may be asked his opinion of a hypothetical case, even though the facts thereof may be the same as those of the case on trial.

7. A ground of a motion for a new trial complaining of the admission or rejection of evidence must be complete in itself, or in connection with exhibits attached to the motion. The Supreme Court will not look to any other part of the record to make perfect an incomplete assignment of error in a motion for a new trial.

8. The evidence warranted the verdict, and no sufficient reason appears for reversing the judgment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by P. O. McClifford against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

This was an action for damages for personal injuries, in which the plaintiff recovered a verdict. The case is here upon exceptions to the overruling of the defendant's motion for a new trial. The plaintiff was employed by the defendant as a coupler and switchman. The defendant had a track which ran parallel with the property of the Southern Cotton Oil Company, from which track three or four tracks led into the premises of the cotton oil company. Across one of these tracks the cotton oil company had erected a gate. The gate, while across the defendant's track, was upon land owned by the oil company, and was owned and maintained by it. The gate had a railroad lock upon it, which was put there by the defendant for the purpose of facilitating its access through the gate, and some of its employés were furnished with keys to the lock. The plaintiff was on top of a car in the discharge of his duties as switchman or coupler, which car, together with others, was being pushed by an engine toward the gate. The plaintiff observed that one wing of the gate was closed, and, according to testimony introduced in his behalf, gave the engineer repeated signals to stop the train, which could have been done, had the signals been obeyed. The engineer disregarded the signals, and the train ran into the closed gate, derailing the car on which plaintiff was standing. In attempting to get off the car, the plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of. There was some evidence that the wing of the gate which was closed was not supplied with a hook, and the inference from the testimony is that this was the reason for that wing being closed. On this testimony the judge evidently based the charges referred to in the opinion.

Lawton & Cunningham, for plaintiff in error. C. T. Ladson and Garrard & Meldrim, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). 1. Complaint is made that the court failed to instruct the jury as to the main defense of the defendant, which was that the plaintiff was stationed on the car nearest the gate, that it was his duty to signal the engineer of any obstruction upon the track, and that he failed to give the engineer any warning until the car was so near the gate that it was impossible to stop the train in time to avoid the collision. The judge charged the jury that, before the plaintiff could recover, it must be shown that he was without fault or negligence; that if he, immediately or remotely, directly or indirectly, caused the injury, or contributed to it in any way, he was not entitled to recover; that, the plaintiff being an employé, any negligence on his part, however slight, which contributed in any appreciable degree to the injury, would defeat a recovery; and also that he could not recover if he was to blame. Having thus stated to the jury in this manner, although in a general way, the rule of law that imposed upon the plaintiff the duty of showing that he was without fault, as a condition precedent to a recovery, we do not think the judgment should be reversed for the failure of the judge to apply the principle specifically to the facts of the particular case, in the absence of an appropriate written request to this effect, presented in due time.

2-4. Ten grounds of the motion for a new trial contain assignments of error upon portions of the charge of the judge relating to the duty which the defendant owed the plaintiff in reference to the gate across its track. The charge was, in effect, that if the railroad company used the track upon the premises of the oil company, and carried its cars and engines through the gate, opening and closing it when necessary, and had its lock on the gate, with keys to the lock in the possession of its employés, the company owed to its employés the same duty in reference to the gate as if it had been the owner, and the gate had been erected upon its premises. Where a servant is injured by a defective instrumentality which is neither owned nor controlled by the master, but used by his direction, the authorities are conflicting as to whether the master is liable. See Labatt's Master & Servant, § 169; 3 Elliott on Railroads, § 1279. The author first cited expresses the opinion that the cases which declare the master to be liable "are more consistent than the others with those general conceptions of public policy which are the ultimate foundation of his obligations to his servants." He then proceeds to say that in perhaps most of the cases the master's want of control over the instrumentality would constitute no serious obstacle to his acquiring information as to its condition, lack of information being the theory upon which nonliability is supposed to rest. This court has ruled squarely, however, that in the case just stated the master would not be liable unless he knew of the defective condition of the instrumentality. Dunlap v. Railroad Co., 81 Ga. 136, 7 S. E. 283. We do not think the facts of this case bring it within the rule just stated, but rather within the rule that the master is liable to his servant for injuries received from defective instrumentalities not owned by the employer, but controlled by him, and used by him in his business. See 1 Labatt's Master & Servant, § 172. The evidence here shows that the owner of the gate had been accustomed to repair it, and that the railroad company was not expected to keep the gate in repair. But the evidence also shows that the railroad company constantly used the gate in its business, that it was built across its track, that it had on it a lock placed there by the railroad company, and that its employes were furnished with keys to this lock. The railroad company did not own the gate, but, when it permitted it to be built across its track, and used it in its business, it became, relatively to an employé, a part of the track, and as to him the company is to be treated as the owner; that is to say, it became so far the owner as to be under a duty to its employes to see that the gate was kept in repair. The company was bound to furnish its employes with a safe place to work, and it certainly could not allow its track to become unsafe by reason of an obstruction placed upon the track by a third person with its permission. We recognize that in cases like the present the line between liability and nonliability is very closely drawn, but we think the facts of this case show a breach of the duty which the defendant owed to the plaintiff to provide him with a safe place to work. To all intents and purposes, it was in control of the gate. It locked it and unlocked it, opened it and shut it, whenever occasion required; and it cannot defend against the plaintiff's suit on the mere ground that the duty to repair was on the Southern Cotton Oil Company. The railroad company was at least under a duty to inspect and to warn, even if it was not also under the duty, relatively to its employes, to keep the gate in repair. The charges complained of were not erroneous.

5. Complaint is made that the judge charged the jury that the plaintiff was bound to the exercise of ordinary care; it being contended that, as he was an employé, he was bound to the exercise of extraordinary diligence. There was no error in this charge. The degree of diligence which the law requires of an employé is ordinary diligence only. Central R. Co. v. Lanier, 83 Ga. 591, 10 S. E. 279; Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. Mitchell, 92 Ga. 81, 18 S. E. 290 (2). The failure of the employé to exercise the degree of diligence required (that is, ordinary diligence), even in the slightest way, will preclude him from recovering; that is, he is at fault whenever he does anything or fails to do anything which would amount to a lack of ordinary care on the part of any person in the same or similar circumstances. If he immediately or remotely, directly or indirectly, causes the injury, or any part of it, or contributes to it by any act which an ordinarily prudent person would not have performed, or leaves undone anything which an ordinarily prudent person would have performed, he cannot recover. His lack of ordinary care, no matter how slight, which contributes in any appreciable degree to the injury, renders him to blame. This court has never held that an employé of a railroad company is bound to exercise extraordinary diligence. On the contrary, it has always held that ordinary diligence is all that is required. The expressions in Kenney's Case, 61 Ga. 590 (3), Mitchell's Case, 63 Ga. 181, Hicks' Case, 95 Ga. 302, 22 S. E. 613, and other cases relied upon by counsel as indicating that extraordinary diligence is required, are merely different ways of expressing the principle above laid down.

6. There was no error in allowing the plaintiff and the witness Kelley, as experts, to give their opinion upon the hypothetical case stated as to the distance in which a train of a given character could be stopped, although the case thus hypothetically stated was substantially the case as made by the evidence. In Flanagan's Case, 106 Ga. 109, 32 S. E. 80, it was distinctly ruled that, while it is improper to ask an expert his opinion of the case on trial, he may be asked his opinion of the same case hypothetically stated. There is nothing in Southern Mutual Insurance Company v. Hudson, 113 Ga. 434, 38 S. E. 964, which at all modifies or changes the rule laid down in the Flanagan Case, but, on the contrary, the two decisions are in entire accord; it being held in each that the expert must give his opinion upon a hypothetical case, although the facts of the case stated might be the same as those appearing from the evidence, but would not be allowed to give his opinion upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

7. Complaint is made in one ground of the motion for a new trial that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff "to introduce in evidence rule 519, claimed to be from the rulebook of the Central of Georgia Railway Company; said rule being set out as Exhibit A to the brief of evidence." There is nothing in the ground or the motion, or in any exhibit to the same, which indicates what are the contents of rule 519. Under numerous decisions of this court, this ground cannot be considered. The court will not look from the motion and its exhibits to the brief of evidence and its exhibits, or any other portion of the record, for the facts necessary to make the ground complete. Seaboard Air Line Railway v. Phillips, 117 Ga. 106, 43 S. E. 494, and citations.

8. No error of law appears which, in our opinion, requires a reversal of the judgment. The charge was free from substantial error, and fairly submitted the issues to the jury. The evidence authorized the verdict.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 247)

LIPPMAN v. AETNA INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 14, 1904.)

INSURANCE—FORFEITURE OF CONTRACT—WAIVER BY AGENT—PLEADING—TIME FOR ANSWERING—AMENDMENT.

1. Answers to suits in the city court of Savannah must be filed on or before the first day of the return term.

2. Where a demurrer and answer to a petition are filed too late, but, instead of moving to strike because not filed in time, the plaintiff invokes the judgment of the court on the demurrer, and amends the petition to conform to its judgment, it is too late, at a subsequent term of the court, to move to strike the demurrer and answer because not filed in time.

3. A material amendment to a petition opens the case, if in default, for answer by the defendant.

4. A forfeiture of a contract of insurance cannot be waived by a local agent of an insurance company, without express authority from the governing officials of the insurance company.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Emma Lippman against the Aetna Insurance Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Saussy & Saussy, for plaintiff in error.
Adams & Adams, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Mrs. Emma Lippman filed her suit against the Aetna Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., returnable to the May term, 1902, of the city court of Savannah. The first day of the May term was the fifth day of the month, and on that day counsel for the defendant had their names marked on the judge's docket as attorneys for the defendant, and on the following Monday, which was the second Monday of the term, filed its demurrer and plea under the rules of the court. The grounds of the demurrer were: (1) That no copy of the contract of insurance sued on was incorporated in or attached to the petition, nor did the petition purport to set forth a copy of what appears written or printed upon the face or in the body of the policy sued on; (2) that paragraph 8 of the petition failed to state wherein the defendant had acted in bad faith, or had been stubbornly litigious, so as to be responsible for counsel fees. Nothing further was done in the case until April 18, 1903, when the demurrer was heard and sustained, and plaintiff allowed 10 days to file an amendment containing or having attached thereto a copy of everything appearing on the face or in the body of the policy, including all the stipulations embraced in that portion of the same above the signatures of the company's officers by whom it was executed. On April 22, 1903, plaintiff complied with the terms of the order sustaining the demurrer, and amended her petition by attaching a copy of the policy of insurance. Whereupon, on May 4, 1903, the defendant amended its original plea, denying liability to the plaintiff because, in and by its policy of insurance, it was stipulated that, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon or added thereto, the same should be void if the insured, at the time of effecting the insurance, had or should thereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by said policy; that, when the policy was taken out, the insured had two policies of insurance on the said property, one in favor of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, issued November 17, 1899, for $2,500, and another in favor of the Liverpool, London & Globe Insurance Company, issued on the said November 17, 1899, for $1,000; that no agreement was indorsed on the policy, or added thereto, as to the said previous insurance, which existed on the said property at the time of the fire; and that, by reason thereof, the covenants and conditions of this policy of insurance were and are broken, and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover any sum whatever. On December 7, 1903, by her written motion previously filed on August 28, 1903, plaintiff moved to strike defendant's demurrer, plea and answer, and to enter up a default in the case nunc pro tunc, on the grounds: (1) That the plaintiff filed her petition against the defendant, and the same was duly served, returnable to the May term, 1902, of the court; that the first day of the May term, 1902, of the court was May 5th of said year, and on said day the defendant was not represented by counsel, nor had it filed any demurrer, plea, or answer to the petition; that afterwards defendant employed counsel, who on May 12, 1902, filed a demurrer, plea, and answer, but that the employment of counsel and the filing of the said demurrer, plea, and answer were too late, as the city court of Savannah under its constitution is a court in which cases are triable at the first term, and all pleadings and defenses and entries of appearance are required by law to be made on the first day of the term, and upon failure thereof default should be entered; (2) that defendant did not employ the counsel whose names are entered on the docket, and who filed said defense, until after the first day of the term had passed, which fact was unknown to plaintiff until the present term of the court and within the last few days. The judge heard evidence on the issues of fact raised by this motion to strike. The evidence submitted was sufficient to sustain the finding that counsel was employed on the first day of the term, and had authority to appear on that day and make answer for the company. The motion was overruled, and the case proceeded to trial. Error is assigned on the judgment refusing to sustain plaintiff's motion to strike the company's defenses.

1. The law applicable to the filing of answers in the city court (Code 1882, § 4926) provides that: "The defendant shall file his answer in writing, on or before the opening of the court, at the return term of the suit, and the pleadings shall conform to the general law of the state. In case of default, the same shall be noted on the docket; and in such case, the plaintiff shall be entitled to proceed ex parte and establish his demand, upon proof thereof, at such return term." It is further provided, in section 4983 of the Code of 1882, that: "The judge of said court may make rules of practice for the same, not in conflict with the general laws of the state; and, in all cases of fees to officers where such general laws do not strictly apply, he may, by rule or order of court, fix such fees by analogy to the general law." The following rules of practice were adopted by the court at the February term, 1890, on the authority of the last-quoted section: "On the first day of the term the entire docket will be called. Cases in which no appearance is made shall be in default and so marked, and plaintiffs shall be at liberty to proceed ex parte after the first day if no appearance has been entered or answer filed during the first day." "Except new cases and those assigned under rule three, all cases called on the first day shall be subject to assignment for trial." "New cases shall be called for assignment on the second Monday of the term, and defendants shall have until such call to file answer in all cases where an appearance has been entered during the first day of the term." Plaintiff in error maintains that the rule promulgated by the judge providing the time the answer may be filed is void, because it is inconsistent with section 4926 of the Code of 1882 and the general law on the subject. Section 4926 of the Code is mandatory that a written answer shall be filed on or before the opening of the court at the return term of the suit. It would be an unwarranted construction to extend the meaning of the words "opening of the court" to include any other day except the first day of the term. If the plea could be filed after the first day of the term, it could be filed on the last day, as well as on any intermediate day. To give any other construction to this statute would be to deprive it of a definite meaning in this regard.

A failure to file the answer on the first day of the term would entitle the plaintiff to have the case noted on the docket as in default, and to proceed ex parte as provided by this section. Apparently recognizing the validity of the rules of practice prepared by the bar and promulgated by the judge, the plaintiff, without urging any objection that the demurrer and answer were filed too late, went to trial on the demurrer, and amended her petition to conform with the judgment on the demurrer. When the case was up for a hearing on the demurrer, the plaintiff ought to have urged her motion to strike the demurrer and plea because they were filed too late. Instead of taking advantage of defendant's failure to answer on the first day of the term, she invoked a ruling of the court on the merits of the demurrer, and complied with the terms of the judgment sustaining the demurrer, and allowed several months to pass before filing a motion to strike the company's defense and declare a default. The plaintiff will be presumed from her conduct to have waived her right to insist upon her motion at such a late day. Pedrick v. McGill, 80 Ga. 491, 5 S. E. 633; Cook v. Childers, 94 Ga. 718, 19 S. E. 819.

2. It was further contended that the amendment was material, and the allowance of the same opened the default, if any existed. The entire policy was added to the petition by amendment. The policy embraced many stipulations in the body of it above the signatures of the company's officers. These stipulations were not set out in the declaration. "While it was not essential to the validity of an action upon an insurance policy * * * to set out or attach a full copy of all which was written or printed upon such policy, the declaration ought to have contained or had attached thereto a copy of everything appearing upon the face and in the body of the policy, including all the stipulations embraced in that portion of the same above the signatures of the company's officers by whom it was executed." Southern Mutual Ins. Co. v. Turnley, 100 Ga. 296 (2), 27 S. E. 975. Some of these stipulations provided for compliance with conditions precedent to bringing suit. The amendment was of a substantial character; it gave a new phase to the case, and was of such materiality that its allowance permitted the filing of a plea to the matter alleged by way of amendment. Considering the case as in default, the allowance of a material amendment opens the case for answer by defendant. Calhoun v. Mosley, 114 Ga. 641, 40 S. E. 714. The court, therefore, properly overruled the motion to strike the pleadings of the defendant and enter judgment as in case of default.

3. The evidence on the main trial was substantially as follows: The policy of insurance was issued to Lewis Lippman on February 27, 1901. Among other stipulations in the body of the policy was the following:

"This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if the insured now has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy." On October 22, 1901, Lippman assigned his interest in the policy to his wife, Mrs. Emma Lippman, the company consenting to this transfer. On December 23, 1901, a fire occurred on the premises described in the policy, and considerable property belonging to Mrs. Lippman was destroyed. Proofs of loss were submitted to the insurance company on January 10, 1902. These proofs of loss, which were signed by Mrs. Lippman, contained the following statement: "At the time of the fire * * * there was outstanding against said property insurance under the following companies, * * * to-wit: The Liverpool, London & Globe Insurance Company of Liverpool, England, Policy Number 5892, $1000.00, issued November 17, 1899; Hartford Fire Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., Policy Number 8201, $2,500.00, issued November 17, 1899; The Citizens Insurance Company of Missouri, Policy Number 186,777, $2,500.00, issued June 14, 1901. All of said companies are represented by agents in the City of Savannah, Ga." The firm of W. L. Wilson & Co. represented the Aetna Insurance Company, and, acting in its behalf, sent to Mrs. Lippman a letter, dated December 31, 1901, saying therein: "This is to advise you that the Aetna Insurance Co. of Hartford wishes to cancel its policy #6304, covering on your furniture, etc., and that the said policy will be canceled under its terms and conditions on January 5, 1902, thus giving you five days in which to replace the same. This cancellation is subject to the payment of any damage sustained by you by fire on Dec. 23, 1901, which has been appraised at $900.00 with total contributing of insurance of $7500.00, making this Co.'s liability $180.00, which it stands ready to pay, making the return figure pro rata to you $1.63, which we will hand you on demand or on receipt of proper receipt which we will furnish you." The trial judge, on motion of the defendant, nonsuited the plaintiff. The motion for nonsuit was predicated on the ground that at the time the policy sued on was issued there were two other policies on the same property, and one was issued thereafter, and that there was no proof of the company's assent to this additional insurance. The plaintiff contended in the court below, and contends here, that the evidence showed a waiver of the forfeiture resulting from the additional insurance without the company's assent. The evidence of waiver relied on was the letter from W. L. Wilson & Co. to Mrs. Emma Lippman, dated December 31, 1901, appearing in the foregoing synopsis of the evidence. The forfeiture had already occurred when this letter was written; the policy by its own terms was void. In Graham v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 106 Ga. 840, 32 S. E. 579, it was questioned whether, by the most formal acts of the governing body of the corporation, a waiver of a forfeiture happening before the waiver would be binding on the company. Certainly it can be said that a local agent, whose authority is to receive proposals for insurance and to make insurance by policies signed by the president and secretary of the insurance company and countersigned by himself as local agent, has no power to waive a forfeiture. Graham v. Ins. Co., supra; Underwriters' Agency v. Sutherland, 55 Ga. 266; Farmers' Mutual Ins. Ass'n v. Price, 112 Ga. 267, 37 S. E. 427. When there is a forfeiture, the contract of insurance is at an end, and to revive it would require express authority from the company. The letter was in the nature of an offer of compromise. Treating it as an express recognition of the company's liability for a certain amount, and of the binding force of the policy at that time, it cannot bind the company unless the agent had authority to make such admissions, and to waive the forfeiture, so as to restore validity to the insurance contract. It does not appear that he had such authority. The burden is on the plaintiff, when he relies on the act of an agent to bind the principal, to show the agent's authority. The contract of insurance having been invalidated by taking concurrent insurance without permission, and the agent having no authority to waive this provision of the policy, the judgment awarding the nonsuit was right.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 226)

BERENDT v. RIPPS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

JUDGMENT—MOTION TO OPEN—PLEA.

1. In a suit upon an absolute and unconditional promissory note, the court, in the absence of an issuable plea filed under oath, rendered an absolute judgment for the plaintiff, agreeing at the time, however, to open the judgment if the defendant would, within 10 days thereafter, file "a sufficient answer in law to said suit," and within the time the defendant filed a plea which sought to vary the terms of the note by ingrafting upon it a condition made by a parol, contemporaneous agreement, and thereupon moved to open the judgment. Held, that there was no error in refusing to grant the motion. Civ. Code 1895, § 3875, par. 1.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by Max Ripps against I. Berendt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Boyd and Twiggs & Oliver, for plaintiff in error.

FISH, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(135 N. C. 425)

WEEKS et al. v. QUINN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1904.)

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—STATUTES—FAILURE OF LINEAL DESCENDANTS—DESCENT TO MOTHER.

1. Rev. St. c. 38, in the fourth canon of descent, provides that on a failure of lineal descendants, where the inheritance has been transmitted by descent, the inheritance shall descend to the next collateral relations of the person last seised, who were of the blood of the ancestor; but a proviso to the sixth rule provides that, in all cases where the person last seised shall have left no issue nor brother nor sister nor issue of such, the inheritance shall vest in the father, if living, and, if not, then in the mother. Held, that where one was survived by his daughter and widow, and the daughter inherited land from him and died before her mother, the widow, the mother inherited the estate, and, on her death, her heirs were entitled to the land as against the heirs of the father.

2. It was immaterial whether the widow or daughter had been in possession of the land; the statute of descents, rule 12 (Code 1883, § 1281), declaring that every person in whom a seisin is required by any of the provisions of the chapter shall be deemed to have been seised, if he may have any right, title, or interest in the inheritance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; B. F. Long, Judge.

Suit by J. D. Weeks and others against J. H. Quinn. From a judgment in favor of defendant, complainants appeal. Affirmed.

Eaves & Rucker and Morrow & Smith, for appellants. Quinn & Hamrick, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. Under the common law, the fifth of the rules or canons of inheritance was that, on failure of lineal descendants or issue of the person last seised, the inheritance shall descend to his collateral relations being of the blood of the first purchaser; and rule 1 was an inflexible one that inheritance should never lineally ascend. By our statute of 1808, c. 739 (Rev. St. c. 38, rules 4 and 6; Code 1883, § 1281), changes were made in respect to those two rules of descent under the common law. The fourth canon of descent in chapter 38 of the Revised Statutes provides that on failure of lineal descendants, where the inheritance has been transmitted by descent, the inheritance shall descend to the next collateral relations of the person last seised who were of the blood of such ancestor; and in rule 6 there is a general provision that where the person last seised shall have left no issue nor brother nor sister nor the issue of such, the inheritance shall vest for life only in the parents of the intestate, or in either of them, if one only be living, and, on the death of the parents, then to the survivor, and afterwards be transmitted according to the preceding rules. That proviso was amended, as appears in the Revised Code, so as to vest the inheritance absolutely in the father if living, and, if not, then in the mother, if living, whether of the blood of the ancestor from whom the land descended or not. That is the law as it is now written in the Code in the proviso in rule 6 of the chapter on descents.

The very question now before us is that which was before the court in the case of McMichal v. Moore, 56 N. C. 471, and the same principle is decided in Kincald v. Beatty, 98 N. C. 340, 4 S. E. 524, and Early v. Early (at this term) 46 S. E. 503. The court, in McMichal v. Moore, said: "This general provision in favor of the father and mother expressly departs from the principle of keeping the inheritance in the blood of the first purchaser, which for feudal reasons was strictly adhered to by the common law, and which is retained in our statutes in regard to collateral relations, except for the purpose of preventing an escheat. The parents are by the statute looked upon as lineal relations in the ascending line, and in respect to them the common-law principle is put entirely out of the way. Under the statute now in force, the inheritance vests absolutely in the father, if living, although he is not of the blood of the ancestor from whom the land descended. No words could make the intention of the lawmakers plainer than those used. In Rev. St. c. 38, the provision was that in such cases the inheritance should vest in the parents for life only, with the right of survivorship; as amended, the inheritance vests in the father, if living, absolutely; but in both statutes there is the same disregard of the blood of the first purchaser or ancestor from whom the land descended."

In the case before us, submitted under section 567 of the Code, it appears that William Weeks died intestate in 1901, seised and possessed of the lands described in the case submitted, leaving a widow, Alpha, and a daughter, Willie Belle. The daughter died in the lifetime of the mother, Alpha. The defendant J. H. Quinn qualified as administrator of Alpha, the widow of William Weeks, who had after his death intermarried with one Butler, and has commenced a special proceeding in the superior court of Rutherford county to subject the land and assets to pay the debts, and for partition among the heirs at law of his intestate, Mrs. Butler. The action was commenced by the plaintiffs, who are the heirs at law of William Weeks, from whom the land descended to his daughter, Willie Belle Weeks, and the defendants (besides Quinn, the administrator) are the next of kin of Mrs. Butler, formerly the widow of William Weeks.

As we have already said, the case of McMichal v. Moore, supra, is controlling here. Willie Belle, the daughter of the intestate, William Weeks, by the death of her father and the inheritance being cast upon her by the event, became the propositus or stock from whom the inheritance lineally ascended to her mother. It is immaterial who was in the actual possession of the land—whether Willie Belle, the daughter, or Alpha, the mother—for the reason that by rule 12 of the chapter on descents in the Code it is declared that "every person in whom a seisin is required by any of the provisions of this chapter shall be deemed to have been seized, if he may have any right, title or interest in the inheritance." The court below gave judgment that the defendants are the owners of the land, and that they recover possession thereof. There is no error in that ruling.

Affirmed.

(135 N. C. 504)

BOWERS v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES—DELIVERY OF MESSAGE—DELAY—DAMAGES—MENTAL ANGUISH.

1. A telegraph message, signed by plaintiff's mother, directing him to "come at once," was delayed in transmission by the telegraph company, so that plaintiff missed the train on which he might have gone to his mother, and the next train which he took did not make connection, so that plaintiff, in order to hasten his arrival, walked nine miles. His mother was not seriously ill when the message was sent, but wished to see plaintiff on business. Held, that it was plaintiff's own misapprehension which caused him any mental anguish he might have suffered, and not the negligence of the telegraph company.

2. Recovery may be had for mental anguish occasioned by the negligence of another.

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by De Witt Bowers against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. H. Busbee & Son, for appellant. J. C. Biggs and Boone & Reade, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The plaintiff's mother, Lucy Bowers, sent him the following message: "Come at once. Lucy Bowers." This was given to the telegraph operator at Apex, N. C., soon after 8 a. m., and was delayed in transmission so that it was not delivered to the plaintiff at Durham, N. C., till 11:50 a. m., and after the east-bound train had passed Durham at 9:40 a. m., by which he might have gone to his mother. He left on the afternoon train, but, that train not making connection at Cary, the plaintiff got off at Morisville, and walked nine miles to his mother's. His mother had been unwell, but was not sick enough to have a doctor; and this message was sent, not because of illness, but because she wished to see her son on business.

The defendant was derelict in taking nearly four hours to transmit a message from Apex to Durham, and, nothing else appearing, the sender might recover back, if she demanded and was refused, the 25 cents which was paid by her to secure its prompt transmission, for which purpose telegraph companies are granted charters to serve the public convenience. Kennon v. Tel. Co., 128 N. C. 232, 35 S. E. 408. But we see no ground to authorize a recovery by the plaintiff for mental anguish. His mother was not dead, nor at the point of death. He knew that, because her name was signed to the dispatch. It was his own misapprehension which caused him any uneasiness, and not the negligence and delay of the defendant. He was not deprived by such delay of the opportunity of seeing his mother, who, indeed, is still alive. Mental anguish is as real as physical, and recovery in proper cases is allowed of just compensation when anguish, whether physical or mental, is caused by the negligence, default, or wrongful act of another. The difficulty of measuring compensation does not bar a recovery for physical anguish, nor when the anguish is mental. But if the plaintiff suffered any mental anguish in this case, it was not caused by the negligence of the defendant. In refusing to so instruct the jury at the request of the defendant, there was error.

The learned counsel for the defendant informs us that more actions for mental anguish are brought in this state than in any other than Texas. This is not in the record, but, if correct, the courts have cause to complain of the additional burden; but counsel certainly do not lose anything thereby, and are in no wise to be held responsible for it. The defendant is responsible for any loss in such litigation, for it can effectually prevent recovery in any action by the discharge of its duty in the prompt delivery of telegrams—especially of those whose tenor indicates that either mental anguish or pecuniary loss will be the probable result of a delay in transmission or delivery.

Error.

MONTGOMERY, WALKER, and CONNOR, JJ., concur in result.

(135 N. C. 443, 504)

ALLRED et al. v. SMITH et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 17, 1904.)

JUDGMENTS—ESTOPPEL—PERSONS CONCLUDED—PARTIES AND PRIVIES—TENANTS IN COMMON—ERROR—FOR WHOM AVAILABLE—CANCELLATION OF DEEDS—NATURE AND EFFECT OF JUDGMENT—PRACTION—APPEALS FROM CLERK—EFFECT OF DECISION.

1. The deed of a person of unsound mind, not under guardianship, is merely voidable, and not void, and it conveys the title to the land, so that no estate passes to the heirs at law, but merely a right of action to attack the deed.

2. An estoppel by judgment must be mutual. It binds only parties and privies, and one who is neither can no more take advantage of the estoppel, as against the party on whom it operates, than he can be bound thereby.

3. Tenants in common are not privies, but their titles are distinct, and they may not take advantage by way of estoppel of a judgment obtained by a co-tenant suing alone, which set aside a deed executed by their common ancestor for want of mental capacity on her part to execute it.

4. A judgment setting aside a deed is not one in rem settling the status of the deed as to all the world, but merely operates on the title conveyed by the deed as between the parties to the suit in which the judgment is rendered.

5. Judgments quasi in rem bind the parties only.

6. A tenant in common, who was not a party to a suit brought by a co-tenant to set aside a deed executed by their common ancestor to defendant in that suit, cannot take advantage of an error in the judgment rendered therein.

7. Parties claiming rights in property by virtue of a judgment should set up the entire record in the suit in which the judgment was rendered, in order to enable the court to see what was in litigation and what adjudged.

8. Under Code, §§ 264, 255, providing for appeals from the clerk to a judge of the superior court, the decision of the question by the judge, and the transmission of his decision to the clerk, after notice of which the parties may proceed as provided by law, a decision of the judge on reversing a ruling of the clerk sustaining a demurrer is not a final judgment, but operates to remand the case, so far as it is before the judge, to the clerk.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Randolph County; Long, Judge.

Proceedings for partition by B. M. Allred and others against H. D. Smith and others. From a judgment reversing a judgment of the clerk of the superior court sustaining a demurrer to the answer, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Nancy Allred was the owner of the land in controversy, all parties to the land claiming title under her. She died leaving the plaintiffs and defendants her heirs at law. Prior to her death she executed a deed for the land in controversy to the defendant G. D. Allred. The plaintiff Willie Allred, after the death of her mother, instituted an action in the superior court against the defendant G. D. Allred, alleging that at the time of the execution of said deed the said Nancy Allred did not have sufficient mental capacity to execute the same; that she did not assume to sue for or in behalf of any children heirs at law of said Nancy Allred. At July term, 1903, the cause came to trial, and upon an issue submitted to the jury it was found that the said Nancy Allred did not have the sufficient mental capacity to execute the said deed, and it was "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the deed described in the complaint, and which is recorded in Book 99, p. 310, in the office of the register of deeds of Randolph county, and which purports to convey the land described therein from Nancy Allred to the defendant G. D. Allred, is void, and of no effect; and it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said deed be delivered up and canceled of record; and it is further ordered that the clerk of this court certify a copy of this judgment to the register of deeds of Randolph county to the end that the same may be registered in the office of the register of deeds for said county." From this judgment no appeal was taken. The plaintiffs instituted this proceeding for partition, and alleged that they and the defendants are each entitled to one-ninth undivided interest of said land as heirs at law of Nancy Allred. The defendant G. D. Allred says that he is entitled to eight-ninths undivided interest in said land by virtue of the deed from Nancy Allred to himself. He admits that by virtue of the judgment in the case of Willie Allred against himself she is entitled to one-ninth interest therein. The facts in regard to the execution of the deeds and a copy of the judgment are fully set out in the answer. The plaintiffs demurred to the answer for that it appeared upon the face of the complaint that the said deed under which the defendant G. D. Allred claimed had been declared void and canceled. The clerk sustained the demurrer, and directed a sale of the land for partition, to which judgment the defendant excepted, and appealed to the judge. Upon the said appeal the judge of the district reversed the judgment of the clerk and overruled the demurrer, adjudging: "Upon the record now before the court, the court adjudges that Willie Allred and G. Dallas Allred are tenants in common in the lands described in the petition, the said Willie entitled to one-ninth and G. Dallas to eight-ninths, and the judgment of the clerk to this extent is reversed and modified." From this judgment the plaintiffs other than Willie Allred appealed.

Oscar L. Sapp, for appellants. Robbins & Robbins and Hammer & Spence, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. The deed from Nancy Allred to the defendant G. D. Allred conveyed to him the title to the land in controversy. If she was non compos at the time of its execution, the deed was voidable, not void. "The deed of a person of unsound mind, not under guardianship, conveys the seisin." Odom v. Riddick, 104 N. C. 515, 10 S. E. 609, 7 L. R. A. 118, 17 Am. St. Rep. 686. At her death no estate passed to her heirs at law. They had a right of action, and were entitled, either jointly or severally, to attack the deed in so far as it affected their rights. Only one of them did so. It is alleged, and the demurrer admits, that she "did not assume to sue for or in behalf of any of the other children." As the basis of her right to sue she alleged that she was an heir of Nancy Allred. This was admitted. The only issue submitted to the jury was directed to the mental capacity of the grantor. The facts appearing upon the pleadings before us are that Nancy executed the deed; that Willie brought the action to set it aside so that she might inherit her share of the land conveyed; that she prosecuted her action successfully, and has the fruits of her victory—one-ninth undivided interest in the land. The brothers and sisters seek to avail themselves of the verdict and judgment in that case to vest title in themselves and to estop the defendant G. D. Allred from claiming any right to or title in the land under the deed. They are not parties to the action. The defendant does not seek to use the judgment as an estoppel, or to attack it. He concedes that as against the plaintiff Willie, in respect to her one-ninth, he is estopped. She claims no more. The parties to the action are content to abide its result. When the other plaintiffs, strangers to the action, and, as we shall see, not privies, seek to take title under the judgment, or to estop him from denying that they have title, he simply relies upon the well-established principle that "estoppels must be mutual, and bind only parties and privies. One who is not bound by an estoppel cannot take advantage of it." For this position he relies upon the numerous decisions of this court and the uniform current of authority from the time of Coke to this day. Pearson, O. J., in Griffin v. Richardson, 33 N. C. 439, so declares the law. Also in Falls v. Gamble, 66 N. C. 455; Ray v. Gardner, 82 N. C. 146; Bryan v. Malloy, 90 N. C. 508. In Peebles v. Pate, 90 N. C. 348, it is said: "Every estoppel must be reciprocal. It must bind both parties. A stranger can neither take advantage of it nor be bound by it." Temple v. Williams, 91 N. C. 82. Mr. Starkie says: "When the parties are not the same, one who would not have been prejudiced by the verdict cannot afterwards make use of it, for between him and a party to such verdict the matter is res novo, although his title turn upon the same point." Starkie on Ev. 332. "Judgments and decrees are conclusive evidence of facts only as between parties and privies to the litigation. And in case of former adjudication set up in defense it is no bar unless the parties to the first judgment are the same as those to the second proceeding. On the principle that estoppels must be mutual, no person can take advantage of a former judgment or decree as decisive in his favor of a matter in controversy, unless, being a party or privy thereto, he would have been prejudiced by it had the decision been the other way." Black on Judgments, § 534. We cannot more accurately state the principles underlying the doctrine of estoppel of record than by using the language of Pearson, J., in Armfield v. Moore, 44 N. C. 157: "According to My Lord Coke, an estoppel is that which 'shuts a man's mouth from speaking the truth.' With this forbidding introduction a principle is announced which lies at the foundation of all fair dealing between man and man, and without which it would be impossible to administer law as a system. The harsh words which the very learned commentator upon Littleton uses in giving a definition of this principle are to be attributed to the fact that before his day 'the scholastic learning and subtle disquisition of the Norman lawyers (in the language of Blackstone) had tortured this principle so as to make it the means of great injustice; and the object of My Lord Coke was to denounce the abuse which he says had got to be "a very cunning and curious learning," and "was odious," and thereby restore the principle and make it subserve its true purpose as a plain, practical, fair, and necessary rule of law.' Estoppels must be mutual; that is, if one side is bound, the other must be. It only includes parties and privies, and does not extend to a stranger." Coke, Litt. 252d.

It is well settled that tenants in common are not privies. They do not claim under each other. They may claim their several titles and interests from entirely different sources. In this respect they differ from joint tenants and coparceners. "Tenants in common are they which have lands or tenements in fee simple, fee tail, or for terms of life, etc., and they have such lands or tenements by several titles, and not by a joint title; and none of them know of this several, but they ought by law to occupy these lands or tenements in common." Coke, Litt. 292. "It is therefore sufficient description of tenants in common that they are persons who hold by unity of possession." Kent, Com. 367. They may claim by deed, devise, or descent. In either case they are deemed to have several and distinct freeholds; "that being a leading characteristic of tenancy in common." "Each tenant is considered solely or severally seised of his land." Kent, Com. 368. They can in no proper or legal sense be called privies, because it is said: "In the law of estoppels 'privity' signifies merely succession of rights; that is, the devolution in whole or in part of the rights and duties of one person upon another; * * * the derivation of rights by one person from and holding in subordination to those of another as in the case of a tenant. No one can be bound by or take advantage of the estoppel of another who does not succeed or hold subordinate to his position." Bigelow on Estoppel, 347; Black on Judgments, 549. That tenants in common are not privies, and are therefore not bound by judgments rendered in actions brought by one of their co-tenants respecting the common property, is illustrated by the cases in which it is held that they are competent witnesses for their co-tenant. Bennett v. Hethington, 16 Serg. & R. 198, was an action of ejectment for the recovery of possession of the land held by the plaintiff and the witness. The demise was made by the plaintiff alone. Gibson, C. J., after stating the principle that the interest which excluded a witness was not in the subject-matter of the action, but in the result or event of it, and that it was not necessary that all of tenants should join in the devise, said: "Here the plaintiff has elected to sue alone, and what would the witness get by his recovery? The possession of his freehold would not be restored, but for that he would have to bring a second action, in which the record in this would not be competent evidence." The same doctrine is held in Hammett v. Blount's Lessee, 1 Swan, 385. It is held by this court that a tenant in common may sue alone. Carson's Heirs v. Smart, 34 N. C. 369. And in the action of ejectment he would recover to the extent of his right. Holdfast v. Shepard, 28 N. C. 361. It was held in England and in many of the states of the Union that tenants in common could not make a joint demise; that to do so would be calculated to perplex the jury with the trial of a number of titles in one issue. White v. Pickering's Lessee, 12 Serg. & R. 435. In this case the court said: "There is no privity between the plaintiffs. The estate of each is distinct from the other, and they cannot join in a demise." For a discussion of this question, see Sedgwick & Wait on Trial, etc., 300, and cases cited. It was held by this court in Nixon's Heirs v. Potts, 8 N. C. 469, that they could join; the case being cited in Hoyle v. Stowe, 13 N. C. 318. Ruffin, C. J., said that it was held "contrary to the rule in England, which is that, as their title is several, their demise must also be several. Their demise may be joint, because, although they cannot jointly convey the land, they may jointly demise for years, since a demise for years is but a contract for possession, and their possession is joint." No question of estoppel arose, because "the judgment was not conclusive upon the title or right of property even between the parties. The action could be repeated, and the same question retried indefinitely, because there was no privity between the successive fictitious plaintiffs. * * * Each successive ejectment was founded upon a new lease, entry, and ouster." Sedgwick & Wait, § 42. The learning upon the subject is of interest since the abolition of the action of ejectment, with its fictions, only as showing the reason upon which the doctrine of this and some other courts permitting a joint demise was founded. The changes made by the Code system, by which the jury may, upon appropriate issues, ascertain and declare the interest or estate of each party, either plaintiff or defendant, cannot be extended to work a change in the law of estoppel by record, by which one tenant in common may be estopped in respect to his title by a judgment in an action to which he was not a party. Merrimon, J., says: "One tenant in common may sue in many cases without joining his co-tenant. Each has a separate and distinct freehold, and he may sue to recover possession when he has been disseised." Overcash v. Kitchie, 89 N. C. 384. It is true that, as against a trespasser having no title, a tenant in common suing alone will recover possession of the whole land. If the land belongs to the plaintiff and others in common, he has an undoubted right to expel an intruding trespasser and secure possession, his right being full and complete, although others have the same right. Yancey v. Greenlee, 90 N. C. 817; Brittain v. Daniels, 94 N. C. 781; Gilchrist v. Middleton, 107 N. C. 663, 12 S. E. 85. Because of this principle it does not follow that, if one tenant in common takes it upon himself to bring an action for the recovery of the common property, alleging title in himself or in himself and his co-tenants, and fails in his action, his co-tenants are thereby estopped. If this be the law, may we not think, with My Lord Coke, that by reason of "a curious and cunning learning" estoppels will become "odious?" This court has never so held. In Thames v. Jones, 97 N. C. 121, 1 S. E. 692, the court permitted the plaintiff to sue for the recovery of a tract of land "in behalf of himself and all other persons interested herein as plaintiffs." Davis, J., said: "As to how far the judgment may affect persons made parties under this order we express no opinion. But, independent of this, any one or more tenants in common may sue for the recovery of the possession of land." In Gilchrist v. Middleton, 107 N. C., at page 684, 12 S. E. 92, Avery, J., said: "One tenant in common may sue alone, and recover the entire interest (italics ours) in the common property as against another claiming adversely to his co-tenants as well as himself, though he actually prove title to an undivided interest. This he is allowed to do in order to protect the rights of his co-tenant against trespassers and disseisors." We think the learned justice inadvertently used the word "interest" instead of "possession." A careful examination of the authorities fails to disclose a single case in which this court has said that the plaintiff can put in issue his co-tenant's interest in the common tenement. The reason assigned by the learned justice shows that the "entire interest" was not in issue. When the plaintiff shows any interest in himself as against one having no interest, he recovers possession of the entire tenement, because he is entitled, as against a stranger, "to the possession of every part and parcel of the subject-matter of the tenancy." Freeman, § 87. When he secures such possession, it inures to the benefit of his co-tenants. The same justice had occasion to review the authorities in Foster v. Hackett, 112 N. C. 546, 17 S. E. 426. He says: "It is obvious, therefore, that one of several co-tenants, when he brings an action against a trespasser on the common property, and proves title of the other co-tenant in establishing his own, may, under the common-law practice in ejectment applied to actions for the possession of land, recover the whole, though he may claim sole seisin in his complaint in himself, just as he can do under the procedure prescribed in the Code (section 185) by alleging that the action is brought in behalf of himself and others having a common interest; though it has never been determined in this state how far, if at all, in the action under the provisions of the statute the co-tenants not actual parties would be concluded by the judgment." Allen v. Salinger, 103 N. C. 14, 8 S. E. 913; Lenoir v. Mining Co., 118 N. C. 513, 18 S. E. 73. In Winborne v. Lumber Co., 180 N. C. 32, 40 S. E. 825, Clark, J., says: "One tenant in common can recover the entire tract against a third party, for each tenant is entitled to possession of the whole except against a co-tenant." The correct principle is that in respect to the one unity—the possession—the acts of one tenant in common inure to the benefit of his co-tenant, as if an entry be made by one tenant. "As both have an equal right to the possession, the law presumes that if one only enters and takes the rents and profits he does this as well for his companion as for himself." Freeman, Co-Tenancy, § 166; Day v. Howard, 73 N. C. 1; Caldwell v. Neely, 81 N. C. 114; and many other cases in our Reports. So the possession, or the bringing an action for possession, by one repels the bar of the statute as to all. Locklear v. Bulard, 133 N. C. 260, 45 S. E. 580. In respect to title, interest, or estate to or in the common tenement they are strangers, and no act done by one can affect, inure to the benefit of, or injure the other. Each tenant has a right by reason of the unity, or the fealty which each owes the other, to rely upon his protection of the common possession. In respect to the title no act by one can affect the other; as, if one make a deed for the whole land, and the grantee go in possession, his possession is that of the co-tenant, and not adverse until the expiration of 20 years, when the law will presume an ouster. Cloud v. Webb, 14 N. C. 317; Page v. Branch, 97 N. C. 97, 1 S. E. 625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 231; Breden v. McLaurin, 98 N. C. 307, 4 S. E. 136; Ferguson v. Wright, 113 N. C. 537, 18 S. E. 691. It would be an anomaly in the law if one tenant in common could, by matter in pais, deed, or record, estop his co-tenant in respect to his title, in regard to which they are absolute strangers. Our researches, with the aid of the excellent briefs of counsel, do not disclose any authority or reported case in which a party has been permitted to rely upon a judgment as an estoppel to which he was not a party or a privy, or which makes any exception to the well-settled rule that estoppels must be mutual. Applying these principles to the record before us, we can have no doubt that his honor was correct in overruling the demurrer. If the action of Willie Allred against the defendant had resulted otherwise, we would not for a moment suppose that the plaintiffs other than Willie would be affected by it. Why they did not join her in the action is not suggested, nor are we to conjecture. For the purpose of testing the question, however, suppose that they had released their right of action to attack the deed, or that they were barred by the statute of limitations, or that they were of service to the plaintiff as witnesses—either of which reasons is consistent with the record—can it be that by absenting themselves from the action they can acquire title to property by an estoppel which they could not have acquired as parties to the action? If their contention be sound, the defendant is estopped as to them in the same manner and to the same extent as to Willie, the plaintiff. There is no suggestion that the judgment is competent as evidence. If of any efficacy, it is a complete bar, and "shuts the defendant's mouth to speak the truth." He has by estoppel lost the title to seven-ninths of a tract of land without having had an opportunity to defend it as against them. This would be to violate first principles, and introduce new and dangerous exceptions to the fundamental limitations of the law of estoppels. It would no longer be entitled to the indorsement of judges, and surely it would surprise the great chief justice who so ably defended it in Armfield v. Moore, supra.

The plaintiffs say that, conceding the law to be as we find it, the effect of the judgment is to cancel, avoid, and utterly destroy the deed; that it is "without legal efficacy, ineffectual to bind parties, or to convey or support a right." Am. & Eng. Enc. vol. 28, p. 473. The argument is ingenious, but will not bear inspection. It assumes the very question in issue. As to whom is it void? The parties to the action? Let us reverse the proposition: If the verdict and judgment had been that the deed was valid and effectual, could it be said that it was conclusively so as to the plaintiffs? The answer is obvious. The rule of the law is plain, fair, and necessary, and it is just. But they say the judgment is in rem, and settles the status of the deed. It is not the paper upon which the language of the law is written which vests the title. The court deals with the deed only as it affects title. This court has said that the record of a suit between A. and B. in which the validity of the assignment of a note was adjudged is no evidence of the validity of such assignment in an action between A. and B., the latter not being a party to the former suit. Swepson v. Harvey, 69 N. C. 387. The action clearly was not a proceeding in rem. If quasi in rem, the plaintiff is met with the difficulty that in such actions judgments are only binding between the parties. Black on Judgments, § 793. To the suggestion that plaintiff is attacking the judgment as being erroneous, it is sufficient to say that one not a party cannot take any advantage of an erroneous judgment. If Willie Allred was claiming the entire land because of the form of the judgment, the suggestion would have some apparent force.

There is another view of this case not adverted to. If the plaintiffs claim that they acquired certain rights of property under the judgment, they should have set up the entire record, to the end that the court could see what was in litigation and what was adjudged.

After a careful examination of the authorities and arguments, we think that the judgment of his honor should be affirmed. It is a mistake to say that his honor rendered final judgment. The case was not before the judge for judgment, but only to pass upon the appeal from the ruling of the clerk on the demurrer. Code, §§ 254, 255. His honor's ruling remanded the case, in so far as it was before him, to the clerk. As the case is in the court for further orders, the plaintiffs may, if so advised, ask for permission to reply to the answer. Let this be certified.

Affirmed.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). In a proceeding duly constituted in a court of competent jurisdiction, and in which the defendant G. Dallas Allred was defendant, the jury found that Nancy Allred was without sufficient mental capacity to execute the deed to G. Dallas Allred covering the land in question, and the court adjudged that said deed "from Nancy Allred to D. Dallas Allred is void and of no effect; and it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said deed be delivered up and canceled of record," with further judgment that the decree should be certified to the register of deeds to be recorded in his office. The deed being adjudged "void and of no effect," the title of the grantee thereunder absolutely ceased (Code, §§ 426-428), as fully as if a reconveyance had been executed and recorded. The proceeding was in the nature of an action to remove a cloud from the title, and the judgment acting upon title to property adjudging the conveyance to the defendant to the action to be null and void, and directing its cancellation, and the registration of the decree in the register's office, where the conveyance to the defendant had been recorded, such proceeding has been held, "though not strictly proceedings in rem, * * * yet they are regarded as proceedings in rem sub modo." Hence the judgment canceling the defendant's title rendered it invalid as to all the world, as is the case with all judgments in rem. The matter stands, therefore, as if the conveyance to G. Dallas Allred had never been made. He certainly is bound by the judgment. The decree renders the deed void ab initio; and, if void, it is void as to every one, especially as to the plaintiffs, who claim under Nancy Allred. The decree having directed the cancellation of the deed and the registration of the decree in the register's office, there is in contemplation of law no such conveyance in existence. The registration of the decree of cancellation was directed that purchasers from G. D. Allred should have notice that he could convey no title. He cannot now set up a title when a purchaser from him could not acquire title from him.

It matters not at whose instance, as plaintiff, such decree was rendered, or that it was at the instance of only one of several cotenants. It was rendered against the defendant. It binds him. Its effect was to declare that the title has never proceeded out of Nancy Allred, and to cancel the conveyance, and to strike the registration thereof off the register's books. It is not open, therefore, to the grantee in such deed to set it up as valid in this proceeding to partition the land, especially against the plaintiffs, who have acquired by descent all of Nancy Allred's title save the share which has descended to him. He holds that share by descent—the same title by which the plaintiffs hold theirs—and not under the void deed.

If in the proceeding to declare the deed void it had been held valid, this would have been a judgment in personam against Willie Allred, the plaintiff therein, and would not bind the other plaintiffs herein, because they do not claim under Willie Allred. But the judgment declaring the deed void and directing its cancellation acts quasi in rem sub modo upon the title which it sets aside, and is binding upon G. D. Allred, who is the same defendant, and who in this action attempts to set up the same title which, as against him, has been declared void. Further, being a decree quasi in rem sub modo, it is binding upon all who might claim under G. D. Allred. The decree of cancellation, registered as decreed, is notice to all the world. Code, §§ 426-428.

Closely analogous is the case where in an application of a railroad company to acquire the right to use the track of another company for purposes of its business the applicant was held concluded by a former adjudication against its corporate existence, rendered in a former proceeding by the same plaintiff for the same purpose against another railroad company (In re Brooklyn Railroad, 19 Hun, 814), and a determination that a creditor is entitled to share in a fund (Eppright v. Kauffman, 90 Mo. 25, 1 S. W. 736). The adjudication here that the deed is void is a judgment upon the rem, upon the status of the title, denying G. D. Allred's interest thereunder, and is conclusive upon him whenever and wherever thereafter he sets up title in himself under the deed which has been adjudged void and directed to be canceled. The principle is res judicata, and not strictly matter in estoppel. 24 Am. & Eng. (2d Ed.) 712. The judgment setting aside the deed to G. D. Allred as void inured to the benefit of the other plaintiffs, as cotenants, who became thereupon beneficiaries under and privies to the decree which canceled the deed. The legal consequence of the judgment declaring the deed void as to G. D. Allred can be availed of by strangers to the action. 11 Am. & Eng. (2d Ed.) 391. The judgment is also admissible, even if between strangers, as a link in the plaintiff's title, since it cancels the cloud cast upon it by the deed from Nancy Allred to G. D. Allred (24 Am. & Eng. 757); especially when, as here, the decree is a decree in chancery (Id. 758, and cases cited in note 2).

It was error certainly to render final judgment upon overruling the demurrer, unless it was found that the demurrer had not been "interposed in good faith." Code, § 272; Moore v. Hobbs, 77 N. C. 65; Bronson v. Ins. Co., 85 N. C. 411.

The deed was voidable; i. e., valid till declared void by the court. Odom v. Riddick, 104 N. C. 515, 10 S. E. 609, 7 L. R. A. 113, 17 Am. St. Rep. 686. But when adjudged void, and directed to be canceled, it ceased to be voidable, and became absolutely void. No conveyance had been made to third parties by G. D. Allred prior to such decree. A conveyance by him thereafter would be void, and certainly no title remained in him when he could convey none.

(135 N. C. 501)

GARSEED v. STERNBERGER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

CONTRACTS—FUTURES—ILLEGALITY.

1. Where plaintiff bought cotton "futures" for the defendant and suffered loss, he cannot maintain an action for reimbursement, since the transaction is illegal, especially under Laws 1889, pp. 233, 234, c. 221, §§ 1, 3, 4, prohibiting all dealings in "future" contracts in which there is not a bona fide purchase for future delivery, but which contemplate payment of the difference in price, and providing that no action may be maintained on account of any such contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by H. T. Garseed against H. Sternberger. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence and dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. N. Staples, for appellant. J. A. Long and J. E. Long, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The defendant, desiring to engage in buying cotton "futures" without being known, requested the plaintiff to buy them for him through the plaintiff's own broker in New York. Both the plaintiff and defendant lived in Greensboro, N. C. The defendant agreed to furnish all the money necessary for these transactions, and to guaranty the plaintiff against loss. Several of these transactions occurred, the defendant using the plaintiff's name, with his consent, and the orders being sent direct by the defendant to the plaintiff's brokers. After several such transactions, in this particular one the defendant gave the plaintiff a check for $500, and told him he was going to buy 500 bales "June cotton." The defendant sent his instructions direct to the plaintiff's brokers. There was a loss of $628.28 on this contract being closed out, which the New York brokers charged up to the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon called upon the defendant to reimburse him the amount ($128.28) in excess of the sum of $500 which had been handed him by the defendant. The defendant did not, after the loss, request the plaintiff to pay the $128.28, nor promise, after such loss, to reimburse the plaintiff, but, on the contrary, denied liability, alleging that the loss was caused by the failure of the plaintiff's brokers to obey instructions. The plaintiff began this action before a justice of the peace to recover the said sum of $128.52, as money paid to the defendant's use. The defendant pleaded that, the transaction being illegal, the plaintiff could not recover. Upon the plaintiff's testimony, as above, the defendant demurred to the evidence. The court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. In this there was no error.

In Clark on Contracts, 501, it is said: "If a broker or other agent is employed to carry out an illegal transaction, and is privy to the unlawful design, and by virtue of his employment performs services, makes disbursements, suffers losses, or incurs liabilities, he has no remedy against his principal"—citing Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 110 (where the cases are collected); Harvey v. Merrill, 150 Mass. 1, 22 N. E. 49, 5 L. R. A. 200, 15 Am. St. Rep. 159; Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 896, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979; and numerous other cases; saying further: "Not only is this true, but it has been held that any express promise made by the principal to reimburse him is void"—citing Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 336, 9 Sup. Ct. 776, 33 L. Ed. 172, Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195, 20 N. E. 203, and Everingham v. Melghan, 55 Wis. 354, 18 N. W. 269, which sustain the text. But if there could be any doubt on this proposition, our chapter 221, p. 233, Laws 1889, "to suppress and prevent certain kinds of vicious contracts," puts the matter beyond controversy. Section 1 is very elaborate, and forbids all classes and kinds of dealings in "future" contracts, in which, as in this case, the transaction is not a bona fide purchase of commodities for actual future delivery, but contemplates a payment or receipt of the difference in the price at the time of delivery from that named in the contract, and provides that no party "or agent of such party, directly or remotely connected with such contract in any way whatever, shall have or maintain any cause of action on account of any money or other thing of value paid, advanced or hypothecated by him, in connection with or on account of such contract or agency." Section 8 (page 234) provides that every person who is a party to any such contract, "and every person who shall be the agent, directly or indirectly, of any such party in making, or furthering, or effectuating the same * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction in the superior court shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500 and may be imprisoned in the discretion of the court." And section 4 visits with like punishment every person who in this state shall "do any act or aid in any way in this state in the making or furthering such contract so made in another state."

No error.

(135 N. C. 542)

CRITCHER v. PORTER-McNEAL CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1904.)

SALE OF MACHINERY—BREACH OF WARRANTY—DAMAGES—SPECIAL DAMAGES.

1. In the absence of special circumstances, the measure of damages for breach of warranty as to the quality or capacity of machinery sold is the difference between the contract price and the actual value.

2. Plaintiff contracted with defendant for the purchase of an engine of a certain make, size, and capacity. He accepted another kind of an engine, with a guaranty on defendant's part that it would develop the capacity of the one contracted for, or that defendant would make it do so. Held, that plaintiff, after giving defendant a reasonable opportunity to make good the guaranty, had the right to reject the engine on its failure to come up to the guaranty, and his measure of damages would then be the amount paid, and such special damages sustained as was within the contemplation of the parties, subject to be reduced by a fair rent of the engine while in use, or he might accept it, and recover the difference between the contract price and its real value, with special damage, subject to the same deduction.

3. Where one contracted to sell an engine of a certain make, size, and capacity, with knowledge that it was to be used to run a sawmill, and furnished an engine of another size under a guaranty that the latter would develop the capacity of the engine contracted for, the guaranty must be construed as a warranty that the engine furnished would develop for the particular use the same power as the engine contracted for.

4. In an action for damages for breach of warranty on the sale of an engine to run a sawmill, plaintiff cannot recover as damages the loss of profits resulting from his inability to perform contracts for the sale of the output of the mill, in the absence of knowledge on the part of defendant that plaintiff had made such contracts.

5. Where, in an action for damages for breach of warranty on the sale of an engine to run a sawmill, plaintiff did not offer to show that he had logs on hand sufficient to run the mill any given number of days, or for what time contracts for the sale of the output extended, the exclusion of evidence showing that at the time of the purchase of the engine he had contracted for the sale of the output of the mill was not erroneous.

6. In an action for breach of warranty on the sale of an engine for use in a sawmill, under a guaranty that it will develop a certain horse power, or that defendant will make it do so, plaintiff is entitled to recover expenses incurred in running the mill, at defendant's request, to enable him to make the engine develop the designated horse power.

7. In an action for breach of warranty on the sale of an engine for use in a sawmill, plaintiff is entitled to interest on the amount invested in the mill for the time it was idle.

Appeal from Superior Court, Martin County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by Roger Critcher against the Porter-McNeal Company and others. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

The plaintiff alleged: That he contracted with the defendants for the purchase of an Erie City, 25 horse power, 10x12, horizontal center crank engine, together with other machinery for the equipment and operation of a sawmill, at the agreed price of $1,150, to be paid partly in cash, and the balance in several installments, for which he was to execute his promissory notes, secured by a deed in trust. The deed sent to the plaintiff for execution described the engine as "one 25 H. P. 9x12, horizontal center crank engine." Plaintiff wrote defendants, calling attention to the fact that the engine was described in the deed as 9x12, while he had contracted for one 10x12, and for that reason declined to execute the notes and deed. That defendants, in reply, wrote that they would guaranty that the engine described, and which they would send, "would develop 25 H. Power and be plenty large to operate" plaintiff's mill. That plaintiff, relying on said guaranty, before the engine arrived, signed the deed in trust and notes, and sent them to defendants, with the cash payment of $400. That after the engine was put up it was found that it would not cut the logs, wanting power to do so. The plaintiff complained to defendants, and they urged him to continue to use the engine, and the trouble would disappear. That defendants urged that the oil used by plaintiff was not of good quality. That, after giving defendants full opportunity to make good their guaranty, they having failed to do so for nine months, plaintiff put the engine aside, and notified defendants that it was held subject to their order. Defendants thereupon advertised the property conveyed in the trust deed for sale. This action is brought for the purpose of enjoining the sale of the property, and to recover damages by way of recoupment, etc. The sale was enjoined. The defendants denied the material averments in the complaint.

The court, without objection, submitted the following issues:

"(1) Did the defendants guaranty that the engine sold to plaintiff would develop 25 horse power?" To which the jury answered, "Yes." "(2) Would the engine sold to plaintiff develop 25 horse power?" To which the jury answered, "No." The plaintiff's damages were fixed at $98. The balance found due the defendants on the note was fixed at $411, with interest, and subject to the $98 damage.

The plaintiff testified in regard to the contract and guaranty. He further testified that he signed the trust deed upon the faith of the guaranty. The engine was received about the 8th day of May, and was put up by experienced machinemen. From the beginning, plaintiff saw that it would not cut; found the trouble to be that it lacked power. It got worse all the time, and he continued to complain to the defendants. They sent a man out to examine it. He did not remedy it. Plaintiff, at the instance of defendants, sent engine to them at Norfolk. Was gone a week or 10 days. Shortly after its return, Mr. Hardy came again to overlook it. He did nothing to it. Plaintiff asked him how he could tell whether it would develop 25 horse power. He said, if it didn't cut a blind line with 80 pounds of pressure on fast speed, it would not develop 25 horse power. Plaintiff urged him to test it, but he declined. He said that plaintiff was not using proper oil. Gave him order for 25 gallons such as he recommended. The engine did no better with new oil. Plaintiff wrote to defendants frequently that they must do something to remedy the trouble. They continued to assure the plaintiff that it would improve, and they would remedy it. Plaintiff finally wrote defendants that, unless something was done at once to remedy the trouble, he would be obliged to put it aside and purchase another, which plaintiff finally did. Was trying to use it 9 or 10 months, relying upon the assurance of defendants that it would get all right, or they would remedy it. It was idle two-thirds of the time. It would never develop 25 horse power. Plaintiff testified: "I had been operating a mill previous to the time I made the contract with the defendants. Had between $1,200 and $1,500 invested in mill and other fixtures, and $1,500 to $2,000 additional in logs and team. Had five men engaged by the year in the service of the mill [giving amount of wages paid, etc.]. They were idle part of the time. In addition, I had drivers, loggers, and some men cutting logs in connection with the mill. The teams were idle when the mill was not running. I had commenced to cut logs for the mill before I contracted with the defendants. Had a quantity of logs on hand. I lost on account of the idleness of the mill." The plaintiff proposed to prove that, at the time of his contract with defendants, plaintiff had contracted with reliable parties for the sale of the output of his mill at a stipulated price, and that plaintiff was unable to comply with said contract on account of the failure of the defendants to furnish the engine contracted for. This evidence was offered upon the question of damages, and upon objection was excluded. Plaintiff excepted. The plaintiff further testified: That the engine which he got was afterwards priced by defendant Porter at $168. That a fair output of a 25 horse power engine was 6,000 to 8,000 feet a day. The engine furnished did not average over 1,500 feet a day. That the usual profits during the time the engine was in use was $1.50 per thousand feet, clear of expenses. He had a quantity of logs. On account of idleness of mill, between 12,000 and 20,000 feet were not hauled from the woods.

His honor instructed the jury in regard to the measure of damages as follows: "If you should find that the engine in question would not develop 25 horse power, then the measure of the damages which the plaintiff is entitled to recover is the difference between the price paid or agreed to be paid for the engine and the real or true value of the engine in fact sold and delivered to the plaintiff. There is no fixed price stipulated for the engine in the written contract between the parties. So you will inquire and ascertain from the evidence what was the price charged for the engine furnished the plaintiff, and subtract the real value of the engine furnished at the time it was received from the price charged; and the remainder is the measure of the plaintiff's damage in this case, if you should find the second issue in his favor." Plaintiff asked certain instructions which were refused, and to such refusal plaintiff excepted, and, from a judgment on the verdict, appealed.

Gilliam & Martin, for appellant. Harry W. Stubbs and H. S. Ward, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). The only question presented by the plaintiff's exceptions relates to the kind and measure of damages to which he is entitled upon the evidence and finding of the jury. It is well settled by all of the text-books and adjudged cases that, in the absence of any special conditions or special damage, the true measure of damages for breach of warranty as to the quality or capacity of machinery sold is the difference between the contract price and the actual value. Kester v. Miller, 119 N. C. 475, 26 S. E. 115; Mfg. Co. v. Gray, 126 N. C. 108, 35 S. E. 236. There are cases, however, to be found in our court and the courts of other states, in which, by reason of special and peculiar circumstances, other elements of loss enter, and may be recovered as damages. If the plaintiff had, immediately upon the receipt of the engine, ascertained that it did not develop 25 horse power, as warranted to do, rejected it, or, as he expresses it, "put it aside," notifying the defendant thereof, it is clear that he would have been entitled to recover the amount paid, and to a cancellation of his notes and the trust deed, together with such damage as he sustained, and which were within the contemplation of the parties, in his effort to use it. If he had retained and used it, his measure of damages would have been the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the engine, with such special damages as were within the contemplation of the parties. Joyce on Damages, § 1716. The question before us is, however, complicated by the fact that a contract collateral to the principal one was made by the parties. The plaintiff knew that the engine which he accepted, and for which he paid in cash and notes, was not the same which he contracted for. He accepted it with a contract of guaranty that it would develop 25 horse power, or that the defendant would make it do so. This contract was not performed on the part of the defendant, and for which breach of contract he claims damages. It was not contemplated that the engine should be returned until the defendants were given a reasonable time within which to make it develop 25 horse power. Therefore the rule usually applicable to breaches of warranty in the sale of machinery does not apply. We are of opinion that, after a reasonable opportunity given the defendants to make good the guaranty, the plaintiff had the right to reject the engine. If he had paid for it, he could have sued for damages; and it would seem that the measure of his recovery would be the amount paid, and such incidental or special damage as was within the contemplation of the parties, and as he had sustained, subject to be reduced by a fair rent of the engine while using it. If, instead of rejecting it, he retained the engine, he would recover the difference between the contract price and its real value, with special damage, subject to the same deduction. The courts find difficulty in defining and fixing the limits to what are termed "special damages." All authors and judges concur that the rule or principle to be followed is that laid down in the leading case of Headley v. Baxendale, Exch. 341: "When two parties make a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect to such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally—that is, according to the usual course of things—from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of the breach of it. Now, if the special circumstances under which the contract was actually made were communicated by the plaintiff to defendant, and thus known to both parties, the damages resulting from the breach of such a contract, which they would reasonably contemplate, would be the amount of injury which would ordinarily follow from a breach of contract under these special circumstances so known and communicated. But on the other hand, if these special circumstances were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, he, at most, could only be supposed to have had in his contemplation the amount of injury which would arise generally, and in a great multitude of cases, not affected by any special circumstances for such a breach of contract, for, had the special circumstances been known, the parties might have specially provided for the breach of contract by special terms as to the damages in that case, and of this advantage it would have been very unjust to have deprived them."

The judges concur in the principle, but find great difficulty in applying the rule to the evervarying cases which are presented for adjudication. Simple contracts of purchase, with warranty as to soundness or quality, are of easy solution; but when, by varying the original contract, either attaching new agreements or conditions, or making contracts collateral to the original, thus introducing difficult and complicated elements, the courts find it extremely difficult to apply general principles working out satisfactory results. Beasley, C. J., in Crater v. Binninger, 83 N. J. Law, 513, 97 Am. Dec. 737, referring to the rule laid down in Headley v. Baxendale, supra, says: "This is the usual statement of the rule, but the difficulty has been to apply this general proposition to this particular case, for, in any attempt to examine causes in connection with their effects, it will be soon apparent that some criterion is necessary by which to decide what result is proximate and what remote, in a legal sense, to the given act. The standard set up by the decisions above cited supplies, to a reasonable degree, this deficiency. The test is that those results are proximate which the wrongdoer, from his position, must have contemplated as the probable consequences of his fraud or breach of contract." Mace v. Ramsey, 74 N. C. 11.

The testimony discloses a contract for the sale of an engine of a certain make, size, and capacity. It would seem a reasonable inference that the sellers knew that it was to be used to run a sawmill for cutting logs into boards. Their guaranty must, in the light of these facts, be construed as an assurance that although the engine was 9x12, instead of 10x12, as contracted for, it would develop for this particular use the same power as the engine contracted for, or that they would make it do so. This, of course, involved the idea that the plaintiff was to put it in position for use, and use it, giving the defendants a reasonable time and opportunity to fulfill their contract. What damage would usually result from a breach of this contract? What would a man selling such machinery, knowing the use to which it was to be put, the place to which it was sent, etc., have reasonably contemplated as the usual result of a failure to make this develop 25 horse power? The plaintiff offered to show that at the time of making the contract he had contracted with reliable parties for the sale of the output of his mill at a stipulated price. The refusal to permit him to show this is the basis of his first exception. It is well settled that, while for breach of contract the law seeks to give full compensation for actual loss sustained, it will not undertake to estimate uncertain profits. We think that, in the absence of any knowledge on the part of the defendants that the plaintiff had made such a contract, damages resulting from it could not be said to be within their contemplation. There is the further objection that the plaintiff did not offer to show that he had logs on hand sufficient to run the mill any given number of days, or for what time the contract extended. If the question as stated in the record had been answered, the jury could not possibly have made it the basis for assessing damages. There were too many elements of uncertainty involved to form the basis of any verdict. It may be that the plaintiff intended to show how these matters were, but we must pass upon the exception as presented to us in the record. In Lewis v. Rountree, 79 N. C. 123, 28 Am. Rep. 309, the plaintiff was permitted to recover upon the basis of the price of the rosin in New York, to which point it was shipped, for the reason that it was purchased for that purpose, and the defendant had notice of it. In Mace v. Ramsey, supra, the boat was hired for a particular occasion, and the plaintiff had engaged a certain number of passengers at an agreed price. The court held that such loss as ensued was within the contemplation of the parties. In Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 19 Ga. 416, 65 Am. Dec. 602, it was held that damages could not be recovered for failing to ship machinery for a cotton mill, based upon anticipated profits from the output of the mill; Lumpkin, J., saying: "The gains were too remote and uncertain, depending upon a variety of contingencies, the failure of any one of which would subvert the whole computation." The slightest reflection will show the number of contingencies attending a sale of the output of a sawmill—the weather, a breakdown of the mill, failure to get logs, etc. Sycamore Co. v. Strurme, 18 Neb. 210, 18 N. W. 202. His honor properly excluded the testimony.

The plaintiff excepts to the refusal of the court to give certain special instructions: First, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover reasonable rent and insurance for the buildings which were idle by reason of the delay of the defendants to furnish an engine according to contract. We find no evidence upon which to base this instruction. The plaintiff says nothing of any buildings being idle or of any insurance paid. The same is true in regard to the second prayer. There is no evidence that the logs were damaged, or, if so, to what amount. The third prayer is based upon the principle announced in Kester v. Miller, supra. The plaintiff was entitled to this instruction. For the reasons given in that case, the plaintiff is entitled to such damages as he sustained while operating the mill, at the defendants' request, to enable them to make the engine develop 25 horse power. The defendants knew that the mill was being operated at their request and for their benefit. They knew that it required hands, teams, etc., to operate the mill, and any loss sustained in doing so must have been within the contemplation of the parties. It is true, the evidence on this question is very meager; and, if there was no more than we find in the record, the jury would have found difficulty in assessing the plaintiff's damages. There was, however, some evidence of the number of hands engaged about the mill, the price paid them, and the difference per day in the output of the mill as it was and should have been according to the contract, and the value thereof. This exception must be sustained. Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, supra. This ruling does not include hands and teams employed in logging. It includes only those employed in running the mill. The fourth prayer is disposed of by the ruling upon the rejection of the proposed evidence. The same ruling applies to the fifth prayer. The sixth is included in the disposition of the third prayer. The seventh prayer is disposed of by what is said in regard to the fourth. There is no evidence that the defendant knew of the employment of teams, etc., for logging the mill. The eighth prayer, in so far as it applies to the amount invested in the milling outfit, should have been given. For any time that the milling machinery was idle, the plaintiff is entitled to interest on the amount invested. Boyle v. Reeder, 23 N. C. 607; Rocky Mt. Mills v. Railroad, 119 N. C. 693, 25 S. E. 854, 56 Am. St. Rep. 682. There is no evidence to sustain the ninth prayer, and the same is true as to the tenth.

We have carefully examined the entire record. For the reasons pointed out, there must be a new trial on the third issue, as to damages. The plaintiff will recover the costs in this court. New trial.

(125 N. C. 623)

HOOD et ux. v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1904.)

TELEGRAPHS—DELIVERY OF MESSAGE—NOTICE TO SENDER—NEGLIGENCE.

1. Where a telegraph company failed to make any attempt to deliver a message because the sendee lived beyond free delivery limits, and also failed to notify the sender of additional charges for such delivery, or of refusal to deliver it at all, the company is liable for damages resulting from its negligence in failing to make the delivery.

2. Where an action was dismissed for lack of evidence, a new action could be brought for the same cause within one year.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; McNeill, Judge.

Action by S. L. Hood and wife against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Maxwell & Keerans, for appellants. F. H. Busbee & Son, for appellee.

OLARK, C. J. The evidence is that the male plaintiff, at the request of the feme plaintiff, his wife, and for her use and benefit, delivered to the telegraph operator in Charlotte at 7 a. m., April 1, 1900, the following prepaid message to be transmitted to Concord, N. C., to W. M. Petrea, the father of the feme plaintiff: "Come at once. Baby is sick." The child was very ill, and the object of the message was that the feme plaintiff's father and mother might come to Charlotte to comfort and assist her. The telegraph operator was told that the child was very ill, and that the message should be sent at once, and he promised that it should be. The sendee lived seven or eight miles from Concord, but was well known at that place. It was the first message ever sent by the plaintiffs, and they knew nothing about free delivery limits, and, this being the nearest telegraph station to the sendee, supposed the message would be delivered. The operator, neither at Charlotte nor Concord, made any objection, nor informed the plaintiff of any hesitancy or difficulty in delivering, and the plaintiffs, supposing the message had been delivered, expected and looked for the arrival of the plaintiff's mother and father till midnight. The child died 4 p. m. that afternoon. If the defendant had advised the senders that an additional sum would be required before delivery, it would have been paid; or, if advised promptly that the defendant would not deliver it at all, the plaintiffs would have made other arrangements to notify Petrea and wife; and that Petrea and wife would have come to Charlotte that day if he had received the message, and would have paid any extra charges demanded if the telegram had been delivered to him. Such is the substance of the evidence. It was further in evidence that it was the general custom of the telegraph company at Concord either to allow its messenger boy to deliver messages out in the country, and collect from sendees, or to wire back to the sending office the additional charges for such delivery, and to advise the sender what such charges would be. The evidence is that, if either course had been pursued, the sender and the sendee (as the case might be) would have paid the charges. It was also in evidence that the office in Concord frequently did deliver, or allowed its messenger boys to deliver, messages out in the country outside of Concord without charges being prepaid, when they thought the sendee would pay the charges; and when in doubt about this the Concord operator always advised the sending office that the sender should be notified what such charges would be; that the Concord office had frequently sent such messages out in the country by N. J. Corl, a liveryman, and he had often collected the extra charge without prepayment being guarantied; that, if the message had been handed to Corl, he would have delivered it to Petrea without prepayment being guarantied by the defendant; that a similar custom of delivery outside of free delivery limits also prevailed in Charlotte; that the plaintiffs had lived in Charlotte two years prior to sending this message, their mail being delivered daily by the post-office carrier; that the messenger boy in Charlotte on duty that day knew where the plaintiffs resided, but the defendant made no inquiry of him, nor made any effort to notify the plaintiffs of the nondelivery of the message, nor of any doubt or hesitation as to delivering it to the sendee; that they had no relatives in Charlotte to assist them in preparing their child (who was their eldest and only child) for burial, and, deciding to carry the body to the feme plaintiff's father's home for burial on the next morning (Monday) at 7 a. m., the male plaintiff, at the request of and for the use and benefit of his wife, the female plaintiff, delivered the following prepaid message directed to James Dry at Concord, "Tell Mr. Petrea to meet corpse on train No. 36. Have some one to dig grave;" that this message was sent in order that the plaintiffs might be met by some one in Concord on the arrival of said train—either by Petrea or some one else—so that the male plaintiff might not have to leave his wife with the corpse, and go out to procure a team to carry them into the country; that when he prepaid the message the husband of the feme plaintiff told the operator in Charlotte where Dry resided in Concord, and the operator promised to forward the message at once; that, relying on such promise, they went to Concord with the child's body on train No. 36, but no one met them on arrival; that the male plaintiff had to leave his wife with a relative, and go out to procure a conveyance; that the train arrived at Concord at 11 a. m., but the message was not delivered to Dry till 10 a. m. (3 hours after its delivery to the defendant's agent in Charlotte), being too late for him to notify Petrea in time for the latter to have some one to meet the plaintiffs on arrival of the train, which he would have done if the message had been delivered promptly to James Dry, who would at once have sent it to Petrea, and could have done so in an hour, and that it could have been delivered to Dry in 20 minutes after its receipt at the Concord office; that when Petrea got the message the conveyance was started off in a few minutes to meet the plaintiffs, but too late; that on Monday, after the second message was delivered to the defendant, the plaintiffs, in reply to their inquiry, were for the first time informed that the prior message had not been delivered because Petrea lived seven miles in the country, and a postal card had been put in the post-office to advise him, but no such card was ever delivered; that the feme plaintiff suffered much grief by the failure of her mother and father to come to Charlotte on Sunday's train, as they would have done if the telegram had been delivered according to the defendant's custom, or if nondelivery had been at once notified to the plaintiffs, so that they could (as they would) have secured delivery by other means, and also by the failure to meet her at the train on the arrival of the body, and her husband under those circumstances having to leave her to go out to procure a conveyance. There was no evidence offered by the defendant.

It was error to nonsuit the plaintiffs upon this testimony. It is clear beyond controversy that the defendant was guilty of very great negligence, and no one of the slightest sensibility will deny that the probable result would be and was needless grief and mental suffering in consequence inflicted thereby upon the feme plaintiff. What would be a just compensation, if any, is a matter which can be settled only by a jury, whose verdict, if excessive, is subject to the power of the court to be set aside. It may be that the defendant's evidence may establish a different state of facts materially mitigating the plaintiffs' prima facie case or defeating it entirely. But the legal propositions involved, establishing a prima facie right in the feme plaintiff to recover, are so clearly settled as to require no discussion. Among the cases exactly in point is Hendricks v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 311, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658, in which it is said: "We think it is the duty of the company, in all cases where it is practicable to do so, to promptly inform the sender of a message that it cannot be delivered. While its failure to do so may not be negligence per se, it is clear evidence of negligence. In many instances by such a course the damage could be greatly lessened, if not entirely avoided; a better address might be given; mutual friends might be communicated with, or even a letter might reach the addressee. In any event, the sender might be relieved from great anxiety, and would know what to expect. Moreover, it would tend to show diligence on the part of the company." This language is approved in Laudie v. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 436, 35 S. E. 810, 78 Am. St. Rep. 688; Hinson v. Tel. Co., 132 N. C. 467, 43 S. E. 945. "It may be further noted that the company does not say that the message will not be delivered beyond such limits, but that a special charge will be made to cover the cost of delivery, which seems to clearly imply that it would be delivered. No fixed limit of distance nor definite sum is specified, and it is difficult to say how the sender can be presumed to know either in the absence of information from the company." Hendricks v. Tel. Co., supra; Bryan v. Tel. Co., 133 N. C. 605, 45 S. E. 938. "The failure of the telegraph company to deliver a message is not excused, though it appears that the sender lived beyond the free delivery limits, and the extra charge for delivery beyond the limits had not been paid; it not appearing that the sender knew the company had any free delivery limits, or that it demanded payment of an extra charge." Bright v. Tel. Co., 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841. The plaintiffs' action was dismissed for lack of sufficient evidence on a former trial, and a new action was brought. A new action may be brought in such cases (Prevatt v. Harrelson, 132 N. C. 254, 43 S. E. 800; Evans v. Alridge, 133 N. C. 380, 45 S. E. 772; Nunnally v. Railroad (no opinion) and other cases, at this term), provided the new action is brought, as here, within one year. Meekins v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 2, 42 S. E. 333.

New trial.

WALKER, J., did not sit on the hearing of this case. MONTGOMERY and CONNOR, JJ., concur in result.

(135 N. C. 540)

SITTON v. EDWARD-EVERSOLE LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

WITNESSES—TRIALS—PROOF OF ATTENDANCE—COSTS.

1. Though a witness may prove his attendance against the party who subpoenaed him, his attendance can only be taxed against the opposing party, if unsuccessful, when the witness was examined on the trial, or was tendered to the opposing party for examination, subject to the limitation that not to exceed two such witnesses can be taxed to prove a single fact.

Appeal from Superior Court, Swain County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by M. L. Sitton against Edward-Eversole Lumber Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. M. Fry, for appellant. Bryson & Black, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. A witness can always prove his attendance against the party who subpoenas him, but his attendance can only be taxed against the opposite party (if it loses the verdict) when he has been examined as a witness on the trial, or was tendered to such opposite party on the trial; and even then not more than two such witnesses can be taxed to prove any single fact. Code, § 1370; Cureton v. Garrison, 111 N. C. 271, 16 S. E. 338; State v. Massey, 104 N. C., at page 881, 10 S. E. 608. In Henderson v. Williams, 120 N. C. 339, 27 S. E. 30, where the defendant's witnesses were present when the case was called for trial on a nonsuit, the costs of such witnesses (not to exceed, of course, two to prove any single fact—Code, § 1370) were taxed against the plaintiff because the defendant "had no opportunity to swear, examine, or tender his witnesses by reason of the nonsuit." It has always been the recognized practice that, inasmuch as only two witnesses of the successful party to prove any single fact can be taxed against the losing party, the purport of the evidence of the witnesses so sought to be taxed shall be demonstrated by examination on the trial, or at least that the losing party may have an opportunity to ascertain the materiality of the evidence of such witnesses, and prevent being taxed with an excessive number upon any single point by such witnesses being sworn and tendered to the opposite party for examination. Porter v. Durham, 79 N. C. 596. It is true that in Loftis v. Baxter, 66 N. C. 340, it is said that the witnesses must be "sworn or tendered," but this is an inadvertent expression for "sworn and examined or tendered"; i. e., witnesses subpoenaed by the successful party cannot be taxed against the losing party unless sworn and examined by the successful party, or sworn and tendered to the losing party to be examined that their materiality may be shown. Otherwise a successful party may oppress the losing party by subpoenaing and swearing any number of witnesses, and having their attendance taxed, while examining only the few necessary to gain the action. Merely swearing the witnesses would be no assurance of their materiality. They must be examined, or tendered to the opposite party to be examined, should he so choose; and if examined by the opposite party they are to be examined as the witnesses of the party summoning such witnesses, and under the rules of cross-examination pertaining to the examination of an adversary's witnesses. In Cureton v. Garrison, supra, the court held "no error" upon the following ruling of the judge (Hoke) below: "If the witnesses were not sworn and examined or tendered, even though attending under subpoena, and though they would have given material evidence, their fees cannot be taxed against the losing party."

The judgment below taxing against the losing party witnesses of the other side who were neither examined nor tendered on the trial is reversed.

(136 N. C. 488)

COWLES v. LOVIN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

REJECTMENT — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE — IDENTIFICATION — INSTRUCTIONS — NECESSITY TO REQUEST — APPEAL — EXCEPTIONS — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Where the deposition of a nonresident surveyor who made certain plats of the land in controversy was taken, but no attempt was made therein to identify or explain the plats and certificates, and they were not otherwise proved, the court properly refused to permit them to be introduced in evidence.

2. Erroneous admission of evidence which was subsequently excluded by the court was harmless.

3. Where an exception to an instruction did not correctly set out the same it could not be reviewed on appeal.

4. Mere omission to charge on a particular point is not ground for exception after verdict, unless the court was requested in apt time to give the instruction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Graham County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by Calvin J. Cowles against S. B. Lovin. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dillard & Bell and T. A. Morphew, for appellant. E. B. Norvell, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought to recover possession of several tracts of land described in the complaint. The plaintiff, in support of his title and right to possession, introduced in evidence certain grants and mesne conveyances connecting his title with those grants. There was evidence tending to show that the grants and deeds covered the locus in quo. The defendant resisted the plaintiff's recovery upon the grounds (1) that it had not been sufficiently shown that his paper title embraced the land in dispute, and (2) that the defendant and those under whom he claimed had been in adverse possession of the land for seven years under color of title. The court held that there was no evidence to sustain the defendant's second ground of defense, and, that being eliminated, the case turned entirely upon the question whether the plaintiff had sufficiently located the grants under which he claimed the land. The court charged the jury fully on the question of boundary, and left it to them upon the evidence to say whether the descriptions in the grants introduced by the plaintiff included the disputed land. The jury, in answer to the issue submitted to them, found that they did not, and, judgment for the defendant having been entered on the verdict, the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

In order to locate the grants, the plaintiff offered in evidence certificates of survey made by H. P. Hyde, to which certain plats were annexed. The certificates were in the handwriting of Hyde, who was county surveyor when they were made. Hyde was living in the state of Texas at the time of the trial. The defendant objected to this evidence, and it was excluded. This is the subject of the plaintiff's first exception. The deposition of Hyde, who had made a survey under order of the court in this case, was taken and read at the trial, but no reference was made therein to the plats and certificates. The latter show the location of the tracts of land as claimed by the plaintiff. It was not shown, or at least it does not appear in the case, at what time, or under what circumstances, or for what purpose the plats and certificates were made by Hyde. He was examined as a witness before a commissioner, and his deposition was a part of the evidence. It does not appear therefrom that he was asked any questions in regard to the plats and certificates, or that any attempt was made to identify or explain them, so as to make them admissible under any known rule of evidence. They are nothing more than the written declarations of a third person who is living as to the boundaries of the land. After a most careful consideration of the argument and authorities cited by the plaintiff in support of their competency, we do not see upon what principle they are admissible. The ruling of the court by which they were excluded was correct. Burwell v. Sneed, 104 N. C. 118, 10 S. E. 152; Dobson v. Whisenhant, 101 N. C. 645, 8 S. E. 126; Ray v. Castle, 79 N. C. 580; Perkins v. Brinkley, 133 N. C. 348, 45 S. E. 652. This was the principal exception of the plaintiff, as we take it.

The second and third exceptions are manifestly untenable. The will of Hooper and the deed of Carver, sheriff, to Cooper, were introduced by the defendant, and as they were excluded by the subsequent ruling of the court from the case, the error, if there was any, in admitting them originally, was cured, or at least was harmless.

It is stated in the "case" that the instruction of the court as to the rule admitting hearsay evidence of boundary is not correctly set out in the plaintiff's fourth exception. This statement is sufficient to dispose of the exception, but we have examined the charge of the court, to which we suppose the fourth and fifth exceptions were taken, and find no error therein. We think the court distinguished properly between reputation and hearsay evidence in respect to the location of boundaries. Dobson v. Finley, 53 N. C. 495; Shaffer v. Gaynor, 117 N. C. 15, 23 S. E. 154; Westfelt v. Adams, 131 N. C. 379, 42 S. E. 823. If there were any error in the charge relating to reputation and hearsay, as proof of boundary, we do not see how the plaintiff could be prejudiced by it. No phase of the case is presented in the record, as it appears to us, to which the exception, if otherwise properly taken, could be pertinent.

The remaining exceptions are based upon the alleged failure, not the refusal, of the court to give certain specified instructions. The rule, without any exception applicable to this case, is that a mere omission to charge upon a particular point is not ground of exception after verdict, unless the court was requested in apt time to give the instruction. McKinnon v. Morrison, 104 N. C. 354, 10 S. E. 513; Russell v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 1098, 24 S. E. 512; Howard v. Turner, 125 N. C. 107, 34 S. E. 229; Clark's Code (3d Ed.) pp. 535, 538.

The issues were sufficient to support the judgment, and they afforded the plaintiff ample opportunity to present any phase of the case arising upon the evidence. This is all that is required in submitting issues to the jury. We have not been able to discover any error in the rulings of the court.

No error.

(135 N. C. 642)

JOHNSON et al. v. DUVALL et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1904.)

DEEDS—COMMISSIONER—CERTIFICATE OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT—SEAL—NECESSITY—TIMBER LANDS—SUITS TO TRY TITLE—ALLOWANCE OF PARTY TO CUT TIMBER—ORDER—FINDINGS.

1. A commissioner of deeds for North Carolina, residing in another state, is not required to affix his seal to the certificate acknowledging the execution of a deed conveying land in North Carolina.

2. In making an order authorized by Laws 1901, p. 900, c. 668, providing that if in actions to try title to timber lands the court, on finding that the claim of one party is not made in good faith, and is not based on a prima facie title, and that the claim of the other party is made in good faith, and is supported by a prima facie title, may allow the latter to cut timber on the lands in controversy pending the trial, the court must find as a fact, and incorporate the finding in the order, that the claim of the party against whom it is made is not made in good faith, and that the contention of the party allowed to cut the timber is made in good faith, and based on a prima facie title.

Appeal from Superior Court, Swain County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by Eunice S. Johnson and others against Morgan Duvall and others. From an order permitting defendant J. B. Thomas to cut and remove timber from the land in controversy pending the trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

The record in this case presents an appeal from an order made by his honor Judge Jones, permitting the defendant J. B. Thomas to cut and remove timber from the lands in controversy pending the trial of the cause upon its merits. The facts found by his honor are that the title to the locus in quo was conceded to have been in W. H. Wilson, under whom all parties claim title. On February 1, 1859, said Wilson executed a deed containing operative words sufficient to pass the title to Alice A. Farrer. The original deed was not in evidence. A certified copy of the deed, together with the certificate of probate and order of registration, was used in the hearing before the court upon the motion for the injunction. It appears that the acknowledgment of the execution by the maker was before a commissioner of deeds for this state residing in the city of Washington, D. C. His certificate concludes with the words, "Given under my hand and seal," etc. There is nothing on the certified copy showing that an official seal was affixed to the certificate. A certificate is attached, entitled "Court of Pleas & Quarter Sess. March Term, A. D. 1859." "On motion it was ordered by the court that the foregoing deed for land in Jackson county, North Carolina, from W. H. Wilson and Martha R. Wilson of Prince George County, State of Maryland to A. A. Farrer of Montgomery County, State aforesaid, be recorded and registered in Jackson County, with privy examination thereto as appears from the certificate of Chas. Walter, commissioner of deeds for the State of North Carolina, residing in Washington City. Certified the 8th day of April, A. D. 1859. A. M. Enloe, Clerk. Witness: Wm. R. Buchanan, R. J. C." The land was devised by A. A. Farrer to George and James Frame, the last-named devising his interest to said George Frame, who, on March 10, 1904, conveyed such title as he had to J. B. Thomas, who, at March term, 1904, was made a party defendant by the court. The said W. H. Wilson, on August 16, 1884, executed a deed for said land to his wife, Martha R. Wilson, who by her last will and testament conferred upon her executor power to sell the same. Pursuant to such power the said executor on February 24, 1893, conveyed the said land to the ancestors of the plaintiffs. There was evidence before his honor in regard to the payment of taxes. There was no evidence of any possession by either of the parties, the locus in quo being wild mountain land, chiefly valuable for timber. The plaintiffs allege that the defendants Duvall and Mendenhall were cutting timber on the land, and prayed an injunction pending the litigation. A restraining order was made by his honor Judge Ferguson enjoining the defendants Duvall and Mendenhall from cutting the timber until the final hearing. At the same time an order was made continuing the motion for a receiver to be heard before his honor Judge Jones. The said J. B. Thomas filed an affidavit in the cause, setting out his title, and alleging that he was operating a sawmill, with a large crew of hands, near the lands; that he was about through with the timber, and desired to move his mill and outfits on the land covered by the grants which are in controversy in this action, and upon such affidavit moved that he be permitted to cut and remove the logs. His honor granted the motion, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Geo. H. Smathers and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellants. A. M. Fry, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. It will be observed that this action was originally brought against Mendenhall and Duvall, and they were enjoined from cutting the timber from plaintiff's land. Thereafter Thomas, who had been made party defendant, filed an affidavit, which was heard before Judge Jones, as the basis for a motion to be permitted to cut and remove the timber during the pending of the action. His honor granted the order, basing his action upon his opinion that the title to the land passed by the deed executed by William H. Wilson to Alice A. Farrer bearing date August 1, 1859, which title vested in Thomas.

The deed from Frame to Thomas contains certain provisions and stipulations which were argued by counsel, constituting an agreement for maintenance of a lawsuit, thereby vitiating the deed. The discussion in this court was largely directed to the validity of the probate of the deed from Wilson to Farrer; the plaintiffs contending that it was invalid, for that no seal was attached to the certificate of the commissioner of deeds, and, further, that the order of registration was defective in that there was no adjudication that the deed had been properly proved before the commissioner of deeds. The power of the commissioner to take acknowledgment or proof of the execution of deeds executed in other states conveying land situate in this state is found in chapter 37, § 5, of the Revised Code. It does not appear from an examination of that section that the commissioner is required to affix any seal to his certificate, the language being: "And duly certified by him, such deed, power of attorney, bill of sale or other instrument, being exhibited in the court of pleas and quarter sessions of the county where the property is situate, or to one of the judges of the Supreme Court or of the superior courts of this state, shall be ordered to be registered with the certificates thereto annexed." It is certainly usual for commissioners of deeds or affidavits to affix their official seal to certificates made by them. We have carefully examined the several statutes bearing upon the subject and cited in the briefs, and find no statute requiring a seal to be affixed to such certificate.

It is further contended that the certificate of the clerk does not show affirmatively that the court adjudged the certificate of the commissioner to be in due form, or that the proof or acknowledgment was properly taken. It will be observed that the deed was exhibited in open court, and it may be upon the trial that it will appear from the minutes of the court that the proper adjudication was made. It would seem that the law would raise a presumption to that effect. We prefer deferring a decision of this question until the cause shall be brought to trial, and the evidence, together with the minutes of the court of pleas and quarter sessions, introduced. There is, however, a view of the case, not presented by the briefs, which we think it proper to decide, as it affects a matter of interest to the public. The order is evidently based upon the power conferred upon the court by chapter 666, p. 900, of the Laws of 1901, the first section of which provides: "That in all actions to try title to timber lands and in all actions for trespass thereon for cutting timber trees, whenever the court shall find as a fact that there is a bona fide contention on both sides based upon evidence constituting a prima facie title, no order shall be made pending such action, permitting either party to cut said timber trees, except by consent, until the title to said land or timber trees shall be finally determined in such action. That whenever in any such action, the judge shall find as a fact that the contention of either party thereto is not in good faith and is not based upon evidence constituting a prima facie title, then upon motion of the other party thereto who may satisfy the court of the bona fides of his contention and who may produce evidence showing a prima facie title, the court may allow such party to cut the said timber trees by giving bond," etc. We think that, before an order vitally affecting the rights of either party shall be made, such as the permission to cut the timber, the court shall find as a fact, and incorporate such finding in the order, that the contention of the party against whose claim the order is made is not in good faith, and that the contention of the party in favor of whom the order is made is in good faith, and based upon a prima facie title. The order in this cause finds neither of these facts, and for that reason, we think, is erroneous.

Serious questions being presented for determination on the hearing of this cause, we think that, in the absence of any finding that the plaintiffs' contention was not made in good faith, and that the defendants' contention was bona fide, and based upon a prima facie title, the property should have been left in statu quo until the final hearing. Without passing upon the other questions argued before us, the order of his honor is reversed.

Reversed.

(185 N. C. 532)

BECK v. MERONEY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

TAXATION—REDEMPTION—PAYMENT—MEDIUM—AMOUNT DUE—COMPUTATION—ERRORS—AC-TIONS—LIMITATIONS—PLEADING.

1. In an action to set aside a tax deed as a cloud on title, it was not necessary that the complaint should allege that all the taxes on the land had been paid, but was sufficient that plaintiff proved that he had title to the property at the time it was sold for taxes, and that all the taxes had been paid.

2. Where the taxes for which land in controversy was sold, together with the costs and interest, had been paid by the tax debtor within a year after the sale allotted for redemption, the tax deed, which was valid on its face, constituted a cloud on the debtor's title.

3. Where land is sold for taxes, the purchaser, during the time allowed for redemption, has a statutory lien on the land for taxes, costs, and interest, which is discharged by payment of the taxes and charges within the redemption period.

4. Where a sheriff, as ex officio tax collector, erroneously computed the amount necessary to redeem land from tax sale, and the tax debtor paid the amount demanded by the sheriff, such payment constituted a redemption, the debtor being entitled to rely on the statement of the state's officer as to the amount due.

5. Where a sheriff received a check in payment of taxes for which land had been sold, but the sheriff collected the check and tendered money to the purchaser of the tax title in payment of the amount due by the redemptioner, which the purchaser refused to receive, the fact that the sheriff received the check instead of money did not deprive the payment of its effect as constituting a redemption.

6. An action to set aside a tax deed as a cloud on title, as authorized by Act 1893, p. 37, c. 6, is not an action to recover real estate sold for nonpayment of taxes within the three-year statute of limitations provided for such actions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by Louis H. Beck, as trustee, etc., against B. B. Meroney and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Dillard & Bell, F. P. Axley, and R. L. Cooper, for appellants. E. B. Norvell and Ben Posey, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. The defendants, in 1898, bought the mineral interests in the land described in the complaint at a sheriff's sale for taxes, and more than a year thereafter received the deed from the tax collector to the property. In the meantime, and within six months after the sale for taxes, the plaintiff paid through his agent, Southerland, to the sheriff of the county, the amount estimated to be due by the sheriff for taxes, costs, and interest. The defendants in the court below moved ore tenus to dismiss the complaint because it was not alleged therein that all the taxes due on the land had been paid, and that it was alleged in the complaint that the defendants' deed was absolutely void, and tended to cast a cloud upon the plaintiff's title. The motion was properly denied. We think it was not necessary that it should have been alleged in the complaint that the taxes had been paid on the land. The revenue act, under which the land was sold, did not require that. In Moore v. Byrd, 118 N. C. 688, 23 S. E. 968, it will be seen that the court construed the statute to mean that the tax debtor must show by the evidence that he had title to the property at the time of the sale, and that all taxes had been paid upon the property; and the plaintiff introduced such evidence. The complaint not only contained the allegation that the tax deed held by the defendants was absolutely void (and so it was if the land had been redeemed by the tax debtor), but it also contained the allegation that the deed on its face was apparently regular and valid. If the taxes therefore, and the costs and interest, had been paid by the plaintiff tax debtor within the year allowed for redemption, then the deed, being valid on its face, constituted a cloud on the plaintiff's title. When land is sold for taxes in this state, the purchaser during the time allowed for redemption has a statutory lien upon the land for the taxes, costs, and interest; but when the taxes and charges are paid within the year allowed for redemption the lien is discharged by the payment. The agent of the plaintiff approached the defendants for the purpose of redeeming the land, and upon their refusal to receive payment he paid the amount to the sheriff of the county, who himself made out the amount estimated to be due. Because the sheriff made a mistake in the calculation of about 50 cents, the defendants insist that redemption did not follow the payment of the amount due by the sheriff's calculation. There can be nothing in that contention in reason, justice, or law. A taxpayer in this state has the right to rely, in redeeming his land from sale for taxes, upon the statement of the tax collector, the officer of the state for the collection of its revenue.

The defendants contend further that, because the revenue law required that the sheriff should collect taxes in money, therefore, because he received a check on a bank from the tax debtor's agent, there was no redemption. But it appears in the evidence that the sheriff collected and used, as sheriff, the check, and tendered to the defendants not the check, but money, in payment of the amount due by the tax debtor, and that they refused to receive it.

The defendants pleaded the three-years statute of limitations as a defense to the action. The revenue law in force at the time the land was sold for taxes provided that "no action for the recovery of real property sold for nonpayment of taxes shall lie unless the same be brought within three years after the sheriff's deed is made as above provided." It is true that more than three years had elapsed between the execution of the sheriff's deed and the time of the commencement of this action, but this is not an action for the recovery of the land. It is simply an action to remove a cloud from the plaintiff's title under Act 1893, p. 37, c. 6.

No error.

(125 N. C. 488)

CARTER v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

RAILROADS—PERSONS ON TRACKS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

1. One walking or sitting or lying down on a railroad track is guilty of contributory negligence.

2. Where plaintiff's intestate was down upon defendant's track in such a position that he could have been seen by the engineer, if the latter had been looking, at a distance of 150 yards, and in time to have stopped the train and prevented the injury, plaintiff may recover under the doctrine of last clear chance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. W. Carter, as administrator, etc., against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. C. Caldwell, for appellant. Armfield & Turner and J. F. Gamble, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. All of the exceptions of the defendant may be considered under the one to the refusal of the court below to dismiss the action on the motion of the defendant to have the plaintiff nonsuited because there was no evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant in the killing of the plaintiff's intestate. There was evidence going to show that the intestate was found dead lying right along the side of the railroad track; that blood and flesh and human hair were seen on the track between the rails a few steps from the intestate's body; that one arm and one foot were cut off, the forehead mashed, and the scalp torn off, and that the clothing around the middle of the body was stripped off; and, besides, that the intestate was intoxicated. The engineer in charge of the engine at the time the intestate was killed testified that he was sitting straight up in the cab, looking ahead through the front window, and that the first thing he observed was "a bulk of something rolling into the ditch beside the track." We are of the opinion that the evidence which we have recited tended to show that the intestate was killed while he was down and helpless upon the track. The evidence of the severed arm and leg went to show that he was run over by the engine, and the engineer's testimony corroborated that view, for, as he said, he was looking straight ahead, and did not see the man standing or walking upon the track. Of course, the intestate was guilty of contributory negligence, whether he was walking or sitting or lying down on the railroad track when he was killed. Upton v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 173, 38 S. E. 736. This court there said: "The intestate having been negligent, before a recovery can be had against the defendant on the ground of its negligence in not availing itself of the 'last clear chance,' it must be shown by the plaintiff by proper evidence not simply that the intestate was on the track in the way of the engine, but that he was there apparently asleep, or in other helpless condition, and that the engineer had discovered his condition, or, by keeping a reasonable watchout, could have discovered it in time to have prevented the injury, and that after he had discovered it, or could by proper watchfulness have had reasonable grounds that such was the condition of the intestate, he failed to use all available means to prevent the injury." As we have said, the evidence tended to show that the intestate was down upon the track; and there was further evidence for the plaintiff going to show that the intestate could have been seen by the engineer, if he had been looking, a distance of 150 yards, and in time to have stopped the train and prevented the injury. There was a good deal of evidence to the contrary, but all of it had to be submitted to the jury. In Upton's Case, supra, the appearance of the body did not indicate that the intestate had been run over by the train, but, on the contrary, that he was in a sitting position on the end of a cross-tie, with his face from the track.

There was no error in the course of the trial, and the judgment must be affirmed.

(135 N. C. 553)

JONES v. DURHAM WATER CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—FIRE PROTECTION—CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—PARTIES.

1. Where a water company contracts to supply a town and its inhabitants with water for extinguishing fires, a property owner may maintain an action against the company in his own name for a loss sustained by failure to supply water for extinguishing a fire.

2. Under a contract with a water company to supply water for extinguishing fires, requiring that it shall provide pressure on four minutes' notice to throw ten streams a certain height, a property owner, suing for damages for failure to furnish water for the extinguishment of a fire, need not show that notice was given the company, as such provision was for an extraordinary pressure to show the capacity of the plant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; C. M. Cooke, Judge.

Action by R. M. Jones against the Durham Water Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Boone & Reade and Manning & Foushee, for appellant. Winston & Bryant and Fuller & Fuller, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. The defendant contracted with the town of Durham to put in a water plant (section 2) "to abundantly supply said town of Durham and its inhabitants with pure and wholesome water fit for all domestic purposes;" (section 3) "and will furnish at said hydrants at all points all water necessary for all fire extinguishing and other public purposes;" (section 5) "an adequate supply of water for the sprinkling with carts of all paved streets * * * and for the extinguishment of fires;" (section 6) "that if at any time it shall fail to furnish an adequate supply for all fire and other public purposes as herein stipulated," etc. There was evidence tending to show that the house of plaintiff in said town was burned down because of an almost total lack of pressure; that the stream of water did not reach more than half way to the eaves of the house, 20 feet being the greatest height to which the water was thrown. There can be no real contention that the plaintiff, a citizen and taxpayer, and one of the beneficiaries in the purview of this contract cannot prosecute this action. He is the real party in interest. He is taxed with payment of his pro rata of the annual rental. The town cannot maintain this action for the loss sustained by him by reason of the defendant's failure to perform the provisions of the contract above recited. For this injury the plaintiff alone can sue. This point was discussed and settled in Gorrell v. Water Co., 124 N. C. 598, 32 S. E. 720, 48 L. R. A. 513, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598, which has been followed in Fisher v. Water Co., 128 N. C. 375, 38 S. E. 912, and cited and approved in Lacy v. Webb, 130 N. C. 546, 41 S. E. 549, and Gastonia v. Engineering Co., 131 N. C. 366, 42 S. E. 858, in which last the doctrine is elaborated. The same principle had been often affirmed prior to Gorrell's Case, to wit, that the beneficiary of a contract, though not a party to it, nor expressly named therein, can maintain an action for a breach of such contract, causing injury to him, if the contract was made for his benefit. Among the many cases to that effect are Sherrill v. Tel. Co., 109 N. C. 527, 14 S. E. 94 (action for failure to deliver telegram); Id., 116 N. C. 658, 21 S. E. 429; and Shoaf v. Ins. Co., 127 N. C. 308, 37 S. E. 451, 80 Am. St. Rep. 804. This contract specifies that the defendant shall furnish the town "and its inhabitants * * * all water necessary for fire extinguishing."

The real point in this case is that section 1 of the contract sets out that the defendant "shall provide means and apparatus which will enable it at all times within four minutes after a call for such pressure has been given by the proper officer of the fire department of said town to furnish to said town for fire service 10 fire streams from any 10 hydrants to a vertical height of 100 feet in still air, such stream being taken from the hydrant with 100 feet of hose and a 1-inch nozzle," subject to provisions in sections 12, 13, and 14. These latter sections provide that if, on a test, the defendant gives only nine streams 100 feet high within four minutes after notice, the rental of $4,000 (allowed if ten streams of required height are furnished) shall be reduced to $3,950; if only eight such streams, then only $3,850 rental; if only seven, then the rental shall be $3,800; and so on down to five streams of requisite height and size. His honor instructed the jury that by virtue of these provisions, unless notice of four minutes, or other reasonable notice, was given the defendant, the plaintiff could not recover. In this there was error. The pressure to throw ten streams and not less than five streams 100 feet vertical in still air was an extraordinary pressure required, upon four minutes' notice, to show the capacity of the water plant, and as a means of measuring the rental to be paid. This stipulation has no bearing upon the duty of the defendant to furnish a supply of water "adequate for the extinguishment of fire" as provided in sections 2, 3, 5, and 6 of the contract. These provisions in sections 2, 3, 5, and 6 were in force at all times, and it did not require four minutes' notice to make inadequate the pressure which threw the water "only 20 feet high, being only half way to the eaves." If the complaint had been that the ten streams or seven streams of specified height and size were not furnished, then the four minutes' notice should be alleged and shown, but not in this case.

Error.

(135 N. C. 493)

BRITTAIN v. WESTHALL

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

NONSUIT — APPEAL — REVIEW OF EVIDENCE — PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — EXISTENCE OF RELATION — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY — SUFFICIENCY.

1. On a motion to nonsuit or to dismiss under the statute, which is like a demurrer to evidence, the court is not permitted to pass upon the weight of the evidence, but the evidence must be accepted as true, and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and every fact which it tends to prove must be taken as established.

2. In a suit for a balance due on the price of lumber, alleged to have been purchased by T. as agent for defendant, a clause in a contract between T. and the defendant under which the latter agreed to furnish the money with which T. was to buy the lumber, the title to the lumber to remain in the defendant, the prices to be fixed by agreement between them and the purchases to be made for and in the name of the defendant, was evidence fit to be considered by the jury upon the question of agency.

3. Testimony by the plaintiff that he sold the lumber to T. and defendant under the contract, that T. said he was buying the lumber for defendant, who furnished the money, and that plaintiff sold on defendant's credit, was proper evidence on the question of agency.

4. If an agent is authorized to buy for cash to be furnished by the principal, and he violates his instructions and buys on credit, and the principal thereafter receives the goods so bought by his agent and appropriates them to his own use, he is liable for the price, unless he can show that he furnished his agent with the necessary funds to buy the lumber, and the latter nevertheless bought on a credit, and that the principal received the goods without any notice of that fact, and will be prejudiced if he is made to pay for them.

5. In a suit for a balance due on the price of lumber, alleged to have been purchased of plaintiff by T. as agent for defendant, checks given plaintiff by T., bearing an entry on the face, in plaintiff's handwriting, that they were given for lumber bought for defendant, were admissible only in corroboration of plaintiff's testimony that he was told by T. that he was buying for defendant, and were not competent as substantive testimony, though the checks were in defendant's possession.

6. In a suit for the price of lumber alleged to have been purchased by one as agent for defendant, evidence examined, and held sufficient to require submission to the jury of the question of agency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County; Neal, Judge.

Action by D. M. Brittain against W. H. Westhall. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

L. L. Witherspoon and M. H. Yount, for appellant. Self & Whitener, for appellee.

WALKER, J. The plaintiff brought this action before a justice of the peace to recover the sum of $182, the balance claimed to be due for lumber sold and delivered to the defendant through one J. A. Townsend, who, the plaintiff alleged, was the agent of defendant to buy the lumber, but this allegation was denied by the defendant, and he also denied that he is indebted to the plaintiff in any amount. The justice gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed, and the superior court, after hearing the evidence, nonsuited the plaintiff on motion of the defendant, and the latter accepted and appealed.

The case turns upon the question whether the said Townsend, at the time the lumber was purchased, was the agent of the defendant and authorized to buy for him as he did. In order to establish the affirmative of this issue joined between the parties, the plaintiff introduced in evidence an agreement between Townsend and Westhall, dated January 13, 1903, by which the former agreed to ship to the latter all the lumber to be manufactured from timber taken from, and to be taken from, the land described in a certain deed of trust made by Townsend to A. S. Abernathy, as well as from all other land the timber on which the said Westhall had already contracted or thereafter contracted to buy, and all other lumber which Townsend should buy from any and all other persons. It was further agreed that Westhall should credit Townsend on the debt secured by the deed of trust with the money due for lumber manufactured from timber cut on the land described in the deed of trust, at certain prices specified in the contract, and that Townsend should receive credit at the same prices for the lumber bought by him and shipped to the defendant, with certain deductions. The contract contains this clause: "Said party of the second part is to furnish to the party of the first part, at his discretion, such sums of money as may be necessary for him, the said party of the first part, to pay for such lumber as he may buy from such other person or persons, but the said party of the first part shall buy such lumber only at such prices as shall be agreed upon between him and the party of the second part, and said purchases of lumber so made by the party of the first part shall always be in the name of and for the party of the second part, in whom the title shall always be and remain. It is understood and agreed between the parties that the party of the second part is not to pay for or become chargeable with the cost of logging or manufacturing into lumber the timber taken from said land mentioned and described in said deed of trust, or for the timber bought by or to be bought by the party of the second part, nor is he to pay for or become chargeable with the cost of hauling the timber from said land to the place of manufacturing the same into lumber, or for hauling said lumber from the place of manufacture to the place of shipment."

The plaintiff, examined in his own behalf, testified that he sold the lumber in 1903 to Townsend, who said that he was buying it for Westhall; that he sold it on Westhall's credit, and Townsend said that Westhall was to furnish the money. The plaintiff hauled the lumber to the railroad station and turned it over to Townsend, who paid for it with checks drawn by him on the bank, payable to the plaintiff's order. On the face of each check was this indorsement in the plaintiff's handwriting: "This check for lumber bought for W. H. Westhall." The defendant objected to the introduction of the checks; the objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted. The other testimony was not objected to. The plaintiff further testified that he had been paid $250 on the contract and sale of the lumber, and that there is still due him a balance of $182 by the defendant. The latter told the plaintiff that he had possession of a part of the lumber, and the plaintiff saw about 10,000 feet of the lumber in the possession of the defendant after he took charge of Townsend's property. The lumber was worth $10.50 per thousand feet. Townsend had become a bankrupt and left the state, and the court ordered his property to be turned over to the plaintiff. The plaintiff knew nothing of the written contract or its contents until after he had sold the lumber to Townsend. He relied on the latter's statement that he was buying for Westhall. A witness, A. S. Abernathy, testified that he had a conversation with the plaintiff before this suit was brought, in which he said that Townsend told him he bought the lumber for Westhall, though the plaintiff did not claim that Westhall was liable.

It is well settled that on a motion to nonsuit or to dismiss under the statute, which is like a demurrer to evidence, the court is not permitted to pass upon the weight of the evidence, but the evidence must be accepted as true, and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and every fact which it tends to prove must be taken as established, as the jury, if the case had been submitted to them, might have found those facts upon the testimony. Purnell v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953; Hopkins v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 463, 42 S. E. 902. Tested by this rule, we think there was some evidence which tended to show that Townsend was acting as agent for the defendant when he bought the lumber. The clause in the contract between Townsend and the defendant under which the latter agreed to furnish the money with which Townsend was to buy the lumber, the title to the lumber to remain in the defendant, the prices to be fixed by agreement between them, and the purchases to be made for and in the name of the defendant, was evidence fit to be considered by the jury upon the question of agency. If Townsend was buying the lumber for the purpose of selling it to the defendant, such a stipulation as the one we have just mentioned would hardly have been inserted in the contract. If such was the nature of the transaction, why did the defendant furnish the money to make the purchases and require that the lumber should be bought in his name and for him, and that the title should be in him? This is rather an unusual method of buying property through one who is not the agent of the purchaser, but who is buying for himself for the purpose of reselling. If Townsend was buying on his own account, but under an agreement to sell the lumber so bought by him to the defendant, we do not see why the purchase should be made for the defendant and in his name, and why the title should vest in the defendant at the very time the purchase was made. It may be that all this can be explained, but it at least shows that the plaintiff is entitled to have the contract submitted to the jury for their consideration, in connection with any other evidence which may tend to strengthen or weaken the argument based upon it.

But the plaintiff himself testified that he sold the lumber to Townsend and Westhall under the contract; that Townsend said he was buying the lumber for Westhall, who furnished the money; and the plaintiff further testified that he sold the lumber on Westhall's credit. This evidence was not objected to by the defendant, and we are unable to see why it was not proper for the jury to consider it. It is true that an agency to buy for cash does not imply authority in the agent to pledge the credit of the principal. An agent can only contract for his principal within the limit of his authority, and persons dealing with an agent having limited powers must generally inquire as to the extent of his authority. But if the agent is authorized to buy for cash to be furnished by the principal, and he violates his instructions and buys on credit, and the principal thereafter receives the goods so bought by his agent and appropriates them to his own use, he is liable for the price, unless he can show that he furnished his agent with the necessary funds to buy the lumber, and the latter nevertheless bought on a credit, and that the principal received the goods without any notice of that fact, and will be prejudiced if he is made to pay for them.

In this case there is evidence that the defendant had the lumber, or, at least, some of it, in his possession, and told the plaintiff that he had some of it, and it does not appear whether he had supplied his alleged agent with sufficient funds to make the purchases from time to time. Surely he should not be allowed to keep the lumber if he had failed in this respect and the lumber had not been paid for. Patton v. Brittain, 32 N. C. 8; Miller v. Lumber Co., 66 N. C. 508; Brown v. Smith, 67 N. C. 245.

There is evidence to the effect that the de-defendant stated to the plaintiff that the property was given to him by order of the court, but the jury might have rejected this testimony and found the facts in accordance with the other testimony in the case and the plaintiff's contention, and the rule is that the plaintiff is entitled to have the case go to the jury, if in any view of the evidence, or by any combination of the facts which the testimony tends to prove, he may be able to recover.

The evidence in the case in support of the plaintiff's cause of action may not be very conclusive, and the defendant may show that he is the rightful owner of the lumber; but we are not at liberty to express any opinion as to these matters, nor are we permitted to weigh the testimony and decide where the preponderance is. We can only pass upon the question whether there was any evidence legally sufficient to be submitted to the jury for the purpose of sustaining the plaintiff's side of the issue. We think there was some evidence of that character upon the record as now presented. The entries on the checks could be competent only in corroboration of the plaintiff, who testified that Townsend told him he was buying for Westhall, and he (the plaintiff) sold the lumber on Westhall's credit. We do not now perceive upon what ground they can be competent as substantive testimony. The mere declaration of the plaintiff that the checks were given for lumber bought for Westhall is not competent even to prove that they were so given, as against the defendant, nor that Townsend was authorized to buy on the credit of Westhall, nor to prove any other material fact. It is merely an unsworn declaration, which is not substantive proof, and the fact that the checks went into the possession of Westhall does not change its character or impart to it probative force.

The judgment of nonsuit must be set aside, and a new trial awarded. Error.

(135 N. C. 556)

NATIONAL UNION BANK OF MARYLAND
v. HOLLINGSWORTH et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

PARTNERSHIP—DISSOLUTION—DEATH OF PARTNER—NOTICE—SURVIVING PARTNER—NOTES—INDORSEMENT—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY—CORPORATIONS—ORGANIZATIONS—TRANSFER OF ASSETS—DEBTS OF CORPORATORS—LIABILITY OF CORPORATION.

1. Where, in an action on a note against a firm which had been dissolved by the death of two of the partners, the personal representatives of such deceased partners were not made parties, their liability was not in issue.

2. Where a dissolution of a firm occurs by operation of law, by the death of one of the partners, the giving of notice of such dissolution is not necessary to prevent liability from attaching to the estate of the deceased partner or of the surviving partners for any future contracts made in the name of the firm.

3. A surviving partner has no power after dissolution to renew or indorse a firm note in the name of the firm.

4. A surviving partner, who, more than two years after dissolution of the firm, indorsed a note in the firm name for the renewal of notes outstanding similarly indorsed, was individually liable on such indorsement, though it did not bind the firm.

5. Where a surviving partner of a firm, who was personally liable on an indorsement of a note in the firm name without authority, organized a corporation, and transferred the assets of the firm to such corporation in payment of his subscription to the corporation's stock, without intent to defraud his creditors, the corporation was not liable for such debt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by the National Union Bank of Maryland against J. B. Hollingsworth and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff for less than the relief demanded, both parties appeal. Reversed on defendants' appeal, and affirmed on plaintiff's appeal.

On and prior to the 5th day of September, 1895, O. L. Cottrell, A. S. Watkins, and W. S. Robertson, of Richmond, Va., under the firm name of Cottrell, Watkins & Co., conducted a hardware business in the city of Richmond. This firm, some years prior to said date, purchased the stock of goods of Van Gilder & Brown, of Asheville, N. C., and formed a copartnership with Joseph E. Dickerson, of said city of Asheville, under the firm name and style of J. E. Dickerson & Co., for the purpose of conducting a hardware business at Asheville. The business of said firm was kept separate and apart from that of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. Dickerson had no interest in the business of the Richmond firm. On September 5, 1895, O. L. Cottrell died, and from that time until December 12, 1895, the surviving partners both of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. and J. E. Dickerson & Co. continued the business with a view of winding up both concerns. On December 12, 1895, J. E. Dickerson purchased from the surviving partners of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. and the administrator of the deceased partner their interest in the assets and property of the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. At said date the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. was indebted to the firm of Watkins, Cottrell & Co. in the sum of about \$16,000. Dickerson agreed to assume and pay this amount and all other debts of the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co., and, in addition thereto, to pay to the surviving partners and the representatives of the deceased partner of the firm of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. the sum of \$16,500, making a total indebtedness to the firm of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. of \$32,500. Of this amount, he paid \$8,000 in cash, and thereafter \$2,000; leaving an indebtedness in May, 1897, of about \$23,000. On March 7, 1896, A. S. Watkins, another member of the firm of Cottrell, Watkins & Co., died. Dickerson agreed to reduce the debt of \$23,000 from time to time, until, within three years, it was to be extinguished. On May 7, 1897, Robertson, the surviving partner, together with the administrators of Cottrell and Watkins, learned for the first time that Dickerson had organized a corporation with a capital stock of \$30,000, of which he owned $\frac{20}{50}$, the balance thereof being in the hands of W. H. Penland and S. T. Dorsett. Upon being asked for security for the indebtedness due Cottrell, Watkins & Co., as aforesaid, Dickerson agreed to deposit with Robertson his certificate of stock in the corporation of the J. E. Dickerson Company. The certificate of stock was not actually delivered at that time, as it had not been printed and issued; but on May 18, 1897, he complied with his promise by inclosing to Cottrell, Watkins & Co., at Richmond, a certificate for 200 shares of stock in the J. E. Dickerson Company, with a power of attorney, signed in blank, to transfer the same, to be held as collateral security for the debt of \$23,000 due Cottrell, Watkins & Co. as aforesaid, and to indemnify the said firm against loss on account of certain indorsements which it had made for Dickerson on some notes of the late firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. in one of the Richmond banks. These notes they subsequently paid. In consideration of giving this security, Dickerson was to have five years in which to pay the debt of \$23,000. Robertson, the surviving partner, and the administrators of the deceased partners, at the time of taking said stock as collateral security, had no knowledge or suspicion that Dickerson was financially embarrassed. They accepted the stock without inquiry or investigation as to the financial condition of Dickerson. From the date of the receipt of said stock, May 18, 1897, until September 22, 1897, there was no communication between Dickerson and the holders of the stock. On September 23, 1897, Robertson, surviving partner, learning of the failure of the bank in Asheville of which Dickerson was a director, visited Asheville for the purpose of looking into the condition of the affairs of the J. E. Dickerson Company. After a conference with Dickerson and his counsel, and an examination into the assets and affairs of the corporation, on September 23, 1897, the said J. E. Dickerson, in discharge and extinguishment of the said indebtedness to Cottrell, Watkins & Co., amounting to about \$20,000, sold and transferred to W. S. Robertson, surviving partner of Cottrell, Watkins & Co., all of his right, title, and interest in the said 200 shares of the capital stock of the J. E. Dickerson Company, which had been held by the said Robertson as collateral security as aforesaid. The remaining 10 shares of the capital stock of said company were also transferred to said Robertson by the owners thereof. J. E. Dickerson also transferred and assigned all of his right, title, and interest in the goods, chattels, bills, notes, and other assets of every kind and character owned by or belonging to the J. E. Dickerson Company, together with a certain sewing machine business owned by J. E. Dickerson, and all sewing machines, etc., belonging to and used by him in said sewing machine business, and all accounts due him in said business. On the same day the said J. E. Dickerson executed an assignment to the said W. S. Robertson, surviving partner as aforesaid, for all his right, title, and interest in all property of every kind and character belonging to the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co., as well as the corporation known as the J. E. Dickerson Company, and also all the capital stock of said corporation. On the same day the said W. S. Robertson, surviving partner as aforesaid, executed to J. E. Dickerson a full release of the said indebtedness due the firm of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. as aforesaid. Robertson at the same time and in the same instrument agreed to collect certain notes therein set forth, which had been held by the firm of Cottrell, Watkins & Co., and pay the proceeds thereof to the wife and son of J. E. Dickerson in the proportions therein set forth. On September 30, 1897, Robertson, surviving partner as aforesaid, filed a bill in equity, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina against the J. E. Dickerson Company and J. E. Dickerson, trading as J. E. Dickerson & Co., reciting the matters and things hereinbefore set forth, and further setting forth that certain attachments had been levied upon the property of the J. E. Dickerson Company, against the said J. E. Dickerson, trading as J. E. Dickerson & Co., and asking that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the stock, assets, and other property of the J. E. Dickerson Company, and to pay all of its debts and wind up its business, and pay over to the plaintiff the balance remaining in his hands. On September 30, 1897, an order was made in said cause appointing J. B. Rankin receiver of said corporation, and of its property of every kind and character. The said receiver executed bond in accordance with the provisions of said order, and took into his possession the property of said corporation. Thereafter other orders were made in said cause from time to time in regard to winding up the business of the corporation, and disposition of the assets; and on November 6, 1897, an order was made allowing the attorneys of the plaintiff to enter a special appearance for the purpose of moving to dismiss the bill on the ground that the suit was collusive, and was filed by both plaintiff and defendant for the purpose of defrauding other parties in interest. No further action was taken in this suit. The record shows that on February 24, 1898, J. E. Dickerson, W. H. Penland, and S. T. Dorsett filed in the office of the Secretary of State articles of incorporation of the J. E. Dickerson Company, and that pursuant thereto the secretary issued to said company a certificate of incorporation bearing date February 27, 1896. The capital stock of the corporation was fixed at \$5,000, with the privilege of increasing it to \$100,000 divided into shares of \$100 each. Books of subscription were opened, and capital stock subscribed as follows: J. E. Dickerson, 48 shares, \$4,800; S. T. Dorsett, 1 share, \$100; W. H. Penland, 1 share, \$100. And Dickerson advanced the amount to pay for the said 2 shares. On March 14, 1896, at a meeting of the stockholders, by-laws were adopted, and the following officers elected: W. H. Penland, president; J. E. Dickerson, secretary and treasurer; and S. T. Dorsett, W. H. Penland, and J. E. Dickerson, directors. And the following entry was made: "The directors were directed to consider the advisability of purchasing the stock and good will of J. E. Dickerson & Co., and of increasing the capital stock from \$5,000 to \$30,000." At an adjourned meeting, March 17, 1896, it was voted to increase the capital stock to \$30,000, whereupon J. E. Dickerson subscribed 250 shares, and the following indorsement was made on the minutes: "The secretary and treasurer was instructed to purchase the stock and good will of J. E. Dickerson & Co., for the corporation at a valuation as shown by the inventory to be taken on August 1, 1896; the corporation to take the business after August 1, 1896." J. E. Dickerson executed his note to the corporation for the capital stock subscribed by him, and thereafter said note was paid by a transfer to the corporation of the goods and assets of J. E. Dickerson & Co. Books were opened by the J. E. Dickerson Company, and the business conducted by the corporation. Certificate No. 1 was issued to J. E. Dickerson for 290 shares of the capital stock of the company; said certificate bearing date May 1, 1897, and indorsed September 25, 1897, as follows: "For value received I hereby sell, assign and transfer to W. S. Robertson, surviving partner of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. 290 shares of the within mentioned stock of the J. E. Dickerson Company and hereby constitute and appoint Fred Moore, attorney irrevocable to transfer the said stock on the books of said company with full power of substitution in the premises." Signed by J. E. Dickerson, and duly attested.

There was evidence tending to show that the stationery used by the J. E. Dickerson Company, upon which was printed "J. E. Dickerson & Co.," was that remaining on hand of J. E. Dickerson & Co., and that letters were written by the Cottrell-Watkins Company, addressed to the J. E. Dickerson Company and J. E. Dickerson & Co., in regard to the business transactions, etc., and that invoices were made out to J. E. Dickerson & Co. There was also evidence that checks were signed, in the course of business of the J. E. Dickerson Company, in the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co. It was also in evidence that the Asheville bank kept an account of J. E. Dickerson and J. E. Dickerson & Co., and that notes were indorsed in the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co.; that actions were brought in a justice's court in the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co. upon accounts due the firm prior to the death of Cottrell. The business was conducted at the same place, and the sign was not removed.

On July 15, 1897, the defendant J. B. Hollingsworth executed his promissory note payable to J. E. Dickerson & Co., in the sum of $1,900, due and payable four months after date at the First National Bank of Asheville. Said note was indorsed "J. E. Dickerson & Co.," to the said bank, and by it indorsed to the plaintiff, the National Union Bank of Maryland. When the note became due, it was presented for payment to the First National Bank of Asheville, and also to J. E. Dickerson, and to the defendant Hollingsworth, and payment thereof was refused and the note protested.

The plaintiff alleged and introduced testimony tending to show that on May 25, 1893, the plaintiff bank at the request of the First National Bank of Asheville, rediscounted for said bank several thousand dollars of notes, which notes had been discounted by, and were then the property of, the First National Bank of Asheville, and which were, for valuable consideration, and before maturity, indorsed by the Asheville bank to the plaintiff, thereby becoming the property of the plaintiff. Among said notes were several which bore the indorsement of J. E. Dickerson & Co., which was at that time the firm composed of J. E. Dickerson, O. L. Cottrell, A. S. Watkins, and W. S. Robertson; one being a note by Hollingsworth for $4,900. The plaintiff bank made an investigation of the financial standing and responsibility of the makers and indorsers of said notes, and ascertained that Cottrell, Watkins, and Robertson were solvent and worth large amounts of property. Said notes were not paid at maturity, but renewals were executed by the original makers, and made payable to the defendants J. E. Dickerson & Co., and indorsed by J. E. Dickerson & Co. and the First National Bank of Asheville, and by said bank deposited with the plaintiff, "which said renewals were accepted by the plaintiff in settlement of the original notes referred to, and from May 25, 1893, up to and including July 15, 1897, during a long course of business, the original makers of said notes, not being able to meet them at maturity, executed renewals thereof, which were indorsed by the defendants J. E. Dickerson & Co. and by the First National Bank of Asheville, and were afterwards deposited by the First National Bank of Asheville with the plaintiff in payment of the notes hereinbefore referred to, and that said note of $1,900 was given in renewal of other notes, the original of which was dated some time in the year 1893." The defendants deny that at any time after September 5, 1895, the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. indorsed any note or notes to the First National Bank of Asheville or the plaintiff in this action. The plaintiff alleges that it rediscounted these notes for the Asheville Bank, relying upon the financial worth and responsibility of Cottrell, Watkins, and Robertson, and it had no notice of the dissolution of the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co., and that no such notice was ever published or advertised in any paper in the state of North Carolina or elsewhere, and that no notice whatever was given to the plaintiff of said dissolution, and that the plaintiff knew nothing of the attempted dissolution of the firm until the failure of the bank at Asheville. J. E. Dickerson was director of the Asheville bank, and continued such until its failure. The note for $1,900 was executed by Hollingsworth as an accommodation, for the purpose of enabling the J. E. Dickerson Company to receive the proceeds thereof, and the proceeds were credited on the books of the Asheville bank to an account in the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co. for the use and benefit of the J. E. Dickerson Company; and the said J. E. Dickerson concealed the fact from the plaintiff, as well as from the Asheville Bank, of the withdrawal of Cottrell, Watkins & Co. from the firm, etc. The plaintiff further alleged that J. E. Dickerson continued the business at the old stand, and under the old name of J. E. Dickerson & Co., advertising to the world that the business was being conducted, as it had been for many years prior thereto, under the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co., and that, at the time the said J. E. Dickerson pretended to purchase from his copartners the said business, the said J. E. Dickerson and the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. were largely indebted to various persons, including the plaintiff, in large sums of money—about $20,000—and, in order to cheat and defraud the plaintiff and his other creditors of the money which he and the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. owed them, the said Dickerson endeavored to have the business incorporated under the name of the J. E. Dickerson Company; that the incorporators and stockholders of said corporation were W. H. Penland and S. T. Dorsett, and that they never in fact owned any of the stock of said corporation; that it was subscribed for, by them at the request of J. E. Dickerson, in order to consummate the fraud. All of these allegations were denied by the defendants, J. E. Rankin, receiver, and the J. E. Dickerson Company.

W. H. Penland was cashier and S. T. Dorsett teller, of the First National Bank of Asheville during the time that the transactions herein were being conducted. Penland and Dorsett knew of the death of Cottrell, but there was no direct evidence that the president of the bank knew it. The defendant Robertson testified that he knew nothing of the indebtedness to the Asheville Bank or to the plaintiff bank of J. E. Dickerson or J. E. Dickerson & Co.; that he did not learn of the existence of this note until a few days before this suit was brought. He denied that there was any purpose on his part, in taking the security from Dickerson, to defraud any of the creditors of Dickerson; and that the debts of J. E. Dickerson Company have been paid in full. J. E. Dickerson further testified that the original note of $4,900, and the several notes given in renewal thereof, were made for the accommodation of the Asheville Bank, to enable them to discount them and to get the money on it, and that neither J. E. Dickerson & Co., nor the J. E. Dickerson Company, received any benefit whatever therefrom; that the proceeds of the note were credited to Hollingsworth, and afterwards charged to "bills payable."

The defendants who answered tendered the following issues: "(1) Were the defendants J. E. Dickerson and W. S. Robertson and O. L. Cottrell and A. S. Watkins copartners trading as J. E. Dickerson & Co. on the 15th of July, 1897? (2) Did J. E. Dickerson, W. S. Robertson, O. L. Cottrell, and A. S. Watkins, under the firm name and style of J. E. Dickerson & Co., and the defendant J. E. Dickerson Company, for value, indorse the note sued on to the First National Bank of Asheville? (3) Did the First National Bank of Asheville thereafter indorse the note sued on to the plaintiff? (4) Was said note duly presented to J. E. Dickerson, W. S. Robertson, O. L. Cottrell, and A. S. Watkins, trading as J. E. Dickerson & Co., when it became due, and was the same duly protested as to them? (5) Did the defendant J. E. Dickerson & Co. receive the benefit and advantage of the money paid by the plaintiff for the note sued on? (6) Did the defendant assign and sell on or about the 27th of September, 1897, at a time when it was insolvent, its assets and property to W. S. Robertson, with intent to defraud its creditors?" His honor declined to submit the issues tendered, and in lieu thereof submitted the following: "(1) Are the defendants J. B. Hollingsworth, J. E. Dickerson & Co., and the First National Bank of Asheville indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what sum? (2) Is the defendant J. E. Dickerson Company indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount? (3) Is the defendant W. S. Robertson personally indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount? (4) At the time the action was commenced and attachment levied, did the defendants W. S. Robertson and J. E. Rankin, receiver, hold the property levied on in this cause in trust to satisfy the present claim and demand of the plaintiff?" The only defendants who answered were the J. E. Dickerson Company and J. E. Rankin, receiver, but the defendant Robertson, after answers filed, having been made a party defendant, and served by publication of summons, adopted the answer filed by his codefendants. The defendants excepted to the refusal to submit the issues tendered, and to the issues as submitted. The defendants submitted a series of instructions presenting their contentions, and requested the court to charge the jury in accordance therewith, all of which were declined. His honor charged the jury that, if they believed the evidence, they should answer the first, second, and fourth issues, "Yes." To the refusal to give the instructions asked, and to the instructions given, the defendants Rankin, receiver, Robertson, and the J. E. Dickerson Company excepted, and appealed from the judgment rendered upon the verdict.

Moore & Rollins and Geo. L. Christian, for plaintiff. Julius C. Martin and Chas. A. Webb, for defendants.

CONNOR, J. This action is prosecuted by the plaintiff for the purpose, first, of recovering a judgment against J. E. Dickerson & Co., including the defendant Robertson; second, against the J. E. Dickerson Company; and, third, for the purpose of subjecting the assets of the J. E. Dickerson Company in the hands of the receiver to the payment of such judgment. There is no controversy in regard to the liability of Hollingsworth, the maker of the note, or of J. E. Dickerson and the Asheville Bank as indorsers. His honor having instructed the jury to answer the third issue "No," upon this appeal the question as to the liability of Robertson is eliminated. The personal representatives of Cottrell and Watkins not being parties, no question is presented in respect to the liability of the deceased partners.

We take it to be elementary that the death of Cottrell worked, by operation of law, a dissolution of the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. George on Partnership, 257; Bates on Partnership, § 610.

It is equally well settled that, where the dissolution is brought about by operation of law, by the death of one of the partners, it is not necessary to give notice, to prevent liability attaching to the estate of the deceased partner, or to either of the surviving partners, for any future contracts made in the name of the firm. In Marlett v. Jackman, 8 Allen, 287, Bigelow, C. J., says: "Two text-writers, however, of great learning and authority, have laid down the rule that, when a copartnership is dissolved by the death of one of the copartners, no notice of the dissolution is necessary, and the surviving partners are not bound by any new contract entered into by one of the firm in the partnership name after dissolution, although it is made with a person who had previously dealt with the firm, and had no notice or knowledge that it was terminated by the death of one of the members." Citing Kent's

Commentaries, Story on Partnership, and Colyer on Partnership. The learned chief justice further says: "Starting, then, with the admitted proposition that death works a dissolution of a firm, and that thereby the estate of the deceased partner and his personal representatives, as well as his share of the assets of the firm, are absolutely relieved and absolved from any new contracts or subsequent transactions of the surviving partners which are not necessary to the settlement of the joint business, the inquiry at once arises as to the effect of such a dissolution, caused by the act of God, on the relative rights and duties of the surviving copartner. One of the essential elements of the contract of copartnership consists in the right which each member has to the continuance of all his associates as members of the firm. * * * When, therefore, by the death of a member of the firm, his personal liability ceases, and his estate is by operation of law absolved from all future contracts and transactions entered into in the name of the firm, it would seem to follow as a necessary consequence that the power of the surviving copartners to bind each other by new contracts and engagements must at once cease. The copartnership would then be terminated not only as to the deceased partner and his estate, but also as to the other members of the firm. The delectus personarum would not longer exist."

It seems to be equally well settled that a surviving partner has no power after dissolution to renew or indorse a note in the name of the firm. "The dissolution operates as a revocation of all authority for making new contracts. It does not revoke the authority to arrange, liquidate, settle, and pay those before created. The implied power of the ex partner does not extend to giving a note or to drawing a bill in the firm's name. Nor could he bind the firm by a check in its name. Renewals of outstanding bills or notes of the firm stand on the same footing, and, as the ex partner could not draw a bill or note for a firm debt, neither could he renew a bill or note of the firm given for their debt." Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 870. "Where a note is issued by a partner after dissolution, it will not bind the other partners, even though given for a debt due by the firm." Id. 871. "Where the dissolution is by the death of one of the partners, the surviving partner may indorse a note payable to the firm in his own name." Bristol v. Sprague, 8 Wend. 423; Whitman v. Leonard, 3 Pick. 177; Charles v. Remick, 156 Ill. 327, 49 N. E. 970; Woodson v. Wood, 84 Va. 478, 5 S. E. 277; Lusk v. Smith, 8 Barb. 570; Myatts v. Bell, 41 Ala. 222. In Abell v. Sutton, 3 East, 110, Lord Kenyon said in regard to the liability of a partner for an indorsement made after the dissolution of the firm: "To contend that this liability to be bound by the acts of his partner extends to times subsequent to the dissolution is to my mind a most monstrous proposition. A man in that case could never know when he is to be at peace, and retired from all the concerns of a partnership." 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. 214. "A note given by one partner after dissolution of the partnership does not bind the other partner, although given in the partnership name, and in consideration or settlement of a subsisting partnership liability." Haddock v. Crocheron, 32 Tex. 277, 5 Am. Rep. 244; White v. Tudor, 24 Tex. 639, 78 Am. Dec. 128; Fellows v. Wyman, 33 N. H. 351.

It is claimed, however, that the note in suit was given in renewal of notes executed by the same persons. The contention in regard to this phase of the case is: The defendant Hollingsworth executed a note payable to J. E. Dickerson & Co. for $4,900 in August, 1893, which was indorsed to and discounted by the Bank of Asheville, and indorsed to and rediscounted by the plaintiff bank. This note at maturity was returned to the Asheville bank, indorsed for collection, and charged to said bank by the plaintiff bank. Upon its receipt by the Asheville bank, it was credited to the plaintiff bank. The Asheville bank then procured a renewal note from the same parties, which was sent to the plaintiff bank for rediscount. It was in evidence that the plaintiff bank was under no obligation to rediscount the note thus taken in renewal. It would seem that each rediscount by the plaintiff bank was a separate and distinct transaction. It was in evidence that each note, as it was sent to the Asheville bank, and a new one taken, was marked "Paid," and surrendered to the makers. Whether these transactions, resulting in the execution of the note in suit, operated as a payment of the original note, it is not necessary to decide. What constitutes a payment, otherwise than by money, is usually a mixed question of law and fact, dependent frequently upon the intention of the parties. It is undoubtedly true that the renewal of the note secured by mortgage or collateral will not operate to discharge the security. It is equally well settled that the giving of a note or draft for an existing indebtedness does not operate, unless so agreed by the parties, to extinguish the original indebtedness, and upon the dishonor of the note or draft the creditor may sue upon the original consideration. "A note given by all the parties to pay for the goods delivered would not extinguish the original undertaking, like a bond or judgment taken for it. The plaintiffs might still maintain their action for goods sold and delivered, provided they produced and delivered up the note on trial, or proved it was destroyed." Wilson v. Jennings, 15 N. C. 90, cited in Mauney v. Coit, 86 N. C. 471. "The general doctrine is that the mere giving of a note for a debt is not a discharge or payment of the debt, and the note may be surrendered, and a recovery had on the debt. But if there are any facts tending to show that the note, even when given by one of several joint debtors, was received in payment of the debt, then it becomes a question for the jury to determine whether it was so received, and, if they find that it was, then no action can be maintained on the debt." Lee's Administrators v. Fontaine, 10 Ala. 755, 44 Am. Dec. 505. In Spear v. Atkinson, 23 N. C. 262, the plaintiffs sold a bill of goods to the defendants, for which they gave their promissory note. Afterwards one of the defendants drew a bill of exchange in favor of the plaintiffs, and took up the promissory note. The bill was presented for payment and dishonored. There was no proof that the bill had been returned to the drawer, or that the plaintiffs ever offered to surrender it at the trial. In an action in assumpsit on the original bill of goods, the plaintiffs were nonsuited, and the judgment affirmed; Daniel, J., saying: "If the plaintiffs, therefore, had surrendered the bill, even on the trial, they might have recovered upon the original consideration. For the taking of the note first, and then the bill, did not merge the original consideration, as a bond would have done." The right of the creditor in such case is to sue upon the original consideration or contract. If, by any act of his, either of the original debtors is released, as by extending the time of payment upon valuable consideration or otherwise, such defense must be set up by such debtor. This action being upon the note executed July 15, 1897, more than two years after the death of Cottrell, and the dissolution of the partnership, and also after the purchase by Dickerson of the interest of the surviving partners in the assets of the old firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co., the action cannot be maintained as upon a bond indorsed by the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. J. E. Dickerson is, of course, individually liable, and the fact that he indorsed the note as J. E. Dickerson & Co. in no manner affects his individual liability. It would be a singular result, and work a great hardship upon partners, if they could be bound upon indorsements made by their late partners under the circumstances existing in this case.

The plaintiff, however, says that it is entitled to judgment against the corporation, the J. E. Dickerson Company, and his honor was of that opinion. This contention is based upon the theory that it permitted its business to be conducted in the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co.; that the business sign was never changed, the same stationery was used, goods were bought and sold in the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co., the correspondence was carried on in that name, and the account at the bank was kept in that name. There can be no question as to the validity of the articles of incorporation. Whatever may have been the motive of Dickerson in forming the corporation, it became a de jure as well as a de facto corporation, and could only be bound upon contract made in its corporate name, and for corporate purposes, or for debts for which it had received the consideration. This note was never payable to the corporation, was not executed in consideration of any debt due the corporation, was never indorsed by any officer of the corporation in his official capacity, and it is difficult to perceive how it could have become liable upon the cause of action set forth in the complaint; that is, the promissory note of Hollingsworth. The cashier of the bank, its teller, and one of its directors knew of the existence of the corporation, and knew that it had purchased the assets and stock of J. E. Dickerson & Co., and that J. E. Dickerson & Co. had ceased to exist in respect to the hardware business. It is not necessary for us to decide to what extent the knowledge of these persons is to be imputed to the bank, as fixing it with notice of the status of the parties. Certainly, if his honor was correct in telling the jury that upon the evidence the firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. was liable upon the indorsement, this would exclude the idea that the J. E. Dickerson Company was liable upon the same indorsement. It must be kept in mind that this action is upon the indorsement upon the note, and not upon any open account or other form of indebtedness by the corporation to the Asheville Bank. In order to maintain its action against the J. E. Dickerson Company, the plaintiff must connect the corporation with, and make it a party to, the note of Hollingsworth, because it was only in this way that it acquired any right of action. We therefore conclude that upon the issue as submitted to the jury, and upon the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, his honor was in error in charging the jury to answer the second issue in the affirmative.

The plaintiff says that, however this may be, J. E. Dickerson was, in any point of view, personally liable upon the indorsement, and that he formed the corporation for the purpose of defrauding his creditors; that pursuant thereto, and in execution of such fraudulent purpose, he transferred his property to the corporation; that the transfer of the stock followed by the absolute sale thereof to the defendant Robinson was a fraud upon his creditors. For the purpose of examining this phase of the case, the intent with which Dickerson formed the corporation of J. E. Dickerson Company is material only as a circumstance or fact to be considered by the jury in connection with other facts. He had a legal right to do so. In the transfer of the assets of J. E. Dickerson & Co. to said corporation, and taking in payment therefor the stock of said corporation, he committed no fraud upon his creditors, unless done with a fraudulent intent. The shares of stock represented the property which he put into the corporation, and were liable for his debts, as the property would have been. The deposit of this stock as collateral security for the debt due Cottrell, Watkins & Co. was based upon a valuable consideration, and was a valid transaction, as against his other creditors, in the absence of any fraudulent intent. The subsequent sale of the stock, in consideration of the release of the indebtedness to Cottrell, Watkins & Co., was, in the absence of fraud, valid against all persons except the creditors of the J. E. Dickerson Company. The payment of these creditors was assumed by Robertson, and it is in evidence that all of the creditors of the corporation, proving their claims pursuant to the orders in the suit in equity, have been paid.

The plaintiff, however, says that the corporation took the property subject to the debts of J. E. Dickerson or J. E. Dickerson & Co., or, in the language of the brief, "when a corporation takes the assets of an individual or partnership concern, and issues in payment therefor its stock, as was done in this case, the assets thus passing to the corporation remain liable for all of the debts of the concern." Upon this principle the plaintiff contends that the J. E. Dickerson Company is liable for the note in controversy. It seems well settled "that a corporation buying all the property of another corporation, and paying therefor in stock of the former corporation issued to the stockholders of the latter corporation, must either pay the obligations of the latter corporation, or have the property sold to pay such obligations." Cook on Corp. § 673. This doctrine is based upon the principle that corporate property is held in trust first for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation, and then for the stockholders, and that such trust attaches to it in the hands of the new corporation. In Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. L. & N. O. Transportation Co. (C. C.) 13 Fed. 516, McCrary, C. J., says: "A distinction with respect to transactions of this character exists between a corporation and a natural person. A natural person may sell all of his property for a fair consideration if the transaction is bona fide, and the buyer will not be required to take care that the seller provides for and pays all of his debts. A corporation, unlike a natural person, by disposing of all its property, may not only deprive itself of the means of paying its debts, but be deprived of corporate existence, and place itself beyond the reach of processes at law. At all events, equity cannot permit the owners of one corporation to organize another, and transfer from the former to the latter all of the corporate property, without paying all of the corporate debts." Taylor on Corp. 655. It is also said that, "where a corporation formed by and consisting of the members of a copartnership takes a conveyance or assignment of all of the assets of the partnership for the purpose of continuing the business, it is to be presumed that it has assumed the partnership debts, and it is prima facie liable therefor." Clark & Marshall on Corp. 346. The same writer says:

"But a corporation that has taken over the property of a partnership is not liable for the debts of the latter until it is shown that the sale was fraudulent as to the creditors of the latter, or that there was an express contract to assume such liability, or that the transaction was a mere continuation of the partnership."

All of the cases to which our attention has been called have arisen in an effort of the creditors of the first corporation or of the partnership to follow the property impressed with the trust into the new corporation. In Andres v. Morgan, Trustee, 62 Ohio St. 236, 56 N. E. 875, 78 Am. St. Rep. 712, the facts were that certain persons were conducting business as a partnership known as the Franklin Mill Company. The partnership being indebted, a corporation was chartered and organized; the property being transferred to the corporation; each partner taking stock representing his interest in the partnership property. The corporation, becoming insolvent, executed a deed of trust. The creditors of the partnership sought to prove their claims against the assets of the corporation. Marshall, J., says: "On this state of the case, it is very clear that the corporation was liable for this debt, whether it had expressly assumed the indebtedness of the partnership or not. It is not to be regarded as an ordinary sale of property by one to another. A partnership is a quasi legal entity. It owns property and has liabilities as such. Its creditors have a right to the payment of their claims from the partnership assets in preference to individual creditors, and have in equity a lien on the assets of the firm, that may be worked out through the partners. So that, when the partners transferred all of the property of the firm to the company, the partnership was dissolved, and the rights of its creditors followed the partners and the property into the corporation, and it was bound to discharge the debts of the partnership, having received the property of the partnership on which it had obtained credit. It could not retain the property and repudiate the liability."

A careful examination of the authorities fails to disclose any case in which the principle upon which a new corporation becomes liable by reason of taking the assets of the old corporation or a partnership is applied to the transfer of property by an individual in payment of his subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, in the absence of any finding that such transfer was made with intent to defraud his creditors. In Austin v. Tecumseh Bank (Neb.) 68 N. W. 628, 35 L. R. A. 444, 59 Am. St. Rep. 543, the facts were: Russell & Holmes were engaged in business as bankers. The plaintiff deposited with them the sum of $300, and received a certificate therefor. The firm went into liquidation, closed its business, and organized a corporation having the name of the Bank of Russell & Holmes, and engaged in the business of banking as the successor of said bankers, Russell & Holmes. Thereafter the Bank of Russell & Holmes went into liquidation and closed its business, when the defendant bank was duly organized and created by virtue of the national banking act. The plaintiff sued the defendant bank on his certificate of deposit, alleging that the defendant was organized, created, and came into possession of the property, assets, etc., of the Bank of Russell & Holmes, and of the late firm of Russell & Holmes, and that thereby the defendant bank became liable to the plaintiff for the deposit so received. The plaintiff alleged that the business of the defendant bank was carried on in the same building previously occupied by the Bank of Russell & Holmes, and that all the owners and officers of said bank became stockholders of the corporation bank, and, as such, managed and controlled its business, whereby the defendant assumed this indebtedness and became liable therefor. The plaintiff further alleged that the Bank of Russell & Holmes was wholly insolvent. The defendant denied the material allegations of the complaint. The circuit court gave to the jury a peremptory charge to find for the defendant. Upon appeal, Post, C. J., said: "The judgment of the district court appears to rest upon the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to state a cause of action against this defendant, and our investigation of the subject has led to the same result. It will be observed from a careful reading of the petition that it is not charged that the Bank of Russell & Holmes became a national bank; that said corporation was reorganized under the national banking act or otherwise; that its liabilities, or any part thereof, were in fact assumed by the defendant herein, or that the latter did not in good faith, in the usual course of business, purchase and pay for the rights and property therein described." After discussing the question involved, the chief justice concludes: "There are to be found in the Reports and text-books expressions apparently sustaining the proposition that a corporation which upon its organization succeeds to the business and property of another corporation or firm is from that fact alone chargeable with the indebtedness of the latter. It is, for instance, said by Mr. Beach in his excellent work on the Law of Private Corporations, § 360, that 'where an old established corporation sells out to a newly organized one, and turns over all its property, the new company becomes liable upon the debts and contracts of the old.' The strict accuracy of that statement, may, we think, be doubted, in view of the omission therefrom of any reference to the purpose or character of the transaction contemplated, or the consideration therefor." He then proceeds to classify the cases in which such liability attaches: "(1) Cases in which the liability of the new corporation results, not from the operation of law, but from its contract relation with the old; (2) cases in which the transfer of the property and franchise amounts to a fraud upon the creditors of the old corporation; (3) cases where the circumstances attending the creation of the new corporation, and its succession to the business, franchise, and property of the old, are such as to raise the presumption or warrant the finding that it is a mere continuation of the former—that it is, in short, the same corporate body under a different name. And the facts upon which such finding or presumption depends will not be presumed, but should affirmatively appear from the pleadings and proofs." It will be observed that there is no suggestion that these principles would apply to the cases in which an individual transferred his property in payment of his stock. We can see no difference between the transaction set forth in this record and the one in which Dickerson had sold his property and taken a note therefor. This certainly would be no fraud upon creditors, unless made with a fraudulent intent. If, in the latter case, he had transferred the note to a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice, the purchaser would acquire a good title as against his creditors. The case of Friedenwald v. Tobacco Works, 117 N. C. 544, 23 S. E. 490, comes within the first and third classes. The firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. was not liable upon this note. J. E. Dickerson, trading under the name of J. E. Dickerson & Co., was personally liable thereon.

For the purpose of passing upon the defendant's exception to his honor's charge upon the fourth issue, we must assume that he accepted the defendant's testimony as true. From that point of view, the condition of the property at the time of the organization of the corporation was as follows: The firm of J. E. Dickerson & Co. having been dissolved, its entire assets had become the property of J. E. Dickerson by purchase from the surviving partner and personal representatives of the deceased partners. This condition continued from the date of the purchase, December 12, 1895, until August 1, 1897. At that date there were no liens upon the property, and Dickerson had a right to sell it or transfer it to either of his creditors in payment of their debts, provided it was done in good faith. Upon the formation of the corporation an inventory of the goods was taken, and the corporation purchased them, issuing to Dickerson stock in payment therefor; Dickerson agreeing to pay the debts of J. E. Dickerson & Co. There was no concealment of the transaction from the First National Bank of Asheville; the cashier being one of the incorporators, and knowing all of the facts connected with it. We see no evidence, from the defendant's testimony, at least, tending to show any fraud upon his creditors, except that Dickerson says that his purpose in organizing the corporation was to avoid certain liability on account of a suit in the federal court, upon which it seems no judgment has ever been obtained. The shares of stock which were issued to Dickerson were subject to his debts to the same extent as the property assigned to the corporation. There being no liens upon his stock, he had a right to sell it or assign it to either of his creditors. He swears that this was done in good faith, without intent to defraud any one. Mr. Robertson says that at the time he took the assignment he knew nothing of Dickerson's indebtedness. When the final transaction occurred, in which Dickerson parted with the title to the stock and all his interest in the goods and other assets of the J. E. Dickerson Company, there was a surrender of the indebtedness to Robertson and the personal representatives of the deceased partners. This certainly constituted Robertson a purchaser for value, and there is no evidence that he had any notice of Dickerson's indebtedness to the bank. We are unable to see why this did not vest in Robertson a perfect title to the stock and to such interest as Dickerson had in the property, being that which remained after the payment of the debts of the corporation. Robertson having assumed the payment of these debts, and they having been paid, no question arises in respect to any indebtedness of the corporation. The action of Dickerson in respect to the formation of the corporation was not, as a matter of law, a fraud upon his creditors. So far as we can see from his testimony, he regarded the Asheville Bank as absolutely solvent. The note upon which he was indorser was made for the accommodation of the bank. It seems from the testimony that he became indebted to the bank in some large amount, but at what time such indebtedness accrued, or exactly how it came about, is not very clear from the testimony. In fact, there seems to be much controversy as to the origin and extent of his indebtedness. Dickerson's testimony tends to show a course of dealing with and on part of the bank which was well calculated to, and did, result in fraud upon the plaintiff. If his purpose in the formation of the corporation, transfer of his property, and his subsequent dealings in respect thereto with the defendant Robertson, were with a fraudulent intent, and this was known to Robertson, or he was put upon notice, the assignment of stock to him could be set aside by Dickerson's creditors. These, however, were questions of fact, which should have been submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court. The corporation did not assume the indebtedness of J. E. Dickerson, and is not liable as a corporation therefor unless such liability attaches by operation of law. If there was any fraudulent purpose on the part of Dickerson in transferring the property to the corporation, his creditors had their remedy to follow and subject it to the payment of their debts, unless other and superior rights had attached. Such purpose is expressly denied by Dickerson. It therefore became an issue of fact to be determined by the jury. Many facts and circumstances are called to our attention as constituting fraud which are competent as evidence, but do not of themselves, considered either singly or taken together, constitute fraud per se. "An insolvent owner of property has the same right as one who is solvent to dispose of it by a sale or conveyance to secure a present indebtedness, in the absence of an operating bankrupt act, when done bona fide, and not with the covinous purpose of hindering or defrauding creditors, and the presence of such purpose alike vitiates and avoids the conveyance made by either. When the vitiating intent appears in the instrument itself, the court ascertains and adjudges the fact, and no jury finding is necessary. But when the fraud is to be inferred from surrounding circumstances, and is not an element in the transaction, it must be found by a jury, and upon a proper issue framed to raise the inquiry." Beasley v. Bray, 98 N. C. 266, 8 S. E. 497.

The cause should be remanded, and a new trial had upon the issue of fraud raised by the pleadings, and the claim of the defendant Robertson that in any event he is a purchaser for value and without notice. The burden of proof upon the first issue will be upon the plaintiff, and as to the second upon the defendant. Cox v. Wall, 132 N. C. 730, 44 S. E. 635. Let this be certified. New trial.

Plaintiff's Appeal.

His honor instructed the jury to answer the third issue—"Is the defendant W. S. Robertson personally indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount?"—in the negative. The plaintiff excepted and appealed. For the reasons given in the opinion in the defendants' appeal, we are of the opinion that his honor correctly instructed the jury. There is no aspect of the testimony in which the defendant W. S. Robertson could be personally liable to the plaintiff. The judgment in that respect must be affirmed. Affirmed.

(120 Ga. 287)

OLIVEROS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 14, 1904.)

MISTRIAL—EXPRESSION OF OPINION BY COURT.

1. Where, in the trial of one accused of embezzlement, a certain receipt, signed by the accused, acknowledging the reception of the money, was offered in evidence by the state, and objected to by the accused, and the trial judge, in giving his reasons for admitting it, expressed his opinion as to the effect and weight of such a receipt as evidence, this did not authorize the judge of his own motion, over the protest of the accused, to declare a mistrial and discharge the jury.

2. It was therefore error, when a mistrial had been so granted, and the accused arraigned before a second jury, to overrule a plea of former jeopardy.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

3. The Constitution of this state enlarges the general rule, and expressly provides for a second arraignment after the grant of a mistrial.

4. Considering the gravity of the issue, mistrials should not be lightly granted, as for errors of the court in admitting or excluding evidence.

5. But, under the exception stated in the Constitution, a mistrial is not limited to cases of physical necessity, as for the sickness of a juror, but may be ordered where it is necessary to cure the effect of occurrences or misconduct tending to destroy the fairness of the trial.

Per Lamar and Candler, JJ., specially concurring.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

J. B. Oliveros was convicted of embezzlement, and brings error. Reversed.

See 45 S. E. 596.

Twiggs & Oliver, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

SIMMONS, C. J. The record discloses that Oliveros was put upon trial under an indictment charging him with embezzlement. He pleaded not guilty. The jury had been impaneled and sworn to try this issue between the state and the accused. Oliveros appears to have been the cashier of a railroad company. In order to prove that he had received the money charged to have been embezzled, a receipt signed by him was tendered in evidence. This receipt acknowledged the reception by him of a certain package of money from an express company. One of the objections urged by the accused to the admission of this receipt was that it was not the highest and best evidence. The trial judge overruled the objections, and said, in announcing his opinion as to the admissibility of the evidence: "A receipt showing the delivery of a package is about as high evidence as you can get. It is about as high evidence as one can get that a man has received anything when he acknowledges it in writing." Counsel for the accused called the attention of the judge to his remarks upon the effect and weight of the receipt, and the judge said: "What I mean to say and what I did say is this: When a man acknowledges the receipt of money, it is about as high evidence as a man can have. I didn't speak of the receipt at all. The acknowledgment of the receipt of money by a party is about as high evidence as you can produce that he received it. All receipts are open to attack. The receipt of a deed is open to attack. It is prima facie evidence of the receipt of money. It is not conclusive." The trial then proceeded for the rest of the day. At night a recess was taken. The following morning the judge, over the protest of the accused, discharged the jury and declared a mistrial because of the remarks set out above.

¶ 2. See Criminal Law, vol. 14, Cent. Dig. § 330.

deeming them so erroneous as to vitiate any verdict that might be found against the accused. At the following term of the court the accused was again arraigned and put upon trial before another jury upon the same indictment. He pleaded former jeopardy. The plea was overruled, and he excepted.

Was the trial judge right, under the above-stated facts, in discharging the jury and declaring a mistrial over the protest of the accused? We think not. To justify the grant of a mistrial without the consent of the accused, there must be either a moral or a physical necessity. See Nolan v. State, 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 281. The facts in the present case do not show either a moral or a physical necessity. This being true, the sole question, then, for decision is whether the trial judge may declare a mistrial for an error of law committed by him during the progress of the case in admitting or excluding evidence or some other erroneous ruling. While many exceptions have been made by the courts to the rule that in no case could a mistrial be declared after the jury had been sworn and impaneled and put upon the prisoner, we have sought diligently to ascertain if any court had ever held, as a new exception, that a judge might declare a mistrial because of an error committed by himself; and have been unable to find such a case. The only one cited in the briefs of counsel, and the only one we have been able to find, which deals with such a point, is Hilands v. Com., 111 Pa. 1, 2 Atl. 70, 56 Am. Rep. 235. That case holds, in substance, that the judge has no authority or power to grant a mistrial for an error committed by himself. The Constitution of this state declares that "no person shall be put in jeopardy of life, or liberty, more than once for the same offense, save on his or her own motion for a new trial after conviction, or in case of mistrial." When, therefore, a person accused of crime has been put upon his trial, and a jury, selected by him and the state, charged with the case, there must be a verdict either for him or against him, unless there is an absolute moral or physical necessity for a mistrial, or he consents to the same. Consequently, if a judge capriciously or erroneously declares a mistrial, and the accused is again put upon trial, he will be placed in jeopardy a second time for the same offense. It may be argued, however, that this same section of the Constitution provides that this rule as to jeopardy shall not obtain in case of mistrial. That is doubtless true if the mistrial arises from absolute moral or physical necessity. This was the rule of a large majority of the courts before these words were put in our organic law, and, of course, they were placed there with knowledge on the part of the makers of the Constitution of what the courts had held to be a legal mistrial. They were also placed there, we presume, to settle what was a disputed question among some of the courts as to whether a person could again be placed upon trial for the same offense, and under the same indictment, after a mistrial for any cause. The Constitution and laws of this state safeguard the lives and liberties of the people, and the courts have established procedure with this view and purpose. They have established, as before remarked, exceptions to the old iron-clad rule that there must be a verdict, as pointed out by the writer in Stocks v. State, 91 Ga. 831, 18 S. E. 847; but they have not made, and we apprehend will never make, the exception that a mistrial may be declared in a criminal case on the judge's own motion, when he thinks that he has committed error. It would not do to hold that, whenever a judge comes to the conclusion that he has committed error in the trial of a criminal case he can declare a mistrial, and put the accused upon trial before another jury. No one could tell where such a ruling would lead. If the judge could do this in one trial, he could do it in the second or third, or even fourth. The law does not intend that one accused of crime shall be harassed in this way.

But it is argued that the judge expressed an opinion in the present case in the presence of the jury, and that under our Civil Code of 1895, § 4334, it became an imperious necessity for him to grant a mistrial. That section reads as follows: "It is error for any or either of the judges of the superior courts of this state, in any case, whether civil or criminal, or in equity, during its progress, or in his charge to the jury, to express or intimate his opinion as to what has or has not been proved, or as to the guilt of the accused; and should any judge of said court violate the provisions of this section, such violation shall be held by the Supreme Court to be error, and the decision in such case reversed, and a new trial granted in the court below, with such directions as the said Supreme Court may lawfully give." It is claimed that when the judge said in the present case, in the presence of the jury, that a receipt signed by a person acknowledging the reception of money was the highest evidence, he expressed an opinion as to what had been proved, and, as this section declares that the Supreme Court shall in every such case grant a new trial, and such an error is incurable, the judge was justified in granting a mistrial. In the first place, the Code does not, in this section, deal with mistrials. It provides that when a judge violates its provisions the Supreme Court shall grant a new trial. That is the remedy and the relief provided in this section. We apprehend that the Legislature which passed this act had too much regard for the rights of accused persons to put it in the power of a trial judge on his own motion to grant a mistrial for its violation and again place the accused in jeopardy. But it is said also that it would have been a farce for the judge to have continued the trial after this expression of opinion, and consumed the time of the court and country in going on with a trial, when he knew that he would have to grant a new trial in case of conviction. That is a commercial argument, which amounts to nothing in the administration of law, especially when the life or liberty of a citizen is in danger. A further reply is that the accused, under the law and the Constitution, was entitled to a verdict at the hands of that particular jury. It was not certain, even with this expression of opinion, if it be one, that the accused would have been convicted. If convicted, his remedy was an application for a new trial, and, if his exceptions to the judge's remarks were well taken, this court, under the Code, would have been compelled to grant the new trial.

The case has been dealt with thus far upon the assumption that the judge had really violated the provisions of the Code section above cited; but, comparing the remarks of the judge and the words of this section, I, speaking for myself, cannot see how it was a violation of this section, especially when I consider the circumstances under which the remarks were made. A receipt signed by the accused was offered in evidence. Objection was raised by the accused, one of the grounds being that the receipt was not the highest evidence. After counsel had stated these objections, the judge, in announcing his decision as to the admissibility of the evidence, used the words set out in the first portion of this opinion. In my opinion, there was not a word or a sentence used by the judge which constituted an expression or intimation to the jury as to what had been proved in the case. Technically, there is a difference between evidence and proof. Evidence tends to establish or disprove an alleged matter of fact in issue. Proof is the effect of evidence, while evidence is merely the means of making proof. A fact is not proved unless it is established. The remarks of the judge did not express or intimate an opinion that any fact had or had not been proved or established. Indeed, the remarks were made about an instrument which had been offered in evidence, but which had not, prior to the judge's remarks, been admitted. If subject to any criticism, it was that the judge expressed an opinion as to the weight of the evidence, and not as to what had been proved. Expression of opinion as to the weight of evidence may or may not be error, according to the circumstances under which the opinion is expressed; but even where error, it need not be a violation of the Civil Code of 1895, § 4334. Again, speaking for myself, I think this court has given this section too broad and liberal a construction. It was doubtless enacted to correct a custom of the judges which had descended to them from the common-law courts of England and this country, but which the Legislature thought was a usurpation of the functions of the jury. Whether this be true or not, we all think that when an objection is made to evidence offered the judge has a right, if he deems proper, to give the reasons for his decision on the objections; and such reasons so given, if pertinent to the objections made, do not constitute such an expression of opinion as to violate the Code section above cited. This construction of the act of 1850 (now Civ. Code 1895, § 4334) was adopted soon after the passage of the act in the cases of Wyley v. Stanford, 22 Ga. 397, and Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 403 (10), 68 Am. Dec. 506. See, also, Scarborough v. State, 46 Ga. 33; Clafin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 28, 11 S. E. 721. In Croom v. State, 90 Ga. 430, 17 S. E. 1003, this court held, through Bleckley, C. J., that "generally what the court says in stating to counsel the reason for denying a motion to exclude or rule out evidence is, if pertinent to the question raised by counsel, not error, although the reason given involve a statement as to certain testimony which is already in, or as to their being nothing in evidence showing that the circumstances are as counsel claim." In Scarborough v. State, supra, McCay, J., said: "It would be impossible to carry on a trial if this section of the Code, prohibiting a judge from expressing any opinion as to what is proven, is to be construed as is contended for. A judge, in deciding as to the admissibility of testimony, must always, to some extent, decide as to its weight, since often its admissibility depends on that. So he must often determine what has been proven; so as to say whether certain other things may be proven. To decide a nonsuit, he must decide if there be enough proven to justify a verdict, etc. The only practicable rule is to treat the jury as possessed of common sense, and as capable of understanding what is addressed by the judge to them and what is not. He may not express to the jury any opinion, but if, in the decision of any legal question, as it arises, he must pass upon facts, the statute does not apply. It must be reasonably construed. In this view of the law, we see no error in the remark of the judge. He only said to the counsel what was his view of the law, and this he had a right to do." From these authorities it would seem that the judge in the present case expressed no such opinion of what had been proved as would violate section 4334, and his remarks therefore could not be such misconduct on his part, as was argued by counsel for the state, as to compel him to grant a mistrial, even if misconduct on the part of the judge would authorize such a proceeding. This much has been said in reply to the argument of counsel that the judge had committed an incurable error, and was therefore justified in granting a mistrial; but we put our decision upon higher ground—that is, that after one accused of crime has been put upon trial, and the jury charged with his case, a mistrial cannot be declared by the judge, over the protest of the accused, except for absolute moral or physical necessity; and that an error of law committed by the judge will not authorize him, without the consent of the accused, to discharge the jury and order a mistrial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

LAMAR, J. I concur in the judgment. If the statement by the judge in the presence of the jury be treated as an error requiring a new trial under the statutory command contained in the Civil Code of 1895, § 4834, it was a ruling of which the defendant alone had the right to complain; and, as he protested against the withdrawal of the case, it should not have been ordered. I concur also in the ruling as to "necessity," if it is intended thereby to mean that the mistrial is not the necessary result, but the necessary cure; this distinction being proper in view of that provision in the Bill of Rights intended to modify the former rule of construction, which was so strict that it more often defeated than served the ends of justice. It is fundamental that "no person shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb." Const. U. S. Amend. art. 5. In ancient days this was understood to mean that a trial once begun must terminate in a verdict, or else that the defendant could not be a second time arraigned for the same offense. In the change from barbaric conditions there has been a strong tendency to get away from a construction which compelled the starving and carting of juries in order to secure a verdict. In some jurisdictions this tendency has found expression in statutory or constitutional provisions giving to the state in specified instances the right to sue out a writ of error. See State v. Lee, 65 Conn. 265, 30 Atl. 1110, 27 L. R. A. 498, 48 Am. St. Rep. 202; Smith v. State, 41 N. J. Law, 598; State v. Wyse, 33 S. C. 582, 12 S. E. 556. Compare People v. Webb, 38 Cal. 467; Jones v. State, 15 Ark. 261; United States v. Sanges, 144 U. S. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. 609, 36 L. Ed. 445. Compare State v. Jones, 7 Ga. 424, as to fraud of the accused. Undoubtedly, however, the exemption from being twice put in jeopardy on its face is absolute; and hence, in treating a mistrial as a qualification grafted by construction upon the unqualified language of the rule, the courts felt constrained to limit such exception to those instances in which it was ordered because of some extreme, manifest, urgent, or imperious necessity. But under the Constitution of this state (Civ. Code 1895, § 5706) the right to arraign the defendant after a mistrial does not depend upon construction. The very section of the Bill of Rights which contains the guaranty against double jeopardy is coupled with the words, "save on his own motion for a new trial after a conviction, or in case of mistrial." The Constitution does not define what sort of a mistrial, and of course cannot mean one improperly granted. According to its explicit declaration, it would seem to provide for a second arraignment where a mistrial had been ordered for any reason legally sufficient. Considering the gravity of the issue, it could never be granted capriciously, nor because of mere errors of the judge in admitting or excluding evidence, nor for erroneous rulings during the trial. For, even if such errors have been adverse to the defendant, he may still have a chance of being acquitted, and is entitled to stand upon his deliverance. But in criminal as well as in civil cases judicial investigation has for its purpose the ascertainment of truth and the administration of justice to both parties. There may be many occurrences in the presence of the jury which render this result so impossible—which so inevitably tend to vitiate the trial—that the judge, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, would be authorized to take the case from the jury and declare a mistrial. When he does so the Bill of Rights declares that the mistrial shall not prevent a second arraignment. No matter what may be the general rule, no matter how limited and restricted the exceptions elsewhere, they afford no standard by which to measure the meaning of a new provision incorporated in our Constitution in pursuance of a policy which was intended to broaden rather than restrict the rights of the state. This view is sustained even by those cases in our Reports which hold that a mistrial can only be granted because of some moral or physical necessity. For in Nolan v. State, 55 Ga. 524, 21 Am. Rep. 281, where this language was first used in construing the new provision of the Constitution, it was said that "the tendency of late has been to lower the standard so as to comprehend moral as well as physical necessity, and, in the region of the moral, to be content with very moderate tests." This "moderate test," if it can be called a necessity, does not consist merely in the sickness of the jurors, or other fact rendering it physically impossible to proceed with the case; but a mistrial may properly be allowed in consequence of any fact, occurrence, or misconduct calculated to vitiate the verdict. The bystanders may cry, "Hang him! Hang him!" as in Woolfolk's Case (Ga.) 8 S. E. 724; and on motion therefor a mistrial might properly have been granted. The result would not have been different if a mob had invaded the court room with shouts of "Acquit him! Turn him loose!" In either case a mistrial is ordered because demanded by the ends of justice. The judge himself might feel called on to make such an order because of his own conduct, where he had inadvertently done an act which would vitiate the verdict. So, too, the misconduct of jurors, counsel, accused, or bystanders might likewise be such as to authorize a mistrial. Not that it was physically or morally impossible to proceed with the trial such as it is or would then be.

It could go on as a physical fact, as it did in Woolfolk's Case; but the verdict of acquittal of conviction would never be recognized as that calm and deliberate judgment of 12 men to which the accused was entitled, and to which, be it noted, the state was also entitled. A mistrial is not a necessary result of misconduct, but a cure made necessary by misconduct. It is not so much a necessary effect as a necessary remedy to prevent the effect. Of course, if the occurrence is one calculated to harm the defendant alone, he may choose to waive it, and to have the trial proceed, and it would therefore usually be erroneous—as here—to order a mistrial over his objection. But if the conduct was such as to prejudice the state, or to prejudice both the accused and the state, it would be for the court to determine what action he should take under the peculiar facts. It is impossible to lay down a rule. It must be left to the sound legal discretion of the trial judge acting under his oath of office, and having due regard to the rights of the accused and of the state, and subject to review as in all other cases. The principle is probably as accurately stated as it is possible to do in Thompson's Case, 155 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 73, 39 L. Ed. 146, where it was said: "Courts of justice are invested with authority to discharge a jury from giving any verdict, whenever, in their opinion, taking all the circumstances into consideration, there is a manifest necessity for the act, or the ends of public justice would otherwise be defeated, and to order a trial by another jury; and a defendant is not thereby twice put in jeopardy, within the meaning of the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States." If such language was not too broad under the Constitution of the United States, which contains nothing about mistrials, it is certainly not too broad under ours, which expressly saves the right to a second arraignment after a mistrial. Civ. Code 1895, § 5705.

I am authorized to state that Justice CANDLER concurs in the foregoing.

(120 Ga. 20)

ROBERT PORTNER BREWING CO. v. COOPER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 11, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—PERSONAL INJURIES—DEFECTIVE HARNESS—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The charge of the court below was in substantial accord with the law governing this case as announced by this court in 38 S. E. 91, 112 Ga. 894. There is no merit in any of the assignments of error touching the admissibility of evidence offered by the plaintiff, and the verdict returned in his favor was fully warranted by the evidence, and not excessive.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by J. Cooper against the Robert Portner Brewing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

See 38 S. E. 91, 42 S. E. 408.

Salem Dutcher, for plaintiff in error. W. K. Miller and Boykin Wright, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. When this case was here at the October term, 1900, this court laid down the test to be applied in determining whether or not Cooper, the plaintiff, was entitled to recover damages on account of the injuries sustained by him through the alleged negligence of his master, the Portner Brewing Company. See 112 Ga. 894, 38 S. E. 91. At the trial now under review the presiding judge fully, fairly, and clearly charged the jury in accordance with the law as announced by this court. The trial resulted in a verdict for $5,000 in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant company is again here, this time complaining of the admission of certain evidence, as well as of various instructions given to the jury, and also insisting that the verdict was excessive and without evidence to support it.

It appeared from the testimony of Cooper that he was employed by the brewing company in the capacity of a salesman, and that he was furnished with a horse and wagon which he used in calling upon its patrons and soliciting orders for and delivering beer and soda water manufactured by that company. He stated that the company employed a stableman, who harnessed the horse to the wagon and drove up to the platform of the brewery, where he turned over the equipment to the plaintiff, whose duty it was "to get on the wagon and go out with the beer." Counsel for the plaintiff asked him if he "had anything to do with inspecting the harness," and the plaintiff was permitted, over the objection of the company, to testify that it was not his duty to inspect the harness, nor to look "after any of the wagons or outfits that were used for delivering" the company's beer. The objection urged to this testimony was that it was not competent for the witness to state his opinion that he was under no duty to inspect the harness, inasmuch as, "under the law, it was his duty to use ordinary care and diligence to ascertain the condition of the appliances he used." This objection was not well taken. It clearly was permissible for the plaintiff to state, as matter of fact, that under the terms of his employment he was not required or expected by his master to perform the service of looking after and caring for the horse and wagon, or inspecting the harness with a view to seeing that it was kept in repair and in a safe and sound condition. The duty of so doing was, according to the plaintiff's testimony, imposed by the company upon another of its employes, its stableman, upon whose diligence and attention to duty the plaintiff was invited to rely. It follows that the testimony objected to was not inadmissible as being the expression of a bare conclusion by the witness regarding the care and diligence he was, under the law, bound to exercise in performing the duties assigned to him by his master. What were such duties was a proper subject-matter of proof, and could be shown by any one who had knowledge of plaintiff's duties according to the terms of his employment.

One of the controlling issues in the case was whether or not the brewing company had provided the plaintiff with a harness which was reasonably safe and suitable, taking into consideration the vicious disposition of the horse he was called on to drive. The plaintiff introduced a witness who swore that a short time before the injury occurred he was employed by the company as its stableman, and during the course of his examination he said: "As far as I know about the harness, the double harness and the harness what the gray horse used was the only harness I could see in good trim; at least, wasn't none of them hardly in good trim." Counsel for the company made a motion to rule out this testimony, on the ground that it was "irrelevant, as not bearing on the condition of the particular set of harness used by the plaintiff at the time of his injury." We think it had at least some relevancy. It appears that the harness "the gray horse used" was not the set furnished the plaintiff, and, accordingly, he must have been given one not "in good trim" at a time shortly before he was injured. The evidence also discloses that no attempt to put the harness in good condition was made by the company until a few days prior to the plaintiff's injury, and up to that time the set of harness assigned to him had not been overhauled, notwithstanding the horse he drove was wild and difficult to handle. The length of time this harness was allowed to remain not "in good trim" tended to illustrate the question whether the defendant complied with its duty as master to provide the plaintiff with a harness which he could with safety use in driving the vicious animal by which he was injured, and the fact that one of its stablemen knew that only "the double harness and the harness what the gray horse used" were in good condition had an important bearing on that question.

In one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial error is assigned upon the refusal of the court "to rule out so much of the testimony" of another of the plaintiff's witnesses "as related to a general insufficiency of defendant's harness." But as the testimony referred to is not, either literally or in substance, set forth in this ground of the motion, we cannot undertake to pass upon this complaint. Graham v. Baxley, 117 Ga. 42, 43 S. E. 405.

The charge of the court is assailed by many assignments of error. Some of these set forth the complaint that certain instructions excepted to were incorrect, in that the court should in the same connection have charged other propositions of law applicable to the case. This is not the proper way to bring under review a complaint that the court omitted to instruct the jury as to pertinent matters to be considered by them. Lucas v. State, 110 Ga. 756, 36 S. E. 87; Roberts v. State, 114 Ga. 450, 40 S. E. 297; Jenkins v. National Union, 118 Ga. 587, 45 S. E. 449. A number of the instructions complained of were precisely in accord with the law as laid down in the Civil Code, and as announced by this court when the case made its first appearance here. Only two of the charges excepted to seem to require special notice. One of these, given at the request of the plaintiff's counsel, was as follows: "In order to recover, it is true that Cooper must prove that the master knew or the alleged defects in the harness, or by the use of ordinary care could have known of them, and that he (Cooper) did not know, or by the use of ordinary care could not have known the same." The criticism made upon this instruction is that the court erroneously charged the jury that Cooper could recover "in two specified events: First, if plaintiff did not know of such defects; or, secondly, if plaintiff by the exercise of ordinary care could not have known thereof." In other words, the complaint is that the court made use of the disjunctive "or," instead of charging in the conjunctive that it was incumbent upon Cooper to show that he "did not know, 'and' by the use of ordinary care could not have known," of the alleged defects. While the charge was not altogether free from error, we do not think it was calculated to mislead the jury into the belief that, although Cooper did in fact know the harness was defective, he could nevertheless recover if the defects were not such as could have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care. Furthermore, the defendant did not even contend that Cooper knew the harness was defective, nor was there any evidence to warrant the conclusion that he did. This being so, the defendant could not have been prejudiced by the slight inaccuracy in the charge pointed out by its counsel.

The other charge with which we feel called on to specially deal was in the following language: "If, upon reviewing the testimony, you find that the plaintiff had equal opportunities—equal means—of ascertaining the defect that the master had, then the plaintiff could not recover, and your verdict would be for the defendant." The objection made to this charge is that it "intimates, or would naturally be understood by the jury as intimating, that the testimony showed that a defect did exist in the appliances in question." When considered with reference to the connection in which this instruction was given, it is not, we think, open to the criticism made upon it. The court was charging the jury as to the right of the plaintiff to recover "if the evidence [disclosed] that the harness was not reasonably safe and suited—that it was defective”—and “the defect was known to the master, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have been ascertained”; and the instruction excepted to amounted to no more than a caution to the jury that, even though the evidence showed that the harness was defective, as claimed by the plaintiff, he would not be entitled to recover if his means of ascertaining this fact were equal to those of his master. Besides, the court in another portion of its charge distinctly instructed the jury that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that the harness was defective.

The plaintiff proved his case as laid, and, though the testimony was conflicting upon the controlling issues involved, a finding in his favor was fully warranted. Nor was the verdict excessive. At the time the plaintiff was injured he was but 20 years of age, and according to his testimony was earning between $12 and $15 per week, he being allowed, in addition to a fixed weekly wage, commissions on sales made by him. His injuries consisted of “a very serious fracture of both bones of his right leg, * * * a compound comminuted fracture, * * * the bones [being] broken in several places and the flesh lacerated.” The attending surgeon set the limb shortly after it was broken, but at the end of two or three weeks noticed that the bones had not united. “The wound was opened and the bones freshened at the ends, * * * to see if they would not unite,” the limb being then incased in plaster. This second operation did not, however, prove successful; so, after the lapse of some time, the surgeon again opened the wound, and “sawed off the ends of the bones for probably half or three-quarters of an inch; then put them together,” and placed the limb in a plaster cast, “with the result of getting a good bony union the third time.” In consequence of the bones of his right leg being shortened, the plaintiff necessarily has a permanent “limp in his walk,” the length of that limb being “practically three-quarters of an inch” shorter than his left leg. After the last operation, the plaintiff spent some months in the hospital, suffering from this injury. He testified at the trial that he continued to suffer therefrom, especially at night, when there was a kind of throbbing in his right leg, which caused him to take morphine, and that, while the bones were knitted, the strength of his injured limb was not equal to that of the other; that he could not turn on his right leg as he could on his left, and in bearing his weight on his injured limb “it feels like it is crushed inside—like it is going to give in.” In view of this evidence as to the permanent character of the injury received, and as to the suffering the plaintiff has endured and may continue to experience, we are inclined to the opinion that $5,000 was not an excessive amount to award him as damages, taking into consideration his earning capacity, his age, and his expectancy of life at the time of the injury.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 80)

CONE v. CITY COUNCIL OF AUGUSTA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—AMENDMENT.

1. It is not error to prevent plaintiff's counsel from arguing that the defendant is liable because of an act of negligence not set out in the petition.

2. If the amendment was germane, the refusal to allow the same was harmless; it not having been offered as a basis to authorize the admission of testimony, or to make available that already introduced, but during the concluding argument, and when in fact there was no evidence to sustain the allegations in the proposed amendment.

3. There was no error in any of the rulings complained of, and the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict for the defendant.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by Stephen Cone against the city council of Augusta. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Stephen Cone sued the city council of Augusta for personal injuries. He claimed that on a dark, rainy night, while driving along McKennie street, he saw a lantern on the surface of the street, inquired of a watchman whether it was safe to proceed, and, receiving a reply that it was all right, drove near the center and along the driveway of the street; that, without fault on plaintiff's part, his horse suddenly plunged into a deep washout in the street, throwing plaintiff out of the cab and inflicting upon him serious bodily injuries; that the city knew of the defect, and was negligent in permitting the defect to remain in the street. The witnesses for the city denied the statement that a watchman called out, “All right, go ahead;” admitted that one side of the street was not in passable condition, owing to the fact that an archway was being built across the street, and that on this account the lanterns were on the ground; that one side of the street was safe and passable, and had been used during the previous day and night; that the existence of the chasm or washout on the street was unknown to the city, and was caused by the bursting of a six-inch main, the water in which was under an 80-pound pressure, and that, when the pipe burst, the hole or chasm was almost instantly created; that the plaintiff was either at the spot at the time of the bursting, or arrived immediately thereafter. There was testimony of experts as to the enormous power of a stream of such size, and under such pressure. There was no evidence contradictory of the statement that, under the circumstances proved, a hole of the size of the washout would have been washed out in less than a minute. After all of the evidence had been introduced, and during the concluding argument of counsel for the plaintiff, he insisted that the city was negligent, in that it maintained a cracked pipe, of which defect it knew or ought to have known. The attorney for the city objected to this argument on the ground that the notice of the injury and claim for damages required to be served upon the city authorities, as well as the petition in the case, were silent as to any negligence in the maintenance of the pipe or knowledge of its defective condition. The court ruled that counsel for the plaintiff could refer to any evidence on the subject of the defect in the pipe for the purpose of showing that the city might be charged with notice as to the existence or probable existence of the hole in the street, but not for the purpose of showing negligence as to the maintenance of the pipe as a ground for recovery by itself, since that would be a cause of action not referred to in the pleadings. Thereupon the plaintiff offered to amend his petition by alleging "that the said hole or chasm in said street [was] due to the fracture of a water main, of whose defectiveness the defendant knew, or might have known by the exercise of ordinary care." This amendment was disallowed. The plaintiff filed a bill of exceptions pendente lite, and assigns error thereon. There was a verdict for the defendant, and a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, to which judgment the plaintiff also excepts.

F. W. Capers and J. S. & N. M. Reynolds, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Barrett, C. H. Cohen, and E. H. Callaway, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. 1. The negligence charged in the petition was the maintenance of a defective street. During the trial it developed that this defect had been suddenly caused by the bursting of a large water main, which almost instantly washed a hole in the street. There were no allegations in the petition charging that the city was negligent in maintaining the water pipe, and the judge therefore properly ruled that the counsel for the plaintiff could not argue that the city was liable because of its negligence in respect of the water main.

2. To meet this ruling, made during the concluding argument, plaintiff offered an amendment charging that the city knew or ought to have known of the defect in the pipe. This the court disallowed. If this amendment had been offered as the basis for the introduction of testimony, or if there had been a request to allow the case to be reopened for introducing evidence in support of the new allegations, the question would have arisen as to whether the amendment was germane. But, in the then state of the record, whether or not it introduced a new cause of action was immaterial, and the ruling was harmless. There was no evidence to sustain the charge in the amendment that the city knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the defect. There was therefore nothing in the record to sustain the new averment. Had it been allowed, it could not have helped the plaintiff. Its disallowance did not harm him.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 123)

CHATHAM COUNTY v. GAUDRY et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 14, 1904.)

COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE COUNTY BOOKS—APPOINTMENT—COMPENSATION.

1. It does not render section 837 of the Penal Code of 1895 unconstitutional to hold that it contemplates that a committee of citizens of a county, appointed by the grand jury to inspect and examine the offices, papers, books, records, accounts, and vouchers of county officers, and to make a full and complete report of the result of such investigation to the next succeeding grand jury, shall be paid for such services from the treasury of the county, as compensation therefor would be an expense of the superior court.

2. As the intention of the Legislature was that, when necessary, the services of competent citizens should be secured for this purpose, and the appointees are not compelled to serve, and, from the nature of the services required, are not likely to do so, without compensation, the statute necessarily implies that the judge of the superior court may provide for the payment of compensation from the county treasury, as part of the contingent expenses of the court.

3. While the grand jury is authorized to make the appointment, the amount of compensation for the services rendered must be determined by the judge of the superior court, and paid, as other contingent expenses of the court, upon his certificate, from the county treasury.

4. Under the statute, a committee of citizens, appointed by the grand jury for the purpose, may make the required inspection and examination during the term of the court at which they were appointed.

5. The "exclusive and original jurisdiction" of the county commissioners of Chatham county "in examining and auditing the accounts of all officers having the care, management, keeping, collecting or disbursement of money belonging to the county or appropriated for its use and benefit, and in bringing them to a settlement," does not prevent the grand jury of that county from exercising the power conferred, and discharging the duty imposed, upon grand jurors by Pen. Code 1895, §§ 836, 837.

Simmons, C. J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by J. J. Gaudry and others against Chatham county. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. T. Cann and Robt. L. Colding, for plaintiff in error. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendants in error.

FISH, P. J. From the record in this case it appears that at the June term, 1902, of the superior court of Chatham county, the grand jury appointed Gaudry and Tison citizens of that county, to examine the offices, books, papers, accounts, etc., of the sheriff, tax collector, county treasurer, and county commissioners of the county, and to make a full and complete report of the result of such examination to the grand jury at the next succeeding term; agreeing with such citizens to pay them the sum of $300 for such services. The June term, 1902, continued until within a few days of the time for the December term, 1902, to begin, and the appointees made the examination during its existence, and submitted their report both to the grand jury which appointed them, and to the grand jury impaneled at the succeeding term. Subsequently they made out a bill for $300 against the county for their services, and the judge of the superior court approved the same and ordered it paid. They presented this bill to the county commissioners of Chatham county for payment, who refused to pay the same, whereupon Gaudry and Tison brought suit in the city court of Savannah against the county of Chatham for the amount of the bill. The county demurred to the plaintiffs' petition, the judge of the city court overruled the demurrer, and the county excepted.

1. The grounds of the demurrer which are insisted upon here are those which are stated or indicated in this opinion. The main ground is that the statute embraced in the Penal Code of 1895, § 837, if construed as providing for any payment by the county for the services rendered, is violative of that provision of the Constitution which specifies for what purposes a county may levy taxes. Article 7, § 6, par. 2, of the Constitution, limits the taxing powers of counties to the raising of revenues for specified purposes, one of which is "expenses of courts." Unless the claim of the plaintiffs in this suit can be considered as an expense of the superior court, the contention of the county now under consideration is sound. We will assume, for the present, that it was the intention of the Legislature that citizens appointed by the grand jury for the purposes above indicated, and discharging the duties imposed upon them, should be compensated for their services. Assuming this to be true, would such compensation be an expense of the court? It seems to us clear that any expense lawfully incurred is necessarily an expense of holding court. We apprehend also that the court is held for the discharge of every duty or public service which the Legislature has devolved upon it as a whole, or upon any of its component parts. A grand jury is a component part, and a very important one, of the superior court, and the discharge of any duty which the law imposes upon the grand jury is one of the purposes for which a term of the superior court is held, for the grand jury has no existence apart from the court. The law declares that it shall be the special duty of the grand jury, "from term to term of the superior court, to inspect and examine the offices, papers, books, and records of the clerks of the superior courts and ordinary, and also the books, papers, records, accounts, and vouchers of the county treasurer, and cause any such clerk or county treasurer who shall have failed or neglected to do his duty as required by law, to be presented for non-performance of official duty." Pen. Code 1895, § 836. Can there be any doubt that among the purposes for which a term of the superior court is held is the discharge of these duties by the grand jury? We think not. If, then, any expense is lawfully incurred in the discharge of these duties, is it not a part of the expenses of holding the court? It seems clear to us that it is.

But the authority and duty of the grand jury in reference to county matters are not confined to the inspection and examination of the affairs of the offices mentioned in this section, and to presenting the incumbents of such offices for nonperformance of official duties. The next section provides: "The grand jury may, when they deem it necessary, appoint any one or more of the citizens of the county, to inspect and examine, during vacation, the offices, papers, books, records, accounts, and vouchers of the court of ordinary for county purposes, clerk of the superior court, county treasurer, tax-collector, tax-receiver, county school commissioners, sheriff, and all other county officers; * * * and to make a full and complete report of the finances, disbursements, and conditions of the several offices to the grand jury at the succeeding term of the superior court." Clearly, under this section, it is the duty of the grand jury, at least when they deem it necessary, to inspect and examine the affairs of all these county offices for the benefit and protection of the public; and it is equally clear that this is one of the purposes for which a term of the superior court is held. But if the grand jury, in the discharge of this duty of inspection and examination, deem it necessary that the inspection and examination should be made, in vacation, by a committee of citizens of the county, they may appoint such committee for such purpose. If it is necessary for the affairs of these county offices to be examined and reported on by such a committee which originates in one term of the court, and terminates in another, is not this one of the purposes for which the terms of the court are held? If any expense is lawfully incurred in having the inspection and examination thus made, is it not a part of the contingent expenses of holding the court? It seems to us that both these questions must be answered in the affirmative. Again, when all the provisions of the law upon the subject are considered, we think it is clear that the members of such a committee, while performing the duties for which they have been appointed, are officers of the court, and, being officers appointed only upon the happening of a contingency which renders their appointment necessary, the expense involved in their services is a contingent expense. That the members of such a committee act under the authority and are officers of the court is evident from the provisions of the law in reference to their duties, the powers with which they are clothed for the purpose of effectually discharging them, and the power of the court which the law provides shall, if necessary, be exercised in order that they may so discharge them. The section authorizing the appointment of such a committee provides that "if any of said officers be the custodian of the county funds by virtue of their office, or have in their possession funds belonging to the county, they shall exhibit them to said committee, and it shall be the duty of the committee to count the same, and to make a full and complete report of the finances, disbursements, and conditions of the several offices to the grand jury at the succeeding term of the superior court; and should any of said officers fail or refuse to exhibit to the committee the funds on hand or claimed by them to be on hand, upon notice of that fact to the judge of the superior court by the committee it shall be his duty to compel the delivery of the funds to the committee for the purpose of counting the same, by mandamus or attachment." The next section provides: "The person or persons so appointed to inspect and examine shall have power to take full control of the offices, papers, books, records, accounts, and vouchers of the several different offices, to compel the attendance of witnesses, hear evidence in regard to fraud, and the non-performance of official duty, and the improper disbursement of the county funds." Section 839 provides: "If any of such officers refuses to produce the papers, books, records, accounts, and vouchers, it shall be the duty of the judge of the superior court of the county, upon evidence being adduced, to enforce the provisions of this and the two sections that precede it, by mandamus or attachment, as the case may require." These provisions, taken in connection with the manner of the appointment of the members of the investigating committee, the purpose for which they are appointed, and the fact that they must make their report to the grand jury which succeeds the one which appoints them, show the persons appointed as such committee are officers of the court. Why should the mandatory and punitive powers of the court be exercised for the purpose of assisting them in the discharge of their duties, if they are not, while engaged in discharging them, officers of the court? That they are, for the time being, public officers, is clear, for no mere private citizens could be clothed with the authority and powers which are conferred upon them. That they are officers of the superior court is equally clear, for, in the language of counsel for the defendants in error, "they cannot be classified as any other kind of officers than court officers, because their appointment comes from the court, they work under and with the assistance of the court, and report back to the court. Their origin and end as public officers is in the court, and, as they are not permanent officers, as the necessity for their appointment is a contingency upon which their appointment depends, they become contingent officers of the court"; and, if there is expense attending their employment, it must be part of the contingent expenses of the court.

2. Another ground of the demurrer is that "no compensation is provided by law for citizens appointed by a grand jury to examine books of county officers, and such provision must be shown to entitle the petitioners to maintain their said action." The law authorizes their appointment, and, from the nature of the services for which they are appointed, evidently contemplates the appointment of persons peculiarly fitted for the important and responsible duties which they are called upon to discharge; and, as the appointees are not compelled to serve, it seems unreasonable to suppose that the law does not contemplate that they shall be paid for their services. We apprehend that one—probably the main—object of the statute is to secure the services of experts for the examination of the books, papers, accounts, and vouchers of county officers, and that this salutary purpose would doubtless be defeated if the court were powerless to provide compensation for the services when rendered. To hold that persons appointed, but not compellable, to perform, for the public benefit, services of such a character, are not entitled to compensation for rendering the services, would, in our opinion, be equivalent to declaring the law a nullity. We think the law necessarily implies that the court may provide for the payment of reasonable compensation from the county treasury to citizens who, under its appointment, perform these services. We have reached this conclusion for the following reasons: (1) The law intends that, when necessary, the services of competent citizens shall be secured for this purpose; (2) as the appointees are not compelled to serve, and the character of the services to be performed is such that they are not likely to be performed without compensation, the law must contemplate compensation, if there is any general provision under which it can be paid; (3) compensation for such services can be paid as part of the contingent expenses of the court. Civ. Code 1895, § 4341, provides: "Any contingent expenses incurred in holding any session of the superior court, including lights, fuel, stationery, rent, publication of the grand jury presentments when ordered published, and similar items, such as taking down testimony in felony cases," etc., "shall be paid out of the county treasury, * * * upon the certificate of the judge of the superior court, and without further order." This section clearly provides for the payment of all contingent expenses incurred in holding any session of the superior court, for it declares that any such contingent expenses shall be paid, and how it shall be paid. It enumerates certain contingent expenses which may be incurred in holding a session of the superior court, but the expression "any contingent expenses," with which the section begins, and the general clause "and similar items," following those enumerated, show that the enumeration is not intended to be exhaustive, but is only intended to indicate, in a general way, what are contingent expenses. The items enumerated are not all similar items. Lights and fuel may be similar items, but neither is similar to the publication of the grand jury presentments, nor to the taking down of testimony in felony cases. Hence, if we consider the expression "and similar items" to be restrictive, the restriction cannot exclude any item of contingent expense which is similar to any one of those mentioned in this section, for it is clear that an item similar to either of those mentioned is included in the general and indefinite clause "and similar items." Certainly there is as much similarity between expense incurred in investigating and reporting to the grand jury the condition of the various offices involving the fiscal affairs of the county, and the expense incurred in publishing the grand jury presentments, as there is between the latter and the expense for lights and fuel. An investigation instituted by one grand jury, the result of which is to be reported to another grand jury, and to become a part of the presentments of the latter, may well, as an item of contingent expenses, be deemed similar to the publication of the grand jury presentments. Both the investigation and the publication originate with the grand jury, they both concern the work of the grand jury, and the expenses for either are grand jury expenses. The decisions of this court to the effect that "before an officer can be required to pay out public money, or be justified in doing so, those who demand its payment should be able to show a clear provision of the law which entitles them to receive it," are not in conflict with the conclusion which we have reached in this case. There is a clear provision of law for the payment of the contingent expenses of any term of the superior court, and, as we have seen, the claim of the plaintiffs was a contingent expense of the superior court of Chatham county.

3. The contention of counsel for the plaintiff in error that the grand jury is authorized to appoint, but not to employ, the member or members of the committee of investigation may be granted, without affecting the question as to whether the members of such committee can be lawfully paid for their services from the county treasury, for if, as we hold, the compensation of such persons is a part of the contingent expenses of the court, it is the judge of the court who must determine what amount shall be paid for the services rendered. He must approve the bill and order it paid, as the judge did in the present instance, before it can be paid, and any action by the grand jury in reference thereto amounts simply to a recommendation on their part as to the amount of compensation to be allowed.

4. While there is some force in the contention that the law only authorizes the appointment of an investigating committee to serve during the vacation of the court, we do not think, when the purpose which the statute had in view is considered, the fact that a committee appointed may make the investigation during a prolonged term of the court at which the committee was appointed renders the appointment of the committee invalid, or deprives its members of the right to compensation. The purpose of the statute evidently is to have the investigation and examination made by competent citizens of the county, other than the grand jurors, whenever it is impracticable for the grand jury, through a committee of its own members, to make a satisfactory inspection and examination during the term of their service as grand jurors; and as the law looks to a careful and thorough, and not a superficial and hurried, examination, the provision is made for an examination in vacation, when in most counties there will be much more time for such purpose than there could be in the limited time during which a term of the court is held. But if the wise provision of the law for an examination during vacation is wrested from its manifest purpose, and construed to prevent an examination by a committee of citizens during a prolonged term of the court, the effect would be that the very counties which stand in most need of the benefits which this statute is intended to secure would be prevented from securing them. These are the counties which, owing to their large population, great wealth, large fiscal affairs, the amount of public funds handled by their officers, the great volume of separate items involved in the digests and accounts to be gone over and carefully considered, etc., most often require a careful, painstaking, and complete examination of the conditions of the offices through which their revenues are raised and disbursed. In some such counties the terms of the superior court are held so often or are so prolonged that the interval elapsing between the adjournment of one term and the beginning of another is too short to afford time for such an examination to be satisfactorily made during a vacation of the court. The present case well illustrates this fact, for, as stated by counsel for the plaintiff in error, "the petition shows that the services in question were rendered during the June term of the court, and the bill was approved on November 25, 1902, by four members of the grand jury, including the foreman, while said court was still in session, and before the grand jury for the June term had been discharged. The report of their labors was submitted to the grand jury for the December term, 1902," and the judge presiding at that term passed an order, dated December 1, 1902, approving the bill and ordering it paid. Here it will be seen that the term at which the committee of experts was appointed was still in session on November 25th, and the next term began on December 1st. Evidently the vacation of the court, in this instance, could hardly have been long enough in a county so populous, wealthy, and of such large fiscal affairs as Chatham, for the inspection and investigation required to be carefully and thoroughly made. We think the purpose of the words "in vacation," in the statute, is simply to allow the examination to be made in vacation, and not to prevent its being made during a term of the court by a committee of citizens appointed for the purpose by the grand jury.

5. Another contention is that the county commissioners of Chatham county "have original and exclusive jurisdiction of the auditing of the books of the officers of Chatham county * * * and the grand jury have no authority in this county to encroach upon the powers and duties of the county commissioners." In support of this contention, section 5 of the act of February 21, 1873 (Acts 1873, p. 235), creating commissioners for that county, is cited. That section of the act provides that the county commissioners "shall have power and authority to exercise exclusive and original jurisdiction" over various subject-matters specified therein, one of which is, "in examining and auditing the accounts of all officers having the care, management, keeping, collecting, or disbursement of money belonging to the county or appropriated for its use and benefit, and in bringing them to a settlement." This was simply a transfer, so far as Chatham county was concerned, to the county commissioners, of the "original and exclusive jurisdiction" in this matter of the ordinary, to whom it had been given when the old inferior court was abolished by the Constitution of 1868. Code 1868, § 346; Const. 1868, art. 11, § 7; Code 1873, § 337 (7). The ordinaries of all the counties in this state, except those in which jurisdiction over county matters has been conferred upon county commissioners by a special act, when sitting for county purposes, have the same "original and exclusive jurisdiction" as that conferred upon the county commissioners of Chatham county in the above-quoted language from the special act for that county. Civ. Code 1895, § 4238, par. 7. Yet it can hardly be seriously contended that because this is true the grand jurors cannot exercise the power in reference to the inspection and examination of county offices which is conferred upon them in the Code. The fact that the provision in reference to the ordinaries and the provision in reference to the grand juries are found in the same Code shows conclusively that the jurisdiction conferred upon the one does not interfere with the powers and duties conferred upon the other. To hold that the provision in reference to the examination by the ordinary is in irreconcilable conflict with the provision in reference to the examination by the grand jury would be equivalent to holding that there was no law at all upon the subject, for, no matter whence these provisions respectively came originally, they were simultaneously enacted when the Code was adopted, and hence must stand or fall together. The conflict would have to be clear, unmistakable, and absolutely unavoidable before a court would come to so disastrous a conclusion. Fortunately such is not the case. The law, for wise purposes, has made it the duty of both the ordinary and the grand jury to examine. The ordinary, or county commissioners, as the case may be, has "original and exclusive jurisdiction," when sitting for county purposes, "in examining and auditing the accounts of all officers having the care, management, keeping, collecting, or disbursement of money belonging to the county or appropriated for its use and benefit," for the purpose of "bringing them to a settlement." In order to bring them to a settlement with the county, he may issue execution against them and their bondsmen. Jones v. Collier, 65 Ga. 553; Arthur v. Commissioners of Gordon County, 67 Ga. 220. But the grand jury has the power, and it is its duty, to inspect and examine the various county offices mentioned in Pen. Code 1895, §§ 837, 838, including that of the ordinary for county purposes, for the public information, and in order that the grand jury may ascertain whether it is their duty to present any of such officers for "non-performance of official duty." The inclusion of "the court of ordinary for county purposes" in the enumeration of the offices which the grand jury shall inspect and examine, we think, indicates that, independently of the jurisdiction of the ordinary or county commissioners, the law intends that the grand jury shall make these investigations of all these county offices for the benefit of the taxpayers and in furtherance of public justice.

The demurrer was properly overruled.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., who dissents.

SIMMONS, C. J. (dissenting). Before an officer can be required to pay out public money, or be justified in doing so, those who demand its payment should be able to show a clear provision of the law which entitles them to receive it. Kennedy v. Seamans, 60 Ga. 612. Such a clear provision of law cannot be shown by analogizing the services rendered the public to a law authorizing payment for other and different services. Where the law authorizes a grand jury to appoint a committee of citizens to investigate the books, etc., of the county officers, and makes no provision for the compensation of such committee, the persons so appointed are not entitled to compensation as jurors, nor can they be legally paid under the item of "court expenses." Court expenses include only such items or charges as are necessary for conducting the court, and such others as the Legislature may determine are proper to be paid under the words "court expenses," as used in the Constitution. Houston County v. Kersh, 82 Ga. 252, 10 S. E. 199; Adair v. Ellis, 83 Ga. 464, 10 S. E. 117; Howard v. Early County, 104 Ga. 669, 30 S. E. 890.

(120 Ga. 115)

BOURQUIN v. BOURQUIN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 14, 1904.)

TRUSTS—TRUSTEE'S DUTY TO PAY TAXES—PURCHASE AT TAX SALE—VALIDITY—REDEMPTION.

1. A fiduciary is bound to exercise the diligence of a prudent man in preventing trust property in his charge from being sold for taxes.

2. If he advances the money for this purpose, he will be entitled to a lien for reimbursement.

3. If a trustee is unable to make such advance, or otherwise to obtain funds, by which to prevent a sale under a superior lien, he may apply to the chancellor for an order to sell or mortgage, so as to save at least a part of the corpus for the beneficiaries.

4. One who is under the obligation to pay taxes cannot directly or indirectly purchase at a sale caused by his own default.

5. Where, in consequence of a trustee's breach of duty, the estate is sold for taxes, he cannot, even after the expiration of the redemption period, acquire a title from the purchaser at the tax sale, good as against his cestui que trust. In equity the reconveyance will be treated as a correction of the wrong, leaving the property impressed with the original trust.

6. The principle that one without notice can convey to one with notice is subject to an exception where the transfer is back to him who was first guilty of the wrong in selling or permitting a sale to an innocent purchaser. When the property again vests in such wrongdoer, the original equity reattaches to it in his hands.

7. Pending the action of ejectment, the property sued for was again sold at tax sale, and purchased by the defendant. Plaintiff within 12 months made a tender in compliance with the provisions of Pol. Code, § 909:

(a) If the plaintiff at the time of the second tax sale was in fact owner of the property, he had the right to redeem it.

(b) Upon the owner making the proper tender, the purchaser's interest in the land was at an end.

8. The verdict finding the land to be the property of the plaintiff was demanded by the evidence, but the defendant was not liable for rents or mesne profits during the four years the property was in the hands of the receiver.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Pope Barrow, Judge.

Action by Gugie Bourquin against Polignac Bourquin. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Modified.

By an ordinary warranty deed imposing no duty and conferring no powers, Ketchum and Hartridge, on September 2, 1872, conveyed vacant lot No. 15 Elliott Ward in the city of Savannah, to Gugie Bourquin, as trustee for Polignac Bourquin, a minor. Subsequently, at a date which does not appear in the record, Gugie Bourquin, out of his individual funds, erected thereon a house, and resided therein with his family, paying no rent to himself as trustee. Under a tax fi. fa. the lot was sold for city taxes in July, 1891, Polignac Bourquin being then still a minor. The property was purchased by Kaufman, who was requested so to do by the marshal, in order to protect Gugie Bourquin. According to the testimony, there had been no previous conference between Gugie Bourquin and Kaufman, but on the day after the expiration of the 12 months allowed for redemption Kaufman conveyed the lot to Gugie Bourquin individually, the consideration named being the amount of the bid and the 10 per cent. allowed by the statute. There was evidence that besides this Gugie Bourquin also paid to Kaufman the amount of certain tax fi. fas. against the same lot, which had been taken up and were then held by Kaufman, aggregating about $30. It appears that at the time of this reconveyance Polignac Bourquin was, and for some months had been, of age, but that he was absent from Savannah. On February 1, 1896, Polignac Bourquin, having reached majority, brought an action against Gugie Bourquin, his former trustee, for the recovery of the land and the rents since 1872. The defendant answered, setting up the tax sale to Kaufman and Kaufman's conveyance to him. He prayed that if, for any reason, his title was defective, he be allowed compensation for the improvements put by him on the property. On April 4, 1898, Gugie Bourquin conveyed to his son Guillemain the property in dispute and other property, the expressed consideration being $400. Subsequently lot No. 15 was levied on under tax fi. fas. against Gugie Bourquin, and at the sale thereunder on July 5, 1898, was purchased by Guillemain Bourquin. It appears that this tax fi. fa. represented taxes on lot 15 standing in the name of Gugie Bourquin. Within the year Polignac Bourquin's attorney tendered to Guillemain Bourquin the amount of the bid and 10 per cent. interest, and demanded a reconveyance. Guillemain declined to receive the money or to make the deed, whereupon the property, on a petition filed and served on May 12, 1899, was placed in the hands of a receiver, since which time the property has been in the receiver's possession. Guillemain was made "the party defendant" to the original action, having assented thereto in open court. It appears that there have been five previous trials, though what the verdicts in them were does not appear. 110 Ga. 440, 35 S. E. 710. The verdict on this, the sixth, trial, was in favor of the plaintiff for the land and $185 per annum from February 1, 1892, to the date of the verdict (June 5, 1903), $1,530, less claim for improvements, taxes, and repairs $1,239. The defendant made a motion for a new trial on the general grounds and on many special grounds which involve the proposition that, inasmuch as the evidence falls to show any collusion or fraud between Gule Bourquin and Kaufman in bringing about a sale, in bidding, or in redeeming, a verdict could not be sustained on that branch of the case, nor was there evidence to warrant charges in reference to fraud. As to the second sale it is contended that, while there was a tender made by Polignac's attorney to Guillemain Bourquin, for the purpose of redeeming from the second tax sale, the tender was not kept good; and that the verdict shows that the jury allowed the plaintiff mesne profits for the period during which the property was in the hands of the receiver.

Travis & Edwards, for plaintiff in error.
Geo. W. Owens, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. The trustee, Bourquin, failed to pay the taxes. The land was bought at tax sale by Kaufman. Immediately after the expiration of the redemption year Kaufman conveyed to Bourquin in his individual capacity. The latter and his representative now insist that, as Kaufman was an innocent purchaser, he acquired a valid title to the trust property at tax sale, and could convey as good a title to Bourquin as he could have made to any one else. A fiduciary is bound to exercise the diligence of a prudent man in protecting the property committed to his care. He is liable for negligence or bad faith in permitting its total destruction by a sheriff's sale on the same principle that he is responsible for its partial destruction by waste or mismanagement. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3170, 3200. If the property is incumbered by a lien, he cannot sit idly by and allow the estate to be sacrificed, but is bound to the exercise of diligence to prevent an improper foreclosure, or an improper or disadvantageous sale. The trustee here could have advanced the taxes, and would have been entitled to a lien for his reimbursement. Or if, as claimed, he had no individual or trust funds which could have been applied to that purpose, and if in the exercise of proper efforts he had been unable to borrow or to make other arrangements to pay or carry the taxes (Printup v. Trammell, 25 Ga. 240; Thompson v. Thompson, 77 Ga. 699 [4], 3 S. E. 261; Harrison v. Mock, 16 Ala. 616; Fischbeck v. Gross, 112 Ill. 208 [3]; King v. Cushman, 41 Ill. 81 [4], 89 Am. Dec. 366; Freeman v. Tompkins, 1 Strobh. Eq. [S. C.] 53; Burr v. McEwen, 1 Baldwin, 154, 162, Fed. Cas. No. 2,193), no reason appears why he could not have applied to the chancellor for an order to sell a portion of the lot, or to mortgage the entire property, so as to save at least a part of the corpus for the beneficiary (Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4863, 3172). And if, in spite of all his efforts, it had been brought to the block, he was bound to have made like diligent efforts to redeem within the year. Good faith was his duty, and that alone is his protection. Rogers v. Dickey, 117 Ga. 821, 45 S. E. 71. He could not buy at his own lawful sale. For a stronger reason he could not buy at a sale brought about by his own unlawful conduct. He cannot make a personal profit in dealing with the trust property either by act of omission or of commission. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3010, 3183. One who is under the obligation to pay taxes cannot directly or indirectly purchase at a sale caused by his own default. Such attempted purchase will be treated as payment. Pol. Code, § 904. When, therefore, Bourquin individually took a deed to the trust property from Kaufman, he unintentionally corrected the wrong of which he had previously been guilty, and the original status was restored; and whether this deed is treated as a redemption before the expiration of the 12 months, or as an independent purchase after the redemption year, the title to the land wrongfully allowed to be sold for taxes was thereafter held by him under the trust as it existed prior to his breach of duty. "It would be a gross fraud in him to suffer the land to be sold for these very taxes he was bound to pay lie by until the day of redemption was gone, buy in at the price of redemption the title of the purchaser, and then set up that title against that which he had undertaken to guard." Coxe v. Walcott, 27 Pa. 159; Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 370. Nor would the result be changed by the fact that, in addition to the bid and 10 per cent. he paid Kaufman $30, the amount of other tax liens against the estate. In both cases he holds the redeemed property in trust for his son Polignac, but with a right to reimbursement for all sums expended in the protection of the property. If there was no collusion in the bidding or redemption, and if Kaufman was an innocent purchaser, this makes no difference. The principle that one without notice can convey to one with notice (Civ. Code 1895, § 3938) is subject to an exception where the transfer is back to him who was guilty of the actual or constructive fraud in first transferring, or in permitting the property to be transferred, to an innocent purchaser. When the title reverts in the wrongdoer, the original equity will reattach to it in his hands. It has been so held in reference to the transfer of negotiable papers, and the same exception applies in regard to real property. Kennedy v. Daly, Sch. & Lef. 379; Clark v. McNeal, 114 N. Y. 287, 21 N. E. 405, 11 Am. St. Rep. 638. See Andrews v. Robertson, 87 N. W. 190, 54 L. R. A. 673, 87 Am. St. Rep. 870, and note. Compare Civ. Code 1895, § 3184. Were this not the rule, nothing would be easier than for a trustee to take advantage of his own wrong. It would only be necessary for him to make or permit a wrongful sale, in his individual capacity buy from the innocent purchaser, and then rely on the conveyance back as a shield with which to protect himself when sued for the very property which in the first instance, through a breach of duty, he allowed to be sold.

Pending suit there was a second tax sale, but we find it unnecessary to pass on the question as to whether, since the adoption of Code 1895, § 778, trust property, or property belonging to Polignac Bourquin, could lawfully be sold under an execution against Gugie Bourquin as an individual, if aided by parol evidence that the execution was intended to represent taxes on that lot. Fleming v. Kille, 78 Ga. 5; McLendon v. Horton, 95 Ga. 60, 22 S. E. 45; Burns v. Lewis, 86 Ga. 599, 13 S. E. 123. Nor is it necessary to consider whether, in view of its recitals, it might be treated as an execution in rem; nor to determine whether the sale was void because the levy was excessive. For whether the sale was valid or not, the tender by Polignac Bourquin of the bid and 10 per cent. defeated whatever interest Guillemain Bourquin acquired by virtue of the tax sale. Where a creditor refuses to accept a proper tender, the claim is not extinguished, nor is the debtor harmed by the refusal. He still has his money. He may lend it or use it in business. If, however, he wishes to stop the running of interest, or to prevent the accrual of costs, he must keep the tender good. Civ. Code 1895, § 3728. But where the creditor has collateral, mortgage, or other form of security upon the property of the debtor, the failure to accept a lawful tender discharges the lien which was intended to secure payment. When it has accomplished its purpose, it ought not longer to be effective against him who has done all required by the law or the contract to cancel the mortgage or to regain possession of the pledge. The debtor offers the money for the twofold purpose of paying his debt and redeeming his property. The creditor may, indeed, decline to receive what is due, but he cannot couple with his declination a refusal to cancel the lien or surrender that which thereafter belongs to the debtor free from the incumbrance. The debtor may wish to use the property pledged. He may wish to sell that which is incumbered, and by the act of the creditor in refusing proper tender he is prevented from having and using his own. It is evident that to allow such results would often work manifest hardship; and hence the rule, recognized by most of the authorities, is that, upon proper tender being made, while the original debt may continue, the lienor is entitled to a satisfaction of the lien, or to be restored to possession of the property. One of the ways for enforcing this right is the provision that the refusal of a proper tender discharges the lien. The debt continues, "but the tender is equivalent to payment as to all things which are incidental or accessory to the debt. The creditor, by refusing to accept, does not forfeit his right to the thing tendered [money], but he does lose all collateral benefits or securities." Tiffany v. St. John, 5 Lans. 153; McCalla v. Clark, 55 Ga. 53. The same principle is applicable to a tender made by the owner for the purpose of redeeming from a tax sale under Pol. Code, § 909. Thereafter the purchaser's inchoate, qualified, or defeasible estate terminates. Lamar v. Sheppard, 84 Ga. 561 (2), 10 S. E. 1084; Burden v. Bean (Ark.) 12 S. W. 241; Legro v. Lord, 10 Me. 161; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270 (3), 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 29 L. Ed. 185. Here, therefore, when Polignac tendered to Guillemain the amount of the latter's bid and 10 per cent. added thereto, the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the land. The defeasible title of the purchaser was at an end, and, whatever might be his rights as to the amount of the bid and penalty, he could no longer rely on the sheriff's deed as against him who offered to redeem and made the tender required by law. The two tax deeds having been nullified in the one case by the conveyance from Kaufman to the trustee, and in the other by the offer of the plaintiff to pay the redemption money within the time allowed by law, the defendant was without title, the plaintiff had made out a perfect paper title, and the verdict in his favor was demanded by the evidence.

The verdict against the defendant for mesne profits shows on its face that it included rent for the period that the land was in the hands of the receiver. Presumably he collected whatever rents accrued during that term. At any rate, there is nothing to suggest that the defendant was in possession. A new trial must therefore be granted on the ground of the motion assigning error as to the improper allowance for mesne profits. But, as there have already been six trials of this case, and there should be an end of litigation, we direct that the issue on the next trial be confined exclusively to a consideration of the question of mesne profits and the claim of set-off by the defendant.

Judgment affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with direction. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 83)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. GOODWIN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

EVIDENCE — OPINION — MASTER AND SERVANT — PERSONAL INJURIES — ABROGATION OF RULES — EVIDENCE — RELEASE — FRAUD — BURDEN OF PROOF — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The opinion of a witness is not admissible in evidence when all the facts and circumstances are capable of being clearly detailed and described, so that the jurors may be able readily to form correct conclusions therefrom.

2. On an issue whether a rule of a railway company, which it claimed an employé had expressly contracted to observe, had been rescinded or abrogated by general nonobservance on the part of its employés, with knowledge or acquiescence of the company, it was error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury, when

July requested by the company so to do, that they should not consider such nonobservance occurring prior to the date of the contract.

3. The charge of the court upon the subject of fraudulent misrepresentations was not subject to the criticism that there was no evidence to support it.

4. On an issue as to whether a party had been induced to sign a contract by fraudulent misrepresentations, the mere failure to specifically instruct the jury that the burden was on him who attacked the contract to show that it was so procured was no cause for a new trial, when the court charged generally that the burden of proof lies upon the party asserting or affirming a fact, and to the existence of whose case or defense the proof of such fact is essential.

5. The charge as to the presumption arising from the failure of a party to produce evidence in his power and within his reach was not applicable to the facts of this case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action by W. J. Goodwin against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Lawton & Cunningham and H. W. Johnson, for plaintiff in error. R. R. Richards and W. W. Gordon, Jr., for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. W. J. Goodwin sued the Central of Georgia Railway Company for damages for personal injuries sustained by him while coupling cars as a yard switchman in the employ of the defendant. There was a verdict for the plaintiff, and, defendant's motion for a new trial being overruled, it excepted.

1. A witness for the defendant testified that he was the general yardmaster of the defendant's yard, where the plaintiff was injured, during the time he worked there, and for some eight years previously; that witness had been in the yardmaster's business for some 10 years; that "lumber properly loaded in the manner I have described will often shift by the momentum, so that in the end it might project over the end of the cars; and I have seen many cars down there with the lumber projecting." He was asked by counsel for the defendant, "Could, or not, a man work down there for 30 days in the yard without seeing lumber in that way?" He answered, "No, sir; I know he couldn't." The court ruled out the question and answer, and in the motion for a new trial error was assigned upon this ruling. The point is clearly without merit, as the general rule is well established that opinion evidence is not competent when all the facts and circumstances upon which the opinion is founded are capable of being clearly detailed and described, so that the jury may be able readily to form correct conclusions therefrom. Mayor of Milledgeville v. Wood, 114 Ga. 370, 40 S. E. 239; Southern Mutual Ins. Co. v. Hudson, 115 Ga. 638, 42 S. E. 60. This rule was applicable to the evidence excluded.

2. At the time of entering upon his work for the defendant company, the plaintiff signed the following agreement, which was presented to him by the company: "Central of Georgia Railway Company. First Division. November 30, 1898. I fully understand that the rules of C. of Ga. Ry. Co. positively prohibit brakemen from coupling or uncoupling cars, except with a stick, and that brakemen, or others, must not go between cars, under any circumstances, for the purpose of coupling or uncoupling, or for adjusting pins, etc., when an engine is attached to such cars or train; and, in consideration of being employed by said Company, I hereby agree to be bound by said rule, and waive all or any liability of said Company to me for any results of disobedience or infraction thereof. I have read the above carefully and fully understand it. W. J. Goodwin. Witness: John Coleman." It appears that all of this agreement was printed matter, except the sentence immediately preceding Goodwin's signature, which last sentence was in writing. On December 27, 1898, the plaintiff's left hand was badly mutilated, while he was coupling with his hand, and without the use of a coupling stick, and was between the cars for the purpose of making the coupling, and while an engine was attached to one end of the train. The defendant pleaded, as a defense to the action, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in violating the provisions of his contract. One of the grounds upon which the plaintiff sought to avoid the obligation of the coupling-stick rule was that such rule, if it ever existed, had been abrogated by reason of its long and continued nonobservance, known and acquiesced in by the defendant company. Counsel for the defendant duly requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence that the use of the coupling stick was customarily disregarded by the plaintiff and other employes of the company, I charge you that the plaintiff would not be excused from carrying out his contract—if you find that an agreement was made—unless you should find from the evidence in this case that the nonobservance of the rule as to the use of the coupling stick had been so general, and had continued for such a length of time, after his employment, as to justify the conclusion that there had been a mutual rescission and abrogation of the contract." The court struck out of this request the words "after his employment," and then gave the remainder in charge to the jury. In the motion for a new trial, error was assigned upon the refusal to charge as requested, and in leaving out the words above quoted. The effect of giving this request, with these words omitted therefrom, was to authorize the jury to find that the custom of disregarding the coupling-stick rule by other employes of the defendant, prior to the making of the alleged contract of the plaintiff with the defendant, would be sufficient to relieve him of its terms. So construed, was the ruling of the court erroneous? This is the sole question presented by the assignment of error. There was evidence of the nonobservance of the coupling-stick rule prior to the employment of the plaintiff by the defendant. If the plaintiff and the defendant entered into an express contract at the time of his employment, whereby he specifically agreed, in consideration of such employment, to be bound by the rule not to couple cars except with a stick, and not to go between cars under any circumstances, for the purpose of coupling, when an engine was attached to them, then we think it is clear that the jury would not be authorized to consider what the custom with reference to the observance or non-observance of such rule was prior to the plaintiff's employment and to the making of that agreement. If the plaintiff was justified in believing that there had been a "mutual rescission and abrogation" of the contract, such belief must have been based upon mutual disregard of the rule subsequent to the date of the contract. It would not be possible to have a mutual rescission of a contract based upon a custom existing prior to the making of the agreement. Otherwise there would be the anomaly of parties having a mutual rescission in advance of the execution of their contract. So far as the plaintiff was concerned, it may have been the intention of the railroad company, at the time the contract was entered into, to specifically enforce the rule referred to in the agreement from its date, regardless of any custom which may have existed prior to that time. In the case of Richmond & Danville Railroad Company v. Hisson, 97 Ala. 187, 13 South. 209, it appeared that the plaintiff, when he entered the employment of the defendant as a switchman, signed one of its regular applications for service, which contained rule No. 20, providing that: "Cars must not be coupled by hand. Sticks for the purpose, long enough to prevent going between cars, will be furnished on application to yardmaster's office at end of each division. Any employé going in between cars while in motion, to uncouple them, does so at his own risk, and against the rule of the company." The plaintiff was injured in going between cars to couple them. It was held that, as plaintiff had entered into an express stipulation with defendant to abide by such rule, evidence that there was a custom for brakemen, when they found it impossible to couple with a stick, to go between the cars, after having signaled the engineer to stop the train, was not admissible to vary the terms of the rule. The court, through Haralson, J., said: "If rule 20, by long non-observance, had gone into disuse, and was a regulation of the company in name only, and no longer binding, we know of no law which, notwithstanding, prevented the parties from making it the basis of their contract for plaintiff's service, and, if bona fide entered into, how proof of any custom theretofore existing to the contrary might set aside and annul the deliberate engagements of the parties. Surely this would be making their contract for them, and denying them the privilege. We must hold, therefore, that, when a contract of the kind we are construing has been entered into between the parties, no proof of custom can be made, to the contrary of its stipulations, to vary its binding force, and that it must be held binding between the parties, unless it be shown by their acts and conduct they have mutually altered and rescinded it." What was said on the subject in the Hisson case was quoted, approved, and followed in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company v. Mothershead, 110 Ala. 143, 20 South. 67. We think we can safely conclude that the court erred in not instructing the jury in the language of the request. This ruling covers two other grounds of the motion for a new trial, where in the same point was made, but in different ways.

3, 4. The court charged the jury: "If you find from the evidence that Goodwin was induced to sign the release contract by fraudulent misrepresentations of the defendant's agent, Coleman—that is to say, a contract the terms of which he did not understand, and voluntarily assented to, on account of the fraudulent misrepresentations—the same would not be legally binding upon him." The error assigned, in the motion for a new trial, on this charge, was that there was no evidence that the company's agent, Coleman, had used any fraudulent misrepresentations which induced Goodwin to sign the contract, and that the charge erroneously authorized the jury to find that there had been such fraudulent misrepresentations. Goodwin testified that he signed the instrument which purported to be a contract, a copy of which we have hereinbefore set out, but that he did not write the words, "I have read the above carefully and fully understand it," which immediately precede his signature; that, at the time he was employed, the company's yardmaster said: "Run up here and sign a receipt for a coupling stick, and go down and work with that man. I have got a man out there working by himself." He further testified: "I went up there, and Mr. Coleman [the yardmaster's clerk] had that same thing, what defendant calls 'coupling-stick contract,' right there, and he says, 'Sign this here right quick.' He says, 'It is nothing but a receipt for a coupling stick,' * * * and says, 'I will get you a coupling stick after a while.' Upon that I signed it. I never knew it was a contract or anything else except that it was a receipt for a coupling stick, as it was represented to me to be." He further testified that he was in the office not more than a minute, just long enough to sign the instrument, and then ran down the steps and went to work with the man who was working by himself, and that in about 15 minutes Coleman gave him a coupling stick. As we have seen, the only question raised by the assignment of error is, was there any evidence that Coleman made any fraudulent misrepresentations which induced Goodwin to sign the instrument? According to Goodwin's positive testimony, Coleman explicitly told him that the instrument he was requested to sign was "nothing but a receipt for a coupling stick." If made, this statement was a misrepresentation—a misstatement of fact—as the instrument was not a mere receipt for a coupling stick, but was in form an express contract binding the employé who signed it to observe the rules of the company as therein stated. Was there any evidence tending to show that the alleged misrepresentation was fraudulent? "Misrepresentation of a material fact, made willfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, and acted on by the opposite party, constitutes legal fraud." Civ. Code 1895, § 4026. See, also, section 3533. The alleged misrepresentation was of a material fact. Coleman, if he made it, must have known of its falsity, as it was his duty to have such an instrument signed by Goodwin; and, if Coleman misrepresented the character of the instrument, the jury would be authorized to find that he did so intentionally and willfully. Goodwin testified, in effect, that he was deceived by it, and that he was induced by it to sign the instrument, and it is evident that if he should be bound by his signature he would be injured. Under these circumstances, the jury might infer that the misrepresentation was made to deceive. In 14 American & English Encyclopædia of Law, p. 103 (b), the rule is thus stated: "If a representation has been made with actual knowledge of its falsity, or what the law regards as equivalent to actual knowledge, an intention that it should be acted upon and should deceive will be presumed." We think it clear, from what has been said, that the charge under consideration is not open to the criticism made on it. We are not to be understood as holding that the charge, without qualification, was sound. As was said in Wood v. Cincinnati Safe Co., 96 Ga. 120, 22 S. E. 909, "fraud in its procurement voids a contract. * * * If one, apparently consenting by the execution of a written contract, can show that he did not in fact consent to its terms as therein expressed, but that his apparent consent was induced by false and fraudulent practices, by means of which he was overreached by the other party, and, without negligence upon his part, really deceived as to the terms of the contract, he would be entitled to be relieved from its apparent obligations. A negligent omission to inform himself as to the truth of the representations, when he had an opportunity so to do, or might, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have done, would amount to a waiver upon his part, and he would thereafter be estopped to impeach the contract upon grounds against which the exercise of reasonable care would, in the first instance, have protected him."

5. Exception was taken to the court's charge, in the language of section 5163 of the Civil Code of 1895, that "where a party has evidence in his power and within his reach by which he may repel a claim or charge against him, and omits to produce it, or, having more certain and satisfactory evidence in his power, relies on that which is of a weaker and inferior nature, a presumption arises that the charge or claim is well founded; but this presumption may be rebutted." After carefully studying the brief of evidence, we do not think this charge was applicable to the facts of the case. It does not appear that the railway company had any evidence in its power and within its reach, on any contested issue in the case, which it failed to produce. While we do not rule that the giving of this correct, abstract principle in charge was cause for a new trial, we do say that it was inapplicable. The questions made in the grounds of the motion for a new trial upon which we have not ruled are not such as will likely arise on another trial, so we deem it unnecessary to pass on them.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 95)

SALAS v. DAVIS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—TENANCY AT SUFFERANCE—EVIDENCE—HOLDING OVER.

1. Under the undisputed evidence in this case, the defendant was a tenant by sufferance, and not at will, and the verdict in his favor in the proceeding to dispossess him as a tenant holding over was unwarranted.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Pope Barrow, Judge.

Action by M. T. Salas against E. E. Davis. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Lawton & Cunningham, for plaintiff in error. Travis & Edwards and Adams & Adams, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. This was an action to dispossess a tenant holding over. Pending the suit the tenant vacated the premises, making a continuing tender to the landlord of the rent which had accrued, at the rate fixed in the expired lease contract. This was refused, and the action continued to recover double rent under the provisions of the Civil Code of 1895, § 4817. The jury found for the defendant, and, the plaintiff's motion for a new trial being overruled, she excepted. There was no material conflict in the evidence, and it seems to be admitted that the only question for decision by this court is whether, under the evidence, the defendant was a tenant at will or a tenant by sufferance. If the former, the verdict in his favor was demanded; if the latter, the plaintiff should have had a verdict for double rent.

It appears that Davis rented the property in dispute from Mrs. Salas under a lease which expired January 15, 1902. In October, 1901, Salas, the husband and agent of the plaintiff, had a conversation with Davis, in which he asked the question: "Are you going to continue in the same place?" Davis replied that he was. On December 2, 1901, Salas wrote Davis a letter notifying him of the approaching expiration of the lease, and saying: "Kindly advise if you desire to vacate or to remain longer. In the latter case a new lease will have to be entered into." Apparently, Davis did not reply to this letter, for he testified that on January 10, 1902, Salas called him over the telephone and asked him if it had been received. He replied in the affirmative, whereupon Salas asked him if he intended to call on him, and he answered: "Yes; next week." On January 13, 1902, Salas again called Davis over the telephone, and, according to a memorandum made by Davis at the time, asked the latter if he intended to continue on at the same place. Davis replied: "Yes; I will bring up duplicate lease." Salas answered: "Come up and see me." On January 17, 1902, Salas and Davis met, and the former refused to renew the lease at the rate of rental fixed in the one which had just expired. On January 25, 1902, 10 days after the expiration of the old lease, Davis' attorney wrote a letter to Salas in which he said: "I enclose herewith lease made in duplicate under the same terms as the former, which Mr. Davis has signed. Will you kindly sign both copies of lease, keeping one for yourself and returning the other to me." On January 27, 1902, Salas replied to this letter, returning the duplicate copies of the lease, and saying: "As soon as Mr. Davis and myself have agreed upon terms and conditions I will be pleased to advise you. Unless this can be done without delay I ask that Mr. Davis vacate, as I desire to negotiate with others if he does not wish the place." On February 18, 1902, Salas made a written demand upon Davis for possession of the property, which was refused, and on February 25, 1902, the present suit was commenced.

We are clear that the facts which have been recited make out a case of tenancy by sufferance, and not at will. There is not a line of evidence to indicate that the tenancy of Davis after the expiration of the lease was by the permission of the landlord. On the contrary, more than a month before the lease expired, Salas wrote to Davis, reminding him of the fact that his tenancy under the lease would soon end, and notifying him that, in the event he desired to retain the premises, it would be necessary to execute a new lease. In the different conversations between the parties over the telephone, Salas gave no intimation of a willingness to continue the tenancy under the terms of the then existing lease, but on each occasion invited Davis to confer with him as to the terms on which a new lease should be executed. The decision of this court in the case of Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794, is, in our opinion, controlling of the question now under consideration, and the facts of that case are closely analogous to those of the case at bar. We deem it unnecessary to enter into a more extended discussion at this time as to what is necessary to constitute a tenancy at will and one by sufferance. It is sufficient to refer to the admirable opinion of Mr. Justice Cobb in the case cited for a full and exhaustive exposition of the law bearing on this subject.

The necessary conclusion from the foregoing is that the verdict for the defendant was unwarranted, and should have been set aside on motion for new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(120 Ga. 101)

GORDON COUNTY et al. v. PYRON et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 14, 1904.)

INJUNCTION—CONTINUANCE—DISCRETION.

1. It appearing that the question at issue is not so much whether an injunction should have been granted, as whether or not the order passed was in proper form, and it not appearing that there was any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court, the judgment will not be disturbed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Gordon County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by T. J. Pyron and others against Gordon county and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiffs in error.
Geo. A. Coffee and Geo. A. H. Harris & Son, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. Pyron and others brought suit to enjoin the county authorities of Gordon county from letting a contract to build a bridge over the Oostanaula river at a designated point in the county, the grounds of the petition being that no provision had been made by the county authorities to pay for the bridge; that the Oostanaula river is a navigable river, opened up to navigation and kept in a navigable condition by the United States government, and no permission has been obtained from the United States authorities to erect such a bridge, as is required by law; and that there is no public road on either side of the river to the place where it is contemplated that the bridge shall be erected. The petition also alleged that the county authorities had grossly abused their discretion in the selection of the place where the bridge was to be built. The answer of the defendants admitted that no direct provision had as yet been made for defraying the expenses of building the bridge, but averred that, so soon as the cost of its erection could be ascertained, a tax would be levied to cover that amount. It was also admitted that no permission had been obtained from the United States authorities to build the bridge, and that at the point where the bridge was to be built there was no road on either side of the river, though it was averred that the parties owning the land in the vicinity through which it was proposed to build a road to the new bridge had declared their willingness to donate the land necessary for the road without any cost to the county. The defendants denied that they had abused their discretion, and claimed in their answer that no court had any power to control their discretion in the matter. The judge of the court below seems to have passed upon the case entirely from an inspection of the pleadings, as no evidence for either side was brought up with the record. The bill of exceptions recites that "defendants requested the court to frame the injunction so as to enjoin them only until such time as they could get the consent and approval of the Secretary of War for the United States, and the chief of engineers thereof, for the building of said bridge"; that "plaintiffs' counsel moved the court to grant the usual order restraining the defendants till the further order of the court"; and that "the court passed the order moved by plaintiffs, enjoining the defendants until the further order of the court, to which decision of the court granting plaintiffs' motion and overruling that of the defendants the said defendants then and there excepted, and now assign the same as error." It will thus be seen that the plaintiffs in error practically admit the propriety of an injunction restraining them from letting a contract for the erection of the proposed bridge until such time as will be required for them to obtain the consent of the United States authorities for the completion of their project, and that practically the only question at issue is whether the court erred in not framing the injunction so as to make it continue until that specific time, rather than until "the further order of the court." In this view of the case, the judgment must, of course, be affirmed. It being apparently admitted that the bridge could not be legally erected without the consent of the United States authorities, and that in the absence of that consent the grant of an injunction was proper, it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in making the injunction binding until its further order, rather than until the necessary consent could be obtained. It is also to be borne in mind that the court had before it no evidence, and was compelled to rely on the pleadings for the facts upon which to base its rulings. The defendants themselves admitted that no road led to the site of the proposed bridge on either side of the river; and, while it was claimed that such a road was projected, it does not seem to have gotten any further than the minds of the projectors. Relying, as we must, solely on the pleadings for the facts, we cannot say that the court erred in granting an injunction.

We do not lose sight of the request contained in the brief of counsel for the plaintiffs in error that this court decide "what we have to do to be enabled to build this bridge"; but, consistently with our uniform practice, we must decline to pass on any question not legally presented for our decision.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

MILLER v. BROOKS.

(120 Ga. 263)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. May 13, 1904.)

TAXATION—EXECUTION—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—APPEAL—PRACTICE—CROSS-BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY.

1. An execution for municipal taxes, not describing any particular property, but simply directing the seizure of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of "the estate of A. J. Miller," is void, and a purchaser at a sale under the levy of such an execution obtains no title.

2. A levy upon a lot of land, which identifies it only by reference to a given number in a named city, will be held to be void for uncertainty when there are several lots of that number in the city.

3. An entry on a tax execution of a levy on land, actually written by a deputy sheriff, but signed by the sheriff, is the official entry of the sheriff; and, if amendable at all, it cannot, after the death of the sheriff, and the deputy has gone out of office, be amended by the deputy.

4. A case involving several issues was submitted to a jury, with instructions to find against the plaintiff on one of them. The plaintiff secured a verdict on another issue. The defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and the case brought to the Supreme Court. Held, that the defendant in error might, without filing a cross-bill of exceptions for that purpose, contend in that court that the evidence demanded a finding in his favor on the issue which the judge instructed against him, and that for this reason the motion for a new trial was properly overruled, notwithstanding the judge may have committed error in charging upon the other issues in the case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

Action by J. I. Brooks, as administrator of the estate of one Mousseau, deceased, against the executors of the will of A. J. Miller, deceased, in which G. H. Miller intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and the intervener brings error. Affirmed.

R. R. Richards and Saussey & Saussey, for plaintiff in error. Adams & Adams, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. A mortgage execution in favor of Brooks, as administrator of Mousseau, against the executors of the will of A. J. Miller, and the western half of lot No. 37, Jackson Ward, and improvements, in the city of Savannah, Ga., was levied upon the property described therein, and a claim was interposed by G. H. Miller. The case was tried before Judge Barrow, and resulted in a verdict finding the property subject. Judge Barrow having died on the day that the verdict was rendered, a motion for a new trial was made before his successor, Judge Cann, who refused to set aside the verdict finding the property subject. The claimant excepted.

1. The motion for a new trial contains numerous grounds, but, under the view we have taken of the case, it becomes unnecessary to deal with many of them. The claimant's title depended upon two tax sales—one under an execution in favor of the city of Savannah, and the other under an execution in favor of the state and county. We have reached the conclusion that the evidence demanded a finding that both sales were void, and that therefore there was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial. Real estate in Savannah is assessed for taxation by official assessors, and not by returns made to the tax receiver. The property in controversy was assessed for city taxes as the property of "the estate of A. J. Miller," and the city treasurer issued an execution which did not describe any particular property, but commanded the marshal generally that "of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of the estate of A. J. Miller, he cause to be made and levied" the amount claimed for taxes; the execution reciting that "the said estate of said A. J. Miller" had refused and neglected to pay the taxes in the time prescribed by the ordinance. This execution was levied upon the property in controversy, and after due advertisement the property was sold at the time and place fixed by law, and the claimant became the purchaser. The time for redemption expired without an effort to redeem from any one interested in the property. The Code provides: "Taxes are to be charged against the owner of the property if known, and against the specific property itself if the owner is not known." Pol. Code 1895, § 778. This rule did not appear in any of the earlier Codes. It was taken from the decision in Burns v. Lewis, 86 Ga. 602, 13 S. E. 126, where Mr. Chief Justice Bleckley uses the following language: "In this state the universal rule, unless some statute can be shown to vary it in particular instances, is that taxes are to be charged upon the owners of property. Owners therefore have an interest in being properly designated in executions which issue for the collection of taxes upon their property, or, if they cannot be designated with reasonable certainty, that the property shall be pointed out in the executions as authority for seizing it irrespective of ownership, or as the property of some particular person. In all cases of doubt the execution should specify the particular realty on which the tax accrued, and direct the officer to seize it, or so much of it as is necessary to pay its own taxes. This is especially true where the system of assessment, as in Atlanta, is by official assessors, and not by returns made to a tax receiver." The owner of property must be a natural person, a corporation, or a quasi person or entity, such as a partnership. The law recognizes no other owners of property. "The estate of A. J. Miller" is not the name of a natural person, and does not import either a partnership or a corporation. Consequently on the face of the assessment and execution the name of no owner appears. They are therefore prima facie void. The general rule seems to be that, in the absence of a statute permitting the contrary, the tax assessment must disclose either the name of a person as owner, or use such descriptive words as would indicate ownership in some person. An assessment against "the widow and heirs of A. B., deceased," has been held good, because it was by description against certain persons. Wheeler v. Anthony, 10 Wend. 346. An assessment against "Henry Toland's heirs" seems to have been held sufficient in Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 849, 7 L. Ed. 882. "A's heirs" was held sufficient in Noble v. Indianapolis, 18 Ind. 506. A sale under an assessment against "the estate of Andrew King, deceased," was, in Jackson v. King (Ala.) 3 South. 232, held to convey no title. As also an assessment to the "estate of Parkhurst." L'Engle v. Wilson, 21 Fla. 461. And also an assessment to the "Estate of Orrin Woodman." Inhabitants of Fairfield v. Woodman, 76 Me. 549. See, also, Cook v. Leland, 5 Pick. 236; Vaughan v. Commissioners, 154 Mass. 145, 28 N. E. 144; Fowler v. Campbell (Mich.) 59 N. W. 185; Trowbridge v. Horan, 78 N. Y. 440; Sawyer v. Mackie (Mass.) 21 N. E. 807. The only case which has been called to our attention which, on general principles, takes a contrary view, is that of Kingman v. Glover, 8 Rich. Law, 27, 45 Am. Dec. 756, where the Supreme Court of South Carolina held that a tax warrant issued against "the est. of Mrs. E. A. Hammond," properly construed, was an execution against the estate of the person named, and, so construed, was valid. In Louisiana it has been held that a tax assessment against the estate of a deceased person was, in substance, an assessment against his "succession," and that as under the civil law, which there prevails, the succession of a deceased person was an entity, the assessment was valid. New Orleans v. Estate of Stewart, 28 La. Ann. 180; Carter v. New Orleans, 33 La. Ann. 816. In Dickison v. Reynolds, 48 Mich. 158, 12 N. W. 24, an assessment against the estate of a deceased person was held to be the legal equivalent of an assessment against the heirs or devisees of such person, and valid under a statute authorizing an assessment of the latter character. In State v. Platt, 24 N. J. Law, 108, an assessment against "the estate of J. B. Coles, deceased," was held to be not such an error as would authorize the court to set aside the same on certiorari, but doubt was expressed as to whether a sale of lands under such an assessment would convey title. In the cases of Douglas Company v. Com. (Va.) 34 S. E. 52, Moale v. Baltimore, 61 Md. 224, and State v. Corson (N. J. Sup.) 13 Atl. 265, assessments against the estates of deceased persons, as such, seem to have been upheld under peculiar local laws regulating the matter of tax assessments. Under the provisions of the Code above quoted, as well as under the general principles of law applicable to such cases, the assessment and execution in the present case were void, because the assessment was not made, nor the execution issued, against any person. This view of the matter is strengthened when we take into consideration the provisions of the charter of Savannah, where the power of the municipality to levy taxes is distinctly limited to assessments and taxes "on the inhabitants of said city, and those who hold taxable property within the same, and those who transact or offer to transact business therein." Code 1882, § 4847. The scheme of the charter is in accord with the general principles of law requiring, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, taxes and assessments to be, as a general rule, against persons, and only against property when the owner or person subject to the assessment is unknown.

2. The claimant was also the purchaser at a tax sale had under an execution issued for state and county taxes for the years 1894 and 1895. The tax executions were issued against Mrs. Elizabeth Miller, and each contained a levy in the following words: "Under and by virtue of the above f. fa. I have levied upon the following described property of the defendant, and I will sell the same in terms of the law to satisfy this f. fa.: west half ($\frac{1}{2}$) lot (37) thirty-seven and improvements, City of Savannah." The levies were signed by John T. Ronan, sheriff of Chatham county, Ga. It was admitted in open court that there were a large number of lots 37 in the city of Savannah, and only one lot 37 in Jackson Ward. In the light of this admission, the levy does not identify any particular lot of land, and was therefore void. Brown v. Moughon, 70 Ga. 756; Ansley v. Wilson, 50 Ga. 418; Collins v. Dixon, 72 Ga. 475; O'Kelley v. Gholston, 89 Ga. 1, 15 S. E. 123; Brinson v. Lassiter, 81 Ga. 41, 6 S. E. 468. In the case of Morgan v. Burks, 90 Ga. 287, 15 S. E. 821, the description was far more definite than in the present; the property there being described as "the west half of city lot number 79 on the corner of Broad street in the city of Albany, Ga." While in the case of Studstill v. Willcox, 94 Ga. 692, 20 S. E. 120, it was apparently held that a levy on real estate might be aided by parol evidence, it must be kept in mind that in that case the levy was being relied on as color, and not as a muniment, of title. If the ruling went any further than this, the decision must yield to former rulings with which it is in conflict, such as Brown v. Moughon, supra.

3. Complaint is made because the court refused to allow the sheriff's levy to be amended by inserting the words "Jackson Ward" after the lot number. It appeared that Ronan, the sheriff, was dead; that the body of the levy was actually written by Humphries, Ronan's deputy; and that Humphries, who was still in life, but no longer in office, was in court, and willing to make the amendment. There was no error in this ruling. The case of Hudspeth v. Scarborough, 69 Ga. 777, is controlling in principle, although the facts are not exactly the same. In that case the sheriff who made the entry was dead, and it was sought to have the same amended by his successor, who had been his deputy. See, also, Ansley v. Wilson, 50 Ga. 418.

4. Judge Barrow charged the jury that the city tax sale was valid. The jury evidently based their verdict as to this sale upon the ground that the sale, though valid as a tax sale, was void for other reasons which are not necessary to be referred to now. It is contended by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the defendant in error cannot in this court claim that the evidence demanded a verdict in his favor as to the city tax sale, when he has not by cross-bill of exceptions assigned error upon the instruction that it was valid. We cannot concur in this view. Of course, the defendant in error cannot invoke any decision on any ruling made by the judge, either in admitting evidence or in charging the jury, in the absence of a cross-bill of exceptions; but, when the case is here upon the bill of exceptions of his adversary, complaining that the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial, the defendant in error can set up any sufficient reason that may exist which would authorize this court to hold that the judgment refusing a new trial was proper. If it can be shown that no other verdict than the one rendered could have been rendered consistently with the law and the evidence, then this court will not reverse the trial judge for refusing to grant a new trial. A new trial will never be granted if the evidence demanded the verdict rendered, even though the judge may have committed errors in his charge. If the only possible legal result has been reached by the jury, the judgment of the trial judge will not be reversed at the instance of the losing party merely for the purpose of allowing the case to be heard again, that the same result may be brought about.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(56 W. Va. 223)

WM. JAMES' SONS & CO. v. GOTT & BALL.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 8, 1904.)

APPEAL — RECORD — AMENDMENT — OFFICE JUDGMENT — CONTINUANCE — SETTING ASIDE.

1. Amendments of the records of the circuit court in pending appeal cases cannot be made in this court, but application for such amendments must be made to the circuit court. Omissions of the clerk in copying such records may be supplied by certiorari, and papers not parts of such record, by mistake copied therein, will be disregarded, if apparent from the record or on his certificate of the fact.

2. At the term at which an office judgment would become final by operation of the statute, if the plaintiff agrees with the defendant to continue the case until the next term, and such agreement and continuance is entered of record, they will prevent the office judgment becoming final by operation of the statute, and it cannot thereafter become final until it is entered up as the judgment.

3. Before such office judgment becomes final by such entry, the defendant may have the same set aside by filing his counter affidavit and pleading to issue.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Summers County;
J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Action by Wm. James' Sons & Co. against Gott & Ball. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants bring error. Reversed.

R. F. Dunlap and Heffen & Liveley, for plaintiffs in error. Miller & Read, for defendants in error.

DENT, J. Gott & Ball, plaintiffs in error, complain of a judgment of the circuit court of Summers county against them, in favor of Wm. James' Sons & Co., defendants in error, for $753.71, rendered on the 25th day of May, 1903.

The defendant in error moved to amend the record in this case by expunging therefrom the words: "May 30, 1896, Mr. Cook gave us his note for $150.00, but only $100.00 of it to be applied on this acceptance, and the other $50.00 credit on book, etc. Explanatory and also a further indorsement appears, through which a pen line has been drawn, to wit: Received on the within May 30, 1896, as above [this being the same credit $100.00]" — being an indorsement on the order sued on, and which the defendant in error claims was erased and improperly copied by the clerk. It files an affidavit for this purpose, and plaintiff files a counter affidavit and resists the motion. If it is true that the clerk improperly copied such memorandum as a part of record, when it had been erased, a certificate from the clerk would make its expungement necessary; but affidavits cannot be received in this court to correct the record as certified by the clerk. If the clerk has omitted papers from the record he should have copied, a certiorari will lie to bring up such omitted portions, or if the clerk has copied papers in the record that are not properly parts of it, if such fact appears from the record, the court will disregard them; otherwise, the clerk's certificate must be obtained, showing why he copied such papers. If they were properly copied by him, and ought not to be in the record, and are apparently true parts thereof, the record cannot be amended in this court; but the party injured thereby must appeal to the circuit court for the amendment of its record, and then have the same certified to this court. This court acts on the record as made by the circuit court, and will not entertain motions to amend it as so made; but such motions must be addressed to the circuit court, and such amendments, if proper, made in such court. McClure-Mable Lumber Co. v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. 921.

The plaintiff brought its suit and filed with its declaration an affidavit, in accordance with section 46, c. 125, Code 1899. At the next term, before the office judgment became final, the parties to the suit agreed to a continuance. At the next term no order was made. At the third term the plaintiff moved for judgment. The defendants then appeared and tendered their affidavit and pleas, and asked that the office judgment be set aside and that they be permitted to file the same. The court refused to permit defendants to plead, but entered up judgment for the plaintiff. This is claimed by the plaintiff to be in accordance with the rule established by this court in the case of Marsteller v. Ward, 52 W. Va. 74, 43 S. E. 178. This holding by the court is undoubtedly right, unless the agreement to a continuance had the effect of preventing the office judgment from becoming final by law. The object of these provisions of the statute is to allow the plaintiff to have a judgment without unreasonable delay. The plaintiff may waive the benefit thereof, and agree that the office judgment shall not become final in accordance with the statute. Its agreement to a continuance is, in effect, such agreement; for the case is carried over to the next term in the same condition that it was in when the agreement became part of the record by consent of the parties. 9 Cyc. 150. The court could not have, on its own motion, entered a continuance to have such effect; nor could the defendants have had a continuance, without filing their affidavit and pleading to issue. But the plaintiff had the right to grant to the defendants time until next term to file their affidavit and plead to issue, and thereby the operation of the law is interrupted, and the finality of the office judgment prevented, and such office judgment cannot thereafter become final until it is entered as the judgment of the court. King v. Hicks, 32 Md. 460. If such was not the purpose of the continuance, why was it agreed to by the plaintiff? It had the law in its own hands. All it had to do was to wait and let it take its course. It agreed that it should not take its course, by matter entered of record. If it was not sincere in this agreement, it should not have entered it, but required the defendants to plead to issue. Now, to claim that it does not have any effect would permit the plaintiff to take an unjust advantage of the defendants. A party may waive a statutory right when such waiver is not contrary to public policy (28 En. Plead. & Prac. 535). Such waiver prevents the office judgment from becoming final, and the defendant may afterwards, until it becomes final by order of court, file his affidavit and plead to issue. If a party agrees his legal rights away when he may, he must accept the consequences thereof. In 1 Black on Judgments, § 86, the law is stated to be: "When a default has actually been entered against the defendant, he cannot escape its consequences by filing a plea or answer, unless by consent of the plaintiff or leave of the court. But a default may be waived; and it will be considered that this is done if the plaintiff subsequently permits the defendant, without objection, to participate in the proceedings, as by filing an answer or demurrer." Cornell University v. The Denny Hotel Co., 15 Wash. 433, 46 Pac. 654. Any appearance under our statute is an appearance to the action, but will not authorize setting aside the office judgment, unless by plea properly filed, although, with the consent of the plaintiff, it will prevent the office judgment becoming final by operation of law, so that judgment may not thereafter be taken by default. But the office judgment may be entered up in court for want of a proper plea.

*Rehearing denied June 2, 1904.

The circuit court, therefore, erred in not permitting defendants to file their affidavits and plead to issue at the May term, 1903. This makes it unnecessary to consider the various minor objections urged by the defendants as to the insufficiency of the declaration and the necessity for a writ of inquiry, which appear, however, to have no substantial foundation, as the only object of the defendants appears to be to have a bearing on the merits of the controversy as raised by the pleas. The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded, with leave to the defendants to file their affidavit and pleas, and for further proceedings.

(54 W. Va. 696)

STATE v. McELDOWNEY et al.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 9, 1904.)

TAX SALE—DEFECTS—CURATIVE ACT—PURCHASES BY STATE—RES JUDICATA—DISMISSAL OF BILL—TAX DEED—SETTING ASIDE—REPAYMENT TO PURCHASER.

1. The failure to return a list of delinquent lands sold for taxes by the first Monday in June is not, under chapter 31, § 25, Code 1899, ground for setting aside a sale, either to the state or an individual. The defect is cured by that section. Expressions to the contrary in McGhee v. Sampselle, 34 S. E. 815, 47 W. Va. 352, disapproved.

2. The curative provisions as to tax sales in section 25, c. 31, Code 1899, apply to purchases by the state of land sold for taxes. Point 3 of the syllabus in McGhee v. Sampselle, 34 S. E. 815, 47 W. Va. 352, to the contrary, is overruled.

3. A sale for delinquent taxes, of land purchased by the state for taxes for a year previous to the year for the taxes of which the land is sold to an individual, is illegal and void, and a deed under such sale is void.

4. To render a former decree a bar as res judicata in a second suit about the same matter, not mere matter of defense, the matter of the second suit must have been actually in issue in the first. The pleadings of the first suit must be such that the party could have proven and had it passed on.

5. Where a bill in a suit does not present facts which call for relief, and it is dismissed, the decree will not bar a subsequent bill on the same cause of action, which states additional or other facts not in the first bill, which make the second bill good, for the same relief called for in the first suit.

6. If a material fact touching a matter of controversy is such that it must be stated in a bill, a decree dismissing a bill not stating it will not bar a second bill properly stating such fact.

7. To render a former decree a bar to a second suit, the demand must not only be the same, but the cause of that demand must be the same.

8. Where the record leads to the ground of decision, that decision is no farther a bar to a second suit than as to that ground, except as to defense which the party is bound to plead.

9. A bill to set aside a tax deed for defects in the proceedings under which it was sold must point out those defects.

10. Where a tax deed is set aside by decree, not for a mistake or irregularity in the record of the proceedings under which it was sold, referred to in section 25, c. 31, Code 1899, but because the sale was unauthorized by law, and so the deed void, the former owner, suing to clear his title of such deed, will not be required to repay the tax purchaser his outlay in his purchase or taxes paid by him.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wetzel County; M. H. Willis, Judge.

Action by the state against John C. McEldowney and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. N. Miller, R. F. Fleming, and B. T. Bowers, for the State. E. B. Snodgrass, for appellees.

BRANNON, J. Levi Shuman was taxed with a lot of land, on which is a mill, in Wetzel county, for the year 1890, and it was sold for delinquency for said tax in 1891, and purchased by the state. It was again taxed for the year 1891, returned delinquent, sold for such taxes in 1893, and purchased by John C. McEldowney, who obtained a deed under such tax sale. The lot was sold from Shuman under a decree for purchase money, and purchased in June, 1891, by Cassie L. Nuzum, and it was conveyed to her, under such judicial sale, 14th November, 1891. Mrs. Nuzum attacked McEldowney's tax purchase by a suit in Wetzel county to set it aside for irregularity in the tax sale, but her suit was decided against her by this court, as will be seen in 46 W. Va. 207, 32 S. E. 1024. After this the state of West Virginia, claiming that the said lot was vested in it under its said tax purchase, in a chancery suit in the circuit court of Wetzel county, sought to sell the lot for the benefit of the school fund. The bill in this suit made McEldowney a defendant, set up his said tax title, alleged the invalidity of the tax sale to him, and sought to set it aside as null and void. The bill also made Mrs. Nuzum a defendant, alleging that she had acquired the lot under said judicial sale. McEldowney answered this bill, relying upon his tax title. Mrs. Nuzum filed an answer in the nature of a cross-bill attacking and seeking to annul McEldowney's tax deed as void, and admitting the right of the state, and offering to redeem the land under the statute by payment to the state of the requisite amount. McEldowney answered, and resisted the relief sought by Mrs. Nuzum in her answer. Upon the hearing a decree was pronounced declaring the state's purchase for taxes void, but declaring the taxes a lien on the lot, and allowing McEldowney to remove the lien by payment, and dismissing the state suit, and holding valid McEldowney's tax deed, and refusing to set it aside as prayed by Mrs. Nuzum in her answer, and dismissing that answer. From this decree Mrs. Nuzum took an appeal.

*Rehearing denied June 2, 1904.

Take the case as between the state and McEldowney. The state attacks McEldowney's deed for irregularity, and he attacks the state's purchase for taxes. McEldowney says that the state's purchase is invalid by reason of the fact that the delinquent list under which the sale to the state was made was not returned until 27th July, 1901, when the law required it to be returned by the first Monday in June, and according to McGhee v. Sampsele, 47 W. Va. 352, 34 S. E. 815, holding that this would render the state's purchase bad, and that the curative provisions of section 25, c. 31, Code 1899 (chapter 130, p. 387, Acts 1882), do not apply to heal defects in purchases by the state, the sale to the state would be void. The court now disapproves and overrules such holdings of that case. We hold that such curative provisions apply to purchases by the state the same as to individual tax deeds. Section 32 says that the state purchases shall be listed, and that "all such estate, right, title and interest * * * as would have vested in an individual purchaser shall be by the sale and purchase on behalf of the state vested in the state without deed." Why does not this give the state right to the cure of the statute? Really the case of McGhee v. Sampsele as to this point is obiter, as the trees were not owned by Nancy Brown, and not taxable in her name. It was not necessary to pass on the tax deed to decide the case.

We further hold that the fact that the delinquent list was not returned within the time specified by law does not render the state's purchase void, and this because section 25, c. 31, Code 1899, says that "no irregularity, error or mistake in the delinquent list, or the return thereof, or in the affidavit thereto, * * * shall, after the deed is made, invalidate the sale or deed." Of course, the state title is subject to redemption by a party entitled to redeem. In this case the state is entitled to a decree to sell the lot on failure of redemption.

As between McEldowney and Mrs. Nuzum. She says in her answer that McEldowney's tax deed is void for the reason that the delinquent list was not returned by the first Monday in June, 1892, and not until 25th July. This defect is cured by provisions in Code 1899, c. 31, as just stated. Mrs. Nuzum's answer charges that, as the lot was sold to the state for taxes for 1890, the assessment for 1891 was contrary to law, for the reason that chapter 31, Code 1899, prohibits its assessment, while it is vested in the state, until it is redeemed. This point cannot prevail, because on 1st April, 1891, Shuman was still owner, and the assessment relates to that date, and the delinquent list was not returned until July, and the state did not purchase until 14th December, 1891.

But there is another objection to the sale to McEldowney. It is that he purchased for taxes in December, 1893, and before that the fact that the lot had been sold to the state was apparent in the auditor's office, and Code 1899, c. 31, § 4, directs him to send out for sale lists of land, delinquent for taxes, "not previously sold therefor," and does not allow him to send out for sale lands owned by the state by tax purchase. There was no law allowing the Auditor to send out this lot for sale in 1893, because it was state property, and there was no law to authorize its sale, and that sale was simply void. Section 23, c. 29, Code 1899, forbids the assessment of land vested in the state by tax sale, and the two statutes plainly make such sale to McEldowney illegal. Totten v. Nighbert, 41 W. Va. 800, 24 S. E. 627, so holds. There is no provision of law curing this void sale. A question arose with me whether the answer specifies this vice in the sale. It does not clearly do so, but it states the fact of the sale, and that it was not redeemed, and that it was for 1891 charged and was delinquent for taxes for that year, and sold to McEldowney therefor, and that the sale was void. Under these facts it results, as matter of law, that the Auditor did send out, and the sheriff sold, the lot without authority of law, and we think the answer may be regarded as sufficient to present this defect.

After preparing this opinion, I notice that in Sayers v. Burkhardt, 85 Fed. 246, 29 C. C. A. 137, the Circuit Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Judge Goff, holds that it is against law to assess land purchased by the state. It thence plainly follows that the assessment and sale are void.

But McEldowney pleads that the decree of this court upon the bill of Mrs. Nuzum against him is a bar to any relief upon her said answer in this suit as res judicata. In the former suit Mrs. Nuzum's bill assailed McEldowney's tax deed on certain grounds, namely, defect in the sheriff's affidavit to the sales list and defect in the heading of the list, but did not impeach the deed on the ground that there was no authority to sell by reason of the fact that the land was vested in the state under its purchase for taxes. The fact that it had been purchased by the state for taxes before 1891 was not mentioned in the pleadings, and was not in issue, and therefore the decree is no bar as to this. A judgment will bar "only upon the matter actually at issue and determined in the original action, and such matter when not disclosed by the pleadings must be shown by extrinsic evidence." Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 423, 24 L. Ed. 204. It must have been directly in issue. Western Mining Co. v. Va. Cannel Coal Co., 10 W. Va. 250; Doonan v. Glynn, 28 W. Va. 715; Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Rand. 86; 1 Greenl. Ev. 528.

It is old law, oft repeated, that estoppels are odious because they shut out the truth. We cannot say that this is applied in the same sense as once it was, but we can say that the principle yet prevails to deny the right to bar matters never in fact involved in a former trial; at least, where it was not admissible under the pleadings. I do not forget the rule given by many cases, among them Blern v. Ray, 49 W. Va. 129, 38 S. E. 530, that a judgment or decree upon the merits is a bar or estoppel upon the same demand, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim, but also any other "admissible matter" which might have been used for that purpose. This has reference to evidence. But notice, the rule says "admissible matter." Was this matter that the lot had been purchased by the state, and therefore was unlawfully sent out for sale by the Auditor and sold by the sheriff in December, 1893, admissible on Mrs. Nuzum's bill? It was not mentioned in that bill, nor in the cause. The bill of Mrs. Nuzum did make the general charge that the tax sale was irregular and void, specifying as grounds only certain facts, they being that there was no property on the lot out of which the tax could have been made, that the affidavit to the sales list had specific defects, and that the heading of that list was not such as the law required. There was no mention of the sale to the state, or of illegality of the sale to McEldowney for that reason. This important fact was omitted from the bill. That bill was held not sufficient to avoid McEldowney's deed, but it did not hold that a bill with that in it was insufficient. True, gravamen or demand of suit is the same in both the original bill in Mrs. Nuzum's suit and in her answer in this suit—the demand that the tax deed be held invalid; but the cause for so holding is not the same; the facts touching it are not the same. To bar, the demand must be the same, and the cause of that demand the same. 7 Rob. Prac. 160. It is just the case of one declaration wanting facts essential to recovery, and a second declaration for the same cause of action giving additional facts making the case good. Often has it been held that a judgment on the first declaration on demurrer or verdict does not bar the second suit. "If the plaintiff fails on demurrer in his first action from the omission of an essential allegation in his declaration, which is supplied in the second suit, the judgment in the first suit is not a bar to the second." Gould v. Evansville Co., 91 U. S. 526, 23 L. Ed. 416. "A judgment that a declaration is bad in substance (which alone, and not matter of form, is the ground of general demurrer) can never be pleaded as a bar to a good declaration for the same cause of action. The judgment is in no just sense a judgment on the merits." Gilman v. Rives, 10 Pet. 298, 9 L. Ed. 432; Bigelow on Estop., 53. As Judge Carr said in Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Rand. 86: "The record must show that issue was taken on the same allegation. In this case the record is the only test. There is no possibility that the decree was upon any ground or reason than that manifested by the record. If a case is dismissed on demurrer, the decision is that the facts do not call for relief. So, though the case is not so dismissed, but judgment for defendant is on verdict, yet if the facts in the declaration show that no recovery could be had, why shall it bar a second declaration, giving more facts touching the cause of action, which call for relief?" The record shows on just what facts the first decree went. Where the record leads to the ground of decision, it is no farther a bar than as to that ground, for that is all that has been decided, and so, no farther, it is a bar." In Sanders v. Marshall, 4 Hen. & M. 458. To bar, "it must appear, either upon the face of the record, or be shown by extrinsic evidence, that the precise question was raised and determined." Russel v. Place, 94 U. S. 606, 24 L. Ed. 214; Packet Co. v. Sickel, 5 Wall, 580, 18 L. Ed. 550. It does not in this case necessarily appear that the same matter was decided, but that it was not. McCoy v. McCoy, 29 W. Va. 794, 2 S. E. 809. The same evidence to support the issue raised by the record in the first suit does not support that raised in this suit. Proof of the state's purchase had nothing to do with the defects presented in the first suit, nor would the evidence to show those defects presented in the first suit bear on the defect presented in this suit. This is a test. 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 781.

To constitute a judgment in the former a bar in the latter action, it must be shown that the plaintiff could, but for his fault, have recovered in the former action. 7 Rob. Prac. 170. Mrs. Nuzum could not have presented in her own suit the fact that the land had before been sold to the state, because her bill did not state that fact. It did charge that the sale and deed were illegal, but only stated certain facts to show it. A pleading must have certainty; must state facts to build up and sustain the demand—the relief asked. "The bill should state the plaintiff's case with reasonable certainty—that is, the right he claims, the injury complained of, and the relief he asks, with the facts to justify it—with such accuracy and clearness, and with such detail of essential circumstances of time, place, and manner, as will make his case, so as to inform the defendant of what he has to meet; stating, not conclusions of law, but the facts out of which arises his right to some specified relief." Zell Co. v. Heatherly, 38 W. Va. 409, 18 S. E. 611. For instance, a bill to annul a deed for fraud must specify facts constituting the fraud. Same case. A bill to avoid a fraudulent conveyance must state facts entering into the fraud, a general charge not being enough. Vance Shoe Co. v. Haught, 41 W. Va. 275, 28 S. E. 553; Billingsley v. Meneer, 44 W. Va. 651, 30 S. E. 61. And specifically as to tax sales, Blackwell on Tax Titles, § 1084, says: "An averment that the proceedings of the officer were 'regular,' 'legal,' etc., is a mere legal conclusion, without giving the facts from which that conclusion is drawn. Therefore, in all such cases, the pleader must show with reasonable certainty the particular facts upon which the regularity or legality of the proceeding depends." If such the law in pleading a tax title, it must be equally so in assaulting it. Where there is no pleading, there can be no recovery. Allegation and proof must correspond. Riley v. Jarvis, 43 W. Va. 43, 26 S. E. 366. Every fact necessary to make out a case must be positively and certainly alleged, as the court bases its decree upon allegations. Hood v. Morgan, 47 W. Va. 817, 35 S. E. 911. The plea of res judicata applies to every objection urged in a second suit, when the same objection was open to the party within the legitimate scope of the pleadings in a former one, and might have been presented in it. Aurora City v. West, 7 Wall. 82, 19 L. Ed. 42. Her bill did not charge the fact. Therefore Mrs. Nuzum could not have proven or gotten relief from the fact that the lot had been sold to the state, and she is not barred by the first decree. But when a party is sued he must put in all his defenses, else he is barred of any defenses omitted, because he could have presented them. 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 782; Blern v. Ray, 49 W. Va. 129, 38 S. E. 530. "A recovery by the plaintiff necessarily adjudicates that there is no defense. Hence the cases all agree that a judgment bars all defenses which the defendant had opportunity to make." Van Fleet, Former Adjud. § 159. But not so with the plaintiff. He may file a declaration, and if its facts do not call for judgment, and he loses, he may try again upon facts which do so. He ought to have put all facts in at first, but, not doing so, what is the result? He is not barred by res judicata, as his second case, differing from the first, has never been tried.

Mrs. Nuzum did not in her bill offer to repay McEldowney the purchase money and taxes paid by him. Where a defect on the record in the proceeding in which a tax deed originates is such as to justify a court in setting it aside on bill, chapter 31, § 25, requires the former owner, before relief, to repay the purchaser the money therein prescribed. That is generally the case; the bill must tender and bring in the money. McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 40 S. E. 509. But the vice in McEldowney's title is not a mere "irregularity in the proceedings under which the same was sold," and the Code does not require such repayment except where the irregularity appears in the record under which the tax deed is made. Here the fact that the lot had been before sold to the state did not appear in that record, but only the delinquent and sale list; it was not apparent in that record. And it is not a mere "irregularity" in that record. It is a fact making the deed void, not voidable; the sale was unauthorized by and against law; it was a nullity. Therefore, Mrs. Nuzum is not required to refund to McEldowney, but she, not McEldowney, must pay the state what is going to it to redeem the title from the state, and McEldowney has right to withdraw the money which he paid into the court for that purpose.

Our conclusion is to reverse the decree of 13th June, 1901, and remand the cause with direction to the circuit court to enter a decree canceling and setting aside the deed made January 9, 1896, by Henry R. Thompson, clerk, to John C. McEldowney, and allowing Cassie C. Nuzum to redeem her title from the state by payment of the proper sum, and, in default of such payment, selling the lot upon the state's bill.

(55 W. Va. 1)

STATE v. McELDOWNEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 9, 1904.)

TAX SALE—AFFIDAVIT OF SHERIFF.

1. No defect in a sheriff's affidavit to a list of sales of land for taxes will invalidate a tax deed made under chapter 31, Code 1899. Phillips v. Minear, 20 S. E. 924, 40 W. Va. 58, and McClain v. Batton, 40 S. E. 509, 50 W. Va. 121, so far as they hold to the contrary, are overruled.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wetzel County; M. H. Willis, Judge.

Bill of review by the state of West Virginia, for Cassie C. Nuzum, against John C. McEldowney and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. N. Miller, R. F. Fleming, and B. T. Bowers, for appellant. E. B. Snodgrass, for appellees.

BRANNON, J. This case involves the correctness of a decree of the circuit court of Wetzel county in refusing a bill of review presented by the state and Cassie O. Nuzum to reverse a decree made in the case of State v. John C. McElDowney, 47 S. E. 650. The facts up to that decree are given in the decision in that case. After that decree the state and Cassie O. Nuzum united in a bill of review based on both matter of law and newly discovered evidence. The matter of law is decided in the decision referred to, made this term, and in this case we consider only the new matter. The new matter is this: The affidavit of the sheriff to the list of delinquent tax sales filed in the county clerk's office is irregular in this, that it omitted the words "nor have I at any time been," preceding the words "directly or indirectly interested in the purchase of said real estate"; whereas, as lately discovered, the original list of sales on file in the Auditor's office was free of such defect. This defect in the sheriff's affidavit as it appeared in the clerk's office was held by this court not to invalidate a tax deed, because of the fact that the original in the Auditor's office was the true affidavit, and it, being the original one and good under the statute, must prevail. Winning v. Eakin, 44 W. Va. 19, 28 S. E. 757; Nuzum v. McElDowney, 46 W. Va. 207, 32 S. E. 1024. But the bill of review says that it had been discovered that the original affidavit to the sale return in the Auditor's office was at first defective, just the same as that in the clerk's office, but had been changed so as to cure the defect and conform to the statute. Grant that this change was wrongfully made after the filing of the sales list in the Auditor's office; would the defective affidavit destroy McElDowney's tax deed? We hold that it would not, because of the cure of the defect by section 25, c. 31, Code 1899. It provides that "no irregularity, error, mistake . . . in the list of sales filed with the clerk of the county court, or in the affidavit thereto . . . shall, after the deed is made, invalidate or affect the sale or deed." It also provides that "no sale or deed of any such real estate under the provisions of this chapter shall be set aside, or in any manner affected by reason of the failure of any officer mentioned in this chapter to do or perform any act or duty herein required to be done or performed by him after such sale is made, or by the illegal or defective performance, or attempt at the performance, of any such act or duty after such sale." We hold also that such defect is cured by this language: that the tax deed shall vest in the purchaser the former owner's title, "notwithstanding any irregularity in the proceedings under which the same was sold, not herein provided for, unless such irregularity appear on the face of such proceedings, of record in the office of the clerk of the county court, and be such as materially to prejudice and mislead the owner of the real estate so sold, as to what portion of his real estate was so sold, and when and for what year or years it was so sold, or the name of the purchaser thereof." If other clauses did not heal this defect, this would. How could this defect in the affidavit mislead the owner at all? How could it mislead him in the respects specified in the statute; that is, as to what portion of his land was sold, or the name of its purchaser, or when and for what years sold? It might be different with failure to return the list within the time required by law, because there the purchaser might be misled, as held in Barton v. Gilchrist, 19 W. Va. 223. But that would not avail now. It is true this vice in the affidavit would nullify the deed under Phillips v. Minear, 40 W. Va. 58, 20 S. E. 924, and McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 40 S. E. 509. In Winning v. Eakin, 44 W. Va. 19, 28 S. E. 757, for reasons there given, the case of Phillips v. Minear was doubted, and in Gerke Brewing Co. v. St. Clair, 46 W. Va. 93, 33 S. E. 122, it was logically or virtually overruled; and in Boggees v. Scott, 48 W. Va. 316, 37 S. E. 661, it was actually overruled in the opinion and point 8 of the syllabus. This fact was by inadvertence overlooked in McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 40 S. E. 509. So we overrule Phillips v. Minear and McClain v. Batton as to this point. And so this defect in the affidavit is ineffectual to affect McElDowney's tax deed.

There is another reason why the bill of review cannot avail Cassie O. Nuzum. When McElDowney filed his answer to Cassie O. Nuzum's original bill, he filed a copy of the sheriff's affidavit as it appeared in the Auditor's office. That told her that there was a difference between it and the affidavit in the clerk's office. This was long before she filed her answer or cross-bill in the cases of the state against her. She should have put that matter in her answer, as she was advised of it, and cannot say it was newly discovered since the decree, and could not have been sooner discovered by due diligence. The state knew it also.

We must affirm the decree of 6th June, 1903, rejecting the bill of review.

(125 N. C. 535)

CURRIE et al. v. RALBIGH & A. AIR LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1904.)

CARRIERS—TRANSPORTATION OF MERCHANDISE—FAILURE TO RECEIVE—PENALTIES—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—TENDER—EVIDENCE—APPEAL—RIGHT TO ALLEGE ERROR.

1. Code 1888, § 1964, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 788, c. 444, imposing a penalty of $50 a day on railroad companies for refusal to receive merchandise for transportation, is a public statute, and therefore need not be pleaded in order to be enforced.

§ 1. See Penalties, vol. 39, Cent. Dig. § 25.

2. In an action against a carrier to recover a statutory penalty for refusal to receive merchandise for transportation, a complaint alleging a tender at defendant's regular depot at a specified place on May 2, 1903, and that the defendant for two successive days, to wit, "on May 8 and 9, 1903, failed and refused to receive the same," contained a sufficient allegation of tender.

3. Where a car of lumber tendered to a railroad company for transportation was found to have been properly loaded, the carrier was liable for the penalty imposed by Code 1883, § 1864, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 788, c. 444, for refusal to receive the same for transportation, notwithstanding the car was to be shipped out of the state.

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; C. M. Cooke, Judge.

Action by J. L. Currie and others against the Raleigh & Augusta Air Line Railroad Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John D. Shaw, for appellant. J. D. McIver and H. F. Seawell, for appellees.

OLARK, C. J. This is an action for the penalty ($50 per day) incurred under Code 1883, § 1864, as amended by chapter 444, p. 788, Laws 1903, for refusal by the defendant to receive for transportation a car load of lumber, tendered 7th May, 1903, and which remained unshipped the two succeeding days, 8th and 9th May.

The defendant moved to dismiss because the complaint did not state a cause of action. This is predicated, we understand, upon the ground that the statute giving the penalty was not pleaded, and that a renewal of the tender on 8th and again on 9th May was not specifically alleged. Being a public statute, it was not requisite to plead it. It is enough to set out the facts. Commissioners v. Commissioners, 101 N. C. 520, 8 S. E. 176. The complaint alleged a tender, at the defendant's regular depot, at Cameron, N. C., on 7th May, 1903, and that "the defendant for two successive days, to wit, on 8th and 9th May, 1903, failed and refused to receive the same." The answer admits this averment to be true, and avers that the defendant refused to receive said car load of lumber for transportation, because that, when tendered, it was not in proper condition for transportation, but was loaded contrary to the rules of the defendant company, of which the plaintiff had notice, and, as loaded, was at the time of said tender in unsafe and dangerous condition, and in such condition as to insure its rejection by connecting lines when tendered. There was sufficient averment of tender, and, if any defect therein, it was cured by the answer. The penalty is "fifty dollars for each day said company refuses to receive said shipment," which refusal is admitted in the answer. There was conflicting evidence as to whether the car of lumber was "properly loaded and safely secured for its transportation," which issue was found by the jury in favor of the plaintiff.

The only point in the defendant's brief necessary to be considered is the refusal to instruct the jury that upon all the evidence the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. This is placed upon the ground that, the car being tendered for transportation to Pittsburg, Pa., "the imposition by the state of a penalty for refusing to receive the car, because not loaded in such a manner as to be received by connecting carriers, was an interference with interstate commerce." There was no issue tendered by the defendant to that effect, and the jury found, upon the issues submitted, that the car "was properly loaded and safely secured for its transportation to Pittsburg, Pa." That in such case the state can impose a penalty for refusal to receive, or delay in beginning, the shipment, is fully discussed and decided in Bagg v. Railroad, 109 N. C. 279, 14 S. E. 79, 14 L. R. A. 596, 28 Am. St. Rep. 569, and the defendant offers us no good reason and no precedent to the contrary.

There were other exceptions taken, but they are without merit, or are not set up in the defendant's brief. State v. Register, 133 N. C. 746, 46 S. E. 21.

No error.

(185 N. C. 583)

EEKHOUT v. COLE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1904.)

CONTRACTS — MONEY LOANED — FORFEITURES — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY — ATTORNEY — PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

1. Where an attorney had completed his services in one case, and the client wished him to take up another, which the attorney refused to do till he should be paid for his past services, the client's statement that he had procured money to make the payment from a certain person as a loan was not a privileged communication, so as to render it inadmissible in evidence.

2. Where an objection to a question was overruled, and before an answer was given the attorney told the witness to stand aside, it was not error for the court to repeat the question and require the witness to answer it.

3. Where plaintiff and defendant's intestate entered into a contract, and plaintiff deposited $500 in a bank as security for his performance of its terms, but this sum was withdrawn by mutual consent and loaned to the intestate and never repaid, it constituted a valid claim against his estate.

4. Where defendant's intestate agreed to procure stock of a corporation for plaintiff at a certain price, and plaintiff deposited $500 in a bank, to be forfeited in case of nonperformance by him, the withdrawal of this sum by mutual consent and loaning it to defendant's intestate was not conclusive evidence that the forfeiture should no longer be a part of the original contract, but presented a question for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by W. B. Eekhout against C. W. Cole, administrator. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

The plaintiff prosecutes this action for the recovery of $500, alleged to have been "advanced and loaned" to defendant's intestate, A. G. Kinsey, on November 4, 1901. The plaintiff averred a demand and refusal to pay. Defendant denied each of the allegations of the complaint, except the demand and refusal to pay, which he admitted. By way of further defense and counterclaim, he averred that on the 27th July, 1901, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant's intestate by which it was agreed that said Kinsey should secure control of at least a majority of all the stock of the Notla Consolidated Marble, Iron & Talc Company, to be sold to the plaintiff for $5.80 per share. Said stock was to be deposited in escrow in the Bank of Murphy, provided a certain contract of same date between the stockholders of said company and said Eekhout in regard to the sale of their holdings in said company be entered into. The agreement contained the following provision: "And in order to show good faith said W. B. Eekhout has deposited Five Hundred Dollars in the Bank of Murphy to be forfeited to the said A. G. Kinsey, or assign, if I, the said W. B. Eekhout, fail to comply with the contract referred to. In the event the said A. G. Kinsey fails to get a majority of stock subscribed to said contract of even date, said amount of Five Hundred Dollars shall be subject to the order of W. B. Eekhout by the 15th August, 1901, and shall not be forfeited in any event if contract of even date be carried out." Exhibit A attached to the answer is a contract entered into between W. B. Eekhout and certain shareholders of said iron and talc company, the purport of which is that the shareholders agreed to sell their stock to said Eekhout upon certain terms and conditions, fully set out therein. The time fixed for performance of said contract is August 1, 1901. The defendant alleged that his intestate, pursuant to said contract, procured at great outlay and expense a majority of said stock, and deposited the same in the Bank of Murphy for said Eekhout. That said Eekhout failed in every respect and in every particular to comply with his contract. That by reason of such failure said Eekhout became indebted to the defendant's intestate in the sum of $500. The plaintiff, replying to the new matter and counterclaim, denied each and every allegation in regard thereto.

The court, without objection, submitted the following issues to the jury: (1) Is defendant indebted to plaintiff, and, if so, how much? (2) Is plaintiff indebted to defendant on counterclaim, and, if so, how much? Plaintiff introduced Ben Posey, who testified to the handwriting of A. G. Kinsey and his signature to the receipt, which was in the following words: "Murphy, N. C. 4 Nov., 1901. Received of W. B. Eekhout the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, being the money lodged in the Bank of Murphy in escrow with a certain contract between the said Eekhout and myself and now withdrawn by mutual consent. [Signed] A. G. Kinsey." The plaintiff thereupon testified that he deposited $500 in the bank, and that he drew the same out November 4, 1901. He admitted the execution of the contract of July 27, 1901, and the writing of certain letters put in evidence. Mr. Posey was recalled, and testified that he was attorney for A. G. Kinsey on November 4, 1901. That Judge Ferguson and himself had appeared as counsel for him in a suit between Kinsey and Emerson. That the suit was concluded, and Kinsey wished to employ them in another suit with one Oliver Kinsey. That witness told Kinsey that they wished payment of their fees. Kinsey replied that he had no money at that time, when witness insisted on payment of fees for himself and Judge Ferguson. Counsel asked witness what Kinsey said to him about borrowing the money from Eekhout. Defendant's counsel objected on the ground that witness, being at that time Kinsey's attorney, could not testify to a transaction between them. Objection overruled; defendant excepted. Upon the court's announcing its ruling, the counsel for plaintiff stated that he had no further question to ask witness, and told him to stand aside. "The court, perceiving that no answer had been made to the question, and thinking this was an inadvertence of counsel, and, moreover, desiring to have the facts about the matter before the jury, asked the witness what Kinsey did say about the money—about borrowing the $500 fee. Counsel for defendant objected on same ground—that it was a transaction between attorney and client; (2) because counsel for plaintiff, having directed witness to stand aside, the court had no right to interpose and request an answer from witness. (Objections overruled, and defendant again excepted.) The witness then stated that, when he told Kinsey he must have his fee of $500, Kinsey stepped out, remained awhile, and then came back in the room and said that he had gotten the money; that he and Eekhout had agreed to withdraw from the bank the $500 on deposit, and Eekhout had agreed to lend it to him. The next morning Kinsey came in and said that he had arranged the matter with Eekhout; that the money had been withdrawn by mutual consent, and put in the bank to his (Kinsey's) own credit, and subject to his check, and Kinsey then gave witness his check for $250; also drew a check for Ferguson for $250, the amount of attorney's fees, and the bank paid them. Plaintiff rested."

Defendant introduced contracts herein referred to, a letter from Eekhout to Kenyon.

cashier of bank, inclosing agreement between Kinsey and himself, and check for $500, also stockholders' contract, Exhibit A.

Plaintiff then introduced J. H. Carter, vice president of the bank, who testified that he had a package containing certificates of stock of the iron and talc company, Exhibit 209; that the indorsement upon the envelope was made by himself, except certain words which are not material. Defendant then introduced the envelope, containing the following indorsement: "This envelope contains the following shares of stock of the Notia Cons. M. I. & Talc Co., to wit." Then follows a list of the certificates, aggregating 3,721 shares, deposited with Bank of Murphy subject to contract between stockholders and W. B. Eekhout, dated July 17, 1901. It was admitted that the envelope contained the stock which constituted a majority of the stock issued by said company. The defendant asked the court to charge the jury that there is no evidence that the money paid Mr. Posey is the money deposited with Eekhout under said agreement; (2) that the jury must be satisfied that the money received by Mr. Posey was a part of the identical $500 deposited by Eekhout; (3) that there is no evidence of any abandonment of the forfeiture feature of the contract. All of said prayers were denied, and the court, in part, charged the jury that plaintiff and A. G. Kinsey, the intestate of the defendant, entered into a contract that Kinsey was to procure for Eekhout a majority of stock in the marble company, and Eekhout was to pay for it $5.80 per share. To show good faith in the matter, Eekhout put in the bank $500, as a forfeit in case of failure on his part to comply with his offer. That, if the evidence was believed, Kinsey did procure the stock, and Eekhout had failed to take the stock; and if the money had remained in the bank, under the original agreement, or if a forfeiture to that amount continued to be a part of the stipulation, then there was nothing due from defendant to plaintiff. If, however, Kinsey and Eekhout mutually contracted and agreed to withdraw the money from the bank, and the forfeiture should no longer be a part of the stipulation, and, after drawing out the money, Eekhout lent the money to Kinsey, and same had never been paid, then the defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $500, with interest thereon from time same had been demanded, and nothing would be due on counterclaim. The court here stated the evidence and the arguments of counsel pertinent to the issues. The jury returned a verdict, and answered the first issue "Yes," $500, with interest from date of demand, August 15, 1902, and had not answered the second issue. The court told the jury that, if such was their finding of fact and verdict on the first issue, it should answer the next issue "No." If they believed the testimony, there was nothing due on counterclaim, and they would answer the second issue "No." The jury so answered the second issue. Defendant objected and excepted.

From a judgment on the verdict the defendant appealed.

E. B. Norvell, for appellant. Axley & Axley, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. We find no valid objection to the question asked Mr. Posey. It seems that, at the time of the transaction had by him with Mr. Kinsey, his employment in the suit with Emerson was at an end, and the employment in the other suit had not commenced. However this may be, the communication was not in any legal sense in regard to the business or employment in respect to which the privilege may be invoked. We think the testimony of Mr. Posey comes neither within the letter or spirit of the law. Greenleaf, Ev. vol. 1 (16th Ed.) p. 380. We find no suggestion that Mr. Posey was or had been Kinsey's attorney in regard to the purchase of the stock or the contract made respecting it. The exception must be overruled. We see no objection to the course pursued by his honor in asking the question of the witness. The reason assigned by him fully explains his action. It has been frequently said by this court that judges do not preside over the courts as moderators, but as essential and active factors or agencies in the due and orderly administration of justice. It is entirely proper, and sometimes necessary, that they ask questions of a witness so that the "truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" be laid before the jury. The trial of causes must not be permitted to degenerate into a mere game of chance or trial of skill, the victory going not to him whose cause is just, but to the most skillful player. Learned and just judges are appointed to see that suitors have judgment accordingly as they have the right of the controversy. The exception to his honor's question cannot be sustained.

There is no reversible error in his honor's charge upon the first issue. If the jury found that, by mutual consent of the plaintiff and the defendant's intestate, the $500 deposited in the bank, to be forfeited if the plaintiff failed to comply with the contract, was withdrawn and the amount loaned to the defendant's intestate, we see no good reason why it was not a valid contract and enforceable against the defendant's intestate. It is unfortunate that the parties left the matter in so much uncertainty. One of them is dead, and by the law the lips of the other are sealed. In this condition of the matter, the jury had nothing to guide them except the receipt and the testimony of Mr. Posey. The conclusion to be drawn from this evidence was for them.

We do not concur with his honor's view upon the second issue. He charged the jury that, if they believed the evidence, Kinsey did procure the stock, and Eekhout failed to take it; that if the money had remained in the bank under the original agreement, or if a forfeiture to that amount continued to be a part of the stipulation, there was nothing due from the defendant to the plaintiff; but that if they mutually agreed to withdraw the money from the bank, and that the forfeiture should no longer be a part of the stipulation, nothing would be due on the counterclaim. We do not think the agreement to withdraw the money from the bank constituted conclusive evidence that the forfeiture should no longer be a part of the stipulation. It may well be that Kinsey, being in need of money, agreed to the withdrawal of the amount deposited, upon condition that it be loaned to him, without releasing his rights under the contract. If the entire contract, with all the rights and liabilities accruing therefrom, was to be canceled, it is strange that the stock was not withdrawn from the custody of the bank and returned to the shareholders. The giving of the receipt, instead of a note, indicates that the transaction was not closed. So far as appears upon the surface, the $500 had been forfeited to Kinsey, and he was entitled to demand and receive it. It may well be that he, to supply his immediate needs, consented to the withdrawal, leaving his rights under the contract open for adjustment. His honor was of the opinion that if the agreement was "that the forfeiture should no longer be a part of the contract," then Kinsey had no other or further rights thereunder. We think he should have left the answer to the second issue to the jury to say whether, notwithstanding the agreement to withdraw the $500, the defendant was not entitled to recover of the plaintiff the damage sustained by the breach of the contract, and to fix the amount of such damage. He alleges that his intestate, at great expense and outlay of money, procured the stock, and the plaintiff failed to take it in accordance with his contract. We see no reason why he may not recover, by way of counterclaim, such amount, and other damages within the contemplation of the parties and proximately resulting from such breach of contract.

The evidence sent up is meager, and we can do no more than direct a new trial upon the second issue. It is so ordered.

New trial.

(135 N. C. 506)

WROUGHT IRON RANGE CO. v. CAMPEN, Sheriff.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 27, 1904.)

TAXATION—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—SALES AND DELIVERIES—ORIGINAL PACKAGES—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—PEDDLERS—DEFINITION—STATUTE—LICENSE.

1. The license tax imposed by Revenue Act 1903, § 36 (Pub. Laws 1903, p. 833, c. 247), on every itinerant person or company peddling stoves or ranges in the state, levied for purely revenue purposes, is void in so far as sales by sample of goods manufactured in another state, shipped into the state, and delivered in their original packages, are concerned, as a restriction on interstate commerce, in violation of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, par. 3, granting to Congress power to regulate commerce between the states.

2. Where ranges are manufactured in one state, and sold by sample in another, neither the persons exhibiting the samples, nor those making deliveries thereof in the original packages, are peddlers, within Revenue Act 1903, § 44 (Pub. Laws 1903, p. 836, c. 247), providing that "any person carrying a wagon, cart or buggy or traveling on foot for the purpose of exhibiting or delivering any wares or merchandise shall be considered a peddler," and section 36, imposing on such itinerant person or company peddling ranges a license tax of $100 per annum for each county in which peddling is done.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pamlico County; Moore, Judge.

Action by the Wrought Iron Range Company against A. B. Campen, sheriff of Pamlico county. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

This action was brought to restrain the collection of a license tax, and to recover the property levied upon and seized by the sheriff to enforce the payment of it. The case was heard upon the complaint, treated as a case agreed, the facts alleged therein being admitted. The complaint is as follows:

"The plaintiff complains of the defendant, and alleges:

"(1) That the Wrought Iron Range Company, the plaintiff in this case, is a corporation duly organized and created under the laws of the state of Missouri, with its general offices located in the city of St. Louis, Mo., in which city and state it also has a factory, in which are manufactured all the ranges sold by its traveling salesmen throughout the United States, and the plaintiff has been engaged during the year 1903 in selling ranges in Pamlico county, North Carolina, as is hereinafter set out.

"(2) That the defendant is the duly qualified and acting sheriff of Pamlico County, North Carolina.

"(3) That the manner in which said company has sold all its ranges and transacted all its business in Pamlico County, North Carolina, during the year 1903, prior to the filing of this suit, and the manner in which it proposes to hereinafter sell its ranges and conduct its business so long as it remains in said county and state, is as follows: The agents employed by plaintiff in the sale of its ranges and the transaction of its business in said county and state are as follows: S. H. Dew, officially designated by plaintiff as division superintendent; —, officially designated by plaintiff as traveling salesman; and —, officially designated by plaintiff as deliveryman. Plaintiff has other salesmen and deliverymen operating in North Carolina, but the names only of those operating in Pamlico county in 1903 are hereinafter set out.

"(4) That each and every one of said agents of said plaintiff in said county of Pamlico, state of North Carolina, is paid by the plaintiff for his services to said plaintiff a stipulated and contractual compensation, together with his necessary expenses, while engaged in the sale or delivery of plaintiff's ranges, or any other services rendered by them for said plaintiff in said county and state. Further than this stipulated compensation, no one of said agents has any monetary or financial interest whatever in the sales, proceeds of sales, or business transacted by plaintiff in said county and state.

"(5) That each of said agents hereinbefore referred to as traveling salesmen was furnished by plaintiff with a wagon, team, and sample range, all of which were and are the sole and undivided property of plaintiff, and each of said salesmen was assigned to a certain and determinate territory in said Pamlico county by the agent hereinbefore referred to as division superintendent.

"(6) That each of said traveling salesmen, in his appropriate territory within the limits of said Pamlico county, exhibited his sample range to prospective purchasers, and solicited their orders for ranges similar in all respects to the samples exhibited, to be delivered to purchasers within thirty days from date of said orders. In no instance in said county and state did said traveling salesmen solicit orders for, sell or deliver to any purchaser, the sample ranges intrusted to them by plaintiff, nor did either of said salesmen deliver any ranges to purchasers in said county and state, the orders for which had been obtained either by himself or the other traveling salesmen hereinbefore referred to.

"(7) That, in all cases in said county and state where orders were obtained by said traveling salesmen, purchasers were required to sign and did sign and deliver to said salesmen two promissory notes, of equal amount, and of the same tenor and date, one of which was made payable in November, 1904, and the other in November, 1905, conditioned for the delivery at the premises of the purchaser within thirty days from date of a No. 1,900 range, same as sample exhibited, and to be void only upon the condition that said plaintiff refused to deliver said range as specified in notes, and for no other cause whatever.

"(8) That all orders obtained by said salesmen for the future delivery of ranges under the terms and conditions aforesaid were by the respective salesmen who obtained or secured said orders turned over to plaintiff's agent hereinbefore referred to as division superintendent.

"(9) That said division superintendent, after investigating the financial conditions of said purchaser, selected such as he regarded as responsible for their contracts, turned their orders over to the deliverymen hereinbefore mentioned, delivered to said deliverymen the ranges ordered by said purchasers, whereupon said agents proceeded to deliver to said purchasers the ranges according to the terms and conditions specified in the promissory notes hereinbefore mentioned.

"(10) That, for the purpose of making such deliveries, each said deliveryman was furnished with a wagon and team, which were and are the exclusive property of the plaintiff, and said deliverymen, for their services in making said deliveries of ranges, were and are paid a stipulated compensation and their necessary expenses by said plaintiff. Further than the said compensation, said deliverymen have no monetary or financial interest in the sale, proceeds of sales, or business of said plaintiff.

"(11) That all ranges sold by the plaintiff or its agents in said county and state were sold and delivered to its customers in the original form or packages in which they were shipped into the state of North Carolina from plaintiff's factory in St. Louis, Missouri. All of said ranges were shipped in car-load lots, each car containing sixty separate and distinct ranges, and consigned to plaintiff at New Bern, in Craven county, North Carolina, in care of its said agent, S. H. Dew.

"(12) That, upon the arrival of said ranges at said New Bern, they were unloaded by plaintiff's agents aforesaid and stored in the warehouse of the Atlantic & North Carolina Railroad Company, the common carrier by which they were delivered at said New Bern, and held subject to plaintiff's order.

"(13) That no ranges were sold or offered for sale at said warehouse, but were taken therefrom only, as hereinbefore mentioned, for the purpose of filling orders obtained by the salesmen aforesaid.

"(14) That all of said ranges used in the transaction of plaintiff's business in Pamlico county, North Carolina, were unloaded from the cars of the common carrier at said New Bern in the precise form or package in which they were placed in the cars of the common carrier at St. Louis, Missouri, and placed in said warehouse in the same form or packages, and were taken from said warehouse and loaded upon plaintiff's delivery wagons in the same form or packages in which they were shipped from St. Louis, and delivered to plaintiff's customers in Pamlico county in the identical and original form or packages in which they were shipped into the state of North Carolina.

"(15) That the defendant, claiming the right to do so under section 36, c. 247, p. 333, North Carolina Public Laws of 1903, demanded from plaintiff a license tax of $100 for the business of peddling ranges in said county and state for one year, ending May 31, 1904, and levied on and seized the property of plaintiff for the purpose of satisfying said tax, and still has the property in his possession sufficient to satisfy said tax, and will sell and dispose of said property to satisfy said tax unless restrained by this court.

"(16) That section 36, c. 247, p. 333, Public Laws of 1903, in so far as it applied to plaintiff, and the business transacted by it in Pamlico county, North Carolina, is in conflict with article 1, § 8, par. 3, of the Constitution of the United States, and therefore, as to the plaintiff and its said business, illegal and unconstitutional, absolutely null, void, and invalid.

"(17) That all ranges sold by its traveling salesmen in said county and state were shipped into said city of New Bern, Craven county, and state, before any of said ranges had been sold, or orders for their sale had been solicited, by its salesmen aforesaid. Plaintiff has no place of business in Pamlico county, or elsewhere in the state of North Carolina, except as hereinbefore stated.

"(18) That the said seizure of plaintiff's property is for the purpose of collecting a tax levied for an illegal and unconstitutional purpose, and said levy and seizure is illegal, void, and wrongful, and the defendant is threatening to sell plaintiff's property, and will sell it, to pay said illegal tax, unless restrained by this court, and the plaintiff will be irreparably injured and damaged by said illegal and wrongful acts of defendant.

"(19) That a summons has been issued in this action."

Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment that the defendant be restrained and enjoined from collecting said tax; that he be restrained from selling or disposing of the property now in his hands belonging to the plaintiff; that the defendant return to the plaintiff the property now in his hands; for costs and for general relief.

The following entries appear on the record: "(1) The parties waive a jury trial, and agree that the court may hear the case out of term, as of the fall term, 1903, of the superior court of Pamlico county, and render a final judgment herein. (2) The parties agree that the facts alleged in the complaint are true, and also agree that the court may enter a final judgment on them. Whereupon argument is heard upon both sides, and it is therefore considered by the court and adjudged that the restraining order and injunction heretofore issued be, and the same is hereby, dissolved, and that the defendant go without day, and recover his costs of action of the plaintiff and the surety to his prosecution bond." Plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Simmons & Ward and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellant. The Attorney General, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). This appeal presents for our consideration the question whether the imposition of a license tax required of the plaintiff under section 36 of the revenue act (Acts 1903, p. 333, c. 247) is a valid exercise of the taxing power of the state with reference to the plaintiff's particular business, as described in the case agreed; and the decision of that question depends upon whether the exaction of the license tax, as a prerequisite to the exercise of the right to sell its ranges in this state, is a regulation of interstate trade, or an interference with its free and unrestricted enjoyment, within the meaning of the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States. It will enable us the better to understand the limitations which have been placed by that clause of the Constitution upon the right of one state to impose taxes upon the sale of goods brought from another state if we first ascertain what principles have been settled by the adjudications of the court of last resort having jurisdiction to pass upon that question.

In Robbins v. Shelby Taxing District, 120 U. S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694, the following propositions were established: (1) The Constitution having given to Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states, that power is necessarily exclusive; (2) that, where the power of Congress to regulate is exclusive, the failure of Congress to make express regulations indicates its will that the subject shall be left free from any restrictions, and that any regulation of the subject by the states is repugnant to such freedom; (3) the only way in which commerce between the states can be legitimately affected by state laws is when, by virtue of its police power and its jurisdiction over persons and property within its limits, it provides for the security of life and property, or imposes taxes upon persons residing within the state or belonging to its population, or upon avocations pursued therein, not directly connected with foreign or interstate commerce. But in making such internal regulations a state cannot impose taxes upon persons passing through the state or coming into it merely for a temporary purpose, especially if connected with interstate or foreign commerce, nor can it impose such taxes upon property imported into the state from abroad or from another state, and not yet become part of the common mass of property therein; and no regulations can be made directly affecting interstate commerce. Any taxation or regulation of the latter character would be an unauthorized interference with the power given to Congress over the subject. It seems, therefore, with respect to the importation from other states of goods already sold, no license tax can be levied upon them by the state into which they are brought for delivery to the purchaser until they have been mingled with, and form a part of, the common mass of the property therein; and, even when they are thus commingled, they are still protected against any discriminating tax laid upon them directly or indirectly as imports, or by reason of their having been imported into the state, simply because this would be a regulation of interstate commerce inconsistent with that perfect freedom of trade between the states which Congress, by not legislating otherwise, has clearly indicated should exist. We may concede, for the purpose of this discussion, that there is no discrimination under section 36 of the revenue act, against goods imported from another state, but that all goods of the classes described in that section, whether imported into the state, or originally forming a part of the general mass of property therein, are alike subject to the tax, without any distinction whatever, so that persons who sell goods which are brought into the state stand upon a basis of equality with those who sell goods already in the state, and forming part of the general mass of its property. Assuming, then, that there has been no discriminating legislation against the sale of imported goods, the question arises as to the time when goods brought into a state for the purpose of sale cease to be articles of interstate commerce, so as to become subject to the free and untrammelled exercise of the taxing power of the state.

This question was considered and decided in Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. Ed. 678, with reference to a tax imposed upon the right to sell goods imported from foreign countries. But the same principle, says Marshall, C. J., applies with equal force to commerce between the states. Referring to the extent of the power, he says: "The power is coextensive with the subject on which it acts, and cannot be stopped at the external boundary of a state, but must enter its interior. If the power reaches the interior of a state, and may be there exercised, it must be capable of authorizing a sale of those articles which it introduced. Commerce is intercourse. One of its most ordinary ingredients is traffic. It is inconceivable that the power to authorize this traffic, when given in the most comprehensive terms, with the intent that its efficacy should be complete, should cease at the point when its continuance is indispensable to its value. To what purpose should the power to allow importation be given, unaccompanied with the power to authorize a sale of the thing imported? Sale is the subject of importation, and is an essential ingredient of that intercourse, of which importation constitutes a part. It is as essential an ingredient, as indispensable to the existence of the entire thing, then, as importation itself. It must be considered as a component part of the power to regulate commerce. Congress has a right not only to authorize importation, but to authorize the importer to sell. We think, then, that, if the power to authorize a sale exists in Congress, the conclusion that the right to sell is connected with the law permitting importation, as an inseparable incident, is inevitable. If the principles we have stated be correct, the result to which they conduct us cannot be mistaken. Any penalty inflicted on the importer for selling the article in his character of importer must be in opposition to the act of Congress which authorizes importation. Any charge on the introduction and incorporation of the articles into and with the mass of property in the country must be hostile to the power given to Congress to regulate commerce, since an essential part of that regulation, and principal object of it, is to prescribe the regular means for accomplishing that introduction and incorporation." Discussing the particular question as to the time when the goods become incorporated with the common mass of property in the state, he says: "This indictment is against the importer for selling a package of dry goods, in the form in which it was imported, without a license. This state of things is changed if he sells them or otherwise mixes them with the general property of the state by breaking up his packages, and traveling with them as an itinerant peddler. In the first case the tax intercepts the import, as an import, in its way to become incorporated with the general mass of property, and denies it the privilege of becoming so incorporated until it shall have contributed to the revenue of the state. It denies to the importer the right of using the privilege which he has purchased from the United States until he shall have also purchased it from the state. In the last case the tax finds the article already incorporated with the mass of property by the act of the importer. He has used the privilege he had purchased, and has himself mixed them up with the common mass, and the law may treat them as it finds them."

We have quoted at some length from this important case, because we understand that the principles therein established have been accepted as authoritative in all subsequent decisions upon this subject. And they have not been in the least changed since they were first announced, except in so far as it was therein intimated that a state could not tax directly and as property imports from another state, as in this respect the rule in regard to the taxation of imports from foreign countries and the rule in regard to imports from another state are not the same, as the Constitution expressly prohibits the taxation in any form of imports from foreign countries. Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 138, 19 L. Ed. 382. But in all other respects the decision in the case of Brown v. Maryland has remained intact. This will appear by reference to the very recent case of Railroad v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441, 24 Sup. Ct. 151, 48 L. Ed. —. In that case the court, at page 449, 191 U. S., page 153, 24 Sup. Ct., 48 L. Ed. —, says: "Upon the other hand, for the past seventy-five years, and ever since the original case of Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419 [6 L. Ed. 678], we have uniformly held that states have no power to tax directly, or by license upon the importer goods imported from foreign countries or other states, while in their original packages, or before they have become commingled with the general property of the state, and lost their distinctive character as imports. In that case a law of Maryland required importers to take out a license before they could be permitted to sell their imported goods. That was declared to be void, not only as a tax upon imports, but as an infringement upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce. The case is one of the most important decided by this court, and has been adhered to by a uniform series of decisions since that time."

Questions relating to the interference by state regulations with interstate commerce have frequently been before the Supreme Court of the United States, whose decisions upon them are, of course, controlling with us. It will suffice to examine only a few of the cases decided by that court, in order to determine whether the law under which the license tax has been imposed upon the plaintiff is in conflict with the commerce clause of the Constitution, and therefore invalid. It requires, we think, only a careful consideration of these cases, and a correct understanding of their distinguishing features, to fix the limit of the state's power of taxing goods imported from other states.

Some general principles have been settled by actual adjudication which enable us to classify the cases arising out of the power asserted by a state to prohibit the importation of goods from other states. This importation may be prohibited either directly, by forbidding the goods to be brought into the state, or indirectly, by imposing a tax in such a way as to restrict the enjoyment of the right to import them—such as a license tax which is required to be paid before the goods are either delivered, under a contract of sale made before the importation began, or sold after the transit is completed and they have reached their destination in the state.

1. When the goods are imported from a foreign country into one of the states, the state may not levy a tax upon them either directly or indirectly. No tax can be assessed against them as property ad valorem, or according to any other principle, nor can any license tax be imposed upon the right to sell them; and this exemption continues so long as they remain in the original packages, and after the packages are broken and they become a part of the common mass of property they are still protected against unfriendly legislation which results in any discrimination against them and in favor of the property which has not been imported into the state. Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 976, 44 L. Ed. 1165.

2. The Constitution of the United States declares that "no state shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts, or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws," and that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." It will be seen, from a slight comparison of the two provisions, that the exemption from taxation is more extensive in the case of foreign imports than it is in the case of goods imported from one state into another. In the former case all state taxation on importation is prohibited, while in the latter case it is only forbidden by implication in so far as it may interfere with the regulation of commerce over which Congress is given exclusive power and jurisdiction. This is clearly pointed out by Justice Miller in Woodruff v. Parham, supra. If the tax does not fetter commerce, although it may remotely affect it, it may be levied by the state, even if the goods have come from another state. A tax laid directly on the imported goods as property, in like manner and by the same rule as upon other property produced in the state, would be valid, if the levy is made after the goods have reached their destination and are at rest in the state. In such a case, and for the purpose of direct taxation, or of such taxation as does not restrict the right of interstate traffic, the imported goods are considered as a part of the general mass of property in the state as soon as they have reached their final destination and are at rest within the state. This principle was restated and applied in the case of Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 662, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257; Am. S. & W. Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 865, 48 L. Ed. —.

3. We see therefore that the state cannot tax imports from foreign countries at all, and can tax goods from other states only when no discrimination against them and no regulation of commerce results therefrom. In no form of legislation can one state prohibit the importation of goods from another state, provided the commodity, the importation of which is forbidden, is a legitimate subject of commerce; and this right of importation which is thus protected against hostile state legislation includes the right to sell the goods in the original packages after they have arrived in the state, and not until such a sale is made do they cease to be articles of interstate commerce, and become a part of the general mass of the property in the state. This doctrine was announced in Brown v. Maryland, supra, as to foreign imports, and it has been extended by subsequent decisions to imports as between the states, because in this respect both kinds of commerce stand upon the same footing, and are protected by the same clause of the Constitution. Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; Lyng v. Mich., 135 U. S. 161, 10 Sup. Ct. 725, 34 L. Ed. 150.

4. The doctrine that one state cannot directly prohibit the importation into its territory of goods from another state has been extended, or rather applied, to a case where the prohibition was attempted not directly, but by means of a license tax exacted of the importer. In the cases to which we will presently refer, the goods were sold in one state to a person residing in another state, and were to be delivered to the purchaser in the latter state. If the importer cannot sell the goods until he has paid for and received a license, the right of importation is in principle as much restricted, and interstate commerce as much regulated, though perhaps not in the same degree as in the case of an absolute prohibition. Brown v. Maryland, supra; Robbins v. Shelby Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 9 Sup. Ct. 1, 32 L. Ed. 363; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 14 Sup. Ct. 829, 38 L. Ed. 719; Schollenberger v. Pa., 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49; Caldwell v. N. C., 187 U. S. 622, 23 Sup. Ct. 229, 47 L. Ed. 336; Railroad v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441, 24 Sup. Ct. 151, 48 L. Ed. —; Ex parte Hough (C. C.) 69 Fed. 330. The case of State v. Gorkman, 115 N. C. 721, 20 S. E. 179, 25 L. R. A. 810, 44 Am. St. Rep. 494, is clearly distinguishable from our case, though the reasoning of the court in that case seems to sustain our decision in this case.

5. The only question remaining for us to consider is whether the principle of Brown v. Maryland, Robbins v. Shelby Taxing Dist., and the other cases just cited, applies to a case like the one at bar, where there is no direct prohibition against the importation of goods from another state, nor any license tax exacted of the importer, who by himself or through his agents solicits orders by sample for goods to be brought into the state and then delivered, but where the goods are brought into the state, and, having reached their destination and being at rest in the state, are sold from a warehouse of the carrier in the original packages; orders for the goods being first obtained by agents of the importer, who solicit the same by exhibiting samples of the goods, which are carried from place to place in a wagon; the orders being afterwards filled and deliveries made from the warehouse.

A license tax was required of the plaintiff under section 36 of the revenue act of 1908 (Pub. Laws 1908, p. 333, c. 247), which is as follows: "On every itinerant person or company peddling clocks, stoves or ranges, one hundred dollars per annum for each county in which he or they may peddle the same. The license to be issued by the sheriff of the county, who shall collect said tax and pay the same to the State Treasurer." Section 44 (page 347) provides that "any person carrying a wagon, cart or buggy, or traveling on foot for the purpose of exhibiting or delivering any wares or merchandise shall be considered a peddler." Sections 36 and 44 are a part of Schedule B, and section 28 of the revenue act, which is the first section of Schedule B, reads as follows: "Taxes in this schedule shall be imposed as license taxes for the privilege of carrying on the business or doing the act named, and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to relieve any person or corporation from the payment of tax as required in the preceding schedule. The license issued under this schedule shall be for twelve months, and shall expire on the 31st day of May of each year." It will be seen, therefore, that no person or corporation has the right to carry on any business taxed under Schedules B and C until the license tax is paid, and every such person or corporation is required to exhibit the license when demanded by the sheriff of the county in which the business is conducted (section 80), and the sheriff is required to demand payment of the license tax from any person or corporation liable for the same, and a failure to pay the same is made a misdemeanor (section 87). It must be admitted that the right to sell is an important and valuable part of the right to import. The right to bring goods into a state for the purpose of selling them there would be of no value if when they arrive at their destination the right to sell them is prohibited, and, even though there may be no absolute prohibition, any restriction placed upon the right to dispose of the goods is as much an interference with the right to import or interstate commerce, though not perhaps in the same degree, as if the sale of the goods had been altogether forbidden. There is no difference in principle between the two cases. The proposition, as is said in Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 287, 14 Sup. Ct. 829, 38 L. Ed. 719, that a license tax is a direct burden on interstate commerce, is not open to question. "It is clear, therefore, says the court, that this license tax is not a mere police regulation, simply inconveniencing one engaged in interstate commerce, and so only indirectly affecting the business, but is a direct charge and burden upon that business; and, if a state may lawfully exact it, it may increase the amount of the exaction until all interstate commerce in this mode ceases to be possible. And notwithstanding the fact that the regulation of interstate commerce is committed by the Constitution to the United States, the state is enabled to say that it shall not be carried on in this way, and to that extent to regulate it." In referring to the case of Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 11 Sup. Ct. 851, 35 L. Ed. 649, the court says: "Neither license nor indirect taxation of any kind, nor any system of state regulation, can be imposed upon interstate any more than upon foreign commerce, and all acts of legislation producing any such result are to that extent unconstitutional and void." Numerous authorities are cited and commented on by the court in Brennan v. Titusville, which is a very important and instructive case. The conclusion reached was that, within the reasoning of the cases cited, the license tax imposed upon the defendant for selling by sample goods to be shipped into the state was a direct burden on interstate commerce, and was therefore beyond the power of the state. If the right to sell the imported article is an integral part of the right to import, and an essential element of it, without which it would not be complete, what difference can there be between a sale of the article when it is not in the state, and a sale of it after it has been brought within the state, provided it remains in the original package of commerce? A license tax was required of the defendant in Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. Ed. 678, who was an importer. He resisted the payment of the tax, and his contention was sustained. It will be observed that the tax in that case was declared invalid not only as being an impost or duty laid on imports from a foreign country, but as being an interference with the regulation of commerce. The question is discussed in both aspects, and the tax declared illegal upon both grounds. The words which we have already quoted from the masterly and unanswerable opinion of the great chief justice will be found in that part of it where he is discussing the second objection to the tax urged by the plaintiff in error, Brown, the defendant below, which was based solely upon the ground of its repugnance to that clause of the Constitution committing to Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states. It was also settled by Brown v. Maryland that imported goods preserved their character as imports as long as they remained unsold and in the original packages in which they were imported. "This indictment," it is said in that case, "is against the importer for selling a package of dry goods in the form in which it was imported, without a license. This state of things is changed if he sells them or otherwise mixes them with the general property of the state by breaking up his packages and traveling with them as an itinerant peddler." 12 Wheat. 443, 6 L. Ed. 678. If, therefore, as said in Brown v. Maryland, and reiterated in subsequent cases, a state cannot impose a license tax on the importer, or on his agent who represents him, and who would be protected by the same principle, because it is a restriction upon interstate commerce and a regulation thereof, and if the goods continue to be articles of interstate commerce so long as they remain in the original packages and are unsold, it follows that the tax required to be paid by the plaintiff in this case before selling its ranges in the original packages was an unlawful restraint upon its right to import, which included the right to sell in the manner described in the case agreed, and is therefore void.

When we once concede, as we must, that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several states does not stop at the external boundary of a state, but must enter its interior and operate there, and that, being "coextensive with the subject on which it acts," its full force is not spent until there is a sale of the article which is imported, and not then if there is any discrimination against the goods because of their foreign character, the conclusion we have reached would seem to be inevitable. We do not think the cases holding that the goods may be taxed as property as soon as they have come to the end of the transit and are at rest in the state conflict with our view of the case. Nor do the Peddler Cases (Machine Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. Ed. 754; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 39 L. Ed. 430) have that effect. It does not appear in those two cases that the goods were sold in the original packages, and furthermore the court bases its decision of them upon the ground that the state was exercising its police power, and the tax was laid in the exercise of that power, and not merely for the purpose of raising revenue, as in our case. In Emert v. Missouri, Justice Gray, for the court, says: "There is nothing in the case to show that he ever offered for sale any machine that he did not have with him at the time." And again: "So far as appears, the only goods in which he was dealing had become part of the mass of property within the state." Emert was taxed strictly as a peddler. In the case we have in hand, the plaintiff, acting by its agents, was not a peddler, within the meaning of that word as fixed by the common law; that is, a person who sold the very goods he carried with him, in his pack or cart, when traveling about from place to place. This court has defined "peddling" to be "the occupation of an itinerant vender of goods, who sells and delivers the identical goods he carries with him, and not the business of selling by sample and taking orders for goods to be thereafter delivered, and to be paid for, wholly or in part, upon their subsequent delivery." State v. Lee, 113 N. C. 681, 18 S. E. 713, 37 Am. St. Rep. 649; State v. Frank, 130 N. C. 724, 41 S. E. 785, 89 Am. St. Rep. 885. It has also held that an occupation similar to plaintiff's is not that "of a peddler, in the ordinary meaning of the word." State v. Ninestein, 132 N. C. 1039, 43 S. E. 936. The mere calling the plaintiff a peddler does not make it a peddler, for the purpose of laying a tax upon its business as an importer which interferes with interstate commerce, and is in its essence a regulation of the same. In the language of the court in Stockard v. Morgan, 185 U. S., at page 36, 22 Sup. Ct. 580, 46 L. Ed. 785, "The name does not alter the character of the transaction, nor prevent the tax thus laid from being a tax upon interstate commerce." It is undoubtedly true that the Legislature may define who are peddlers, and in the same act tax them, as this "is equivalent to imposing a tax upon all persons engaged in the occupations therein specified," or whose occupation may come within the definition given in the statute.

State v. Ninesteln, 182 N. C., at page 1042, 43 S. E. 938. The word is there used as a mere designation of the person who carries on the business described, but it does not enlarge a class of persons before well known, and having a certain and well-defined calling, so as to confer upon the state a power with reference to the regulation of interstate commerce that it did not before have. The law regards not the name, but the substance, of the thing, and will look at the real character of the business in determining whether or not the state's power of taxation has been rightfully exercised. In Range Co. v. Carver, 118 N. C., at page 335, 24 S. E. 353, it is said that in Emert v. Missouri, supra, the court sustained the right of the Legislature to define who shall be a peddler for the purpose of taxation. That is true, but the court was referring to taxation by the state within its rightful authority, and not to taxation which substantially interferes with the power of Congress to regulate commerce, though nominally it may not do so. We think the decision in that case (Range Co. v. Carver) proceeded upon a misconception of the true principle which governs in such cases, and especially did the court fail to advert to the distinction between the class of cases cited in the opinion and the class to which this case belongs. In the cases of the former class the court dealt with the power to tax imported goods as property, or with the right to tax generally, when the goods have been once sold, or the packages broken, and they have been mingled with the mass of property in the state, or with the right of the state to exercise its police power in the particular case, while our case comes within the principle settled by the court in Brown v. Maryland, supra; Robbins v. Taxing District, supra; Brennan v. Titusville, supra; and other cases involving the same question as we have in this case.

We cannot better close this part of the discussion than by referring to the recent case of Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. —, in which Justice White, for the court, delivers an exceedingly able and well-considered opinion, where the principles relating to the right of the states to tax, as affected by the commerce clause of the Constitution, are stated with great force and clearness; and the case will be found, we think, to sustain the views we have herein expressed.

In the case of Com. v. Harmel, 166 Pa. 89, 30 Atl. 1036, 27 L. R. A. 388, the court draws sharply the distinction between the right of the state, in the exercise of its police power, to tax a peddler or person who delivers the very article he offers for sale at the time he sells it, and a case like ours, and, in reference to a transaction such as the one described in this record, it says: "It must be conceded that these clocks may be sent into this state in manufacturer's packages, and they may be sold in the same packages, under the authority of the interstate commerce clause; but once in this state, and the package opened by the consignee, the disposition of the separate articles at retail is intrastate traffic, and subject to the police regulations that experience may show to be necessary for the protection of citizens in the comfort of their homes and the enjoyment of their property." This is our case exactly. Though it may make no difference in this case, in the view we take of it, whether the license tax was required of the plaintiff for the purpose of revenue, or was imposed merely in the exercise of the police power of the state, it may be well to state that an examination of the revenue act will show clearly that the tax was laid as a measure for the collection of revenue. It is placed in the same category, under section "B," with license taxes upon lawyers, physicians, dentists, real estate agents, collectors of rent, and others of similar occupations, who are certainly not taxed, in the exercise of the police power, as the proper subjects of police surveillance, like "hawkers, peddlers, and petty chapmen." This is not a tax levied in the execution of any inspection law or for the purpose of enforcing any mere police regulation, but, by the express terms of the act, for the purpose of raising the necessary revenue to support the government.

If it is urged that no discrimination is made between those who sell imported and those who sell domestic goods, it will not meet the difficulty, as said in Robbins v. Taxing District. The law requires, of course, that there shall be entire commercial equality, and this precludes discrimination; but it also provides that interstate commerce cannot be taxed at all, as any tax which is imposed upon it is, in a constitutional sense, a regulation of it, and void for that reason, and especially so when it restrains the importer or fetters the right of importation at any stage of this commercial intercourse. In order to fix the period when interstate commerce terminates, it has been said by the highest authority upon the subject that the criterion announced in Brown v. Maryland, namely, a sale in the original packages at the point of destination, is applicable, and is selected as the one by which to test the validity of the power exerted in the particular case, whether by way of direct prohibition of the introduction of the goods, or of their sale after they have arrived in the state, or by way of taxation, not on the goods themselves as property, but on the importer's right to sell them, which we have seen is a part of his right to import. As such taxation necessarily operates as a restriction of his right to import, it is, to that extent, as objectionable as if the sale of the goods had been actually prohibited. Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. —.

We think that Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S.

100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128, is exactly like our case in principle. In that case it is said: "They had the right to import the beer into the state, and, in the view which we have expressed, they had the right to sell it, by which act alone it would become commingled with the common mass of property in the state. Up to that point of time, we hold that, in the absence of congressional permission to do so, the state had no power to interfere by seizure or any other action in prohibition of importation and sale by the foreign or nonresident importer." (Italics ours.) Commenting on that case in Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S., at pages 416, 417, 18 Sup. Ct. 665, 42 L. Ed. 1088, the court, by Mr. Justice White, says: "Subsequently, in Leisy v. Hardin, the question which was thus reserved in the Bowman Case arose for adjudication, and it was held that the right to sell the imported merchandise in the original package, free from interference of state laws, was protected by the Constitution of the United States, as up to such sale the goods brought into the state were not commingled with the mass of property in the state." In order to see the full force of these citations, and to furnish what we think is direct authority for our decision in this case, we need only add that the question referred to as having been reserved in Bowman v. Ry. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 31 L. Ed. 700, was thus stated in Rhodes v. Iowa, supra: "The court in the course of its opinion adverted to the question whether goods so shipped [from one state to another] continued to be protected by the interstate commerce clause after their delivery to the consignee, and up to and including their sale in the original package by the one to whom they had been delivered, but did not decide the question, as it was not essential to do so. Referring to the subject, however, the court said: 'It might be very convenient and useful, in the execution of the policy of prohibition within the state, to extend the powers of the state beyond its territorial limits. But such extraterritorial powers cannot be assumed upon such an implication. On the contrary, the nature of the case contradicts their existence. For, if they belong to one state, they belong to all, and cannot be exercised severally and independently. The attempt would necessarily produce that conflict and confusion which it was the very purpose of the Constitution, by its delegations of national power, to prevent. It is easier to think that the right of importation from abroad, and of transportation from one state to another, includes, by necessary implication, the right of the importer to sell unbroken packages at the place where the transit terminates, for the very purpose and motive of that branch of commerce which consists in transportation is that other and consequent act of commerce which consists in the sale and exchange of the commodities transported. Such, indeed, was the point decided in the case of Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. Ed. 678, as to foreign commerce, with the express statement, in the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, that the conclusion would be the same in a case of commerce among the states.'" As decided in Brown v. Maryland, sales by the importer of goods brought into the state from another state, and still in the original packages, are exempted from interference of the state by taxation, because the tax, if it were held to be valid, would intercept the import, as an import, in the way to become incorporated with the general mass of property in the state, and would deny it the privilege of becoming so incorporated until it should have contributed to the revenue of the state. This is the crucial principle, and the statement of it in Brown v. Maryland "contains in a nutshell the whole doctrine upon the subject of original packages." A tax on the right to sell imported goods amounts pro tanto to a prohibition of the sale, because it indirectly forbids that to be done which constitutes the most valuable part of the right to import, and "intercepts the import in the way to become incorporated with the property in the state."

In Austin v. Tenn., 179 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 45 L. Ed. 224, we find a terse and clear statement of the effect of the decision in Leisy v. Hardin, as follows: "It was held [in that case] that, [the goods] being articles of lawful commerce, the state could not, in the absence of legislation on the part of Congress, prohibit their importation from abroad or from a sister state, or, when imported, prohibit their sale by the importer, and that they did not become a part of the common mass of property within the state so long as they remained in the casks in which they were imported, and continued to be the property of the importer." The same view is taken in that case of Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49, which involved the power of a state to forbid the introduction and the sale in original packages of oleomargarine.

In Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128, the statute of Iowa prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors brought into that state, and, a sale having been made in violation of the statute, it was held that as to sales by the importer, and in the original packages or kegs, unbroken or unopened, of liquors manufactured in and brought from another state, the statute was unconstitutional and void. It will be observed that the prohibition was directed not against the introduction of the goods into the state, as in Bowman v. Railroad Company, but it had reference solely to their sale after they had arrived in the state. If, as we have shown, a sale after the arrival of the goods in the state cannot be prohibited, it is certain that it cannot be restricted by the imposition of a license tax. State prohibitions and state restrictions are equally unauthorized and invalid. As the court said in Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 850, 351, 21 Sup. Ct. 135, 34 L. Ed. 123, on the authority of Brown v. Maryland, there is "no difference between a power to prohibit the sale of an article while it was an import, and the power to prohibit its introduction into the country. The one would be the necessary consequence of the other. No goods would be imported if none could be sold."

It has been assumed in this case that the clause in section 44 of the revenue act defining a peddler applies to the occupations named in section 38, because this court, in Range Co. v. Carver, held that it did, though we entertain some doubt as to whether that clause does not apply exclusively to persons named in section 44, and, if the question was presented for the first time, we would perhaps so decide. The context of that section and the provisos immediately annexed to the clause defining a peddler indicate that to have been the intention. But we have accepted the construction placed upon that clause of section 44 in Range Co. v. Carver, at least for the purpose of this decision, as the correct one.

We have treated the question involved in this case at some length, as it is of great importance to the state that the limit of her power to tax should be definitely known. We are disposed, of course, to sustain the validity of an act of the Legislature, and will indulge every presumption in its favor. It must be clearly incompatible with constitutional provisions before we will pronounce it invalid, but, when we conclude that the Legislature has exceeded its power in the particular instance, it becomes our plain duty to so declare. As said in Robbins v. Taxing Dist., the state will in the end derive just as much revenue from the goods as if they had had their origin in the state. If the provision of the Constitution regulating commerce is permitted to have its free and full operation, the goods, when they come into the state, will, by the sale of them, whether before or after their introduction, become incorporated with the property of the state, and will then be the subjects of taxation. 120 U. S., at page 497, 7 Sup. Ct. 596, 30 L. Ed. 694.

In any view we have been able to take of this case, after the most careful consideration and examination of the facts and the authorities, we are of the opinion that the tax is illegal, and that the judgment of the court below, upon the case agreed, should have been for the plaintiff. Reversed.

(124 N. C. 756; 135 N. C. 148)

CLEGG v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. April 13, 1904.)

CARRIERS OF FREIGHT—REFUSAL TO DELIVER—GROUNDS.

1. Where a railroad company refused to deliver a car load of fruit to the owner for the specific reason that he would not pay the amount of freight demanded, which was in excess of that due and offered by the owner, and the fruit was injured by being frozen before the railroad company discovered its error, the fact that at the time he demanded the goods the bill of lading had not been transferred to the owner by the bank to which the goods were consigned was not fatal to his right to recover for the injury to the fruit.

Walker and Connor, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by Z. V. Clegg against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

King & Kimball, for appellant. C. M. Stedman and Brooks & Thompson, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. The defendant company received at Greensboro on Sunday afternoon, the 15th of November, 1901, a car load of bananas from Baltimore, consigned to the Greensboro National Bank: "To order. Notify Z. V. Clegg." Clegg was notified by the bank of the arrival of the goods, and on the 16th, 17th, and 18th of November demanded of the freight agent of the defendant at Greensboro the delivery to him of the same. A dispute over the amount of the carriage due upon the shipment having arisen, the fruit was not delivered, and, before the plaintiff got possession of it, it was greatly injured by a spell of freezing weather, by which a loss was inflicted on the plaintiff. The defendant deducted from the freight charges the excess as contended for by the plaintiff, the same being erroneous. The amount demanded by defendant as dues for carriage was $148. The amount offered by the plaintiff was $106, which amount was afterwards found to be the amount due. The defendant introduced no evidence. The plaintiff had not received from the bank a transfer of the bill of lading at the several times when he made the demands for the delivery of the fruit, and did not receive it until the 18th of the month. If the defendant had refused to deliver the goods because the plaintiff had not received from the bank the assignment or transfer of the bill of lading, or partly for that reason, the defendant's contention, to wit, that the plaintiff had no right to make the demand for the goods until he presented the bill of lading, would rest on a solid foundation. But it is clear from the evidence of the plaintiff that the defendant made no point over the bill of lading not having been presented by the plaintiff, but rested its refusal on the ground that the plaintiff refused to pay the carriage due. The plaintiff testified that nothing was said to him by the freight agent as to his right to receive the bananas, and that nothing was said about that matter until after they had corrected the freight charges, when he was told that he would have to get an order from the bank. The defendant, having at the times of the several demands assigned no other reason for refusing to deliver the goods than the refusal of the plaintiff to pay an excessive charge for carriage, ought not to be allowed to defeat the plaintiff's right to recover the amount of his loss on the ground that he did not present the bill of lading or any other order from the bank—an objection not under consideration, and not thought of. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McGuire, 79 Ala. 395. He was treated by the company as if he was the consignee, and in this connection it is significant that the plaintiff, in his testimony, said he had gotten the figures on the freight from the agent of the defendant in Greensboro before he bought the fruit. So far as it appears from the evidence, the defendant would not have delivered the goods even if the plaintiff had presented the order from the bank. The defendant's purpose was to collect the bill for the freight, and not so much to see that the plaintiff paid the consignor for the bananas. It was contended for the defendant that the plaintiff should have paid the excess of carriage, received his goods, and then sued the defendant for that excess. That was one of his remedies, but he was not compelled to take that course. He might not have had the money with which to pay the excess of carriage, but, if he had, the defendant by its wrongful course could not compel the plaintiff to pay a greater amount than was due. Such a demand would place the law-abiding at the mercy of its violators. The plaintiff recovered from the defendant the difference between the amount of sales of the injured fruit as made by the plaintiff and its value when it was received at Greensboro.

Affirmed.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). My understanding of the facts and the law of this case differs so essentially from the views expressed in the opinion of the court that I am constrained to differ with the majority of the judges, not only in their reasoning, but in their conclusion. In its opinion the court says, "The plaintiff had not received from the bank a transfer of the bill of lading at the several times when he made the demands for the delivery of the fruit, and did not receive it until the 18th of the month." The court then proceeds to say that if the defendant had refused to deliver the fruit because the plaintiff had not received the assignment or transfer of the bill of lading from the bank, or partly for that reason, the defendant's contention that the plaintiff had no right to make the demand for the fruit until he presented the bill of lading would rest on a solid foundation. It seems to me that the court's deduction from the evidence that the defendant made no point about the bill of lading, but refused to deliver the goods solely upon the ground that the plaintiff would not pay the freight charges, is not a correct one. The plaintiff demanded the goods at the freight office at a time when he had no title to them, and when consequently he had no shadow of right to make the demand. There is no evidence fit to be submitted to a jury that the plaintiff, at the time he demanded the delivery of the goods, on Monday, the 15th of November, 1902, had paid the draft or account held by the bank, and to which the bill of lading was attached, and certainly no evidence that he had received the bill of lading, or that the same had been assigned or indorsed to him (which I will presently show was necessary to vest him with the title), until Thursday, the 18th of November. The evidence is all the other way. Plaintiff was the only witness examined in regard to this matter, and he was not able to say how much money he had in the bank, and did not venture to testify that he had enough to pay the draft. He telephoned the bank that he would accept the fruit, but there is no proof reasonably sufficient to show that the bank actually charged the amount of the draft or account accompanying the bill of lading, and which it held for collection, to his account, or that it agreed to do so, and to extend credit to him for the difference between the amount of the draft and the amount, if any, already to his credit in the bank. There is affirmative evidence that he never paid the draft and got the bill of lading until the 18th, the day the goods were delivered to him, after they had been damaged by the freeze, for on the bill and draft was this indorsement: "Paid, November 18, 1901." The plaintiff admits, as the court states in its opinion, that he did not actually get the possession of the papers from the bank until the 18th. The fact therefore is established by the plaintiff's own evidence that when he made the demand on the 15th and 16th of November he did not have the bill of lading to produce. How has the defendant waived the production of the same? Is the mere fact that the plaintiff and the defendant's freight agent had a parley about the amount of the freight charges, during which nothing was said about the bill of lading, to be construed as a waiver? Surely not. The agent had the right to presume that the plaintiff had the bill of lading ready for delivery to him whenever they adjusted the difference in regard to the freight charges. He did not have the right to make the demand unless he had the bill of lading and was the rightful owner of the property, and was the agent therefore to suppose that he did not have the bill? The plaintiff knew whether he had the bill or not, and, if he chose to make a demand when he did not own the property, and had not provided himself with the bill of lading, duly indorsed or assigned, it was his own folly and his own fault; and is the defendant to suffer because its agent reasonably relied upon the plaintiff's implied representation that he had the right to make the demand? This would be a complete reversal of all legal presumptions. The agent had the right up to the very last moment before he actually delivered the goods, or before they passed out of his possession or control, to demand the bill of lading. Even if there can be any such a thing as a waiver, upon the facts of this case, was not the plaintiff clearly negligent in not informing the agent as to the true situation? He knew that he did not have the papers, and had not paid the draft; the agent did not know this fact, and he had the right to think that no person would demand the goods who did not have the right to do so; and, in this state of the case, it was his right and his duty to hold the goods for the true owner, and to demand the bill of lading, when he acquired knowledge of the facts.

But how can a waiver, in a case like this one, confer title upon him who had no title? The doctrine of waiver is based upon the idea of estoppel. The general rule is that there can be no binding waiver of a right when there is no estoppel, and no valuable consideration received. 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. (1st Ed.) p. 531; Wool v. Edenton, 117 N. C. 6, 23 S. E. 40. "To make out a case of abandonment or waiver of a legal right, there must be a clear, unequivocal, and decisive act of the party, amounting to an estoppel on his part." Ross v. Swan, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 467; Diehl v. Ins. Co., 58 Pa. 452, 98 Am. Dec. 302. How can the plaintiff rely upon an estoppel, when all the facts were known to him, and none of them to the agent, and when the duty rested upon him to disclose those facts? Does any one suppose that the defendant's agent would have even discussed the question of freight charges with the plaintiff if he had known that plaintiff had not paid the draft, and did not have the bill of lading? Waiver cannot be predicated of the agent's conduct towards the plaintiff, who at the time had no right, so as by its mere operation to give the latter a title which he did not previously have. Such a thing would be an anomaly in the law. Who was entitled to the goods on the morning of the 18th, before the plaintiff got the bill of lading? The bank, of course. If the bank had demanded the goods of the defendant, could the latter have refused delivery? It could not, we must admit, and yet, if by the waiver the title passed to the plaintiff, it would follow that he was entitled to the property, and the bank could not recover that which was its own, and the title to which it had not in the least parted with. Can it be replied that the defendant would be compelled to deliver to the bank, and be liable to the plaintiff for a conversion of the goods? Could there be such a double liability, and this, too, when the defendant acted upon the natural and legal presumption that the plaintiff had the bill of lading when he first made his demand, as he ought to have had it, and when the plaintiff knew at the time that he did not have it, and consequently that he was not entitled to demand the delivery of the goods? How can there be any element of an estoppel, when the party relying on the estoppel has knowledge of a material fact which he does not communicate to the other party, and of which the latter is ignorant?

Mere silence on the part of the defendant's agent did not amount to a waiver, because a waiver is not to be implied from a party's silence when he is under no obligation to say anything. Railroad v. Rust (C. C.) 19 Fed. 245. What obligation did the defendant owe to the plaintiff to demand the bill of lading? He had absolutely no title and no right to the goods, and, besides, if the demand had been made, the plaintiff did not have the ability to comply with it, and this is certainly necessary to be shown in order to constitute in his favor a valid waiver. Why do a vain thing? The plaintiff must have shown that all the time from his first demand for the goods he had the bill of lading ready to be delivered to the defendant upon its request for it. It seems to be an incongruity in the use of legal terms to say that a person can waive a right which he has, so that it can be availed of by a person who at the time has no right at all, when there is no fraud.

There is another objection to the claim of waiver set up by the plaintiff. The facts now alleged as 'constituting a waiver were not pleaded (Manufacturing Co. v. Assur. Co., 110 N. C. 176, 14 S. E. 731, 28 Am. St. Rep. 673; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. p. 536), nor submitted to the jury, but the case was tried upon the theory alone that the plaintiff had actually paid the draft and received the bill of lading from the bank before the 18th. If there was no evidence to support this theory, the plaintiff must fail in the suit, especially as the defendant moved to nonsuit. Where a party alleges performance of a condition precedent to the exercise of his right, evidence of waiver of the condition is not admissible in support of such averment, because the two are inconsistent. He must amend his pleading, or in some proper way put himself in a position to rely upon the waiver. Manufacturing Co. v. Assur. Co., supra; Baldwin v. Munn, 2 Wend. 390, 20 Am. Dec. 627. "Waiver is usually a question of intent, and knowledge of the right and an intent to waive it must be made to appear plainly, and this is to be determined usually from the declaration and conduct of the parties." 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. (1st Ed.) p. 528. It is a mixed question of law and fact, each case necessarily depending much upon its own peculiar circumstances and surroundings. It is a question of intention, and a fact to be determined by the triers of fact. Okey v. Ins. Co., 29 Mo. App. 111.

Passing to the question as to the legal duty of a carrier with respect to the delivery of goods, we find it to be well settled that an obligation to deliver to the party having title under the bill of lading is imposed by law on the carrier, and is absolute and imperative, and a delivery to any other person is a conversion. Railroad v. Barkhouse, 100 Ala. 543, 13 South. 534. The duty of a common carrier is not only to carry safely, but to make a true delivery to the person to whom the goods are consigned. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Adams (Tex.) 30 Am. Rep. 119. And a delivery to any other is made at the peril of the carrier, unless that person surrenders the bill of lading either made or indorsed to himself. Gates v. Railroad, 42 Neb. 379, 60 N. W. 583; Weyand v. R. Co., 75 Iowa, 573, 39 N. W. 899, 1 L. R. A. 650, 9 Am. St. Rep. 504; M., D. & T. Co. v. Merriam, 111 Ind. 5, 11 N. E. 954; Bank v. R. Co., 160 Ill. 401, 43 N. E. 756. One reason for this rule is that the bill of lading is the symbol of ownership of the property, and, though not negotiable, in the ordinary sense, is assignable. Gates v. Railroad, supra. The carrier can require the production or an inspection of the bill of lading at any time before delivery. Porter on Bills of Lading, § 379. The same right belongs to his agent, for his own security and protection, and he may exact production of the bill before he gives up the property. Until the carrier can deliver to the shipper or some one showing authority from him (the bill of lading, duly indorsed and delivered, being evidence of that authority), it is his duty to retain the goods; and, if they are delivered to one not legally entitled, the carrier will be liable to the true owner for their value. He has no right under any circumstances to deliver them to a stranger. The Thames, 14 Wall. 98, 20 L. Ed. 804. The carrier is bound not to deliver to any one who has not the bill or symbol of ownership. Porter on Bills of Lading, § 414. The pledgee of the bill of lading is not divested of his right or title by any delivery to the consignee, though that delivery was obtained upon presentation by the latter of a duplicate bill or invoice which the carrier treats as sufficient authority in him to receive the goods. Section 530. "The carrier takes the risk of a delivery to the person entitled to the goods by the bill of lading and its indorsement. * * * Too great caution cannot, therefore, be exercised in respect to the right of the person to whom the delivery is made. No obligation of the carrier is more rigorously enforced than that which requires delivery to the proper person, and the law will allow, in fact, of no excuse for a wrong delivery, except the fault of the shipper himself." Hutchison on Carriers (2d Ed.) §§ 130, 340, 344, et seq. It was therefore the duty of the defendant to hold the goods until the rightful owner or the holder of the bill of lading had made demand upon it for them, and the failure to do so subjects it to liability to such owner or holder for any loss or damage sustained by reason of its default. Bass v. Glover, 63 Ga. 745; Bank v. Colgate, 4 Daly, 41; Bank v. Stewart, 19 N. B. (P. & B.) 268; Bank v. Hazeltine, 78 N. Y. 104, 34 Am. Rep. 518; Dwyer v. Ry. Co., 69 Tex. 707, 7 S. W. 504; Express Co. v. Dickson, 94 U. S. 549, 24 L. Ed. 285. If this be law, and it unquestionably is the law, the effect of the decision in this case will be to hold that a carrier will be liable to one in damages if the latter makes a demand for the delivery to him of goods in the carrier's cars or warehouse, when the party making the demand has no claim or title to the goods, and no right, therefore, to make it, provided the amount of freight charges is tendered, and the carrier refuses to deliver the goods, but does not at the time call for the production of the bill of lading, properly indorsed to the consignee. In my opinion, this is an innovation in the law of carriers, and contravenes the well-settled rule that one who acquires title to property after it has been damaged does not acquire also the cause of action for the damage, unless it is expressly assigned to him. Drake v. Howell, 133 N. C. 168, 45 S. E. 539; Liverman v. Railroad, 114 N. C. 692, 19 S. E. 64.

The defendant is liable to the bank, if to anybody, for any damage to the goods while in the care of the defendant up to Thursday, the 18th. The right to recover upon this liability has never been transferred to the plaintiff, nor did it become his, as we have seen, by virtue of his subsequently acquired ownership of the goods. As said by the court in Young v. Railway Co., 80 Ala. 100—a case very much in point—"The defendant's duty not to deal tortiously with the property of an innocent third person [a bank holding a draft with a bill of lading attached] cannot be affected by the failure of the depot agent first to tender back to the plaintiff [assignee or consignee] the amount of freight collected on the goods. The law will not compel the defendant carrier to commit a tort by delivering goods to the plaintiff, because the agent agreed to do so in consideration of the payment of freight," unless he is the holder of the bill of lading. No one shall be rebuked by the law for doing that which he is enjoined by the law to do. Much less will he be made to suffer for his correct conduct. The defendant's agent had the right to rely and act upon the principle, knowledge of which the plaintiff should have had—that according to the usual and ordinary course of business recognized by the law, the goods could not be obtained by him, except upon the production of the bill of lading—and his conduct, therefore, was not, in law or in fact, calculated to mislead the plaintiff, and thus to create an estoppel upon the company, from which a waiver of the right to call for the bill of lading would be presumed or even inferred. Forbes v. Railroad, 133 Mass. 157.

The motion to nonsuit, in my opinion, should have been granted, as the plaintiff showed no just or legal claim to the damages he seeks to recover, and there should at least be a new trial, in any view of the case, as the court charged the jury upon a theory which was not supported by any proof, and the question of waiver, upon which the case is now decided, if there is any evidence of it, was not submitted to the jury.

As the plaintiff is allowed to recover upon a cause of action which I do not think he owns, the defendant is practically in danger of being twice vexed for one and the same cause, or of being compelled to assume a double liability, which surely would be unjust, and the rule of law which produces such a result should be very clearly established. Indeed, if the law is to remain as in this case declared, it will be difficult for common carriers to conduct their business with any degree of safety. If the defendant is liable for any negligence to the bank, which at the time of the injury to the bananas was the true owner, as the holder of the draft and bill of lading, let the recovery be confined to the true right and title, and not go to one who has no right at all.

CONNOR, J., concurs in the dissenting opinion.

(125 N. C. 538)

DAVIS v. TOWN OF FREMONT.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 24, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—NECESSARY EXPENSES—LIGHTING PLANTS—SUBMISSION TO POPULAR VOTE.

1. Providing a system of lighting the streets of a town is a necessary expense, for which a debt may be contracted and bonds issued, without submitting the proposition to a vote of the people, where there is no limitation in the charter of the town on its power to contract for necessary expenses.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wayne County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Suit for injunction by J. D. Davis against the town of Fremont. From a judgment refusing to grant the injunction, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. T. Dickson, for appellant. F. A. Daniels, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. The commissioners of the town of Fremont in Wayne county, on May 18, 1904, adopted a resolution reciting that experience had demonstrated the necessity for providing a system of lighting the streets of the town, and that all experiments therefore made to do so had proved unsuccessful; that, after investigation, the board had ascertained that an electric light plant can be erected of sufficient capacity to furnish light for the town and its inhabitants at a cost of \$4,000. They proceed to declare that the establishment of an electric light plant for the town is a public necessity, and that it is necessary to contract a debt of \$4,000 for such purpose. It is thereupon resolved to issue bonds in said amount of \$4,000, each carrying interest at 6 per cent., and maturing January 1, 1919. Provision is made for a sale of the bonds at not less than par, and that the proceeds of such sale shall not be used for any other purpose than the purchase and establishment of said plant. Provision is also made for levying a tax for the payment of the interest on the bonds, and a sinking fund to pay the principal at maturity. It appears from the pleadings that the town of Fremont was duly incorporated with all the powers conferred upon cities and towns by chapter 62 of the Code. The town had a population of 800, and the assessed value of the real and personal property is \$222,000. Its present rate of taxation is 45 cents on the \$100 worth of property and \$1.35 on each poll. Its chartered limit is 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ cents and \$2 on each poll. The plaintiff, a taxpayer in the town, seeks to enjoin the commissioners from issuing the bonds for that the proposition has not been submitted to a vote of the people of the town. The cause was heard by his honor Judge Allen upon a motion for an injunction, who found the facts above set forth, and the additional fact that there was no limitation in the charter of the town of Fremont upon the power, to contract for necessary expenses, and the further fact that the town can pay the interest on said debt and provide a sinking fund to pay the principal, without exceeding the limit of taxation in its charter, and, being of opinion that the establishment of the electric light plant is a necessary expense, refused to grant the injunction. Plaintiff appealed.

We are of the opinion that the facts set forth in the order of his honor bring the case clearly within the ruling of this court in Fawcett v. Mt. Airy, 134 N. C. —, 45 S. E. 1029. That case was decided after careful consideration, and with the limitation of the general principle found in Wadsworth v. Concord, 133 N. C. 587, 45 S. E. 948, and Robinson v. Goldsboro (at this term) 47 S. E. 462, we are content to abide by the law as therein laid down. We think the decision sound in reason, and consistent with the conditions existing in this state. The power thus recognized should be carefully exercised. The duty rests upon the people in the town to intrust it only to men of good judgment and incorruptible integrity, who recognize their responsibility to the people. If injury comes to the people, they are alone responsible for it. We see nothing in the record to cause us to doubt the power being wisely exercised.

The judgment below is affirmed.

DOUGLAS, J., dissents.

(125 N. C. 680)

CREECH v. WILMINGTON COTTON MILLS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. June 1, 1904.)

MASTER'S NEGLIGENCE—INJURY TO SERVANT—JURY QUESTION—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. Where a servant operating looms went to get filling, as she was permitted, but not required, to do, and in bending over to take it from a box sitting in the usual place in front of unboxed cogwheels, her clothing was drawn into the wheels, and she was injured, the nonsuit of an action therefor was properly refused.

¶ 1. See Municipal Corporations, vol. 24, Cent. Dig. § 1941.

2. A master sued for injuries to a servant from having her clothing caught by unboxed cogwheels, not connected with her machine, and located at a place where she was permitted, but not required, to go, is not liable if the servant failed to exercise the care of an ordinarily prudent person.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Brown, Judge.

Action by M. L. Creech against the Wilmington Cotton Mills. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Iredell Meares, for appellant. J. D. Bellamy and Herbert McClammy, for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. This is an action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff through the alleged negligence of the defendant in failing to box certain cogwheels. The plaintiff was operating four looms, the filling for which was ordinarily provided by a boy, whose duty it was to bring it to the looms. When the looms got out of filling, and the boy failed to bring it around in time, the girl tending the loom sometimes went after it. She was not required to do so by the rules, but it was frequently done, and permitted to be done. On the occasion of the accident the plaintiff went to get the necessary filling from a box which had been left in its usual place in a passageway in front of certain unboxed cogwheels. In bending over to reach down into the box, her clothing was caught by the cogwheels and wound up tightly, so that she was drawn down upon the wheels and injured. This, and more, the plaintiff's evidence tends to prove; and hence there was no error in the refusal to nonsuit. In fact, as the case is now presented to us, we find but one exception that can be sustained. The defendant asked the court to charge "that if the jury find that when this plaintiff went to get the filling from the box she failed to exercise that care which an ordinarily prudent person would or should have exercised, and because of this want of care was injured, then the plaintiff contributed by her own negligence to her own injury, and cannot recover in this action." This prayer was refused by the court. In this, we think, there was error, and that the defendant's prayer, as stated above, should have been given. We are not disposed to modify in the slightest degree our decisions holding that it is the duty of the master to furnish safe machinery, for which it is not necessary to cite authorities. There was no defect in the looms tended by the plaintiff, nor was she injured by them. The cogwheels were not in her charge, nor was she compelled to work with them, or even go near them, unless she saw fit. If she preferred to go after the filling, instead of letting her looms remain idle, she should have exercised the care of an ordinarily prudent person. A failure to do so would, under such circumstances, be contributory negligence. As there was some evidence tending to show that she did not exercise such care, the issue should have been left to the jury.

New trial.

(135 N. C. 680)

HENDERSON COUNTY COM'RS v. WILLIAMS, Treasurer.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 31, 1904.)

COUNTY BONDS—PAYMENT OF INTEREST—SUIT TO ENJOIN—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

1. A complaint by a board of county commissioners to enjoin the treasurer from paying interest on county bonds sought to be invalidated, which fails to allege that he has any funds applicable to such purpose, or that he threatens or proposes to pay any public funds on the bonds or interest, is fatally defective.

Appeal from Superior Court, Henderson County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by the commissioners of Henderson county against J. Williams, as treasurer. On appeal from the judgment. Action dismissed.

H. G. Ewart, Anderson & Blythe, Toms & Rector, and H. D. Ray, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This action is brought by the plaintiff board of commissioners against the defendant treasurer of the county; the relief asked being that the bonds issued by the commissioners of said county be declared invalid, and the treasurer be enjoined from paying the interest on said bonds. It is to be observed that there is no allegation that the defendant has any funds in his hands applicable to such purpose, or that he threatens or proposes to pay any public funds on such bonds, or the interest thereon. As the basis for invoking the injunctive power of the court, the complaint is fatally defective. Action dismissed.

(135 N. C. 650)

KELLY v. JOHNSON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 31, 1904.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—LAND INCLUDED IN CONTRACT—MUTUAL MISTAKE—ISSUES—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCEPTION TO INSTRUCTIONS.

1. In a suit by a vendee for specific performance, defended on the ground that certain land was included in the contract by mistake, an issue tendered by defendant which omits to direct inquiry to the mutuality of the mistake is properly rejected.

2. In an action by a vendee for specific performance, evidence of the defendant vendor as to who was living on land claimed by a prior purchaser from him under an oral contract at the time of the execution of plaintiff's contract is admissible on the issue raised by defendant of a mutual mistake in the later contract in including such land.

3. Error in excluding questions asked a witness is not ground for reversal, where the excluded questions are afterwards answered.

4. Even though an exception to the denial of a motion for a new trial be construed as an exception to the charge, it cannot be reviewed, since it is a "broadside exception."

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Bryan, Judge.

Suit by J. T. Kelly against W. J. Johnson and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

On November 24, 1897, the defendants, W. J. Johnson, W. H. Britton, and A. M. Prince, doing business under the name and style of the Manchester Lumber Company, executed a bond for title to the plaintiff, obligating themselves to convey to him, upon the payment of the purchase price, a good and sufficient deed for three tracts of land, described by metes and bounds. Plaintiff paid several of the notes at maturity, and tendered the balance due on the purchase price, demanding the execution of a deed in accordance with the condition of the bond. W. J. Johnson, who had acquired the rights of the other obligors, tendered a deed for said land, excepting therefrom 100 acres claimed by one Martin Williams. The plaintiff refused to accept the deed as tendered, and instituted this action to compel specific performance. The defendants, admitting the execution of the bond, payment, tender, etc., averred, by way of defense, and as the basis for equitable relief, that, prior to the execution of the bond for title, the defendants had entered into a contract with Martin Williams to convey to him 100 acres of the land described in the bond; that Williams had entered into possession of the land, and had made payments on account of the purchase money, and improvements on the land; that the inclusion in the condition of the bond of said 100 acres was "by inadvertence and oversight"; that plaintiff knew of Williams' possession and interest, and that it was not intended to convey or include the said land in the bond. The defendants ask that the bond be so reformed that the said 100 acres be excepted therefrom. Martin Williams was permitted to interplead and set up his claim to the 100 acres. The cause coming on for trial, the plaintiff demurred ore tenus to the interplea, for that it failed to state any cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and the interpleader excepted. The defendants tendered certain issues, which were rejected by the court, and in lieu thereof the court submitted the following issue: "Was the insertion of the one hundred acres in the bond for title by the defendants to the plaintiff a mutual mistake?" To which the jury responded, "No." From a judgment upon the verdict, the defendants appealed.

Robinson & Shaw, for appellants. D. T. Oates, Seawell, McIver & King, and N. A. Sinclair, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. The issue submitted by his honor presented the contention to the jury. The first issue tendered by the defendants was defective, in that it omitted to direct the inquiries to the alleged mutuality of the mistake. The second issue was directed to matter which was evidentiary. The exception cannot be sustained. The defendant W. J. Johnson was asked on direct examination, "Who was living on, and who was in possession of, the land claimed by Martin Williams, at the time of the execution of the bond for title?" This was, upon objection, excluded. We think that the question was competent upon the issue as to the mutual mistake. The defendants say that it was not the intention of either party to the contract to include the 100 acres, that Martin Williams was in possession, and that plaintiff had knowledge of it. This was a fact which the jury could consider upon the issue. The error, however, seems to have been cured by the answer to the question, "At the time of the execution of the bond, who was in possession of the one hundred acres claimed by Martin Williams, and did the plaintiff in this action take the bond for title with notice that the one hundred acres was in possession of another, under contract of purchase, and did the plaintiff at that time know that the defendant did not intend to convey the one hundred acres of land?" The witness answered that he knew it was sold to Martin Williams, and he could not say whether he knew that he did not intend to convey it or not. The witness was asked whether the 100 acres was surveyed, and the lines marked. The question was excluded, but the witness was recalled, and testified, "The lines of Martin Williams' tract were distinctly marked." This cures the error in excluding the question when first asked. The other questions excluded were fully answered at other times during the examination of the witnesses. We find no reversible error in this respect. The parties were permitted to put their testimony fairly before the jury. The plaintiff denied all knowledge of the claim of Williams, and the jury found in accordance with his contention.

His honor instructed the jury: That any contract to sell or convey lands, or any interest in them, unless some memorandum or note thereof is in writing, is void. That they would not consider the contract by parol to Williams. It was void so far as Kelly is concerned. The defendants must establish mistake by clear and convincing proof—by evidence outside the bond and inconsistent with it. The mistake must be mutual. It must be a mistake both upon the part of Kelly and Johnson and Britton, and they must show it, not Kelly. A parol contract is void. They had nothing to do with Williams. The defendants' brief discusses separately six exceptions, three of which are addressed to the charge. The record contains no exception to the charge, the entry being: "The defendants move for a new trial. Motion denied, and defendants except. Judgment." If we should construe this as an exception to the charge, it will not avail the defendants, being what is termed a "broadside exception." It is settled that such an exception will not be sustained. The record contains no assignment of error.

We have examined the entire record, and find no reversible error therein. No error.

(135 N. C. 647)

KELLY v. JOHNSON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. May 31, 1904.)

OCCUPYING CLAIMANT—COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

1. One who occupies land under a parol contract of purchase, and who has made valuable improvements thereon, is entitled, on interpleading in a suit by a subsequent purchaser for specific performance, to the value of his improvements, to be deducted from the balance of the purchase money due from plaintiff, who, under his contract, is entitled to a deed with full covenants of warranty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Bryan, Judge.

Suit by J. T. Kelly against W. J. Johnson and others, in which Martin Williams interpleads. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the interplea, the interpleader appeals. Reversed.

I. A. Murchison, for appellant. Seawell, McIver & King, D. T. Oates, and N. A. Sinclair, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. Martin Williams, by permission of the court, filed his interplea, setting forth that during the month of September, 1896, he entered into a contract with the defendants for the purchase of 100 acres of the upper end of the land described in the complaint, for which he agreed to pay the sum of $200; that defendants caused the land to be surveyed, and put him in possession thereof; that he has remained in possession ever since, and that plaintiff well knew that he was in the actual possession of said 100 acres when he made his contract with defendants; that he has made improvements, buildings, etc., at a cost of $100; that he holds receipts for money paid by him to defendants on said land, headed, "Received of Martin Williams on land," amounting to $98; that he is ready and anxious to pay the balance of the purchase money on receipt of a deed, etc. The plaintiff demurred ore tenus to the interplea. The demurrer was sustained, and the interpleader excepted and appealed.

The facts set forth in the interplea and admitted by the demurrer appeal very strongly to a court of conscience for relief. We should hesitate long and consider anxiously before concluding that no relief in such case can be found in the doctrines of equity. That the innocent, and, we presume, ignorant, man, who, relying upon the promise of his vendor, has entered upon the land improved, and partly paid for it, must go forth bereft of his money, with no pay for his improvements, can be permitted only in obedience to some statute, or unvarying principle of law, beyond the power of the chancellor.

It is well settled that the defendants, upon the admitted facts, cannot oust him from the land without accounting to him for his improvements and purchase money paid. To permit them to do so would, in the language of Judge Gaston in Albea v. Griffin, 22 N. C. 9, be "against conscience." "If they repudiate the contract, which they have a right to do, they must not take the improved property from the plaintiff without compensation for the additional value which these improvements have put upon the property." Daniel v. Crumpler, 75 N. C. 184; Hedgepeth v. Rose, 95 N. C. 41; Pitt v. Moore, 99 N. C. 91, 5 S. E. 389, 6 Am. St. Rep. 489; Tucker v. Markland, 101 N. C. 422, 8 S. E. 169, in which Merrimon, J., said: "It seems that, having paid the money, he took possession of the land in pursuance of his supposed right under the voidable contract of purchase, and with the sanction of the vendor. It would be inequitable and against conscience to allow the latter to turn him out of possession without restoring his outlay in cash and for valuable improvements put on the land while so in possession." Vann v. Newsom, 110 N. C. 122, 14 S. E. 519. It would seem that the receipts set out in the interplea are too indefinite to be used as a contract to convey. Fortescue v. Crawford, 105 N. C. 29, 10 S. E. 910; Harris v. Woodard, 130 N. C. 580, 41 S. E. 790.

The question is presented whether the plaintiffs or the defendants are liable to the interpleader. Assuming the facts to be as set out in the interplea and admitted by the demurrer, the plaintiff had notice of the equity of the interpleader when he entered into the contract of purchase and paid a part of the purchase money. Having such notice, he took the equitable title subject to the equity of the interpleader, and when he acquires the legal title by the deed which the defendant is directed to execute, or using the judgment as a conveyance of the legal title, his right to oust the interpleader will be subject to the equity of the interpleader for reimbursement in the same way as the defendants would have been. As, however, it appears by the pleadings and bond for title that he is entitled to have a deed with full covenants of warranty, we can see no reason why he may not withhold the balance due defendants on the purchase money until upon an accounting it is ascertained what amount he will have to pay the interpleader to secure possession of the land. As all parties in interest are before the court, a judgment may be drawn so that their rights may be protected. This will be done by directing an accounting between defendants and the interpleader, and the payment from the balance of the purchase money of the amount due him. He will, upon such payment being made, surrender possession of the land to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff or the defendants shall wish and shall be permitted to file an answer to the interplea, raising issues of fact, the final judgment will await the trial of such issues.

The judgment sustaining the demurrer is reversed. Let a judgment be drawn in accordance with this opinion. The plaintiff will pay the costs of this court. Reversed.

(135 N. C. 788)

WALKER v. CAROLINA CENT. R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. June 1, 1904.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY—JURY QUESTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—DEFECT IN FORM—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—RIGHT OF RAILWAY COMPANY TO PLEAD.

1. Evidence in an action by an employé of a railroad company for injuries from a defective sand drier examined, and held to entitle plaintiff to go to the jury on the questions of negligence and proximate cause.

2. While an instruction to the jury in a personal injury case to answer the issue of contributory negligence, "No," is bad in form, yet it is not ground for reversal where there is in fact an entire absence of evidence of contributory negligence.

3. Under Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, depriving railroad companies of the defense of assumption of risk, a railroad company cannot plead such defense to an action by an employé for injuries from a defective sand drier.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Neal, Judge.

Action by William Walker against Carolina Central Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action on account of personal injuries received by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant. The evidence tends to prove that the plaintiff's clothing caught fire from a defective sand drier which he was operating in the performance of his ordinary duties. The issues and answers thereto were as follows: "Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer. Yes." "Did the defendant by his own negligence contribute to his own injury? Answer." "What damage has the plaintiff sustained? Answer. $900."

The only assignments of errors are as follows: The defendant requested the court to charge as follows: "There is no evidence of negligence of the defendant corporation, and the jury will answer the first issue, 'No.'" His honor refused to give this instruction, to which refusal the defendant excepted. The defendant further requested the court to charge as follows: "There is no evidence that the hurt done to the plaintiff was caused by the negligence of the defendant, and the jury is therefore instructed to answer the first issue, 'No.'" His honor refused to give this instruction, and to this refusal the defendant excepted. Upon the second issue his honor charged the jury as follows: "There is a second issue: 'Did the plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to his own injury?' And the court charges you, upon the testimony, to answer that issue, 'No.'"

The plaintiff testified that he had been working for the defendant in the same capacity for 3 years, and had worked with the machine in bad shape for 30 days; that he had called the attention of the master machinist—the "boss man"—to the defects in the drier, and he had patched it up. Being asked to describe the machine, he did so as follows: "There was a kind of bowl or hopper, with legs to it; kinder like a stove. Hopper was in the shape of a sugar-loaf hat, and stood on a foundation. Underneath was holes the size of a silver dollar. Sand ran out of hopper through these holes. In the foundation was a door. The foundation was brickwork. There was a furnace underneath there, and above the foundation. This was made of cast iron. Hopper was made of wire, and was funnel-shaped. Don't know what kind of wire; good-sized wire. You put the fire in a door when the machine was in good order. Put the sand—wet sand—in there to be dried. When it was dry the sand came out from the edges of the door all around where the holes were. Had to get down and shovel it out where I could sift it. Took it out with a large scoop. Machine had a pipe on it when it was in good shape, a good while ago. Pipe extended out through the top of the house. The sand drier was in a house; pretty good house; one room and had a partition—a kind of sand bin. He had took and patched it. The top rim of the bowl had fallen down on the bottom. They had took some of this old sewer pipe and patched it where it had fell in, and daubed it up with mud, and left the stack off of it. There was an old piece of stack in the yard that I had used, but I couldn't manage with that. * * * When I caught on fire I was shoveling sand from underneath, where the sand run out. The hopper had squashed down. I couldn't put but a little bit of sand in at the time. Couldn't cover up the holes, because it was shallow. (Shows jury where he was standing to take sand out.) I suppose the blaze out of one of the holes caught me on fire. I don't know exactly. I was on fire, and had to do around."

Burwell & Cansler and Day & Bell, for appellant. Clarkson & Duls and T. L. Kirkpatrick, for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. (after stating the facts). While we are not mechanical experts, we think that the fact that a cast-iron sand drier had the smoke pipe knocked off, was "squashed down," and was daubed up with mud, was some evidence of a defective machine, from which the jury might have inferred the negligence of the defendant. That the plaintiff's clothing caught on fire, when the only fire anywhere near him was in the sand drier, would tend to show that he caught on fire from the sand drier. The further fact that he had been working with sand driers for three years, and never caught fire until this machine became defective, would, with his other testimony, also tend to prove that the defect was the cause of his being burned. Therefore the prayers to instruct the jury that there was no evidence tending to prove the negligence of the defendant, or that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, were properly denied. The duty of the defendant to furnish safe machinery, the failure of which constitutes continuing negligence, is too well settled to require any great degree of argument or authority. Greenlee v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 977, 30 S. E. 115; Troxler v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 908, 30 S. E. 117; Id., 124 N. C. 189, 32 S. E. 550, 44 L. R. A. 818, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580; McLamb v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 862, 29 S. E. 894; Coley v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 407, 40 S. E. 195, 57 L. R. A. 817.

Upon the issue of contributory negligence the court charged as follows: "The court charges you, upon the testimony, to answer that issue, 'No.'" We cannot approve of the form of such an instruction, and yet, as it was correct, in legal effect, under the testimony in this case, we cannot set aside the verdict. What his honor evidently meant was that there was no evidence tending to prove contributory negligence, and in that we think he was correct. As his charge was, in legal effect, merely the direction of a negative verdict upon the entire absence of evidence, it comes within the rule laid down in Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451, and Spruill v. Insurance Co., 120 N. C. 141, 27 S. E. 39, cited with approval in Lewis v. Steamship Co., 132 N. C., at page 912, 44 S. E. 668.

It has been suggested that the question of assumption of risk arose under the issue of contributory negligence, and should have been submitted to the jury. This is answered by reference to the act of February 23, 1897 (Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56), depriving railroad companies of such a defense. Thomas v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 392, 40 S. E. 201; Cogdell v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 398, 40 S. E. 202.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed. Affirmed.

(68 S. C. 431)

STATE v. ADAMS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. April 11, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST—CODEFENDANT—PRIOR DIFFICULTY—MANSLAUGHTER—DEFINITION—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. In a criminal trial a defendant's declarations against interest are not admissible against his codefendant.

2. Where incompetent evidence has been admitted without objection, the proper procedure to correct the error is by motion to strike out.

3. Self-serving declarations, denoting an intention merely, are admissible only if regarded as an act of the party supporting his testimony.

4. In a prosecution for murder, in which evidence that defendant and deceased had had a previous difficulty had been admitted and the main facts brought out, evidence as to the details was properly excluded.

5. In a prosecution for homicide, a charge that manslaughter is the killing of another without malice aforethought, expressed or implied, was not error, where other instructions gave a full discussion of malice as an element of murder, and specifically stated that murder differed from manslaughter in that in murder the element of malice must exist, while in manslaughter that element is wanting.

6. Where, in a prosecution for murder, a certain fact is introduced by defendant, the application of the law to such fact cannot be complained of as a charge on the facts.

7. In a prosecution for homicide, failure to instruct on manslaughter is not error where there is no evidence to support such instruction.

8. In a prosecution for homicide, failure to charge that the jury could find the defendant guilty of murder with a recommendation for mercy, and as to the effect of such verdict, is not error where no request for such an instruction is made.

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Colleton County; Gary, Judge.

R. A. Adams was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

Howell & Gruber and J. M. Walker, for appellant. Solicitor Davis, Griffin & Padgett, and Peurifoy Bros., for the State.

WOODS, J. The defendants were jointly indicted for the murder of Henry Jaques. They were tried at the March, 1903, term of the court of general sessions for Colleton county. W. B. Adams and Henry Hoff were acquitted. R. A. Adams was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death. His motion for a new trial was overruled, and he appeals to this court, alleging error in the admission of testimony and in the charge of the presiding judge.

The appellant was, of course, entitled to the benefit of any defense for which the evidence afforded a foundation, but the discussion of the exceptions will be better understood when prefaced by a statement of the main issue. R. A. Adams and Henry Jaques met on or very near the public road on February 11, 1903. Adams shot and killed Jaques. On January 4, 1903—a little more than a month before the fatal meeting—Jaques had shot Adams in the latter's own back yard for some alleged improper language to Jaques' family. The main issue on the trial was whether Adams killed in self-defense or in revenge.

The appellant first submits the presiding judge erred in allowing the witness John O. Jaques to narrate a conversation with Henry Hoff, in which, as he testified, Hoff told him R. A. Adams had said to him, "We have killed Henry Jaques," and upon being asked why he had done so, answered: "I just couldn't help it. It took a man with a big heart to do it." The circuit judge did all he could to prevent this statement from affecting R. A. Adams by ruling that it could be taken as evidence against Hoff alone. As has been often held, there was no error in admitting the evidence with this qualification.

Error is assigned in the second exception in allowing John O. Jaques to testify that Hoff's wife had told him her husband knew all about the killing. No objection was made until the witness had made this statement, and no motion was made to strike it out. Immediately after this statement the witness said: "I went through the yard, and said, 'Has Henry come home yet?' She said, 'No.' I said, 'I suppose you heard that Albie Adams has killed Henry Jaques?' She said, 'No, but Henry told me he was going to do it this week.'" Whereupon the presiding judge of his own motion stopped him, saying, "No; just explain why you put her out." No motion was made to strike out this last statement of the witness. An effort had been made to discredit this witness by having him admit that he had turned Hoff's family off witness' land into the road while Hoff was in jail. The court properly held that witness could explain his reason for doing so, but when the explanation involved hearsay evidence against the defendants the witness was stopped. To avail himself in his appeal of any prejudice growing out of this statement, the appellant should have moved to strike it out.

In the third exception it is submitted that W. B. Adams should have been permitted to testify that his codefendant R. A. Adams repeatedly urged him to leave Ackerman's house, where they had stopped just before the homicide, and return home. The rule is that a defendant cannot introduce in his defense his own statements made to others. Even if this urging by appellant R. A. Adams could be regarded as an act of his tending to support his testimony that he had no intention of waiting for Jaques to come, and not as a mere statement in his own favor, the appellant was not prejudiced by its exclusion, for the reason that he himself does not testify that he did anything more than express his own intention of leaving on account of the rain, and only urged his brother to go with him after he had actually started off. There is nothing in his testimony to indicate that he was deterred from leaving by any indisposition of his brother to accompany him, or that he did not leave as soon as the inclination came.

In the fourth exception it is alleged that the wife of the deceased should not have been allowed to testify in reply that R. A. Adams cursed her on January 4th, before he was shot on that day by her husband. The court had allowed Youmans and Dandridge, two of defendants' witnesses, who were near by, to testify to every detail of this difficulty, which occurred some time before the homicide, giving the language of both parties as far as they heard it. As the defendants' counsel was about to have another witness to give his version, the following colloquy took place: "The Court: You can prove the fact that these parties had a previous difficulty, but can't go into all the details of that difficulty. That is an issue the state is not called upon to meet. It consumes too much time. Mr. Gruber: Where the deceased committed acts even against a third person in the presence of the prisoner, it is competent to show it. We desire to show these acts were committed against the person of the prisoner by the deceased. The Court: Prove the facts, but the minute details is a consumption of time." This view of the court was manifestly correct. The evidence as to the previous difficulty was competent only to show the animus of the parties, and thus aid the jury in reaching a conclusion as to who was probably the aggressor, and what demeanor each party had reason to expect from the other when they met and the fatal difficulty occurred. The general details of the previous trouble were properly excluded. The specific question as to whether R. A. Adams on that occasion cursed Mrs. Jaques was never excluded. The appellant was asked this question on his direct examination, and testified that he did not curse her. This tended to show that, in the first difficulty, Jaques had shot on slight, not great, provocation, and so may have had some bearing on his animus toward appellant at the time of the homicide. It was competent for the state to introduce the testimony of Mrs. Jaques to contradict this statement. It was not an abuse of discretion for the circuit judge to refuse to allow the defense to introduce other witnesses on this collateral inquiry.

The fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh exceptions raise practically the same questions. For the reasons above stated, they must be overruled.

In his eighth exception, the appellant insists the presiding judge was in error in charging that manslaughter "is the killing of another without malice aforethought expressed or implied." It is true that killing a human being without malice, to constitute manslaughter, must be unlawful; but these words of the circuit judge, when taken in their connection, could not have misled the jury. In the course of the charge there had been a full discussion of malice as an element necessary to the crime of murder. Then, to distinguish manslaughter from murder—not from self-defense, or misadventure, or other excusable killing—the presiding judge said: "Murder differs from manslaughter in this: that in murder the element of malice must exist, while in manslaughter the element of malice is wanting. That is the distinction—murder is the killing of another with malice, manslaughter the killing of another without malice aforethought, expressed or implied." This clearly meant that if the jury found that a homicide had been committed having all the elements of murder except malice, the crime would be reduced to manslaughter. Subsequently, in the course of the charge, self-defense, which was appellant's plea, was fully covered. The appeal cannot be sustained on this ground.

Error is charged in the ninth exception because the circuit judge referred to the shooting of appellant by the deceased, which occurred on January 4th, as a fact in the case. Not only was this shooting admitted by both sides, but it was brought into the case by the defendants, who introduced testimony, as we have seen, intended to show that there was little provocation for it, and that it was due to the vindictiveness of Henry Jaques. It was therefore not for the appellant to complain that the judge charged the jury the fact had been established. State v. Nickels, 65 S. C. 176, 43 S. E. 521. If the appellant cannot complain of the statement of a fact which he himself proved, he cannot complain of a statement of the law applicable to that fact. It will be observed that the charge does not instruct the jury what inference is to be drawn from the shooting of January 4th; but in stating the reason for admitting the evidence as to that occurrence, after having referred to it as a fact, the judge immediately returned to a general statement of the law, using these words: "The law recognizes the fact that, where he has recently had a personal encounter with another, and they meet, that fact being known, that the party having had this personal encounter, or having been threatened, can construe more harshly and act more quickly upon apprehension than with one with whom he had not had an encounter or been threatened. Therefore previous threats and quarrels are permitted, not as a defense for killing a man, not as a defense to a homicide, but to show the attitude of the parties." No enlightened tribunal could receive such testimony on any other ground than that stated in this quotation; and we think it was not only proper, but the imperative duty of the circuit judge, to charge it should have no other effect. The case is essentially different from China v. Sumter, 51 S. C. 455, 29 S. E. 206. There the charge was: "If the city place obstructions there, not giving any notice, and he sustained damages, it would be an act of negligence and mismanagement, and the city would be responsible." This was held erroneous, for the reason, as said in Bridger v. R. R. Co., 25 S. C. 30, "The law, however, does not state what facts proved will show the absence of ordinary care." The distinction is that the law does state that homicide committed in revenge for a previous injury is murder. The portion of the charge now under review was nothing more than a statement of this proposition.

The ninth, tenth, and eleventh exceptions stand on the same ground, and cannot be sustained.

In the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth exceptions appellant complains that the presiding judge did not specifically instruct the jury that they could find a verdict of manslaughter or of murder, with a recommendation to mercy, and inform them of the effect of such recommendation. As we have seen, the presiding judge did in a general way distinguish murder and manslaughter in his charge. But, aside from this, a careful examination of the testimony fails to suggest any theory upon which a verdict of manslaughter could rest. The issue was clearly murder or self-defense, and a new trial should not be granted for failure to charge upon a phase of the law to which the testimony could not, in any reasonable view, be made to apply. State v. Dodson, 16 S. C. 464. Failure to charge the jury that they could convict of murder and recommend to mercy, and that such recommendation would result in a sentence of life imprisonment instead of a sentence of death, has been held by this court not to be reversible error, when there was no request for such a charge. State v. Owens, 44 S. C. 324, 22 S. E. 244. The rule is thus stated in State v. Meyers, 40 S. C. 556, 18 S. E. 892: "As will be observed, in the first ground of appeal the appellant alleges that the circuit judge erred in failing to make a charge that appellant now thinks would have inured to his benefit. By numerous decisions of this court it has been held to be the law in this state that no such allegation of error will be considered in this court unless a request for such charge has been made to the circuit judge on the trial before him." See 11 Ency. P. & P. 217, and the numerous authorities there cited. The author says: "The failure of a judge to charge upon any material point usually results from inadvertence, and the law casts upon the parties the duty of calling the judge's attention to the matter. If he then refuses to give a proper requested instruction, such refusal is a ground of error; but a party cannot, in a court of error, avail himself of an omission which he made no effort to have supplied at the time. The court cannot be presumed to do more in ordinary cases than express its opinion upon the questions which the parties themselves have raised on the trial. It is not bound to submit to the jury any particular proposition of law unless its attention is called to it. If counsel desire to bring any view of the law of the case before the jury, they must make such view the subject of a request to charge, and, failing in this, they cannot assign error." Any other doctrine would, we think, produce overwhelming embarrassment and delay in the practical administration of justice. Under the Constitution of 1895 the rule has been applied in State v. Smith, 57 S. C. 489, 35 S. E. 727; State v. Chiles, 58 S. C. 47, 36 S. E. 496; Youngblood v. R. R. Co., 60 S. C. 9, 38 S. E. 232, 85 Am. St. Rep. 824; Sudduth v. Sumner, 61 S. C. 276, 39 S. E.

534, 85 Am. St. Rep. 883; and other cases. The doctrine is based on acquiescence and waiver. It is true the Constitution of 1895 requires the judges in charging juries "to declare the law." But the right to have all the law declared may be waived like any other right, and an omission acquiesced in. The failure to request instructions on any particular point is regarded waiver of the right to such instruction and acquiescence in the omission. If the appellant, who was represented by most able and vigilant counsel, thought himself prejudiced by the inadvertent omission of the circuit judge to speak of the right of the jury to recommend to mercy and the effect of such recommendation, he should have requested the statement made.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed, and that the case be remanded to that court for the purpose of having a new day assigned for the execution of the sentence heretofore imposed.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). It appears from the record that his honor the presiding judge inadvertently failed to charge the jury that they might render a verdict recommending the defendants to the mercy of the court, and one of the exceptions assigns this as error. In 1894, section 109 of the Criminal Statutes was amended by adding a proviso so that it should read as follows: "Whoever is guilty of murder shall suffer the punishment of death: provided, however, that in each case where the prisoner is found guilty of murder, the jury may find a special verdict, recommending him or her to the mercy of the court, whereupon the punishment shall be reduced to imprisonment in the penitentiary with hard labor during the whole lifetime of the prisoner." The provisions of the Constitution of 1895 are quite different from those in the Constitution of 1868 as to charging the jury by the presiding judge. Section 26, art. 4, Const. 1868, was as follows: "Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." Section 26, art. 5, Const. 1895, is as follows: "Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matter of fact, but shall declare the law." Section 29, art. 1, Const. 1895, is as follows: "The provisions of the Constitution shall be taken, deemed and construed to be mandatory and prohibitory, and not merely directory, except where expressly made directory or promissory by its own terms." These mandatory provisions of the present Constitution made it incumbent upon the presiding judge to charge, substantially, the law applicable to the case. The act of 1894 made a substantial change in the punishment for murder, and it was of vital importance to the appellant that the jury should have been charged as to its provisions. The case of State v. Owens, 44 S. C. 324, 22 S. E. 244, is quite different from this case, for in State

v. Owens, at the conclusion of the charge, the prisoner's counsel assured the presiding judge that this charge was satisfactory, except that they desired him to explain more fully what is meant by a reasonable doubt. This was a waiver of the right to insist upon the objection now made. State v. Fails, 43 S. C. 52, 20 S. E. 798.

These, in brief, are the reasons for my dissent.

(88 S. C. 376)

J. A. ELLIS & CO. v. CARROLL.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 31, 1904.)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS—PROMISE TO PAY DEBT OF ANOTHER—ORIGINAL PROMISE.

1. Where a person has a complete and enforceable lien on the property of his debtor, the promise of a third person to pay the debt upon forbearance to enforce the lien immediately is not within the statute of frauds, where the release is a damage to the creditor or a benefit to the person for whom the promise is made.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Cherokee County.

Action by J. A. Ellis & Co. against W. H. Carroll. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Butler & Osborne, for appellant. N. W. Hardin, for respondents.

JONES, J. J. B. Carroll, son of defendant, was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of $65.41, which was not denied. On the 26th day of July, 1902, at Grover, N. C., the plaintiffs caused two mules and a wagon to be seized under a valid attachment as the property of J. B. Carroll. The defendant, who was at Grover, N. C., at the time, went to plaintiffs and told them that, if they would release the property of J. B. Carroll, he would pay the debt. Pursuant to that agreement, and on account of the promise made by the defendant, the property was released from attachment. Two or three days afterwards the defendant took the property back to plaintiffs, and asked them to release him from the promise, which they refused to do. The defendant claimed that he had been informed that the property belonged to the wife of J. B. Carroll. Defendant and his son, J. B. Carroll, reside in Cherokee county, S. C., about one-quarter of a mile from each other, and J. B. Carroll was at the time, and had been for a number of years, working the lands of his father. This action was brought before Magistrate A. M. Bridges, in Cherokee county, to recover of defendant upon his promise. Defendant pleaded the statute of frauds. The magistrate gave judgment against the defendant. With respect to the ownership of the attached property the magistrate held that the testimony was conflicting, but that the attachment created such a lien upon the property of J. B. Carroll that its release, on the express promise of the defendant to pay the debt, lessened the chances of plaintiffs' collecting their debt, if it did not defeat the same.

On appeal to the circuit court one of the exceptions taken was that the magistrate erred in not holding that the property attached did not belong to J. B. Carroll, but to his wife, and that the alleged agreement of defendant to pay J. B. Carroll's debt was nudum pactum, and the other was that he erred in not holding that the agreement was within the statute of frauds. The circuit court overruled both exceptions. Therefore the circuit court has found as matter of fact that plaintiffs had a valid and enforceable lien on the property of J. B. Carroll by reason of the attachment, which was released upon defendant's promise to pay. "Where one has a complete and enforceable lien on the property of his debtor, a promise of a third person to pay the debt on condition that the property under the lien is given up, is not within the statute of frauds." Dunlap v. Thorne, 1 Rich. Law, 213; Adkinson v. Barfield, 1 McCord, 575; Barnstine's Ex'rs v. Eggart, 3 McCord, 163, 15 Am. Dec. 625.

The case of Boyce v. Owens, 2 McCord, 208, 13 Am. Dec. 711, does not conflict with the foregoing cases, because no lien was given up in that case, the constable having no authority to attach lands. Nor is there any conflict in principle with cases on the line of Robertson v. Hunter, 29 S. C. 2, 6 S. E. 850, which declare that the test in all such cases is whether there is a new consideration moving to the promisor so as to make it an original, and not a collateral, promise. While it may well be supposed that the release of the son's mules and wagon used in farming upon defendant's land was a benefit to the defendant, yet the cases cited show that it is not controlling that the consideration should be a benefit to the promisor. "If it be a damage to the other party, or a benefit to the party promised for, it will be sufficient, provided these proceed from the forbearance to enforce immediately some subsisting lien."

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(68 S. C. 378)

SECREST v. HARTFORD FIRE INS. CO.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 31, 1904.)

FIRE INSURANCE—FORFEITURE FOR BREACH OF CONDITION—INCUMBRANCES.

1. A provision in a fire insurance policy on a stock of goods, that the policy shall be void if the subject of insurance be or becomes incumbered by a chattel mortgage, is violated where the insured executes a chattel mortgage on the goods, though it is afterwards set aside as a fraud upon the other creditors of insured under the assignment statute.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lancaster County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Eugene C. Secrest, as receiver of J. A. Hilton & Co., against the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest Moore and T. Y. Williams, for appellant. King, Spalding & Little and J. Harry Foster, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The Hartford Insurance Company, on January 1, 1897, issued a policy to J. A. Hilton & Co., insuring, to the amount of $1,000, for one year, a stock of goods at Lancaster, S. C. The policy contained this clause: "The entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if the subject of insurance be personal property, and be or become incumbered by a chattel mortgage." An instrument in the form of a mortgage was executed November 1, 1897, by Hilton & Co. to A. S. Mungo, covering the stock of goods. On November 13, 1897, Daniel Miller & Co. and the other creditors of Hilton commenced their action to have the mortgage declared null and void under the assignment act. After the commencement of the creditors' suit, and on the same day, the property was destroyed by fire. Some time afterward a decree was made by which the mortgage was adjudged invalid under the assignment act. The plaintiff was appointed receiver of the assets of Hilton & Co. and now brings this action against the Hartford Insurance Company on its policy issued to Hilton & Co. Judge Dantzler, who heard the case, sustained the defense that the policy became void upon execution of the mortgage, and directed a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff appeals on the ground that the circuit judge should have held that the mortgage never had any existence, and therefore could not affect the policy, for the reason that the assignment act, on which the decree setting it aside was based, declares such a mortgage "shall be absolutely null and void, and of no effect whatsoever."

For the purposes of this discussion it is immaterial whether the mortgage was set aside on the ground that it was practically an assignment to one creditor, giving him a preference to the exclusion of the other creditors, and therefore "null and void and of no effect whatsoever," under section 2647 of the Civil Code of 1902; or on the ground that it was an unlawful preference, under section 2648, which declares "void" certain preferences given by a debtor to a creditor within 90 days of an assignment for the benefit of creditors. It is obvious that there was no privity of contract as to the insurance between the creditors and the insurance company, and therefore in this regard the receiver, who derived his title to the policy through Hilton & Co., after the fire, can stand in no higher or better position than Hilton & Co. then occupied. Hence the receiver could not recover on the contract of insurance if it had been avoided before it came into his hands by any act of Hilton & Co., from whom he received it. The question, therefore, is, was the paper given in the form of a chattel mortgage valid as to Hilton & Co. at the time the loss occurred? More specifically, could Hilton & Co. have protected themselves against the mortgage at the time of the fire by alleging its invalidity under the assignment act? It is said in Wilks v. Walker, 22 S. C. 111, 53 Am. Rep. 706: "The manifest object of the act is to prevent an insolvent debtor from transferring or assigning his property for the benefit of one or more of his creditors, to the exclusion of all others; and whether this object is sought to be affected by a formal deed of assignment, or in any other mode, can make no difference." There is no word in the entire act indicating an intention to protect a debtor from a mortgage given by him, or to allow him to allege against his own deed. A preference or assignment denounced by the act is void only as against those who are prejudiced by it. If, after creditors had assailed this mortgage, the debtor had paid them, and thus procured the discontinuance of their suit, it would hardly be contended that the court would, under the assignment act, entertain the debtor's suit to have the mortgage declared void. Again, if a purchaser of the goods had acquired them with full knowledge of the mortgage, recognizing it in his purchase, surely it would not be void as to him. The true rule is thus laid down in Endlich on Statutes, § 86: "But it is in the interpretation of general words and phrases that the principle of strictly adapting the meaning to the particular subject-matter in reference to which the words are used finds its most frequent application. However wide in the abstract, they are more or less elastic, and admit of restriction or expansion to suit the subject-matter. While expressing truly enough all that the Legislature intended, they frequently express more in their literal meaning and natural force, and it is necessary to give them the meaning which best suits the scope and object of the statute, without extending to ground foreign to the intention. It is therefore a canon of interpretation that all words, if they be general, and not express and precise, are to be restricted to the fitness of the matter. They are to be construed as particular if the intention be particular; that is, they must be understood as used in reference to the subject-matter in the mind of the Legislature, and strictly limited to it." In accordance with this principle of construction, the same author says, in section 269: "An act which required that indentures for binding parish apprentices should be for the term of seven years at least, declaring that otherwise they should 'be void to all intents and purposes, and not available in any court or place for any purpose whatever,' was held, nevertheless, to make an indenture for a shorter term only voidable at the option of the master or apprentice; or, at all events, to leave it so far valid that service under it sufficed to gain a settlement. The act of 3 Hen. VII, c. 4, which declared that gifts of goods and chattels in trust for the donor and in fraud of his creditors should be 'void and of none effect,' was early held to be so only as to those who were prejudiced by the gift, but not as between the parties." See, also, Kaufman v. Carter, 67 S. C. 312, 45 S. E. 211.

The cases relied on by appellant as sustaining his view are very different in principle from this case. In Fitchner v. Fire Association, 103 Iowa, 276, 72 N. W. 530, the pretended mortgage was to a fictitious person, and retained by the party who signed it in his own possession. There was no mortgage, no debt, no delivery. In Pitney v. Ins. Co., 65 N. Y. 6, the question was whether insured had sold the property, and therefore annulled the policy. The policy contained no clause against transfer. There was proof of a verbal agreement to sell, which, under the statute of frauds, was of no legal effect even between the parties. It was held that the title to the property was not changed, and the policy was not avoided. In Insurance Company v. Asbury, 102 Ga. 565, 27 S. E. 667, it was shown that the alienation of the property set up by the insurance company to defeat the claim was tainted with usury, and, under the Georgia law, absolutely void between the parties. It will be seen in all these cases the pretended sales and incumbrances before the court were clearly void between the parties—mere attempts to transfer or mortgage property—and on this ground they were held not to avoid the policy.

We conclude that at the time of the fire the stock of goods of Hilton & Co. was covered by a mortgage valid between the mortgagor and mortgagee, and that the policy, by its terms, was annulled by this incumbrance. In this view it is obviously unnecessary to consider the alleged errors imputed to the circuit judge by the respondent.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(68 S. C. 337)

YOUNG v. ST. PAUL FIRE & MARINE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. April 1, 1904.)

FIRE INSURANCE—PAROL AGREEMENT TO WRITE POLICY—TIME OF DELIVERY—PAYMENT OF PREMIUM—CONDITIONS AGAINST OTHER INSURANCE—WAIVER.

1. A standard policy of insurance containing the usual conditions is a compliance with a parol agreement by an insurance agent on payment of premium to write a policy.

2. Where an insurance agent, at the request of insured, retains the policy, and delivers it to her on demand after loss, the policy is regarded as delivered at the time of the insurance.

3. Waiver of a condition in an insurance policy against taking out other insurance cannot be implied from retention of policy at request of insured until after loss.

4. Waiver of condition against other insurance is not shown by the act of the local soliciting agent in expressing hope and confidence that the loss will be paid, or by the local agent giving notice to the adjuster of the loss and the coming of the adjuster to investigate it.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Alice A. Young against the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

John T. Seibels, for appellant. W. R. Rich-ey, H. J. Haynesworth, and Ferguson & Featherstone, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment on a contract of insurance made by defendant, covering her dwelling house in the town of Clinton. At the close of plaintiff's testimony the court was requested to instruct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant. The first question is whether the presiding judge was in error in refusing this motion. The amended complaint alleges that Mrs. Young applied to Robertson, defendant's agent, and made a parol contract with him to insure her house for $1,500; "that subsequently, and in the absence of the plaintiff, the said J. T. Robertson, as agent of the said company, in pursuance of said agreement, wrote out a policy of insurance, a copy of which is hereto attached as Exhibit A, and placed the same in his safe, where it remained until after the fire, which destroyed the plaintiff's house, when it was delivered to her; that in said policy, when written out, after the original agreement of insurance, the said agent stated the value of the building to be $2,000, and the total amount of insurance to be carried on said house to be $1,500, and further stated that 'this entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if the insured now has or shall hereinafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy,' which statements were no part of the original agreement, and were made without the knowledge of or consent of the plaintiff, she having learned of them for the first time when her attention was directed to them after the said fire." The plaintiff was the only witness offered in support of this last allegation. She testified specifically, and with noteworthy candor, that she applied to Robertson for a policy, and he agreed to write her a policy. This clearly meant that both parties fully understood that the contract was not for parol insurance, but for the usual printed policy of insurance issued by insurance agents in the course of business. 1 May on Insurance, § 23; 16 A. & E. Ency. Law, 853; Newark Machine Co. v. Kenton Ins. Co., 22 L. R. A. 773, and notes. In such case the presumption is that the parol negotiation is merged in the written contract represented by the policy. 16 A. & E. Ency. Law, 856, and notes; United Firemen's Insurance Co. v. Thomas, 82 Fed. 406, 27 O. C. A. 42, 47 L. R. A. 456; Merchants' Mutual Insurance Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 684, 21 L. Ed. 246; Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544, 24 L. Ed. 674, and notes; Kleis v. Niagara Fire Insurance Co. (Mich.) 76 N. W. 155; Phenix Insurance Co. v. Wilcox & Gibbs Guano Co., 65 Fed. 730, 13 O. C. A. 88. If the agent had made a verbal agreement to the effect that a provision allowing other insurance would be inserted in the policy, and if Mrs. Young had requested the insertion of such a clause without dissent from him, the policy would not have covered all the branches and elements of the parol contract, and the insurance would not have been lost, unless the insured had in some way subsequently waived the omission. 1 Joyce on Insurance, § 41; McMaster v. New York Life Insurance Co., 183 U. S. 25, 22 Sup. Ct. 10, 46 L. Ed. 64. But Mrs. Young testifies nothing whatever was said as to other insurance on the house. The provision, "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if the insured now has or shall hereinafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy," was printed in the policy of insurance as issued. To hold the insured not to be bound by this provision would be equivalent to holding that, when a contract is made for a policy of insurance, and the ordinary policy is issued with the usual conditions printed in it, all these conditions would be void, and have no effect on the liability under the policy, unless expressly brought to the notice of the insured, and assented to by him. To state such a proposition is to reject it. Nothing is more generally known and recognized in business dealings and the decisions of courts than that an agreement for a policy of insurance contemplates the issuance of a policy with certain conditions, such as stipulations against change of title, storing of highly combustible or explosive substances, incumbrance of the property, and additional insurance without consent. There was no evidence that the provision under discussion was unusual or unreasonable, but, on the contrary, the policy is indorsed, "Standard Fire Insurance Policy of the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Rhode Island."

The policy did not pass into the physical custody of Mrs. Young until after the fire, but it is apparent from the testimony that Robertson held it as a custodian for her by her acquiescence, if not her express request; and this was a sufficient delivery. The absence of manual possession is not fatal. "The manual possession of the thing which it is intended to deliver is a matter of little consequence. Such possession may exist without any legal delivery, and it may not exist where a legal delivery has been effected. The controlling question is not who has the actual possession of the policy, but who has the right of possession." 16 A. & E. Ency. Law, 856.

It was admitted by the plaintiff that she took out other insurance, and this was sufficient to defeat her recovery, unless this condition was waived. We are unable to find any evidence of waiver. Whether valid or void, the policy was the property of the plaintiff, and in turning it over to her after the fire the agent, Robertson, only performed an imperative legal duty, from which no waiver could be implied. It has been held in Norris v. Insurance Company, 55 S. O. 450, 33 S. E. 566, 74 Am. St. Rep. 765, that retention of the premium after the fire was no evidence of waiver. The mere expression of the local soliciting agent of hope and confidence that the loss would be paid is no evidence of waiver. In Joye v. Insurance Company, 54 S. O. 374, 32 S. E. 446, it was held that even a letter from the president of the company, written after the fire, promising to pay, would not constitute waiver, when there was a subsequent letter denying liability in the absence of proof that any change in the condition of the plaintiff had resulted from the first letter. It is hardly necessary to say that waiver cannot be implied from the act of the local agent in giving notice to the adjuster, or the coming of the adjuster to Clinton to investigate the loss. We find no evidence of waiver in any of the facts relied on by the plaintiff.

In no possible view of the evidence could the plaintiff be entitled to recover, and the jury should, therefore, have been directed to find a verdict for the defendant. Hence it is unnecessary to consider the other grounds of appeal.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the complaint dismissed.

(63 S. C. 411)

STATE ex rel. BUCHANAN v. JENNINGS,
State Treasurer, et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. April 11, 1904.)

JUDGES—SALARY—MANDAMUS TO COMPEL PAY-MENT—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—RES JUDICATA.

1. The salary reduction act of December 22, 1893 (21 St. at Large, p. 417), to go into effect January 1, 1894, fixed the salary of circuit judges at $3,000. By the general appropriation act, approved the next day, and which went into effect immediately, salaries were provided for, under the prior salary act, giving the circuit judges $3,500, and section 13 (page 477) declared that if salaries then provided for officers, etc., "for which appropriation is herein made, shall be fixed by law at other rates than those herein provided for, such rates shall not affect such salaries * * * for the year 1894, but the amounts herein appropriated shall be paid them." Held that, in referring to the year 1894 the fiscal year was intended, which, under the Constitution, commences on the 1st day of November, and that a circuit judge elected in December, 1894, was entitled only to the salary as reduced by the act of 1893.

2. Where there is no permanent, continuing statute, or constitutional provision, fixing the salary of a circuit judge, and no appropriation has been made therefor, mandamus will not issue to compel the Comptroller General to issue a warrant for a salary, and the State Treasurer to pay it, since the proceeding would be against the state, in which case the court would have no jurisdiction.

3. On mandamus to compel the Comptroller General to issue a warrant for the salary of relator, a circuit judge, the court held that the claim should be paid, and that the writ should be issued whenever there should be funds in the treasury, but refused to order it at that time; holding as a fact that the actual appropriation had been exhausted. Held, that such decree was not res judicata as to relator's right to the writ.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Townsend, Judge.

Petition by the state, on relation of O. W. Buchanan, for writ of mandamus against R. H. Jennings, State Treasurer, and another. From an order directing a writ, defendants appeal. Reversed.

U. X. Gunter, Atty. Gen., for appellants.

WOODS, J. We adopt the respondent's clear and accurate statement of the facts:

"Respondent claims that he is entitled to be paid the salary allowed by law to a circuit judge at the time of his election and qualification; that such salary is the amount named in the general appropriation act of December 23, 1893, and not that named in the salary reduction act of December 22, 1893.

"The main facts are as follows: By the salary reduction act approved December 22, 1893, to go into effect 1st January, 1894, the salary of a circuit judge was fixed at $3,000; by the general appropriation act approved the next day, and which went into effect immediately, December 23, 1893, salaries were provided for under the prior salary acts giving to circuit judges $3,500, and in this act it was declared in section 13 'that in the event that salaries or other compensation for services now provided for by law for officers, clerks and other persons, for which appropriation is herein made, shall be fixed by law at other rates than those herein provided for, such rates shall not affect such salaries or other compensation for the year 1894, but the amounts herein appropriated shall be paid them.' 21 St. at Large, pp. 417, 477.

"By comparison of this appropriation act with salary reduction act of the previous day and prior salary acts, it will be seen that the salaries of the appropriation act were the same as in the prior salary acts, and not at all in agreement with the salary reduction act of the day before, except in cases where that act made no changes.

"During the year 1894, on 4th December, O. W. Buchanan was elected judge of the Third Circuit, and four days afterwards he qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties, his first term ending December 8, 1898. On 24th December, 1894, the general appropriation act was passed and went into effect, wherein only $3,000 was appropriated for the salary of the judge of the Third Circuit. Judge Buchanan received this $3,000 per annum for the four years of his first term, though demanding that he be paid $3,500."

Judge Buchanan applied to the circuit court for a writ of mandamus to compel the Comptroller General to issue his warrant, and the State Treasurer to pay such warrant, for the sum of $500 for each year the petitioner held the office of circuit judge; being the difference between $3,000, the sum actually paid, and $3,500, the sum petitioner claims he was entitled to receive each year. Judge Dantzler held by his decree, dated November 7, 1902, that the state was justly due the petitioner the sum of $2,000, which covered the claim for his first term as circuit judge, but that upon his second election the act then in force fixing the salary of circuit judges applied, just as if he had not before held office. Judge Dantzler, as we understand his decree, practically refused to issue the writ at that time on the ground that the appropriation was then exhausted, and that it was not to be assumed that the General Assembly would refuse to pay the amount he found to be due. The petitioner was given leave to renew his motion after the adjournment of the session of the General Assembly commencing January, 1903. No provision having been made for the claim by the General Assembly, the petitioner on July 3, 1903, filed an entirely new petition, reciting the facts, including the decree of Judge Dantzler, and praying "that a writ of mandamus may issue, directed to the Comptroller General, A. W. Jones, and State Treasurer, R. H. Jennings, commanding the former to audit and allow and to issue his warrant upon the State Treasurer for the sum of $2,000, being $500 for each and every year of your petitioner's term of office, commencing 8th December, 1894, and commanding the State Treasurer to pay such warrant."

Upon hearing the petition and return, Judge Townsend ordered the writ to issue. From this order the Comptroller General and the State Treasurer appeal, alleging:

"That his honor Judge Townsend erred in adjudging the return to the petition as insufficient, and directing a writ of mandamus to issue:

"(1) In that the salary reduction act of 1893, approved December 22, 1893 (21 St. at Large, p. 416), reducing the salary of the circuit judge to $3,000, was passed and enacted prior to the election of the petitioner as such judge, and that said act, in so far as it fixed the salary to be paid the circuit judges after the year 1894, was of force when the petitioner was elected and entered upon the discharge of his duties as circuit judge.

"(2) In that it appeared upon the face of the petition that no appropriation has been made by law of any amount for the payment of the said sum of $2,000 alleged in the petition to be due the petitioner.

"(3) That the court is without jurisdiction to issue the mandamus prayed for, inasmuch as the state is the real party in interest, and the mandamus prayed for would direct the payment by the state of a debt alleged to exist against it, the respondents, the State Treasurer, and Comptroller General, having no personal interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and the relief sought being an affirmative and official action by the state officers in performing an obligation which attaches to the state in its political capacity, and not the mere performance of a ministerial duty.

"(4) In that there were no funds in the treasury upon which the Comptroller General could draw his warrant directing the State Treasurer to pay the claim mentioned in the petition."

We consider first the status and construction of the salary reduction act approved December 22, 1893, and the appropriation act approved December 23, 1893.

In State v. Stoll, 17 Wall. 425, 21 L. Ed. 650, the court says: "If, by any reasonable construction, the two statutes can stand together, they must so stand. If harmony is impossible, and only in that event, the former law is repealed in part, or wholly, as the case may be." See Endlich on Statutes, § 210. Where two statutes are passed at the same session, there is a still stronger presumption that they are intended to harmonize and not conflict, and it is the duty of the court to consider them, as far as possible, one statute, and endeavor to find what appears to have been the intent of the legislative body. Therefore the salary reduction bill, having been approved December 22, 1893, must be regarded amended and changed by the appropriation act passed the next day, so far as the two acts are in conflict. Riggs v. Pfister, 21 Ala. 469; Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 504, 3 Sup. Ct. 357, 27 L. Ed. 1012. The reduction of salaries contemplated by the former act must therefore be regarded suspended during the period the latter act provided for payment of the larger salary.

As already intimated, as soon as the conflict can be regarded, in any reasonable view, at an end, it is the duty of the court to give to the former statute, as a separate enactment, full force, both as to the time when it shall have effect and as to its subject-matter. It is important, also, in the discussion, to have in mind the familiar rule that violation of the Constitution is not to be imputed to the General Assembly, if such a conclusion can be avoided by any fair and reasonable interpretation of its enactments.

The salary reduction act repealed by necessary implication all previous salary acts, so far as they related to the offices therein mentioned, but by its terms it did not go into effect until January 1, 1894. We now inquire for what further time its operation was suspended by the appropriation act, approved December 23, 1893. This inquiry involves a consideration of the scope of the latter statute. The Constitution of 1868, art. 9, § 13, provides: "The fiscal year shall commence on the first day of November of each year." In accordance with this requirement, the General Assembly, by the act approved December 23, 1893, as appears from the title of the act, made appropriation "for the fiscal year commencing November 1st, 1893." Section 13 of this act is as follows: "That in the event that salaries or other compensation for services now provided for by law for officers, clerks and other persons, for which appropriation is herein made, shall be fixed by law at other rates than those herein provided for, such rates shall not affect such salaries or other compensation for the year 1894, but the amounts herein appropriated shall be paid them." 21 St. at Large, p. 477. It is important to determine whether the words "the year 1894" referred to the calendar year or to the fiscal year, for, if the fiscal year was meant, then the appropriation for the salary of the judge of the Third Circuit ended on November 1, 1894, and the act reducing the salary of circuit judges to $3,000 was in effect, without limitation, when Judge Buchanan was elected, on December 4, 1894. It is true that, where reference is made to a certain year, the presumption is that the calendar year is meant. But where a legislative body is acting under a Constitution providing a fiscal year different from the calendar year, it seems clear that its fiscal legislation should be referred to the constitutional fiscal year, and not the calendar year. We think this rule of interpretation should be adopted in the absence of any express legislative intention. An examination of the statutes will show the General Assembly has said by direct expression that it meant by "the year 1894" to refer to the fiscal year 1894; that is, the fiscal year ending November 1, 1894. The act of 1893 making appropriations for that fiscal year by its express terms carries salaries and other public obligations to November 1, 1894, and no further, and this act provides for a salary of $3,500 per annum for circuit judges. The like act of 1894 took up the salaries and other public obligations on November 1, 1894, and carried them to November 1, 1895, providing a salary of $3,000 for circuit judges.

We think, therefore, the General Assembly has expressed its intention by these acts, passed in consonance with the constitutional provision as to the beginning and end of the fiscal year, that the reduction of salaries should take place at the close of the fiscal year, November 1, 1894.

We agree with petitioner's counsel that a salary may be fixed by an appropriation act providing for it, but the presumption is obviously very strong against an intention to fix in an appropriation bill the amount of salary to run beyond the period for which the appropriation is made. The contrary intention is here indicated. The appropriation is "for the salaries of the eight circuit judges, $28,000," and this is, as we have seen, for the fiscal year ending November 1, 1894. When the provision is made that, if salaries of the officers mentioned "shall be fixed by law at other rates than those herein provided for, such rates shall not affect such salaries or other compensation for the year 1894, but the amount herein appropriated shall be paid them," it seems clear from the last clause, which we have italicized, that the rate of salary was not provided by the act beyond the amount actually appropriated, and that amount reached only to November 1, 1894.

Whether it would be a violation of that rule of the Constitution (Const. 1895, art. 8, § 17) which requires that "every act or resolution having the force of law shall relate to but one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title," for the General Assembly, in an act entitled "An act to make appropriations to meet the ordinary expenses of the state government for the fiscal year commencing November 1, 1893," to attempt to fix a salary to run beyond the end of the fiscal year referred to in the title, is a question we do not consider, for the reason that we do not think such an attempt was made.

As already indicated, if Judge Buchanan had been elected before November 1, 1893, he would have been entitled to a salary of $3,500 per annum for his entire term, notwithstanding that might have been intended to be the salary only during the currency of the appropriation bill, for the reason that the salary with which he entered office could not be lessened. But he was elected and qualified in December, 1894, after the end of the fiscal year, and after the reduction act went into effect. We are therefore forced to the conclusion that he was entitled to only the reduced salary.

Assuming, however, that the petitioner is entitled to the amount claimed, we next consider whether any appropriation has been made from the state funds, for, as we understand, it is conceded that the court can require money to be paid from the state treasury only when it has been appropriated by the Constitution or a statute. In article 2, § 22, of the Constitution of 1868, it is provided, "No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of an appropriation made by law." If the Constitution, in addition to providing that the judges "shall at stated times receive a compensation for their services to be fixed by law which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office," had also provided the amount of the compensation, there would be great force in the argument that this would constitute an annual and certain appropriation, requiring no further legislative action to warrant and require its payment by the fiscal officers of the state. This was held to be the law in Thomas v. Owens, 4 Md. 190; in State v. Hickman (Mont.) 23 Pac. 740, 8 L. R. A. 404, and other cases. See, also, note to Carr v. State, 22 Am. St. Rep. 638. But the essential difference between those cases and this is that our Constitution of 1868 left the amount of the salary to be fixed by the General Assembly, and there was therefore no constitutional appropriation of any particular sum to be paid.

Strong argument has been presented, also, in support of the proposition that, when the salary claimed is fixed by a permanent continuing statute, the actual right to which omission from an annual appropriation act will not affect, no special current appropriation is necessary to entitle the claimant to payment. Henderson v. Burdick (Wyo.) 33 Pac. 125, 24 L. R. A. 266. But the petitioner cannot sustain the application for mandamus on this ground, for the reason that here his claim does not rest on a continuing statute, but on the temporary annual appropriation act itself, which in terms limits the appropriation to a time which expired before the beginning of his term of office. In addition to this, there was not only an omission to appropriate and provide in the temporary statute the salary claimed, but an annual appropriation by the next General Assembly of a smaller amount than that claimed. So that the conclusion is inevitable that the legislative branch of the government, from which the appropriation must come, has practically declined to pay the larger salary, by providing for the payment of a smaller. We think, therefore, there has been no appropriation of public funds for the payment of the amount demanded. If there had been such appropriation, it would be the obvious ministerial duty of the Comptroller General to issue his warrant, and of the Treasurer to pay it, and the court would enforce this duty by mandamus. As there is no such appropriation, this application must be regarded as a proceeding against the state, and the court is without jurisdiction to entertain it. The General Assembly has acted in the matter, and the refusal of the executive officers to pay the claim is in consonance with direction coming to them from that branch of the government which alone is empowered to provide for the payment of the state's obligations. The law is thus stated in Pennoyer v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 10, 11 Sup. Ct. 701, 35 L. Ed. 303:

"Where the suit is brought against the officers of the state, as representing the state's action and liability, thus making it, though not a party to the record, the real party against which the judgment will so operate as to compel it to specifically perform its contracts," it is, in effect, a suit against the state itself. Ex parte Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 8 Sup. Ct. 164, 31 L. Ed. 216; Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 2 Sup. Ct. 128, 27 L. Ed. 448; Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769, 2 Sup. Ct. 91, 27 L. Ed. 468; Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co., 109 U. S. 446, 3 Sup. Ct. 292, 27 L. Ed. 992; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 6 Sup. Ct. 608, 29 L. Ed. 805. See, also, Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 19 Sup. Ct. 269, 43 L. Ed. 535; Butler v. Ellerbe, 44 S. C. 256, 22 S. E. 425. We cannot escape the conclusion that the issuance of the writ, in the circumstances, would be an effort on the part of the judicial department of the government to coerce the legislative department.

The fourth defense of the Comptroller General and the State Treasurer, covered in this court by the fourth exception, is: "For a fourth defense, the respondents say that there are no funds in the treasury upon which the Comptroller General can draw his warrant directing the State Treasurer to pay the claim mentioned in the petition." If there had been an appropriation of the amount claimed, this defense would not avail, because it is not stated that there are no funds in the treasury, only that there are none applicable to this claim. But as there has been no appropriation, the proposition embraced in this defense is a necessary sequence, and must be sustained.

